Catherine motions with her hands and summons a Dragonfire-partisan. The seven-foot weapon scorches her hands, but she ignores the pain, rears back, and hurls it at the beast.

Swish!

As if the animal were nothing more than an illusion, Catherine's javelin pierces straight through its body and sails into the distance. Several monsters behind it scream in surprise as her attack impales them before they can react.

The cave bear lowers its head. It gapes for a moment at the bowling-ball-sized hole in its chest. Then, it stumbles forward and collapses into ash.

Valac stares, stunned.

"Wha... what are you waiting for?! Attack her, imbeciles!!"

Panic creeps into his voice. Valac orders his minions, and a fierce battle commences. Freakish monsters of all types rush down the hallway toward Catherine. She summons swords, spears, axes, and hammers, all of them created from Dragonfire. One by one, she spins and twists to execute each monster as part of a dazzling dance of death.

Valac's glee turns to rage. He watches as dozens of Titan souls crumble to ash, many of which he had planned to make into new super-clones once he refined them. In a fit of rage, he grabs thousands of souls from his lantern and throws them to the ground. They transform into low-level clones and rush through the death energy shield toward Catherine's flank.

"Kill her! Kill the Valkyrie!!"

Catherine spins on her heel like a ballet dancer. Flames spiral around her and smash aside any clones daring enough to enter melee striking distance. Once she builds up enough spiral firepower, Catherine stomps her foot down and comes to a screeching halt. With a flap of her wings, she sends the fireballs flying in every direction up and down the halls.

Hundreds of agonized screams echo throughout the caves. Valac's clones and minions perish one after the other.

Suddenly, Catherine stumbles forward. Her legs seize up as all of their nerves melt together. She loses her ability to walk and flops to the ground. Her hands tremble, and nausea rumbles in her stomach.

Oh, Creator... Jörmungandr's flames are devouring me alive... I can't... can't... fight... for much longer...

Valac cackles as the Valkyrie falls to the ground.

"Ehehehe! That's right! Your flames are a double-sided blade! Using them against me will only result in your death! Stupid, pathetic woman! This is why you'll never measure up to ME!"

Patches of Catherine's skin turn black as the fire cooks her alive. Bubbles and boils spread across her body, creating unimaginable agony in her soul.

As her movements stop, the undead monsters suddenly rush forward and pounce at her.

Catherine shivers. She gazes into the eyes of Death as the Reaper's hordes fall upon her.

It's now or never!

Catherine closes her eyes. A moment later, the wounds on her body begin to regenerate rapidly. Her injuries dissipate, and powerful mana swallows her mind.

I am one with the eternal flame! I give myself to the dragon's might! I renounce my angelic heritage! Oh, great Phoenix, give me the strength to slaughter this demon!!

Catherine's wings transform from white to red. Flames swallow them whole. The moment one of the monsters bites onto her arm, molten lava discharges from her veins and enters its mouth, causing the Sabertooth-Titan to leap backward and scream. "Kaaarruuugh!!"

The Valkyrie of Fire leaps to her feet. Flames scorch away her clothing and armor, leaving her completely naked. The cave becomes an oven and jumps to five hundred degrees, seven hundred, and even a thousand.

None of Valac's monsters dare to come any closer. They fall back, unable to withstand the sun-like radiation discharging from Catherine's body.

As the flames engulf Catherine, one thought materializes in her mind.

I'm cold. So... cold.

I cannot come back once I unleash the power of Camael's Phoenix. The sliver of her artifact she gave me is too much for my body to handle. 'Tis now or never.

She spins on her heel and whirls to face the three super-clones. All of them gasp for breath as her body emits over a thousand degrees of heat. Catherine aims her palm at the barrier and fires a blast of radiation at it.

KSSSSEEEEW!

Her strength, the supreme power of Sol, battles Valac's death energy. All of Valac's clones shriek as their bodies melt and liquefy under ten thousand degrees of solar energy.

"No! Noooo!!"

A moment later, Catherine's radiation attack punches a hole through the barrier. It slams into one of the super-clones and fries him into ash before he can react. A light as bright as the sun emits from her palm and blinds the remaining two. They try to look away, but only seconds later, two more radiation attacks punch through their barriers and annihilate them.

Catherine closes her eyes.

I've only a minute left.

The death energy shield dissipates into ash, unleashing the full force of her power against Valac's original body.

Valac stumbles off his stone stool and falls to the ground. Panic appears in his eyes.

"Wait! Wait, please! Stop! You're supposed to be the good guy! An agent of the light! Can't we talk things out?!"

His pitiful cries for help cause immeasurable rage to build up in Catherine's heart.

She opens her eyes. Her gaze fixates on Valac's.

Catherine takes a step forward and opens her mouth.

"N... nnnn... nnoooo... mer.... cyyyyy..."

Her voice, cracked and broken, breathes through her lips like a whisper from the clouds. Tears of fire flow freely, giving Catherine a bone-chilling demonic appearance.

"D... d... diiiieeee...."

Valac's eyes widen. He watches as she raises her palm and aims it at him.

"No! Please! Nooooo!!"

THOOOOOM!

Catherine's attack fires from her palm like a cannonball at point-blank range. Valac's main body explodes into a million, billion specks of ash. He scatters all over the cave, while Catherine's radiation blast pierces through ten miles of the Earth's crust, leaving a massive tunnel in its wake.

"Skreee!"

All of Valac's monsters scream in pain, only to transform into ash moments later.

Several seconds pass.

Catherine's life energy disperses. She stares at the Reaper's ashes and waits for him to pull off a last-second trick. However, as she waits, the Reaper's death energy fades away, giving the air a clean, refreshing feeling.

Catherine's will to fight disappears. She falls forward and slumps to her knees.

Nnn... it's... almost over... for me...

Liquid lava falls from her eyes. Sadness and anguish overtake Catherine as her memories slowly fall away, bit by bit.

It's so cold... so cold... is it winter? Why am I here? Who am I?

The fire flowing from Catherine's body loses its luster. Eventually, her skin shifts from bright red to a faded, dullish grey color.

Michael... Michael... what does that word mean? Why does it seem... so important to me?

Catherine's eyes turn blank. Her body heat evaporates, turning her into an ashen statue of a lonely warrior who died fighting for what she believed.

All the while, Valac's lantern continues to burn with a faint, green light.

Part 165: Angels and Titans United

Satan opens his eyes. His head throbs, and his vision blurs as he forces himself to stand up. Distant screams tickle his ears as he tries to reorient his senses.

"W... where... am I? What happened?"

Hades answers Satan's question, but his tone is quiet, and his voice trembles. Oh, thank the Creator, thou hath finally awakened. Listen carefully to what I'm about to tell thee, Satan. Thou hath died nearly fifty times. It's been an hour since that damned she-Titan started stomping thy body into blood paste. I barely saved us by... never mind. It doesn't matter.

"She-Titan? Huh?"

Satan blinks deliriously. He slowly turns around to see hundreds of cherubs and demons lobbing fireballs, spears of light, and many other projectiles into the distance. It takes Satan a second to realize that the angels and demons are no longer fighting one another, but something else.

I don't know exactly what that... that thing is... Hades whispers. But 'tis the vilest deity I have ever seen; the reincarnation of Morva. Nay, not even Morva possessed such limitless... hatred... rage...

Hades falls silent. Terror creeps up Satan's spine, starting from his toes and working its way to his ears. The Devil shudders as he turns around and raises his gaze to the sky above.

"Wha... what the hell is... is THAT...?!"

Satan's blood turns to ice, and his pupils shrink to pinpricks. He stands in place, rooted to the spot, as he gazes upon a monster standing over one thousand feet tall. A laser-like plume of flame ignites in its mouth and fires into the distance. One of Heaven's tallest mountains shatters under the attack, sending thousands of tons of rock, dirt, and natural deposits spraying into the atmosphere. Seconds later, lava falls from the sky as the superheated rock and stone plummet back to Heaven's Soil. Countless angels and demons perish in an instant, unable to avoid the falling meteor shower.

Hades swallows a gulp of breath. That thing... that creature... is a dark god.

One hour earlier.

Camael watches as Raphael steps out from behind the large boulder. After he walks forward, her eyes widen.

"Brother! Where is Catherine?"

Raphael shakes his head. "Our sister made a choice; one intended for the betterment of angelkind. She will kill the Reaper herself."

"Nonsense! Open a portal to Valac's lair at once! What purpose dost thou believe my sword serves, if not to slay the one who has wrought death and destruction upon our brethren?!"

Raphael flicks his gaze around the group of angels. Already, Hyacinth has recovered somewhat. She sits on the grass and rubs her head. Her eyes tell a story of exhaustion countered by her will to fight. She struggles to stand up when Raphael walks closer, but Sophia pushes her back down.

The Archangel of Wisdom's eyes next flick to Neptune. His undead appearance sends a pang of disgust through Raphael's body. Raphael shivers as Neptune's glowing red eyes fixate on him. Even so, the young Titan's gaze is anything but sinister. He somehow manages to resemble a confused dog; one whose master has left him at the side of the road. Occasionally, he looks toward the battle in the distance.

"Demons assault Heaven, yet here we stand, twiddling our thumbs. Have you any plans, Archangel of Wisdom? My father respected you greatly, yet seeing two of the hailed Archangels standing on the sidelines without fighting does little to inspire me."

Raphael nods. "Thou art correct, Neptune. We must leave Catherine to her devices. I have little doubt she will lay waste to the Reaper's machinations. Our task is to return to our brothers and assist them in driving out the demons. Come! We mustn't dilly-dally. Catherine's sacrifice will give us the edge to win this battle."

Camael stares at Raphael in disbelief. "We cannot leave her behind! The battle has nearly ended, Raphael! After we clear out the riff-raff, we will only have to deal with a few remaining Demon Emperors! How cans't thou act so heartless toward our sister?!"

Raphael smiles, but his expression lacks all traces of happiness. Instead, his eyes exude distress and longing. "I tried to persuade Catherine, but she would not stand for it. After all... she regained..."

The Archangel of Wisdom trails off. He sighs and looks away from Camael, toward the battlefront in the distance.

"Do not let Catherine's death be in vain. Thou may see her as a mere Valkyrie, but once, she possessed the potential to become an Archangel. Valac will fall before her might. Of that, I have no doubt."

Camael opens her mouth to argue, but Raphael's wings twitch, causing her to fall silent. She lowers her head and sighs.

"So be it. We will honor Catherine in the Hall of the Fallen. We will etch her name atop the Creator's Slab."

"Aye. That, we will," Raphael murmurs.

The two Archangels fall silent. Neptune flicks his eyes between them, then over to the other three Valkyries.

Sophia's expression becomes crestfallen. "Oh... Catherine... I didn't even get to say goodbye..."

Tears well up in Penelope's eyes. The giantess sniffles and looks toward the boulder where they last saw their sister. "I never imagined a day... where we wouldn't see Catherine again. Oh, Creator... why must thou taketh her from us?"

Hyacinth rubs her arm. Her body aches from the brutal beating she took earlier, but her expression remains tranquil. She closes her eyes and exhales. "Catherine always was the most resolute of us. Of all the ways for her to fall, giving up her life to defeat a mighty foe is the one I know she'd pick. Every time."

Sophia and Penelope nod along to Hyacinth's words, but their agreement appears to be only surface-level. They try to rationalize her decision, but their emotions spiral within themselves, making them want to wretch.

"Cast aside all thoughts of Catherine," Raphael says. He grits his teeth and turns to face the Valkyries. "We are angels! We are the Creator's greatest warriors! Our task today is to wipe out demonkind and restore righteousness to the world! Come! Do not languish in sadness! There will be a time for tears, but it will not be until after today!"

Penelope wipes tears from her eyes. She straightens her stance and nods at Raphael. "I... I understand."

Sophia wraps an arm around Hyacinth and helps the Valkyrie of Wind to her feet. "We won't give up, brother."

Hyacinth nods. "We'll fight to honor Catherine's legacy."

All of the angels flick their gazes toward Neptune. The undead Titan shrugs with all four of Valac's arms. "I didn't know your sister, but sure. I'll fight for her."

The angels flap their wings and rise into the sky. Neptune focuses his mind and levitates off the ground, using the Reaper's residual energy to follow after them. Sophia and Hyacinth follow behind him, but only because of Hyacinth's weakened condition.

* * *

"I say, Raphael!" Neptune calls out. He increases his speed to catch up to the eldest Archangel. "Do you see that plume of red mana over there? It's faint, but..."

Raphael nods. "Aye. 'Tis quite abnormal. Its energy signature is demonic in origin."

"Should we investigate it?"

Raphael shoots a suspicious glance toward the Titan. He keeps his expression calm and placid, but evaluates Neptune's Reaper-like appearance with discomfort. "We should keep our distance, for now. We will go to assist Gabriel."

Neptune doesn't notice Raphael's paranoia. "Why keep our distance? With my father passing, I am now the mightiest of the Atlanteans! I am their rightful king!"

Raphael shakes his head. "It is as we told thee, Neptune. The Reaper slaughtered the Atlanteans. If any still exist, their numbers-"

"Pah! Don't speak of matters you know nothing about, old man!" Neptune snorts at Raphael derisively. "The Atlanteans are second only to Cronus's bloodline. When battling underwater, the Mad Titan's lineage never held a candle to ours! I am certain the rumors of our demise have been greatly overblown. You may not know this, but the depths of the seven seas are incomprehensively vast compared to the plains of the surface world. The Reaper couldn't possibly have found all of us!"

Raphael avoids Neptune's gaze and looks toward the battles unfolding on Heaven's surface. "Thy father perished to Satan the Devil, while thou fell to the Reaper's scythe. I know not how many Atlanteans lived within the seas before the Reaper slew thee, but I do know that very few come to this battlefield."

Neptune's confidence falters. He stares at Raphael's face for several seconds without replying. Eventually, he lowers his eyes to the world below. "...My people are not dead. They are too mighty. Too... stubborn..."

Raphael doesn't reply.

The angels fly in silence. Suddenly, Neptune's eyes ignite with rage.

"That damned Satan! He killed my father! He's here, isn't he?! Somewhere, amidst this field of bloodskins, Poseidon's murderer lurks! I must find him! I must take my revenge!"

Raphael flicks his eyes back to Neptune. The young Titan appears angered beyond belief. He snarls and sweeps his gaze around Heaven, using all of his senses to try and deduce the Devil's position.

"Calm down. If thy father's might exceeded thine in life, then even with that undead body, thou shalt perish to the Devil as well."

"Hmph! We won't know until I try!"

Neptune shakes his fist at Raphael.

"Never underestimate the strength of an Atlantean! Forged by the undercurrents of the sea, we train under millions of tons of pressure to achieve bodies the surface-dwelling Titans could never dream-"

Suddenly, Neptune falters. His voice cracks, and a strange burst of pain explodes in his chest.

"Gahk! Hnnn!!"

Raphael's suspicion doubles. He stops in midair and whirls around to watch as the Titan suddenly stops flying. Like a puppet with its strings cut, Neptune loses control and plummets to Heaven's Soil below.

"Aaaaugh!"

Having been tailing her brother and the undead Titan, Camael's gaze flicks from Raphael to Neptune. "Gods! I'll catch him!"

Raphael hesitates. The worry in his heart grows further as Neptune tumbles to the ground below, but eventually, the old man relents. He swoops down at half the speed of sound and reaches out his hand to grab the cloth wrapped around Neptune's waist.

Poof!

The undead Titan explodes into ash in midair. His body disperses and scatters into the wind, leaving Raphael to grasp uselessly at nothing!

The Archangel pulls up at the last second before slamming into the ground. The g-forces tug at his body, but he effortlessly resists them and swings his cane at one particularly grabby demon who tries to land a cheap shot.

Fwap!

Raphael's staff batters the Demon Lord senseless and sends him flying. Raphael flaps his wings and rises into the sky. He intercepts Camael, who gives him a look of incredulity.

"By the Creator! What just happened?!

"I don't know," Raphael replies. "However, if I had to guess... I believe Neptune may have died."

"Died?! How?"

Raphael meets his sister's gaze. He stares at her with a look that says, you already know the answer.

Camael squeezes Excalibur's hilt. Her eyes widen as she meets Raphael's gaze. "Catherine...?"

"Aye. 'Tis unfortunate, but Catherine must have defeated Valac, and thusly, Neptune... dissolved."

Raphael glances in every direction. All across Heaven, countless angels and demons cry out in surprise as the undead around them fall to the ground and dissipate into ash.

The Valkyries arrive a few moments later. Sophia keeps one arm wrapped behind Hyacinth's back while using the other to wave at Camael and Raphael. "Hey! Hey! What happened to Neptune? Is he dead?!"

Raphael nods. "Aye. It seems that Catherine finished her task and slew the Reaper. With his death, all of the undead-"

Hyacinth gasps. Despite the pain wracking her body, she jerks a hand out to point at the ground. "Ah! What is that?"

Raphael follows her finger. His eyes fall upon the place where Neptune's ashes scattered. There, a flash of light ignites in the air. Neptune's soul, unconstrained by the Reaper's powers, glows with a light like Heaven itself. An embryo appears on the ground, levitates a few feet into the air, and begins rapidly expanding. Wind sucks toward it, increasing in intensity as the seconds pass.

Camael gasps. "What is this? Rebirth?"

Raphael's gaze hardens. Rage fills his eyes as the embryo transforms into a small child, continues gaining mass, and rapidly accelerates into the figure of a young man.

"Is this another of the Reaper's tricks?" Penelope asks. She grabs her mace and holds it with both hands, but waits for the Archangels to order an attack.

After half a minute, Neptune's embryonic body begins not only to rapidly age but to gain size as well. He increases to six feet in height, then eight feet, ten, twelve...

Soul manipulation! Raphael howls internally. With his knowledge of the past, and his boundless experience with soul manipulators of all types, his eyes turn bloodshot as he witnesses the spectacle unfolding beneath himself. I don't believe it! Where are all of these souls coming from? If Catherine killed the Reaper, then what is happening to Neptune?

Neptune's rate of growth explodes. Not ten seconds later, his body reaches thirty feet in height, then fifty, eighty, a hundred...

Soon, the rate of acceleration slows to a crawl. Neptune tops out at over one hundred and fifty feet tall. Towering above even Cronus at the Mad Titan's peak, Neptune's silky-smooth skin gives him the appearance of a humongous child. Soon, however, his appearance settles, and his skin hardens into that of an atypical Titan. Hair grows on his chest, in his armpits and groin, and even in other scattered spots across his body. His muscles swell to levels rivaling Hercules, and a look of excitement ignites in his eyes.

"Hah... hahaha! HAAAHAHA!!"

Neptune, a giant towering over Raphael and the others, cackles with glee at his new body.

"Oh, what a stroke of good fortune! What a bountiful blessing the Creator has bestowed upon me; the rightful heir to the Atlantean lineage! Fellow Titans, bow before me! Your king has arrived to crush these filthy bloodskins!"

A dozen nearby Titans, all of whom stand only twenty to thirty feet tall, turn to gape at the mountain towering over them.

"Who is that? He seems familiar!"

"Is he one of Zeus's children? No! He's Atlantean! Could he be Poseidon, reborn?"

"Look! The cut of his chin! The shape of his hair! He must be Neptune!"

"That's impossible! Neptune perished to the Reaper's scythe!"

The Titans furiously debate amongst themselves who Neptune might be. He grins greedily at them and laughs.

"Oh, my brothers and sister, how long have you wept for me? I have returned from the hell that was Valac's grasp! Tortured and mutilated, the Reaper toyed with me endlessly! However! All he accomplished was strengthening my soul! I am no longer the child I once was! Behold, the new king of the Titans; Neptune! God of the Seas!"

Neptune sweeps his hand out. Far in the distance, one of Heaven's many lakes bubbles in excitement and leaps into the sky. It transforms into a flying river and rushes toward Neptune at frightening speeds, covering tens of miles in mere seconds.

Neptune laughs as the water slams into him like a bull plowing into a styrofoam castle. He shrugs off the power of the water, absorbs it into his body, and summons magically enchanted armor to protect himself.

"Behold! My birthright! The might of the ocean!"

His performance sends bolts of shock through thousands of demons and angels battling nearby. They all raise their heads and gape at the overwhelming mana flowing through the Titan King's body.

However, Raphael appears unmoved.

Accursed little shit! If Catherine defeated Valac, then somehow, Neptune's highly refined, undead soul must have absorbed Valac's leftover power! It has been many an eternity since I saw the might of Soul Transference rear its ugly head! What a stupid, worthless Titan brat! The Reaper must be using him!!

Raphael forces himself to calm down. However, his thoughts continue to spiral out of control.

Neptune was once one of Valac's captive souls, and one of the highly-refined golden ones, at that! Perhaps, when Catherine tore out Valac's soul from Neptune, she freed him from some of the Reaper's power. But, if that is the case, then why has he absorbed all of these souls? Could it be? Has he taken the souls Valac once possessed for himself?!

What else could be the case? That must be it! Neptune is nothing more than a pawn in the Reaper's plans!

Raphael opens his mouth to protest. He intends to howl obscenities at the Titan, but before he can speak, Camael interrupts him.

"Ah! How fortunate! Neptune has rebirthed as a mighty Titan King! With his power, the demons will surely fall today! Not even I was able to predict this occurrence! The Creator is on our side."

Raphael immediately swallows his words. A tinge of horror appears in his mind, along with a newfound realization.

What can I say? If I make an enemy of Neptune, he'll simply kill me on the spot. I'm far too weak to battle him. Even if all the Archangels were to unleash their might, we might kill him, but the demons would overrun us during the battle! We'd all perish. I don't have any proof of my suspicions. Ah! Perhaps if Camael used Excalibur she could... no! Even if Excalibur has the power to slay this Titan, I can't make any rash moves! A Titan exceeding one hundred feet tall is far too powerful for the angels of this era to handle. If I overestimate Excalibur's power, we'll all suffer gruesome deaths!

Raphael's lip trembles. He fights to hold in his rage and humiliation, but his vision begins to blur with tears.

My family now gazes upon him as a beacon of hope. What hope is there in a young Titan with the power to oppress all of us? Even if he should ally himself to our side and annihilate the demons, what recourse will we have once the battle concludes? Just one Titan King of his size is enough to wipe out legions of battle-hardened cherubs!

"Brother?"

Raphael pauses his thoughts to turn toward Camael. Her joyous expression fades as she recognizes the distress on his face. "Is something the matter?"

"No!" Raphael yells. "I... I didn't expect this development. With... with Neptune on our side... the battle will surely... surely..."

Camael's expression brightens. She misunderstands Raphael's emotions and claps her palm against her chest. "Aye! 'This is the opportunity we need to annihilate the demons! Come, brother! Let us stand alongside Neptune to defeat our foes!"

Camael flaps her wings and flies over to Neptune's shoulder, but Raphael lags behind her. His lethargic movements reveal the bitter battle entangling his mind.

I know not what path to take. Was this, perhaps, Valac's plan all along? Did he intend to forge himself a body capable of annihilating all of us effortlessly? Or was this an accident, perhaps something he did not foresee?

Neptune waves his hand, and water fires from his hands. The highly-pressurized liquid rushes toward a troop of Demon Lords and Barons on the ground, all of whom don't react in time. The water smashes into and pulverizes them into mulch, leaving only a smear of waterlogged blood and bone in their wake.

"Hahaha! Come now, little bloodskins! Which of you thinks they can hold a candle to me?!"

With a few more waves of his hand, Neptune systematically annihilates ten thousand demons. Panic and terror flood their ranks as they turn tail and flee.

"Get out! Run like hell!"

"That Titan is too strong! We're all gonna die!!"

"Eeeyaaaugh-"

The last voice cuts off as hyper-compressed water crushes him into meat paste.

Neptune laughs. His ecstasy only grows as he easily dominates one demon troop after another.

"Like a whale crushing ants, look at how the bloodskins fall before me! None of them can- hm?"

Neptune pauses to look to the north. There, only half a mile away, the ominous, bloody energy continues to rise into the atmosphere. However, now it has thickened into a tall spear of demonic energy surging into Heaven's upper boundaries.

Neptune's cockiness melts away. His smile disappears as he evaluates the new threat.

"Hmph. So the bloodskins have performed a demonic ritual, eh? They might think magical energy of that level would scare me, but they would be wrong!"

Neptune turns all of his attention toward the savage plume of mana surging into the sky. Hardly has he taken a step toward it before his wariness turns to concern.

"It's still intensifying in power! What... what sort of unholy abomination..."

"HAAAAAAAARRRUUUGGHHH!!!"

A mighty roar, like a volcano exploding from the depths of the Earth, shakes all of Heaven like a leaf in the wind. Neptune stumbles backward and nearly loses his footing. His concern turns to outright fear as he gapes at a humongous, unthinkably giant arm bursting out of Heaven's Soil.

"Gods! Oh, ancestors! What have the bloodskins done?! What horror have they summoned from beyond the realm of death?!"

The monstrous arm, formed purely from demonic energy, slams into Heaven, crushing a hundred angels and demons before they can flee. The impact sends a shockwave throughout the land, causing thousands of spectators to lose their footing. Within seconds, another giant demonic arm bursts out of the ground and slams against the soil. Rocks and dirt spray outward in a circle, raining upon the unsuspecting demons and angels nearby. All semblance of order vanishes as chaos engulfs the battlefield.

Demons run. Angels fly. Titans leap. All three sides flee as quickly as they can from the terrifying monster emerging from the boundary of life and death.

Raphael and Camael stare, transfixed, at the scene unfolding before them.

Forget Neptune… Raphael reflects. He doesn't matter anymore. Nothing does.

Michael's eyes lose their luster. The mana emanating from Hercules' soul manipulation vanishes, allowing the Archangel of Courage to see once again. He blinks in surprise at his surroundings.

"Where am I? The last thing I remember…"

"Brother!"

Uzziel jumps out of the ground, startling Michael. In the blink of an eye, he yanks out his sword and sweeps it toward her neck. At the last second, he stops and retracts it, leaving his sister's head on her shoulders. "Gah! Uzziel! Do not leap out at me like that! We're in the middle of a battle, ye damned-"

Suddenly, Michael catches himself. He observes Uzziel more closely as the fog from his head vanishes.

"Thy eyes! No longer do they glow! What of Hercules? Have thou broken free of his control?"

Uzziel flicks her gaze around Michael. Several demon corpses lay in heaps here and there, but the torn-apart body of Lucifer stands out from the crowd. "Yes! But never mind that! We have to get out of here! Look around! Something terrible is about to happen! Cans't thou not see it?"

Uzziel gestures behind herself. For the first time, Michael notices a huge plume of bloody miasma arcing off the ground. "What in the Creator's name is that?!"

Whump!

Something insanely huge smashes into the ground behind Michael. He whirls around, senses alert, to look for the unknown attacker. His eyes raise upward as he notices Chantis, a forty-foot-tall Titaness, wearing little more than a braided grass skirt. The ogre-like she-Titan raises her foot as she spots the blood starting to move and congeal into the form of a demon once again.

"Die, Devil! You damned monster! Stop coming back!!"

SPLAT!

Chantis stomps down and crushes Satan's reforming body into a puddle of blood, then raises her foot again as she waits for movement.

The Titaness ignores Michael. He, however, stares at her in disbelief. Having never seen Satan regenerate from death, he can only gaze in confusion at her actions.

"Has everyone gone mad?"

Shaking the disorientation from his head, Michael turns to face his sister, only to spot Belial lying unconscious a few feet away. Severe burns scar her whole body, giving the impression she's fallen in battle.

"Thou hath defeated all of these Demon Emperors while under Hercules' control," Uzziel says. "I know not what actions thou took, but we have a bigger problem on our hands. It seems that in death, one of the Emperors summoned a terrible calamity upon Heaven. We must leave at once!"

Michael follows Uzziel's gaze to the rapidly thickening plume of blood-red mana. Nausea and disgust surges through the Archangel of Courage as he gazes upon it, causing him to take a step back.

"What evil energy! Thou art correct, sister. Let us regroup with the other Archangels. I cannot bring myself to take a single step toward-"

"HAAAAAAAARRRUUUGGHHH!!!"

Michael falls silent as a thunderous scream explodes from the ground, one so loud that his entire body shakes, and his eardrums burst. Agony tears through Michael's mind, causing him to stumble backward, disoriented. The Archangel of Courage seemingly falls into quicksand, moments before Uzziel grabs and pulls him underground, then transports the two of them elsewhere.

Stars dance in Michael's eyes. Uzziel heals and whisks him to a place away from the Archdemon, then jumps out of the ground, not far from Gabriel.

"Brother!" Uzziel yells. She waves her hand to get Gabriel's attention, but the exhausted Archangel of Power takes a second to recognize her presence.

Gabriel stands amidst several low-ranked cherubs and seraphs at the northern end of the battlefield. Having helped his family clear out hundreds of demons, Gabriel's breathing comes in ragged gasps. Zeus stands a short distance away, sweat dripping down his whole body as he gazes upon not only the Archdemon's emerging form, but the newly arisen Titan King, Neptune.

"Uzziel..." Gabriel mutters. He drops to one knee and reaches out a hand to touch his sister's shoulder. "And Michael, too. What fortune that both of thee have survived this horrible war."

"Hercules betrayed us," Uzziel says. She glances at Michael and checks his physical condition, then returns her gaze to Gabriel. "I sealed his powers. If my vines have relayed the correct information to me, then it also seems Raphael has dealt with the Reaper. All of his minions are dead. Our only remaining threat is..."

"That thing," Zeus growls. His eyes laser onto a massive arm bursting out of Heaven's Soil in the distance. The three Archangels and their low-ranked brethren stumble slightly as an earthquake shakes Heaven. "Ancestors! What horrors have these damned demons unleashed?!"

Gabriel shakily rises to his feet. His hands tremble as he gazes upon the emerging eldritch horror. "All that matters is killing that creature. If push comes to shove... I'll re-enter my Cosmic Form."

Michael and Uzziel gasp in unison. "What! No!"

"Don't even think of it!" Uzziel says.

"Thy body has reached its limits!" Michael adds. "Forcefully activating thy Cosmic Form now might kill ye!"

"Many have already died, today," Gabriel says, unmoved. "I have no right to live when others have fallen. We must fight with all our hearts to protect Heaven."

"Suicide is not an option," Uzziel says. "I'm overruling it. Besides, Neptune has just ascended to the level of a Titan King! His power exceeds Cronus's! With his strength-"

"Nothing will change," Zeus replies, cutting Uzziel off. "He is a whelp. I know not where he has been for the past three thousand years, but I know that no Titan who has jumped to such an echelon of power will possess the control necessary to unleash their true potential. Uzziel, where is the Titan Queen I summoned? We will need her help in this battle."

Uzziel's expression turns blank. After a moment she gasps. "Ah! That's right! I left her over there!"

The Archangel of Creation gestures toward the east, where the indistinct figure of Ivaldi stands wrapped in suppressive folds of a chrysalis. The green, diamond-like leaves coil around her, pinning her in place so that she cannot move.

Zeus frowns.

"Why did you bind her with your nature magic? No, before that, how did you unleash such fearsome power against the Hydra? You have some explaining to do."

Hardly have the words left Zeus's mouth, before two more Archdemon limbs burst from the ground. The Archdemon howls in rage and begins pulling itself from the depths of Heaven, causing tremendous amounts of magical energy to escape its portal and fire in random directions.

Explosions echo throughout the battlefield. Artillery-like bombardments of crystallized mana rush at the three Archangels and the Titan King, forcing all of them to dive for cover.

BOOM, BOOM!

Craters appear all over the place. Several cherubs, present for the discussion only seconds before, end up vaporized into nothingness by the power of the Archdemon's attacks.

Uzziel lands in a roll and jumps to her feet. "I don't know! The long and short of it; Hercules manipulated me!"

"And I as well," Michael adds. "Zeus, go with my sister and release that Titan Queen! I'll take Gabriel to rejoin Raphael and the others!"

Zeus nods. His questions vanish into the wind, no longer mattering in the face of the evil emerging from Heaven's core. "We'll follow you in a few minutes. Go!"

The three Archangels and Titan King run like the wind, splitting off into pairs. Zeus and Uzziel travel solo, while Gabriel and Michael take their brothers and sister with them.

As Uzziel leaves, her eyes fixate on the Archdemon's rising body. Two massive horns emerge from the ground, along with an eyeless head that bobs and turns in random directions; searching for prey. Every second that passes, the Archdemon's body grows taller and taller.

The blood drains from Uzziel's face. "Oh, Creator... what devilry..."

* * *

A minute later, she and Zeus arrive before Ivaldi. The Titaness stands with her back to the Archdemon; unable to see it. Despite being bound by Yggdrasil's nature energy, Ivaldi remains fully aware of her surroundings. She spots Uzziel and snarls angrily.

"Release me; you damned Archangel whore!"

Uzziel flinches. "I-I'm sorry for trapping thee in such a manner! Hercules controlled my actions! I had no say in what my body did!"

"Like I care! I won't forgive you, Yggdrasil! You slew me in cold blood! I've come to return the favor!!"

Zeus halts. His thoughts of rescuing the Titan woman falter. "Uzziel killed you? When?"

"How should I know?! Millennia turned into eons! I haven't a clue how long it's been since I died. I only know that this... this disgusting Devil laughed maniacally as she watched my body shrivel up and wither into nothing!"

Uzziel shakes her head. "I'm sorry, but thou must be confusing me with someone else. I would never harm a fly. 'Tis not in my nature to bring injury upon others."

"WHAT?! Lies! Filthy, damned, Archangel lies!!"

Ivaldi jerks her body from right to left. Despite only moving a few inches, each movement releases a monstrous amount of energy. The chrysalis shudders and shakes, but doesn't break. It holds firm, keeping her contained.

"Please! I am not thy enemy!" Uzziel says. "I don't even know thy name or face! If we knew each other, 'twas during the Primordial Era. I remember nothing from those days, due to Raphael's mind-wipes."

"Grrrgh!"

Ivaldi continues to struggle, but after a moment, Uzziel's words reach her ears.

"Raphael's... mind-wipes... ah. That's right... I vaguely remember some news regarding..."

A look of surprise crosses Ivaldi's face. She flicks her eyes between Zeus's face and Uzziel's as well.

"The descendant of Hrothgar stands beside the one who slew his ancestor... such a thing should be impossible, according to the Titan code. That must mean the rumors were true..."

Zeus scowls. "What are you babbling about?! Look to the south, great ancestor! A monster of cosmic power is emerging to kill us all! I summoned you back to help us! I gave up my birthright for the sake of my people! Please, forget thy past grievances, and help us-"

"Do not order me around!" Ivaldi roars. "I won't take any lip from some pathetic, half-baked runt of Hrothgar's line! Hmph! You claim there's a mighty foe here; one worthy of my attention? I will never fight it for your sake! I returned only to raise my family's glory! I will kill to increase my standing at the High Table, and I will take my revenge on Yggdrasil! Nothing else matters!"

Suddenly, Heaven shakes once again. A massive blast of hyper-condensed water slams into the emerging Archdemon, causing the creature to become enraged and thrash about. It continues rising from Heaven's depths, but pauses for a moment to charge up a powerful laser of atomic breath.

One second later, it swivels its head toward Neptune and fires.

KSSEEEEWWW!

The high-pitched squeal of Heaven's Light burning into nothingness mixes with the heat of the sun. The laser fires at Neptune, who manages to leap into the sky at the last second. It narrowly misses, slams into Heaven's soil, and sprays a mountain of rubble into the distance. A gorge as deep as the Grand Canyon appears where Neptune stood only seconds earlier, and all of the rock that was once there flies away into the distance to land at the far reaches of Heaven.

With her back facing the Archdemon, Ivaldi cannot see the several-hundred-foot-tall creature emerging from an unseen abyss. However, the energy emitted by the Archdemon instantly silences her.

Ivaldi's eyes shrink to pinpricks.

"...By the Creator. Was that...?"

Zeus nods hurriedly. "Ancestor! Please! Set aside thy differences with Uzziel! This monster will be the death of all living Titans! We need thy help!"

Ivaldi stands thirty feet taller than Zeus, at seventy feet tall. Nevertheless, compared to the Archdemon, she appears pitifully tiny and impotent.

For the first time since her arrival, Ivaldi senses a threat to her existence.

She nods.

"I... I understand. Release me. Regarding the memory-wipes and other matters, we will speak later, Uzziel. For now... I will fight. Not for others, but for myself. I will redeem myself in the eyes of the High Table."

Uzziel exhales a sigh of relief. She motions with her hands and slowly retracts the chrysalis from around Ivaldi. She winces, expecting the Titan Queen to double-cross her, but Ivaldi makes no aggressive moves.

Instead, Ivaldi whips around to gaze upon the Archdemon's visage.

All the color drains from her face.

"It can't be... is this... Morva? The King of Darkness? I never lived to see him walk the plane of existence, but this creature fits the description..."

A shudder runs down Ivaldi's back. She swallows her saliva and glances at Zeus.

"If only I could bring Odin here. Surely, she would be able to handle such a creature on her own. Compared to the Allmother, I am little more than a gnat. I know not how my strength will fare, but if this beast is Morva's fourth reincarnation, we must stop him at any cost. His power will only continue to grow!"

The mana-like body of the Archdemon solidifies even further. Several tentacles, each one possessing heads of razor-sharp teeth at the ends, snap at nearby cherubs and demons, chewing them up before they can react and swallowing them whole.

Zeus clenches his fist. "If we fail here, this creature will break free from Heaven and annihilate the mortal realm. Nothing will be able to stop it. We must kill it while we can."

"Aye!" Ivaldi replies. She motions with her hands and summons a divine sword and shield. "No matter the foe, a Titan never backs down! We are dragonslayers; deities birthed to kill! Even if I perish here, I will earn accolades and glory!"

With a knowing glint in her eyes, she smiles at Zeus. "Young one. You have given up your birthright by summoning me. However, against such a foe, it may be earned again. Do not hold back. Fight with such zeal that the Ancestors will sing tales of your bravery. Only then will you have a chance at redeeming your shame and joining me in the Great Hall of Valhalla."

Zeus's expression changes. Like a divine gift imparted from the Creator himself, he gazes at Ivaldi with newfound admiration.

"Of course! What sort of fool would I be to pass up this opportunity! Let's kill this bastard!"

Ivaldi returns her gaze to the Archdemon.

"Hmph. Perhaps Hrothgar's descendants aren't as weak-willed as I first thought."

Part 166: The Archdemon's Rampage

Recommended Listening - Mirror

Michael murdered Lucy. He butchered the woman I love.

Diablo's heart shatters as he recalls the image burned into his memory; that of Lucifer's body lying broken on the ground at Michael's feet - the Archangel smiling at Diablo, taunting him for his weakness.

I couldn't move a muscle. I couldn't save her.

It's not Michael's fault. It's mine. I let him kill her. I stood by while he threw her away like garbage.

I'm worthless. WORTHLESS!!

Diablo's body trembles. Rage engulfs him, and his soul begins to resonate.

I can't let it end like this. I can't let Michael get away with murder! I hate him! I HATE HIM!!

Diablo's soul takes physical shape. It expands in size, dissolving away his skin and bone to make room for a newer, mightier form.

Four new arms materialize on his right and left. Diablo's legs shift and split into hundreds of writhing, barracuda-like tentacles with teeth.

A light appears above Diablo, one leading back to the realm of the living. He raises his eyes to gaze at it.

I have to go back. I can't die here! I HAVE TO AVENGE HER!

Horns grow from Diablo's head. His eyes seal shut, while a psychic impression of the world swirls around him. Like water rushing toward the top of a geyser, Diablo coils all of the strength in his lower body and leaps toward the light.

"MICHAEEEEL!!"

Long, thin spines grow out of Diablo's back, each one allowing him to sense the area around his body. The moment his head emerges into Heaven's Light, millions of pinpricks of mana appear around him. Diablo's face contorts in rage as he spins his head around, trying to find the bastard who killed his wife.

"WHERE ARE YOU?! DON'T THINK YOU CAN HIDE FROM ME!!"

* * *

Diablo imagines full sentences in his mind, but out loud, the only thing the angels and demons hear are violent, animalistic screams of rage. The Archdemon emerges from the Great Beyond; vengeance etched onto his face. He swivels in search of his prey, but every being in Heaven appears as the same-colored blip of energy, no matter how he tries to discern them.

MICHAEL MUST BE HERE! HE'S BLENDING IN... TRYING TO HIDE AMONGST THE OTHERS! I WON'T LET HIM! I'LL KILL EVERYONE IN MY WAY!! NOBODY WILL STOP ME!

Diablo's four arms crash into Heaven's surface, stabilizing his climb out of the infinite abyss while sending megaquakes in every direction. By the time he's halfway emerged from the soil, he already towers five hundred feet over the battlefield.

"MICHAAAEEEEL!! SHOW YOURSELF, YOU MURDERER!!"

Something strikes Diablo's chest. A faint tingle spreads through the affected area, causing a weak sensation of pain to stir in the Archdemon's newly awakened body. He jerks his head toward several glowing souls flying in the air; all of them bunched up together.

"FILTHY ANGELS!! I WON'T LET YOU LIVE!! YOU'LL PAAAAY!!"

Another incomprehensible scream bursts from the Archdemon's mouth, flattening the grass within a mile around him and deafening all unlucky enough not to cover their ears.

A moment later, Diablo inhales. A vortex of air sucks into his mouth and ignites the power of a star in his belly.

Then, he exhales.

A pointed flash of heat fires from the Archdemon's mouth and surges into the flying group of souls. They vaporize instantly, while the beam sails into the south, where it incinerates a mountain, sends it flying into the stratosphere, and eventually destroys a chunk of land the size of a small city.

KILL... KILL! KILL KILL KILL KILL!!! I'LL KILL EVERY LAST ANGEL BASTARD UNTIL THEY BEG FOR MERCY!!"

At this moment, a much brighter soul, one that takes the form of a star compared to the others, steps toward Diablo.

Boom!

A hardened trident of water stabs into the Archdemon's chest, triggering Diablo's rage.

"YOU... YOU DARE STRIKE ME?! PERISH!"

Neptune's complexion turns ashen as the Archdemon sweeps its hand toward him. A thousand bolts of lightning fire from Diablo's fingers, each one ten times more energetic than even Zeus can unleash.

Neptune can't react in time. Trillions of volts of electricity hit him with enough force to send him flying backward. The newly arisen Titan King flies off his feet, spins helplessly, and hurtles over ten miles before crashing into the hill dividing the battlefield from Nirvana.

Thoom!

Every bone in Neptune's body howls and pleads for forgiveness. The Titan gasps as his muscles seize up, and his body temporarily shuts down. None of his limbs listen to his commands. His whole body shivers and convulses.

Diablo's interest in Neptune's existence vanishes just as fast as it arrived. His senses quickly pick out the largest groups of glowing souls scattered amidst the battlefield, and power builds up in his chest.

"KILL THEM ALL! EVERY LAST ONE!!"

A ball of dark energy fires from the Archdemon's forehead. It rushes toward the cluster of ten thousand souls and explodes, scattering their bodies to the four winds and eradicating the lives of all trapped within its area of effect.

* * *

Half a mile away, Raphael and the other Archangels suppress the urge to vomit as they witness thousands of angels and demons perish in the blink of an eye. The unbelievably powerful Archdemon roars again, nearly shattering their eardrums.

"What are we waiting for?!" Camael screams, her voice hoarse. "Let's kill this thing!"

Raphael grits his teeth. Terror seizes his limbs, but he forces himself to move. "Aye!"

Recommended Listening

Chaos erupts on all sides of the Archdemon. After fleeing from the freshly arisen abomination, many demons turn around and raise their fists to the sky.

"Hahaha! Filthy pigeons! Now you're all dead!"

"That big demon's on our side! We can't lose now!"

"Haha! Wait... wha-... what's it doing?"

One group of demons, all bunched together in a clump, attracts the Archdemon's attention. Their eyes widen as Diablo inhales to form a blast of fire energy.

"W-wait, stop! We're on your side! We're on- EEYAAAH!!"

The demons scream as the heat of the sun incinerates them, blasting tons of debris outward to rain upon those fortunate enough to escape the Archdemon's initial salvo.

"Shrakh! He's attackin' everyone! Not just pigeons! That fuckin' bastard!"

"Stabface! My blood-brother, nooo!"

Some demons wail as their closest friends perish to the Archdemon's fierce assault. A moment later, electric energy arcs between Diablo's horns. It combines to form a disruptive EMP blast; then the Archdemon fires it upward.

Kseeeeew!

Heaven's Light dims as the mighty blast of electrical energy detonates in midair. Thousands of bolts of lightning fly out in every direction and surge toward the ground, striking angels, demons, monsters, and Titans at random. The weakest beings explode violently into superheated clouds of blood-gas, while the brains of others turn to mush and melt inside their skulls. A horrific stench of death washes across Heaven, gagging the survivors and stifling their will to fight.

"What can we do?" One female cherub wails in terror. "Th-this monster is too powerful! We're all going to die!"

A demon nearby, close enough to stab her in the back, instead fixes his gaze on the mountain of flesh dwarfing the battlefield. "H-how should I know?! Ain't you an angel? Get up there and fight it!"

"I don't want to fight! I want to run away!" The woman howls. She flaps her wings and starts to fly away. Before she makes it a hundred feet, a figure suddenly appears before her.

"Ah! Get out of my- huh? Brother Raphael?"

One of Raphael's illusions materializes before her. Hundreds of others spread across Heaven's battlefield. They speak all at once while using Raphael's power to amplify their voices.

"Brothers! Sisters! Do not give up hope! This hellspawn is only one enemy! We must unite together and kill it as quickly as possible! Fear not, for we have faced entities a thousand times mightier than this one! I will not allow us to lose!"

* * *

Raphael levitates in the air only half a mile from the Archdemon. Despite the confident tone in his illusions' voices, Raphael's heart weighs heavy.

Indeed, this demon cannot compare to the ancient dragons, nor to many of the dark Titan Kings... but where they were one thousand times stronger, the angels were millions of times mightier than we are, today.

We may yet lose everything.

This creature strongly resembles the dark Titan, Morva, but it doesn't possess a trillionth his cunning. At best, it wields a mere facsimile of his former power.

Raphael's thoughts tumble around in his head, giving him a migraine. He turns to Camael and nods.

"Catherine was right to face the Reaper on her own. Use thy divine weapon, Excalibur, now."

Camael meets her brother's gaze. "I cannot come close to unleashing Excalibur's full might. 'Tis an incomplete weapon."

"We haven't many options left," Raphael replies. He presses his lips together. "Gabriel's Cosmic Form might stand a chance against this unholy fiend, but he has already used it. Now, only Michael still possesses a trump card."

"He does?"

"Aye. And if possible, I won't allow him to use it. Go!"

Raphael gestures toward the Archdemon, and Camael nods.

"I'm off! Wish me luck!"

She flaps her wings and rushes toward the ground a short distance from the still-emerging Archdemon. Raphael swallows as he watches her leave.

"Oh, Creator. Have we not suffered enough? Have we not lost enough of our brothers and sisters?!"

* * *

Camael lands feet-first on the torn-up remnants of Heaven's Soil. Immediately, massive waves of demonic energy crash against her and root her to the ground.

The Archangel of Divination raises her eyes toward the Archdemon. Already, he stands seven hundred feet tall.

"I can scarcely breathe! Thou art a dark god, but one born of demonkind! Thou hath one weakness, and 'tis none other than the might of holy energy!!"

Camael unsheathes Excalibur and points its tip toward the Archdemon. Power rushes from the hilt into her arms, then into her heart. The divine mana spins around in her chest for a moment to gather momentum, then surges back into the weapon.

Excalibur radiates dazzling light. The tip of its blade ignites with power.

Camael howls in rage as she puts all of her strength into the attack. A blast of divine energy greater than any seen in eons fires from Excalibur toward the Archdemon's chest.

CRASH!

The divine mana strikes Diablo square in the ribs. It impacts a barrier of hardened mana created from the Archdemon's raw essence and explodes, only to pierce through the Archdemon's chest and soar into the stratosphere an instant later.

"HEEEOOOORRR!!!"

The Archdemon bellows at the top of its lungs. Camael falls backward and crashes into the ground, breaking both of her wings from the power of the Archdemon's voice. She blacks out, only to wake up a moment later with someone standing over her.

"M-Michael?"

Michael and Uzziel join together with Gabriel, Zeus, and Ivaldi to form a shield of flesh around Camael. Uzziel heals her eldest sister and nods.

"Thank the Creator that I saw what happened. We whisked thy body away before the Great Demon could retaliate. A moment later, and thou would have perished!"

Camael gasps. "Ah! Did I kill it? Injure it?"

The Archangel of Divination gazes past Uzziel, to the Archdemon, now a little over a mile away. Having moved their sister to safety, the Archangels take a moment to finish healing Camael before helping her to her feet.

Camael proves little more than a minor nuisance in Diablo's mind. He forgets about her existence almost immediately and returns to annihilating the most densely packed clusters of mana and souls he can find.

Camael scrutinizes the Archdemon for only a moment. Horror spreads across her face as she spots the place where Excalibur's attack hit.

"Scarcely a scratch! That blast of holy energy should... should have..."

Gabriel nods. "Do not blame thyself, Camael. Leave this to Ivaldi."

Camael jumps to her feet and turns to look at the Titan King and Queen towering over her. Ivaldi tilts her head down to examine the tiny Archangel.

"Hmph. The All-Seer. I suppose you've already forgotten the prophecy you bequeathed me when we last spoke."

"My apologies," Camael replies. "I do not remember."

"The past is the past," Ivaldi says. "Come, Zeus. Let us go to Neptune. The more Titans, the better."

Ivaldi and Zeus nod toward each other. Zeus activates his Thunderstep and rushes away at the speed of sound, leaving a sonic boom in his wake. Ivaldi transforms into a beam of light, exceeding his speed by several thousand factors.

Camael turns to Gabriel. "What did Ivaldi mean? Why are the Titans going to battle the Great Demon by themselves?"

Gabriel narrows his eyes as he loses sight of Zeus and Ivaldi. "I do not know. Ivaldi claimed she had a technique that could give them the power to take down the Great Demon. We must trust her... for now."

Nearby, the Archangel of Courage turns to gaze upon the Archdemon. In the back of his mind, a nagging doubt begins to emerge.

When Gabriel and I rescued Camael and spoke to Raphael, his words gave me pause. Why would my brother imply that I had yet to unleash my true potential? Have I a trump card of which I know nothing? Why would Raphael hide it from me, especially now?

Shaking his worries away, Michael nods toward the Archdemon.

"We will stay here and await Raphael's orders."

* * *

Ivaldi and Zeus reach Neptune in the blink of an eye. The freshly minted Titan King sits on his knees, gasping for breath. Sweat drenches his body and forms puddles all over the ground beneath him.

The two newcomers barely reach his knees. However, compared to the pathetic appearance of the 150-foot Titan King before her, Ivaldi cuts a much more confident and menacing presence.

"Stupid brat! How could you fall to such a weak attack?! Disgraceful! You don't deserve such a powerful body!"

She berates Neptune, causing him to flinch and glare at her angrily.

"Do not speak to me in such a manner, little one! I am Neptune, son of Poseidon, son of Cronus! Who are you to address me with such disrespect?!"

Neptune shakily rises to his feet. Despite the overwhelming difference in size, Ivaldi continues to laugh at him.

"Hah! The Cronus line is plagued with fools and simpletons! You should know your place, runt! Before you stands none other than Ivaldi, the Queen of Divinity! Hmph! My bloodline once ran so thick that a thousand Cronus-spawn couldn't lay a hand against me!"

Zeus flicks his eyes between the two bickering Titans. After a moment, he pulls his arms apart, then claps his palms together, creating a thunderous boom!

"Stop your squabbling! Ivaldi, we came here for a reason. Don't forget what it was! Neptune, know your place! This woman is none other than one of our legendary ancestors, here to save us from the Great Demon! Make Poseidon proud; show her the appropriate respect!"

Zeus's words calm the tension between both of his fellow Titans. Neptune relaxes his expression and nods apologetically. "Ah, now, I understand. My apologies, Queen of Divinity. I did not realize your position."

"Hmph. This generation is ignorant of a great many things. Never mind all of that! We must gather as many Titans as possible. I have a secret method to defeat the Great Demon! It cannot fail!"

Zeus nods. "You referred to it as the Binding Arts. How does it work?"

"Better to show than to tell," Ivaldi replies. "Both of you, split up. Fetch every Titan you can find. We'll meet up atop that mountain to the west!"

Ivaldi gestured toward the mountain overlooking Heaven's Gate; the place where the demons initially began their attack.

"Very well," Zeus replies. "Neptune. You heard our ancestor. Get a move on! Your voice carries quite far!"

Confusion appears in Neptune's eyes.

The Binding Arts? What sort of incredible technique could it be? Will we tie it down to restrict its movement? Will we restraing it somehow, allowing us to annihilate its helpless form? Against the Great Demon, will such a strategy have any effect?

He keeps his reservations to himself. After a moment, he nods.

"Very well. I'll do as you say, ancestor."

"No more words!"

Ivaldi transforms into a flash of light and zips away. Zeus follows a moment later, each of them traveling to the east and west side of the battlefield.

Neptune takes a step toward the battlefield, still far in the distance, and shudders.

"I... I have to go back there? I have to face that hellspawn once more? Oh, ancestors. What have I signed up for?"

Despite possessing a body rivaling the ancient Titan Kings, Neptune reveals his child-like thoughts for a moment before suppressing them once more.

"My people need me. They need a king! I will make them proud!"

He coils power into his legs and leaps to the north, heading swiftly toward the battlefield.

Ten minutes later, all fifty of the remaining Titans arrive at the top of the mountain overlooking the battlefield. Their movements draw plenty of attention from the demons and angels below, but nobody has time to care. The angels and the demons occasionally backstab one another while evading the Archdemon's attacks, but a few scattered groups begrudgingly set aside their differences and work together to defend themselves.

Ivaldi turns her head from left to right. Disappointment crosses her face as she eyeballs the Titans gathered.

"Zeus. I told you to find as many Titans as possible. This sum will hardly do anything for us."

Zeus lowers his eyes. "My apologies, great ancestor. These are all of our people who remain. If any others exist, I do not know of them."

"What?! Only fifty Titans walk among the mortal realm?! You can't be serious!"

A flicker of movement at Ivaldi's left catches her attention. The Queen of Divinity turns to watch as a Titaness sheds her invisibility and flies toward the group of assembled giants.

"This had better be important!" Chantis growls. "I was suppressing Satan from resurrecting! Now that I've left, he'll surely rebirth!"

Zeus nods. "Our ancestor, Ivaldi, has a task for us. We need every available pair of hands."

Ivaldi ignores Chantis's objections. "Your petty squabbles with the low-ranked demons mean nothing. We must slay the Great Demon here and now. Listen carefully. I possess knowledge of an ancient Titan power, one I've designated the 'Binding Arts.' However, the power of this spell will lose much of its effectiveness with such... inferior Titanspawn."

A look of disdain passes over Ivaldi's face. Internally, she groans. None of these children stand more than forty feet tall. How can I defeat the Great Demon if the only pawns I can use are hatchlings fresh from their mother's bosoms?

Ivaldi curls up her lip in disgust, then quickly hides her annoyance.

They will have to do.

"Everyone. Gather around and form a circle. Take the hands of the Titans closest to you. I will stand in the center and invoke the rite of the Binding Arts."

Zeus gestures toward Neptune. "Poseidon's boy is too tall for us to reach. What should we do?"

"Worry not," Ivaldi replies. "For the Binding Arts to work, we need a vessel, a controller, and spirits with enough energy to initiate the transference. Neptune will be the vessel, while I will be the controller."

Zeus nods along, but he creases his brow in worry. "These Binding Arts sound incredibly complex. What are you planning to do?"

"Hmph. Do you want to know? I'll tell you. Long ago, the nine Archangels used their ability to join their souls and bodies together to create freakishly powerful beings known as the Three Divines. The Cherubiim, Seraphiim, and Ophaniim comprised their ranks. Three Archangels, one Divine Being. As you might notice, I am the Queen of Divinity. I created an ability which copies the Archangel's powers, allowing Titans to fuse their souls and bodies!"

All of the gathered Titans gasp in awe.

"Goodness! Our ancestor is mightier than I thought!"

"Who knew such a technique existed? With her power, we will easily overwhelm the Great Demon!"

Several Titans nod along and chain their hands together, eager to experience their ancestor's ultimate technique. However, Zeus pauses to rub his beard.

"You copied the Archangel's ability? It sounds overwhelmingly powerful, but fusing souls and bodies is..."

He trails off and leaves an implication hanging in the air.

Ivaldi smiles at him, but a trace of malice appears in her gaze. "Do not confuse my Binding Arts with the despicable acts of a soul manipulator. I do not retain the souls used for my own ends, and this technique requires willing participants. Once I finish, we will all disperse safely."

Ivaldi pauses.

"However... there is one flaw."

Zeus raises an eyebrow. "Hm?"

"The Archangels multiplied their power by several factors when transforming into a Divine. Unlike them, my Binding Arts can only unleash a small portion of all our combined might. That is why- ah!!"

Ivaldi spins on her heel. She gasps as a sense of overwhelming danger appears in her mind. Several miles away, the Archdemon spots the clump of juicy-looking Titan souls standing atop the mountain. Diablo inhales for a moment before firing a laser of flame toward his prey.

"Get down!!" Ivaldi bellows. She jumps forward, motions with her hands, and summons a divine bubble of mana to envelop the Titans present.

One second later, Diablo's concentrated blast of fire impacts the mountain.

THOOOOM!

Ivaldi's shield stretches around all of the Titans. However, due to making it as big as possible, its defensive strength drops sharply. The Titan ancestor screams as the heat of the sun blasts her body, scorches her skin, and flings her into the distance.

Far behind the mountain, high into the sky, and down toward a previously unseen forest, Ivaldi careens helplessly. She plummets fifty miles toward the ground below. The Titaness crashes into Heaven's Soil with an explosive boom, tearing up trees, shattering boulders, and ripping a gash through one of Heaven's most beautiful forests.

After several seconds, Ivaldi grinds to a stop. Catastrophic pain wracks her body from head to toe. Third degree burns turn her skin black, while an uncountable number of blisters rapidly form, intensifying her pain further.

The Queen of Divinity gags on her tongue. It takes her brain a moment to reorient itself. She opens her eyes only to see a blood-red world, one tainted by the damage to her brain. Forcing herself to lift her head, Ivaldi shakily glances toward the mountain far in the distance where she stood with the other Titans only a minute before.

Ah... ah... oh, gods... I couldn't react... in time... aaooo...

A tear streams down her cheek as she fights the urge to vomit. With a motion of her hands, she summons healing magic to coat her body. While nowhere as effective as Belial or Uzziel's abilities, Ivaldi manages to bring herself back from the brink of death. She climbs to her feet and staggers forward. Her skin cracks and snaps as she walks. It breaks apart and causes fresh blood to flow, making her wince in pain.

"Damn... too many questions... let my guard down... huwak!"

She coughs black blood for a moment, then activates a spell, transforming herself into a beam of light.

Fwip!

Ivaldi rushes back to the mountain. A second later, she appears at the top and gasps in horror.

A dozen Titans lay dead, their bodies battered and broken. Where before, fifty Titans stood, fewer than forty remain.

Zeus stands over Chantis. The invisibility Titaness whimpers as she clutches a giant tree branch impaled through her chest.

"Daddy... daddy... I don't want to die... I don't..."

Zeus holds the back of her head with his hand. "Stay with me, daughter! Don't give in! I can find Uzziel! She will be able to-"

"That won't be necessary," Ivaldi interrupts. She staggers toward Zeus and brusquely pushes him aside. "I can heal her. Give me a moment."

Zeus ignores her pushiness. He moves to the left and watches as Ivaldi yanks the branch through Chantis's chest, causing a fountain of blood to erupt. Before Chantis can succumb to her wounds, Ivaldi casts healing magic and repairs the damage.

"I cannot replace the lost blood, but I can seal the hole and repair this girl's broken bones. However, my power is limited. I only have so long before I must return to Valhalla. The more mana I use, the sooner I must leave."

Ivaldi flicks her eyes around the devastated mountainside. Other than several dead and injured Titans, superheated rocks slowly cool down, and small fires crackle and burn wherever grass gives them fuel.

"Where is Neptune?"

"Here!"

Neptune's voice comes from the sky. Ivaldi flicks her gaze upward and sighs.

"You turned yourself into water? The Great Demon's attack must have evaporated you."

Several clouds high in the sky dissipate and transform into a river. Neptune falls downward, morphs back into his Titan body, and hits the mountainside feet first, landing with the ease of a practiced skydiver.

"Aye, but don't worry about me. We must hurry and use your Binding Arts, ancestor! If the Great Demon attacks again, I don't want to imagine the tragedy we'll suffer!"

Ivaldi nods. "The others here are too injured. Damn! I should have moved more quickly. Zeus, it will have to be just the three of us. Come, stand between Neptune and I. I will bind us together at once."

Zeus and Neptune nod. The Titan King of Thunder stands before the newly awakened Titan King of the Seas. Both of them face Ivaldi as she aims her finger at the ground.

A beam of light fires from Ivaldi's fingertip. She rapidly draws a magical circle around herself and Zeus, along with a second circle around Neptune.

"O, powers of divinity, those which come from the might of the Creator, give rise to the cosmic forces within us all..."

Ivaldi chants a spell. Several seconds pass as she finishes drawing the magic circle.

"...to the ends of time... and now, I activate the might of the Creator... unify!"

Zeus gasps. A black hole appears before Ivaldi, and his body begins to suck toward it.

Terror engulfs Zeus's mind. "Ah! I cannot resist! What is...?!"

An instant later, his body and soul compresses into a small orb of light. He rushes toward his ancestor and enters her chest, causing the black hole to vanish. She motions toward Neptune, and a similar black hole appears, but this time, in front of his face.

"I acknowledge this one's power! Combine!"

Ivaldi copies Zeus and flies at Neptune's face. He flinches slightly as his ancestor becomes an orb of light, and a strange, alien presence appears in his mind.

Ivaldi's magical circles lose their luster. Within seconds, only Neptune remains standing.

Neptune clenches his fists. "It worked!"

His words echo strangely, the combination of his voice, Zeus's, and Ivaldi's.

"I see. So this is the power of the Binding Arts! With our powers combined, I have three times the strength I did before!"

"No," Neptune says, replying to himself. "My technique is a pale imitation of the Archangels'. At best, we have only doubled your original strength. If the Archangels were to perform their version of the Binding Arts, their strength would increase by twenty times! In any case, we haven't much time. We need to kill the Great Demon before our fusion dissipates."

"Right. Let's go!"

Neptune motions with his hands and transforms his body into a beam of light. He uses Ivaldi's power, along with his own, and flies toward the Archdemon.

"You killed my children!" Neptune roars. "You'll pay with your blood!"

Author's note:

This is the Archdemon!

And here, as well!

Originally based off this image.

Part 167: A Rare Catch

Recommended Listening

Five cherubs flap their wings and soar around the Archdemon in circles. They form a Flying-V shape in the air while slashing, stabbing, and cutting the Archdemon's back. Despite their incredible battle strength, the might of these cherubs pales in comparison to their seemingly unstoppable foe.

Diablo towers nine hundred feet over the battlefield. With his emergence into Heaven slowed by the appearance of millions of annoying pests, the Archdemon has yet to fully emerge into Heaven's Light. Instead, his attention jumps from one cluster of enemies to another, killing and slaughtering without any remorse.

Kirie, the female cherub leading her four brothers and sisters in an assault on the Archdemon, curls her wings together and dives down along the path of his spine. She holds out her magically-enchanted blade and slices a shallow gash down the Archdemon's back, peeling him open from his neck to his waist. The other four cherubs mimic her, creating a five-fingered gash that stretches halfway down the Archdemon's body.

Diablo's thick, oppressive mana causes Kirie's heart to pound like a drum in her chest. Her fingers tremble from how hard it is to maintain her grip on her sword.

"H-hold out a little longer!" Kirie exclaims. "Raphael will arrive soon!"

As Kirie swoops down, she pulls up at the last second and flies away from the Archdemon. Her brothers and sisters follow after her, maintaining their Flying-V formation.

"Damn! We've hardly scratched the fiend!" Flora, one of Kirie's sisters, says. "My right arm is going numb! The Great Demon's mana is too suffocating!"

"Aye," Hophis, one of the male cherubs, adds. "My body is still wracked with exhaustion from fighting the weaker demons. The Great Demon will kill us all if we don't eliminate it quickly! We can't win a war of attrition against these damned bloodskins."

Kirie doesn't reply. Her brother's words strike a nerve, causing her to retreat to her inner thoughts.

Brother Gabriel has already used his Cosmic Form! He can't use it again. If he does, he might die. How can we possibly defeat the Great Demon without him? It's hopeless. Hopeless!

Despair floods into Kirie's heart. She flaps her wings and rises into the sky, then twists around and rushes back toward the Archdemon.

I don't want to die, but neither do I want this horrible entity to kill my family! If only Raphael would give the order to retreat... we could leave Heaven behind and travel the stars to seek out a new home. Why doesn't he give the order? Does he consider our lives less important than Heaven's survival?!

The cherub leader curses Raphael inwardly. She doesn't hate him, but during this moment of crisis, her doubts turn her thoughts rebellious.

"Ah! Gods, what is that?!" Flora exclaims. Kirie jerks her head back to see her sister staring wide-eyed at the blood-red portal beneath Diablo.

Hophis's expression turns ghastly. "Are those the fiend's... legs?!"

Kirie slows to a stop. She flaps her wings to hover in midair, then lowers her eyes to stare at Heaven's Soil, hundreds of feet below.

A writhing mass of appendages becomes visible beneath the Archdemon. Tentacles, each one filled to the brim with razor-sharp teeth, quickly flood out of the portal and press against Heaven's Soil, increasing the Archdemon's speed of ascent. Within seconds, tens of thousands of man-eating barracuda-like heads surge in every direction and snap at the nearest angels, demons, and monsters.

"Oh, Creator!" Kirie exclaims. Her blood turns to ice. "What horrors have arrived this time?!"

"GERROOOOAAAHH!!!"

Diablo screams in rage. Despite his head facing to the south, the five cherubs behind him get caught by the oppressive soundwave and fly backward, unable to stop themselves in time.

"Ahhh!"

Kirie cries out in fear and flaps her wings, reorienting herself in midair. Below her, the horrifying winding maws sense her panic and leap from the ground into the sky.

Oh, gods! Kirie exclaims in her mind. A surge of adrenaline surges through her body, causing her to flap her wings three times harder. She jumps into the air, narrowly evading the nearest tentacle's jaws.

Snap!

The fearsome maw chomps at the air, but only nets a few feathers for its efforts. Angered, it sends a signal to three nearby barracuda-jaws. The four mindless maws turn their attention on the fleeing cherubs and join together with one purpose to hunt them down.

"Kirie! Look out!" Flora cries.

Kirie flies toward the sky, but her eyes widen as the tentacles stretch to freakish lengths and pounce toward her from the ground.

"What?! Each one is as long as the Great Demon's main body!"

The elite cherub curls her right wing and twists her body in midair to face the Archdemon. She flaps her wings and rushes toward Diablo at top speed, ignoring G-forces that would cause a fighter jet pilot to pass out. The four jaws pursue her and snap at her from the right and left, as well as below. Each time, she pulls up her feet, twists to the side, or slashes with her sword to cut a path toward them.

At the last second, before she can slam into the Archdemon's main body, she swoops straight downward. The four hungry jaws slap against the Archdemon's body like pancakes against a boulder, only to immediately shrug off the impact and pursue her again.

"I can't escape these horrible monsters!" Kirie yells in panic. "What should I do?!"

A scream of terror catches Kirie's attention. Her eyes snap to Flora right as two of the maws bring their teeth down, chewing the cherub warrior to death. In the blink of an eye, they finish her off and rip her to pieces, killing the once-beautiful angel woman and reducing her to bloody meat-chunks.

"Flora!! Oh, gods, no!!"

Hatred and despair overwhelm Kirie as she dodges two more potentially fatal attacks. Due to the extreme danger and stress, she puts all of her efforts into dodging the Archdemon's tentacles, but her movements begin to slow as her energy levels fall.

"I can't... can't run forever... I'm going to die!"

The cries of Hophis and the other two cherubs as they turn to mincemeat sends Kirie into the final realm of despair.

It's all over... I won't last ten more seconds...

A tear streams down her face as she plunges to Heaven below, where hundreds of tentacles writhe around on the ground, waiting for prey to draw near.

Flora... Hophis... everyone... I've failed all of them.

Suddenly, a burst of energy on the opposite side of the Archdemon causes Heaven to rumble and shake. The Archdemon staggers backward as something with incredible force strikes it in the chest.

The maws pursuing Kirie pause their pursuit and jerk to look at the sky as their master gives them a mental command.

THE ANGELS ARE ATTACKING ME! PROTECT ME! KILL THEM ALL!

Kirie's body trembles as she forces her wings to flap again. She pulls up and soars along the ground to fly away from the Archdemon. As she does, she shoots a look behind herself at Diablo's back.

"What happened? Why did those horrible jaws cease their pursuit?"

Kirie's confusion doesn't give her enough reason to stick around. She continues flying away, beating as hasty a retreat as possible after witnessing the death of all her friends.

Recommended Listening

Ivaldi's light form combines with Zeus's Thunderstep and Neptune's demigod-like body to accelerate to well over ten times the speed of sound. Instantly, Neptune leaps from the mountain where his Titan relatives lay in heaps and arrives at the Archdemon's face with his fist raised.

Whump!

Using the combination of his insane speed and his durable body, Neptune pounds his fist against the Archdemon's head, staggering the giant with the might of his Titan power. Neptune's overwhelming attack catches Diablo by surprise and sends him reeling backward, causing all of his attention to fall upon his ambusher.

"Again!" Neptune yells.

Once again, his body morphs into a flash of light. He zips away before the Archdemon can follow his movements and quickly begins spinning around the Archdemon's body.

A dazzling flash of light captures the attention of the angels and demons surrounding the Archdemon. They watch in bewilderment as the three unified Titans revolve around the Archdemon at insane speeds, transforming themselves into circles of light.

Swish-swish-swish, skreeeeee!

As Neptune's speed increases, the circles of light start emitting high-pitched squeals, due to his body agitating the air molecules around the Archdemon.

Neptune's three inner voices speak at once. Now for the second phase! We will combine the powers of divinity with the might of the ocean and the forces of entropy to create electrified holy water!

The ever-multiplying circles of light suddenly shoot dozens of lasers of enchanted holy water at the Archdemon.

Ksseew! Ksseeeeeew!

The lasers appear simultaneously from over fifty different positions. Using his insane speed, Neptune unleashes the full might of three Titan kings against the Archdemon and rips up Diablo's skin and bone with the power of the cosmos.

"SKROOOOOAAARR!!"

Diablo howls in rage. To him, the 250-foot-tall pest ripping open his body is like a dog trying to take down a sumo wrestler, but due to Neptune's incredible speed, the Archdemon cannot hit him at all.

Swipe!

Diablo swings one of his hands at the rings of light encircling him, but his palm passes through it harmlessly, causing no injury to the unified Titan kings.

Several seconds pass. Neptune's lasers embed deep into the Archdemon's flesh, exposing Diablo's muscle and bone. No matter how the Archdemon roars or cries out in pain, Neptune doesn't stop his fearsome assault.

"We're doing it!" Neptune roars. "We can kill this bastard!"

The circles of light double in quantity. Fifty tracks of light spread around the Archdemon from his head to his legs. The Archdemon's tentacles snap uselessly at the circles, but the moment they get too close, the Titan King plows through them and pulverizes the hungry maws into flesh-bombs of gore. Masses of fat and skin rain upon the ground, coating Heaven with the Archdemon's essence.

A surge of energy appears inside the Archdemon's body. Diablo claps all four of his palms together and activates the power of chaos within himself. His blood-red mana turns black as the night, causing Heaven's Light to shudder and dim.

Neptune continues circling the Archdemon. He fires his holy energy at the dark god without stopping, but a flash of worry passes over his face.

"How can the Great Demon cause Heaven's Light to lose its luster? Such a feat should be impossible."

Neptune's mind, now a combination of three Titans with varying levels of knowledge and intelligence, ponders the implications of this new development. His attention wavers for a split-second, and at that moment, Diablo unleashes the full power of Chaos!

The gravity around the Archdemon multiplies by a factor of one hundred! Neptune's body increases from a hundred tons to over ten thousand. The spiraling form of the Titan King comes to an instant halt as his body tumbles from the sky and careens toward the gaping maws of Diablo's tentacles.

"Aaaaaugh!!"

Unable to stop his momentum, the Titan King plunges helplessly toward the ground below. Fifty tentacles rush up at him, intent on tearing him apart, all of them unaffected by Diablo's gravity.

Two seconds before Neptune lands in the Archdemon's maws and perishes, a portal appears beneath him! Neptune falls inside the gateway and reappears a mile away. He flies outward only a hundred feet above the ground and crashes into Heaven's Soil, narrowly missing a group of angels and demons all lined up to watch his battle.

"Guh!"

Neptune coughs out blood. He presses his palms against the ground and rises to his feet, but the sudden deceleration caused by the Archdemon's chaos magic leaves dozens of lingering aches and pains.

Neptune stands up straight and turns to look at the Archdemon, causing his pupils to dilate in shock. Thousands of cuts and burns mark every inch of Diablo's body. The Archdemon screams in rage as he senses the pain flowing across his monstrous form.

"Neptune!"

A tiny voice yells from somewhere near the Titan King's ear. He turns his head slightly to look at Raphael. The old man appears as little more than a speck of dust compared to the walking mountain before him.

"Thou were lucky I saved thee! Thou art no match for the Great Demon alone. I will assist thee in thy next assault."

"How?"

"I will cast illusions of thy body to trick the Great Demon."

Neptune nods. "Very well. Support me from the rear!"

Once again, Neptune transforms into a flash of light. He leaps into the sky at blinding speeds and arrives above the Archdemon. After hovering for a moment, Neptune's hands become a blur as he utters a thousand magical incantations all at once.

Raphael activates his illusion magic. Ten copies of Neptune materialize around the Archdemon and begin firing blasts of holy light at him. However, to Raphael's surprise, the Archdemon ignores them and tilts its head upward.

"Damn," Raphael mutters. "By chance, the Great Demon must have figured out which was the real one."

However, after a moment, a realization strikes Raphael.

"No... the Great Demon does not possess eyes. It must be sensing its surroundings in some other way. It might not even see my illusions in the first place. Gods! Neptune is in danger!"

Neptune finishes his incantation. A ball of holy light materializes in his palm and hardens into an orb of crystallized light. He stares at it for a split-second and frowns.

"If this doesn't work..."

With a shake of his head, the Titan King ignores his misgivings. He releases the orb and allows it to fall straight down toward the Archdemon below.

The moment the orb comes within half a mile of the Archdemon's body, Diablo's gravity field yanks it down, increasing its mass by over a hundred times. The orb's speed surges and instantly reaches terminal velocity.

The Archdemon doesn't have time to react. Neptune's enchanted ball of light smashes into the thousand-foot-tall demon's face with the force of a meteor. With its speed and weight enhanced by Diablo's gravity magic, it pounds his skull with ungodly strength and yanks the Archdemon backward.

"GROOOOARGH?!"

Diablo howls in confusion as the thousand-ton ball of light detonates. A light ten times brighter than the sun erupts from within Neptune's orb, causing millions of rays of cosmic energy to rip through the Archdemon's head and body.

Neptune stares intently at the bright light, unaffected by its appearance. The other angels and demons, however, jerk their heads away and cover their faces.

SHOOOOM!

The condensed orb of holy energy releases a thunderous explosion that blows away all the smoke and fire across the battlefield. All of the oxygen for miles around vanishes, sucking the air from everyone's lungs.

The Archdemon's body tears into pieces, and many of its tentacles turn to ash under the power of Ivaldi's divine magic. Half of Diablo's head explodes, causing him to lose his focus and tumble backward. The Archdemon crashes onto its back and flattens tens of thousands of demons, monsters, and angels.

Seconds later, Heaven falls silent.

The Archdemon lays on its back, unmoving, with gaping wounds lining every inch of its skin.

Neptune clenches his fists at his sides. "We... we did it! WE DID IT!"

He gazes upon the Archdemon intently, but after fifteen seconds, the godlike entity doesn't move.

However, despite Neptune's elation, his expression turns ugly. Ivaldi's consciousness takes the helm. "Damn. Even after unleashing my Sanctifying Sphere, that demonic fiend still possesses a star's worth of vitality! It's not dead yet!"

Hardly have the words left Neptune's mouth before the Archdemon suddenly spasms. It thrashes around on its back for a moment, before using its remaining tentacles to pull itself upward.

"GRRRAAAAOOOO!!"

With half its head missing and an uncountable number of burns and pockmarks lining its skin, the Archdemon appears ten times more horrifying than before. It jumps up, and immediately, Heaven's Light dims noticeably. The abnormally bright light permeating all of Heaven dials down several levels, while Diablo's body rapidly begins to regenerate and repair its wounds.

Panic appears in Neptune's eyes. "What?! How can this be?! The fiend is bringing itself back from the brink of death! I can't allow that to happen!"

Operating on instinct, Neptune leaps into the sky and appears over the Archdemon's head once again.

"Get back on the ground; you damned monster!"

Neptune aims his palm at Diablo. His fingers turn yellow and flash with the power of divinity.

"Palm of the Creator!"

A spiritual projection of Neptune's hand shoots from his palm. It increases in size by a factor of thirty and slams into the Archdemon. Diablo once again falls backward as the mana-projection presses against his body and shoves him into the dirt.

"Stay down! STAY DOWN!!" Neptune roars. He continues to aim his right hand at the Archdemon to hold it in place, and with his left hand, he concentrates on the millions of gallons of water spiraling within his spiritual center.

A moment later, Neptune unleashes the compressed power of the ocean. Ivaldi's holy magic mixes with it, creating a holy-water cannon. The blast of aqua magic surges at the Archdemon's head.

At the last second, the Archdemon jerks to the right! Neptune's holy water misses its target, plows into the dirt, and instantly bores a hole one hundred feet deep.

"I missed?! Imposs- ah!"

To Neptune's surprise, the power of Ivaldi's divine hand suddenly weakens. He continues aiming his palm at the Archdemon to pin it against Heaven's Soil, but to his shock, the brightness of the Creator's Palm loses its brilliance. Half of its luster disappears, turning it into a rapidly fading husk of its former self.

Neptune's eyes shrink to pinpricks. "By the gods! No wonder we haven't killed it yet! The Archdemon is... it's absorbing my divine energy to strengthen itself!!"

Terror flows through Neptune's veins. The Archdemon sucks away the last vestiges of the Creator's Palm, boosting its power to a new realm. Its head finishes regenerating, and all of the wounds inflicted upon it thus far fade away, leaving the Archdemon as healthy as when it first appeared.

"GRRRROOOOOAAAR!!"

The Archdemon leaps atop its tentacles, all of which have revived. Before Neptune can comprehend the situation, Diablo focuses strength into his lower body and jumps into the sky!

"Oh, shit! SHIT!"

Neptune yells in fright as the terrifying monster pounces at him like a jaguar leaping for the neck of an impala. The instant before the Archdemon can seize him, Neptune transforms into a beam of light and zips away, causing the Archdemon to grab nothing but air.

The enormous monster falls from the sky, causing millions of voices to cry out in terror. Diablo crashes into Heaven's Soil, sending shockwaves in every direction. He crushes thousands of demons and angels into pulp, and for the lucky groups that survive, his tentacles lash out to feast upon them.

"Ahhh!" One male cherub howls. He brandishes his sword and tries to chop the three tentacles rushing him, but he fails. His body becomes little more than shredded beef in the Archdemon's maws.

Three fire-type Demon Lords do their best to fend off a dozen tentacles, but their flames barely tickle the ferocious Flesh Eaters. The three demons dissolve into chewed-up mush in their mouths.

* * *

All the while, Raphael gazes upon the unstoppable power of the Archdemon. He levitates, unmoving, a few miles away from the battlefield.

Oh, Creator... how can we win? If I hadn't seen it myself, I would never have believed such a fiend could exist in the mortal realm.

"Brother Raphael!" A female voice calls out. Raphael turns to his right and spots Uzziel flying toward him. "I need thy help!"

"My help? To what end? I'm trying to discern the Great Demon's weakness!"

Uzziel glances over her shoulder at the Archdemon. Her gaze darkens as she shoots a scowl at it. "I cannot allow chaos to reign supreme on the battlefield. Help me, Raphael. I will heal everyone on both sides. If we unite our strength, we can defeat the Great Demon. He is everyone's enemy!"

Raphael balks. "Impossible! The demons have slaughtered too many of our people! We cannot join forces with our mortal enemies."

"We must," Uzziel replies. She returns to gazing at Raphael, and her expression turns solemn. "Do not allow hatred to blind thee. The demons might be our enemies, but today, we face an existential threat. Help me, Raphael. The demons are on the verge of fleeing. If they leave Heaven, we will not be able to defeat the Great Demon. Our brothers and sisters will all perish!"

Heaven's Light dims again. Raphael flinches as the Archdemon fires another concentrated flame-blast at Neptune in the skies above. Neptune dodges it and counters with divine energy, but it does little to slow the Archdemon down.

"Damn..." Raphael growls. "I can't... I can't bow my head to these scheming little..."

Uzziel ignores the Archdemon behind her and maintains eye contact with her brother. Her eyes harden as the two of them exchange their opinions wordlessly.

"I won't allow us to die. Help me, Raphael. I need thy power to unite everyone."

Raphael pales. He nods along to Uzziel's words, but his approval appears half-hearted, given the circumstances.

"Very well. Tell me thy plan."

Kirie lands amidst the battlefield somewhere two miles behind the Archdemon. Diablo's colossal body engulfs the horizon, sending a chill down Kirie's back as she imagines the horrifying death she barely escaped. The redheaded cherub pauses for a moment to sweep her gaze around, where she spots a dozen demons fighting with five seraphs.

The seraph warriors unleash fire and lightning upon their foes. Their teamwork goes beyond the ordinary, allowing them to cover each other's backs. A low-level healer does his best to maintain the vitality and energy of his comrades, but it's clear by the look on his face that he's just as worn out as his comrades.

Kirie takes only a moment to catch her breath. After flying through Diablo's tentacles and barely escaping death, her wings ache in a way she's never experienced before.

Fighting for my life is awful! Kirie thinks. It's much more brutal than any of Michael's training exercises. I can barely use my wings! I'll have to ground myself for the moment and help out where I can.

The curly-haired cherub shoots a look behind herself, where she witnesses Neptune transform into rings of light to encircle the Archdemon.

The Titans are way too powerful! It's no wonder Raphael always told us not to agitate them. If we survive this battle, I'll make sure to keep my distance.

Kirie draws her sword and charges toward the nearby demons and seraphs. Once she arrives within a few dozen feet, a pair of demons jump out in front of her and lick their lips. "Ohoho! A little chicken, all by her lonesome! Don't even think about helping your friends, stupid girl! We're gonna chop you into bits, first!"

The demon on the right, a Scyther, lowers into an attacking stance with both blade-arms at his side. The other demon, a Brute, flexes his huge muscles and grins at her. Both of them are only Demon Grunts, but to the exhausted Kirie, they're incredibly threatening.

Kirie scowls. "Damn. Just when I thought I'd escaped the jaws of death..."

The Scyther demon jumps at her. He swings his razor-sharp sword-arms at her, and she deflects his bones with her sword and shield.

Clang!

Kirie spins to her right and knocks the Scyther's arms to the dirt. With a quick hop, she flaps her wings and jump-kicks the little bastard right in the face, sending him tumbling backward.

An instant before Kirie's feet touch the ground, the Brute demon bullrushes her. He uses his shoulder as a battering ram and plows into her to knock her off-balance.

"Ah!"

Kirie yelps in surprise as she hits the dirt. Her fatigued wings grind along the soil and break a few of their bones, sending waves of pain coursing through her spine. Before she can worry about her injuries, Kirie's eyes widen as the Brute lifts his fist to punch her face.

Kirie quickly raises her shield to block him.

Thunk! Crack.

The Brute savagely pounds Kirie's shield without holding back. His punch pushes through her defenses and breaks her left arm, causing her to scream. "Ahhh!"

"Hahaha! Stupid pigeon!" The Brute laughs. "Now you're-"

Hardly has the Brute began to gloat before Kirie drops her sword and aims her palm at his face.

Shik!

A dagger made of holy energy fires from her palm and impales the big demon's head. He jumps backward reflexively, only to perish a moment later.

"Nnnn!"

Kirie pushes herself to her feet. The moment the Brute hits the dirt, the Scyther jumps at her, giving her only a second to retaliate.

Kirie quickly draws a circle in the air and aims it at the Scyther.

Thoom!

A concussive blast of holy energy fires from the circle and thumps the little bastard right in his gut. Kirie knocks the wind out of the Scyther in one move, then follows up with a pair of holy daggers.

Shik, shik!

One dagger impales the Scyther's heart, while the other stabs him in the eye. He falls backward, dead.

Kirie gasps for breath. She grits her teeth as the pain from her broken wings and left arm cause no end to her misery.

Aaaoo... I can't fight much longer. I barely have any spiritual energy left. Even if I win another fight or two, I'll perish once my mana depletes...

Kirie turns to look at the five seraph warriors. To her horror, all of them lay at the feet of their demon opponents, dead and broken. Blood gushes from fresh cuts, while the healer's head sits spread out across several feet of the battlefield.

The remaining demons turn to face Kirie. The blood of their victims coats their faces and bodies, making them appear even more fierce than before.

"Look! Another pigeon bitch! Let's gut her!"

"She done killed Flim and Glomp all by 'erself! That stinkin' no-good cunt!"

Kirie turns deathly pale. The demons stomp toward her, while all she can manage is to turn around and limp away. Within seconds, the five demons catch up to her.

"'Ey! Where d'ya think you're runnin' off? You ain't goin' nowhere, ya filthy flyin' cow!"

One of the demons reaches out to grab her. However, at the moment, a tremendous outburst of holy magic explodes next to the Archdemon's face, startling everyone present. All of the demons jerk their eyes up right as a light as bright as the sun ignites atop the Archdemon's head.

"Ahhhh!!"

"My eyes! My fuckin' eyes!"

Kirie presses her right arm against her eyes and stumbles to the left. She continues to limp away, even though she knows the blindness will only momentarily stun her pursuers.

Someone save me! Please!!

Kirie begs for a hero to come in her moment of desperation.

The Archdemon falls backward. His body smashes into Heaven's Soil a mile away, sending a blast of rocks and dirt surging toward Kirie and the demons.

One of the demons cracks open his eyes and screams as he spots a humongous boulder tumbling across Heaven toward him and his friends.

"LOOK-!!"

He barely gets one word off before the boulder smashes into the group of demons and pulverizes them into a mass of blood and bone. Kirie continues running, unaware of their gruesome ends.

Then, a few seconds later, two boulders collide with each other and explode in a hail of shrapnel. Kirie's body goes numb as a storm of rock-bullets batters her arms, strikes her head, and sends her flying to the left. She hits the ground, hard.

* * *

Kirie opens her eyes.

Every single inch of her body aches. Spots dance in her vision. She chokes on her saliva and shakily uses her right arm to pull herself to a sitting position.

The distant sounds of battle echo in Kirie's ears. Deliriously, she raises her head to stare at the Archdemon as it fights... something.

What happened? Am I alive...? Dead?

Kirie examines her broken body with a semi-detached expression, almost as if it belonged to someone else.

My left arm's useless. Can't move my wings at all. Legs are all cut up... barely any armor left. I'm losing a lot of blood. If I don't find a healer soon...

Regret washes over the cherub woman. Her life flashes before her eyes. All those days she complained about this banal thing or that unimportant matter...

Life was too good for me. That's why I'll soon die. The Creator has gazed upon me and found me wanting. Envy and greed are all I've ever known. Raphael spoiled our people. He gave us an easy life, and now we're paying for our lack of vigilance.

Kirie shakes her head.

If I had a second chance... I wonder what I might do differently...

Kirie raises her eyes to look at the Archdemon.

However, a bolt of horror shoots through her body.

"Eeyyaah!!"

Kirie shoves herself backward with her feet as she suddenly notices a Demon Lord standing before her!

Oh, Creator! I didn't pay attention! One of the bloodskins has come to kill me!!

Kirie instinctively reaches for her sword, only to find its sheath empty. She panics and tries to fire a holy dagger at the demon, but screws up her incantation and causes it to backfire in her face.

Fwish!

An explosion of mana detonates at her fingertips. She burns her hand and wails in pain, then falls on her back.

All the while, the Demon Lord stares at her without reacting.

"Sheesh. She's in worse condition than we thought."

"What a cutie. We oughta take some pity on her, don't'cha think? Ain't never seen a redhead before."

"Gross! There you go thinking with our Little Demon again. Leave me out of your fantasies!"

The Demon Lord talks to himself, acting as though there are two beings inside his mind.

Kirie stares at him, wide-eyed.

Oh, no! A crazy aberrant demon! I'm dead! I can't fight back at all!

The Demon Lord takes a step toward her, and Kirie instinctively summons a holy dagger in her grasp. She clutches it tightly and points it at him.

"S-stay away! Stay back!! I'll fight to my last breath!"

"Whoa whoa, calm down, little lady," he says. "We've killed plenty of pigeons today. We're downright sick of it. Let's not be strangers now. My name's Davook. What's yours?"

A look of confusion passes over Kirie's face.

The Demon hasn't yet attacked me. He has the upper hand. What horrible cruelty is he planning to unleash?

Kirie's voice shakes slightly. "I-I don't have anything to say to the likes of you!"

"Huh? Geez. She's a dense one..."

"Oh, come on. Look at her face. She must be scared stiff! She's vulnerable, helpless, and now some big scary Demon pops up. Whaddya expect her to say?"

Davook converses with himself again, ignoring Kirie entirely.

Then, he points his finger at her.

"Let's put down the weapon, sweetie. We don't want you to hurt yourself."

Suddenly, a tendril of shadow shoots out from under Davook's foot. It pounces at Kirie's arm, coils around it, and wrenches it to her right. Davook binds her arm to the ground, pinning her in place.

"Augh!" Kirie cries. Pain shoots from her arm as she tries to fight Davook's shadow, but she can't muster any strength to resist.

Davook flicks his eyes up and down her body, from head to toe. "What a catch. I thought this day couldn't get any better, but I was wrong! Alright, how about this? If you ain't gonna tell us your name, then we'll call you... Red! Yeah, how do you like that? Red's such a cute name!"

Davook's second personality immediately counters his own words. "I'd prefer Bloodhair. It's appropriate. The pigeons call us Bloodskins, so why not call a pigeon Bloodhair?"

"No way! A cute name for a cute girl."

"She ain't cute; you're just nasty."

Kirie curls herself into a ball. She shivers as Davook continues to talk about her as if she isn't there. "M-my name is Kirie! Not Red... not Bloodhair! Don't call me w-whatever you want... filthy demon..."

Davook whistles. "Hey! A name! She has one after all! Boy, we have to respect that fighting spirit. You haven't got any mana left, yet you're still acting like a big bad angel warrior. Hahaha! I love it when girls fight back."

A nasty look appears in Davoook's eyes.

"Yeah... that's right. It ain't no fun if a girl's meek and submissive..."

Davook's formerly lighthearted attitude disappears. All of Kirie's courage vanishes as her eyes meet those of the horrible monster planning to enslave her.

"Please... please kill me..."

Her pitiful begging only makes Davook grin like a madman.

"Nah. I don't waste perfectly serviceable goods. I've got a better idea. How about you come along with me, and the two of us treat each other real nice?"

Davook reaches toward Kirie. Shadows fire from his hand and wrap around her face, cutting off her oxygen.

Kirie gasps and tries to use her broken left arm to paw at her face, but her strength isn't enough to resist.

Eventually, her consciousness fades. She slumps backward and falls comatose, leaving Davook to rub his hands together with glee.

"Oooh! Oh, boy, oh, boy. These new shadow powers are awesome! We can do whatever we want, and nobody can stop us!"

Davook's grin vanishes. "Don't lump me in with the likes of you. I don't know what you're planning, and I don't want to know. When will I get what I want, for once?"

"Pft. You're way too dull. What do you even want?"

"...I'd like to play some Sticks and Bones."

"BORING! Getting chicks is way better than playing stupid games with other demons. Now shut your face and help me pick her up."

Davook uses his shadows to levitate Kirie into his grasp. He wraps one arm around her and grunts as the unconscious cherub hangs limply over his shoulder.

"Damn. This girl's heavier than I expected. Or maybe we're just weak?"

With a shrug, Davook melts into his shadow and takes his prisoner along for the ride. The two of them disappear into the distance as he heads for Heaven's Gate.

"Hoo-hoo! What a great day! What a great day, indeed!"

Part 168: The Creator's Rain

At every corner of the battlefield, demons and angels jump back and forth between fighting each other and focusing their efforts on the Archdemon. Diablo's godlike presence never leaves the back of their minds. The moment any group of angels or demons notices the Archdemon turn its head toward them, they swiftly disband and spread out to flee for their lives.

Biting wounds cover the bodies of the majority of warriors, both demonic and angelic. With each side only having one high-level healer and a few scattered low-level ones as well, the wounds most angels and demons suffer eventually turn fatal. Occasionally, after winning a round of combat, a demon or an angel will stumble and fall, taking their last pained breath as their soul fades away.

During the heat of battle, far above the Archdemon and the heads of the battlefield's combatants, a mass of clouds forms from nothing. Heaven's Light shines as brightly as ever, but the unmistakable grey color in the atmosphere causes many warriors to raise their eyes skyward.

Could this new development be another of the Archdemon's attacks?

Might everyone perish under some despicable angel or demon plot?

Panic and anger appear on the faces of both sides. They howl in rage as their suspicions reach a boiling point.

However, to everyone's surprise, drops of water start slowly trickling down from above. In a realm where the water cycle has never occurred due to the lack of sunlight, Heaven experiences its first rainy day since its creation.

The angels stare in disbelief as the downfall intensifies. "How can this be? Have the demons defiled our home?"

The demons, likewise, hold out their palms and allow the rainwater to wet their hands. "Somethin' about this water feels... funny..."

Within seconds, an angel yelps in surprise. "What?! By the Creator! My wounds! They're..."

Fifty feet away, his demon opponent takes a step backward in surprise. "Holy shit! This water is healing me? How's that even possible?"

The slow and steady rainfall eventually transforms into a torrential downpour. Angels and demons all across Heaven rise to their feet as their fatigue vanishes. Their bodies regenerate, causing those who were on the brink of death only moments earlier to smile like children.

One angel cries out in joy. "It is a sign! A blessing from the Creator! Heaven itself has given us a second chance to slaughter the bloodskins!"

A demon retorts. "Bullshit! The Great Demon did this to heal us! It'll be your turn to die next, ugly!"

Within seconds, the raucous celebration vanishes, replaced instead with hatred and enmity. Demons and angels alike raise their weapons, preparing to tear each other apart.

High above the battlefield, two figures flap their wings and gaze upon the few million remaining combatants. Uzziel and Raphael, the Archangels of Creation and Wisdom, shake their heads and sigh.

"'Tis impossible, my little sister," Raphael mutters. "The hatred between our people runs deep. Thy performance will not sway their hearts."

Uzziel ignores Raphael's words of disapproval. She continues to hold her arms skyward, where her powers of nature twist the clouds around to summon Enchanted Rain.

"It will, Raphael. Come, it is time for thou to do thy part. I need thy power to speak to all the warriors on both sides. Help me!"

Raphael closes his eyes.

"Haah... I have nearly spent all of my mana, sister. If I assist thee, the possibility is high that I will... I will..."

"Thou shalt not perish," Uzziel says. She continues to gaze at the clouds, but her eyes harden. "I will gift thee my mana if necessary."

"But, to maintain such a powerful spell-"

"Worry not about my mana," Uzziel says, cutting him off. A strange look enters her eyes. "For some reason, my mana is at a peak I've never before experienced in my life."

Her words send a jolt of shock through the old man's heart.

Without saying anything, Raphael gazes at his sister's figure for a moment with deep suspicion.

By the Creator! I suspected earlier that I might have sensed Yggdrasil's power, but that part of my memory was so faint... could it be? Has Uzziel regained her memories?!

Almost immediately, he discards the notion.

Nay. 'Tis unlikely. If she had, then t'would not be Enchanted Rain falling from the skies, but Cursed Rain to rot away all it touches.

Raphael stifles a shudder. He swallows hard and forces himself to smile at Uzziel. "Ah, yes. Very well, then. Give me a moment, and I will project thy image to all presently standing in Heaven."

The old man doesn't hesitate. Raphael's fingers weave together to form a complex spell, the same one he used earlier to try and distract the Archdemon. This time, he focuses its energy on Uzziel to project her body all across Heaven's battlefield.

During the minute it takes for Raphael to complete his spell, several demons and angels resume their bloody fighting. To their surprise, even when fatal blows meet their marks, the loser will often survive at the brink of death, only to regenerate back to their full health.

Several angels curl their hands into fists. "Damn! We won't be able to kill the bloodskins at this rate! They're healing too quickly!"

The demons stomp their feet and gnash their teeth. "Filthy chickens! If it weren't for this damned rain, we'd have made mincemeat of them by now!"

The Archdemon unleashes another blast of fire. He incinerates a thousand clumped-together demons and angels, killing them before Uzziel's rain can regenerate their bodies. However, his gaping maws prove the most horrifying. They zip around in every direction, chewing up angels and demons who can't dodge in time. Thanks to Uzziel's Enchanted Rain, their prey continue to regenerate even as the barracuda-teeth chew them up, over and over.

"LET ME DIE!! AAAHH!!"

One demon wails pitifully as his body heals inside a Flesh Eater's mouth. It responds by chewing him up again, to which he revives once more.

"How horrifying!" One Demon Lord yells. He jumps over to the Flesh Eater and swings his hand down to chop at its soft, fatty neck. After severing the maw from its tentacle, he rescues his comrade and helps him escape.

Orcs and Hellhounds mobilize together to dash around and chop at any tentacles that get too close. Some of them end up inside the Archdemon's Flesh Eaters, but their fellow monsters eventually cut them loose.

As the battle continues to intensify, hundreds of flashes of light appear a few hundred feet above the ground. The sudden firework display catches everyone's attention, putting both the demons and the angels on-guard.

"Brothers, sisters, and my children, too! Please, listen to my words!"

Uzziel's body appears in a thousand places, projecting her image to all those present. She clutches her chest with one hand and sweeps the other in a wide arc to capture their attention.

"Do not fight amongst one another! The Great Demon is a threat unlike any we've ever faced. He will kill both angels and demons alike if we do not stop him!"

When the cherubs and seraphs spot their beloved sister's apparition, many angels whoop and cheer. "Hah! Of course t'was our sister's power, which saved us! How could the accursed bloodskins activate such a vast battlefield healing technique? The might of the Archangels reigns supreme!"

The demons offer a different perspective. "Bahaha! Does that stupid bitch really think we'll cooperate with her? If she's going to heal us, then we'll just use this chance to take our revenge!"

Uzziel's next words quickly change the minds of both sides.

"This battle is pointless. The angels are my family, but the demons are my children. I do not wish to see anyone else perish today! Set aside thy differences! The Great Demon will kill us all if we don't work together! Already, it has slain half a million warriors on both sides. We have to work together to defeat it, or it will kill us all and set its sights on Earth!"

As Uzziel speaks, Heaven's Light shudders, temporarily dimming under the might of the Archdemon's power.

"The Great Demon will not stop here! Even if all of us should flee, Heaven will not be able to contain its power. It will destroy Heaven and seek us out, one by one. It is the enemy of creation, an arbiter of death!"

The Archdemon swivels its head toward a group of angels and demons. With their gazes fixed on Uzziel's projection, they don't recognize the metaphorical scythes held to their necks. A moment later, the Archdemon waves its hand, and a thousand beams of lightning fire from its fingertips to tear through the warriors before they can react.

"Geeeyaagh-!!"

Their final screams send horror washing through the nearby survivors. At once, Uzziel's words awaken them from their anger.

"Shrakh! That chicken lady is right! The Great Demon's gonna kill us all!"

"What should we do? We can't trust the pigeons!"

"I-I don't know! Don't look at me!"

Panic appears in the eyes of many demons. The freshly charred bodies of their former comrades quickly gets their mental juices flowing.

Uzziel continues to speak. "To my brothers and sisters, take flight, now. Join me in the skies. Leave the demons alone. We will not fight them anymore. To the demons, my wayward children, I promise you this; we will not harm you. We must set aside our differences and work together. Only then can we save ourselves from extinction!"

A moment later, Uzziel waves her hand, causing a chilling wind to rush toward the Archdemon from the north. The power of winter materializes against Diablo's back, sending ice creeping across his body.

"Come! We must bet everything on this final battle! The angels will attack from the skies, while the demons will attack from the ground! Hold nothing back! We must banish this monster to the Nether from whence it came!"

Uzziel's anger-filled tone rouses the rage of all the demons and angels. They raise their weapons to the sky and howl like wolves.

"Wooo! Hell yeah! Let's kill this spawn of a broodmother!"

"We fight for our sister! We fight for the Archangels!"

Without saying another word, the angels and demons separate from each other. The angels flap their wings to soar above the battlefield, while the demons and monsters rally together, surrounding the Archdemon from every direction.

Within minutes, a cloud of bodies appears in the sky, while a sea of flesh engulfs Diablo's tentacle-legs. The angels form a sphere around Diablo's upper body, while the demons make themselves into sandbags to contain his movements.

Uzziel's illusions disappear. Once Raphael removes his power, the old man shudders violently and loses his ability to fly. He starts to plunge toward Heaven's Soil, but Camael flies over and grabs him within seconds.

"Brother! Art thou alright?"

Raphael's fingers barely manage to hold onto his staff. His skin turns grey, and his muscles shrivel up noticeably.

"I... I... can't... can't move... barely any strength..."

Uzziel turns to look at her brother, and the color drains from her face. "Oh, gods! He's almost out of mana! Here, let me give Raphael some of my nature energy!"

The Archangel of Creation lowers her arms and stops casting her Enchanted Rain. She moves toward her brother to transfer her power to him, but Raphael's eyes widen with fear.

"No! No... H-Heavens, no... nature energy is... is not... something anyone but thou can... can control..."

Camael frowns. She eyes her brother's pallid appearance for a moment, as if realizing something for the first time. "I see. If Uzziel cannot assist thee, then I can. One moment, brother."

Using her left arm to support Raphael and her right arm to reach for her sheathed blade, Camael takes hold of Excalibur's handle and winces as a massive deluge of energy floods inside her body.

"Hnnnnghhhh...!!!"

The Archangel of Divination winces as her aura brightens to an insane level, transforming her into a ten thousand watt lightbulb levitating above the battlefield. A moment later, she releases Excalibur and quickly presses her hand against Raphael's chest. The divine energy inside herself drops by half and transfers into Raphael, increasing his mana to its former levels and instantly rejuvenating his failing body.

Raphael gasps. "Gah! What? How in the Creator's name..."

He pulls away from Camael and stares at her in awe.

"Where dids't thou obtain so much energy, sister?"

Camael sighs. "My new weapon, Excalibur. 'Tis incomplete, but its power dwarfs all the others I've made during my life. Perhaps not those I made during the Primordial Era, but I possess no knowledge of them. Nay, this blade has a special ability which allows it to condense holy energy within itself, folding it over and over an infinite number of times."

Raphael nods along to her words, and a trace of a smile appears on his face. "By the Creator! Such a divine weapon... we could use it to revitalize our brothers and sisters! With our energy dwindling over time, thy blade would allow us to refill our mana and survive indefinitely, without the need for-"

Camael shakes her head and interrupts Raphael. "Nay. T'will not work. The sword's mana might seem nigh-infinite, but not even I know the place from where it draws its power. Further, the mana is not pure enough for our needs. Our Archangel bodies possess the means to adapt it, but for the lower angels, they would perish if they were to try."

Raphael's joy subsides.

"Ah. I... I understand. Very well, then. At the least, I thank thee for saving me, sister."

"I will never let thy life fade," Camael replies. She smiles at Raphael, but her expression carries a hint of foreboding. "Thou art my most precious brother. Our people will not survive without thy hand guiding them."

Raphael meets Camael's gaze. He cocks his head slightly, and a questioning look appears in his eyes.

"Camael...?"

The moment Raphael speaks, Camael quickly turns her head away to look at the Archdemon. She scowls and clenches her fists. "Don't think so hard about everything, Raphael. We must fight now."

Raphael's expression turns hollow. He nods along, and an inkling of realization toward Camael's arrangements appears in the back of his mind.

"I see. So it was like that. Hm."

The Archangel of Wisdom nods along to his inner thoughts, then pushes them aside and sets his gaze on the Archdemon.

"Where is Michael? We will need him for this final phase."

Satan staggers away from the enormous Archdemon. His thoughts bounce around aimlessly as he tries to put two and two together.

"So, the angels and demons are... are workin' together? To fight that big fuckin' monster thing?"

Hades grunts. So it would seem. The Enchanted Rain assisted our regeneration, but if the Titan woman hadn't stopped stomping us into paste, I'm afraid we would have lost a countless number of other souls.

"That's all in the past now," Satan mutters. "Where's Deebs? Lucy? ...Shit! Where's Belial? Where's my girl?!"

Satan stumbles past a row of fire-type demon grunts. All of them conjure balls of flame in their palms and sling them toward the Archdemon. The fireballs explode like firecrackers against the monster's flesh, causing little to no damage, but the demon grunts don't back down.

"Keep lobbing!"

Satan rubs his face as he runs past row after row of demons and monsters, all of them flinging fire and fury at the Archdemon.

"I don't get it. What changed while we were out? Why are my people working with the angels? Ain't that big demon on our side? Do you think maybe Hercules has something to do with this?"

Perhaps. Let's stop and ask someone.

Satan nods. He grabs the nearest demon grunt, a Brute-type with giant muscles. "Hey, you! It's me, Satan. What's going on, here?"

The Brute jerks back in surprise. "Huh? You're alive? We thought the Great Demon offed ya!"

"No, stupid, I'm immortal. I always come back from death. Sheesh. Anyway, what the hell is this 'Great Demon,' and why are we fighting it?"

"Satan... have you been living under a rock for the past hour?! This big bastard's killed... like... a whole bunch of us! He ain't on our side!"

"He's not?"

"Nah, boss! He, she, or whatever the hell it is... it kills chickens and demons all the same!"

Satan's confusion vanishes. He turns around to gape at the Archdemon right as it conjures another ball of electrical energy between its horns. A second later, the Brute behind him screams in terror.

"INCOMING! Burrowers, get us underground!!"

Satan whirls around to stare in disbelief as waves of burrower demons slap their palms against Heaven's soul and instantly yank their comrades under Heaven's Soil. A second later, the Archdemon fires his electrified ball into the sky, where it detonates and sends thousands of lightning bolts in every direction. Tens of thousands of angels perish instantly, unable to avoid its area-of-effect.

Satan nearly chokes on his tongue. "Gah! Spawn of a broodmother! What in mama's green Earth was THAT?!"

The Great Demon's strength surpasses that of many ancient enemies I helped defeat, Hades replies, his voice icy. I've fought legendary Titan Kings whose battle might would come second to this monstrosity. If it keeps up-

Hades pauses.

A moment passes where Heaven's Light dims as the Archdemon unleashes a stream of fire upon the ground, blasting several hundred demons to smithereens.

By the Creator... no wonder this monster is so powerful.

"Huh? You know somethin'?"

Perhaps. For the moment, tis' only a conjecture, but I believe... it might be drawing power from Heaven itself.

Satan turns to run from the Archdemon. He sweeps his eyes around to scan for Belial and the others, but also keeps his attention on Hades. "Don't hold back on me now, buddy. What's the down-low? I'll take any hints I can get."

As I said, I can only hazard a guess, but if my intuition is correct, Raphael might be thinking the same thing.

Satan... Heaven is an artificial dimension. Raphael created it as a haven for our people, a place where we could live outside the mortal realm, safe from Titans, who might come and attack us. Back when the Primordial Wars concluded, when we stood at the precipice of Raphael's mind-wipes, my brother decided we needed a fail-safe in case the Titans broke their end of the treaty. He used a tremendous amount of mana from all the angels to create Heaven, where we have resided ever since.

"Alright, makes sense," Satan grunts. "What else?"

The Great Demon's attacks appear erratically powerful. Such a being's mana cannot come from nowhere. He must be drawing his might from something or somewhere, and I believe the Great Demon's power comes from Heaven's Core.

"What, you mean something buried deep below us?"

Nay. What I refer to is none other than the all-encompassing glow which surrounds us; Heaven's Light. Heaven draws upon life energy from the mortal realm to sustain itself, but the energy it requires has to stay at a certain level. Too much, and Heaven will explode, killing everyone inside and causing massive damage to Earth. Too little, and it will implode; ejecting us back to Earth, while Heaven itself will disappear forever.

Satan pauses to gaze at the charred remains of several demons. Their corpses lay with twisted expressions of terror and fear etched into their faces. After Satan double-checks to make sure none of them are his fellow Emperors, he continues running toward the outskirts of the battlefield.

"So what's gonna happen? Will we explode or implode?"

Neither, if we're lucky. I suspect the reason everyone has joined forces is for the sole purpose of defeating the Great Demon. If we succeed, we'll save Heaven and ourselves. If we fail, everyone will die. For the sake of self-preservation, we only have one choice.

"Can't we just escape and leave the Great Demon here? It can't fit through Heaven's Gate."

We don't know if it has the power to teleport or open gates. If it does, it will follow us. More importantly, if Heaven implodes... the Great Demon will be free to roam the Earth. It will turn our planet barren and wipe out all life.

Satan grinds his teeth together.

"Damn! Fucking hell! I came here to kill the Archangels, but now you're telling me I have to work with 'em? What a bunch of skarn-droppings!"

Thou knoweth me well, Satan. Raphael is not my ally. I would love to plunge the knife in his back. However, for the sake of our survival, we must look at the big picture.

Satan nods. "Fine, fine, but after we finish off the Great Demon, our next target's the old man!"

Agreed.

* * *

Satan calls out at the top of his lungs. "Oy! Diablo! Lucy! Belial! Where are you guys? Hello?!"

They might be dead.

"No way! Don't even bullshit me like that. Where are their bodies? They're alive."

When we woke up, the surrounding area had been pulverized by the Great Demon. Perhaps... perhaps they were...

"Crushed? Nope! I don't buy it. Not for one- WHAT THE...!"

Satan suddenly leaps backward in surprise as a horrifying Flesh Eater charges him from above. The gigantic head filled with razor-sharp teeth lunges toward the scent of powerful magic like a moth attracted to a flame. Satan's quick thinking causes the gigantic maw to crash into the dirt where he stood only a moment before. The Flesh Eater immediately pulls itself up with its tentacle and hisses at him.

"What the fuck is THAT?!"

One of the Great Demon's... legs? I think it's hungry.

"No, shit!"

The gaping maw lunges at Satan once more, but this time the Devil unleashes a blast of air at it, which deflects the tentacle to the left. It smashes into the dirt and immediately rises to charge again.

The Devil snarls. "You creepy tooth-face! Get away from me!"

Satan burns ten souls to summon a massive fireball in his palm. The Flesh Eater rushes him like a wolf pouncing on a corpse, but Satan hurls his fireball straight into the monster's mouth and detonates it.

Choom- splat!

The Flesh Eater explodes into a thousand pieces, spraying blood and gore in every direction while leaving only one writhing tentacle connected to Diablo's distant body. Fleshy remains spray all over Satan's naked figure, causing him to shudder.

"Eugh, nasty! I'm gonna need one hell of a bath when we finish."

Assuming we manage to make it out of here alive.

"Yeah, thanks for the positivity. Jackass."

While Satan grumbles at Hades, his eyes flick over to the tentacle, which continues to hover in midair. After a few seconds, his expression turns to disbelief.

"Whoa, whoa, whoa... is... is it...?"

The bloody stump where the maw once stood begins to shift and writhe. Within seconds, a small bulb appears on the tentacle's end. It expands to the size of a grapefruit, making Satan's eyes nearly bulge out of his sockets.

"It's growing back!"

Indeed. We should leave.

"Yeah! No, kidding!"

Satan ignites flames from his feet and pounces into the sky. He leaves the Flesh Eater behind and starts flying to the north to search for his friends.

Over there, Hades says, a note of urgency in his voice. Down and to the right.

Satan lowers his eyes to the battlefield below him and spots Bael amidst a crowd of demons and orcs, all of whom stand in a circle and fight off the attacks of more than fifty Flesh Eaters.

"Good eyes! Let's help him out!"

Satan burns several souls to increase his power to fly around the hungry maws. He concentrates the shape of his fireballs into a sword and slashes through the thin tentacles supporting their heads.

Within a minute, Satan cleaves over thirty of the bulbous jaw-worms from their supporting tentacles, causing them to crash into the dirt and writhe around helplessly.

Bael swings a newly acquired flail around. The multi-ton wrecking ball smashes through a dozen Flesh Eater heads and crushes them into pulp. Once Bael clears out the immediate area, he waves at Satan.

"Oy! Big boss, it's you!"

"Yeah, it's me," Satan answers.

"Boy, am I glad to see you here!"

Bael grins like an idiot. A single Flesh Eater lunges at him from behind, but Bael instantly whips around and smashes it with his fist. His ridiculous strength nets him a home run as he sends it flying into the distance.

"Oooh! Score! Yo, Satan, get down here! I need you, man! We've got some Demon Emperors who're hurt real bad."

Satan pauses. He glances behind Bael, where Lucifer and Belial lay on their backs. Belial draws the shallowest of breaths, while her physical condition appears far more gruesome than Lucifer's. Third and fourth-degree burns cover her whole body, each one caused by Michael's holy aura. Lucifer, meanwhile, lays unmoving like a corpse. Her right arm and leg end in stumps, but neither bleed profusely, having apparently been healed at some point.

"Belial! Lucy! Spawn of a broodmother!"

Satan disengages his flame-jets and falls to the soil below. He hits the ground and lands in a crouch, then runs over to Bael with several Flesh Eaters in hot pursuit.

"Cover me!"

"On it!"

Bael swings his spiked flail like a baseball bat, and Satan ducks it, allowing the weapon to plow through the hungry jaw-worms behind him. A few seconds later, Satan runs past Bael and his orc companions to kneel beside Belial and Lucifer.

"Healing water, healing water... gimme a sec, baby girl..."

Satan splashes water on Belial. Her body spasms in pain as the healing energy hisses and burns her blood vessels and nerves. Belial gasps for breath, gnashes her teeth, and arches her back involuntarily. "Ahhhn!"

"Sorry, sorry!" Satan yells, trying to calm her down. "I ain't that good at healing magic! Baby, are you okay? What happened? Did Michael hurt you?"

Belial doesn't respond. Her figure goes limp. Several seconds pass before she manages to crack open her eyes. Her vision spins erratically, causing her to whimper pitifully.

"Guh... S-Satan? Diablo... he..."

Belial coughs weakly, and traces of blood leak from her mouth.

"Diablo... Lucy... dead? I saw... saw them die... saw you die, too... am I dead?"

"No, no, you're alive," Satan says. He splashes more water on Belial to continue healing her, but it doesn't do much to the extensive burns covering her skin. He quickly moves on to Lucifer, but her body doesn't react at all to his healing touch.

"I don't know about Lucy and Deebs, though," Satan mutters. "Lucy ain't moving. Shit. She might be dead."

Belial forces her eyes open. She follows Satan's gaze and turns her head to look at Lucifer. "No... not dead. That's right... I... I preserved her life... with... my last breath. Thought I would die. Michael went berserk. Cough..."

Belial's eyelids flutter for a moment, but she summons adrenaline from a previously untapped well, raises her hand, and releases healing magic over herself. Despite her extensive injuries, Belial's inner mana reserves don't lack for storage. Her energy dips slightly, and within seconds, the horrific burns covering her entire body melt away, revealing her shiny red skin.

A minute passes. Bael and the orcs maintain their defensive encirclement of the three Emperors, while Belial pulls herself to a sitting position and examines Lucifer.

"I stabilized Lucifer's wounds before I passed out," Belial says, her body fully healed. "If it weren't for that, she would have died of blood loss. I slowed her heartbeat to almost nothing and put her in suspended animation, but now that I've recovered, I can bring her back."

Satan nods along to Belial's words. "You're a great gal, Belial. I don't know if I'd have helped someone else in such a dire situation. But... you should watch out. That selflessness is gonna get you killed one of these days."

Belial focuses her gaze on Lucifer's comatose form and sighs. "So be it. Better to die after living a life of goodness, than to live forever with a guilty conscience."

Inside Satan's mind, Hades smiles. Ah, what pure thoughts thy mate possesses.

Satan rolls his eyes. "Oh, shut up."

"Pardon?" Belial replies, turning a curious gaze toward her mate.

"Sorry. Not you. Sammy-boy."

"Oh."

Belial returns her attention to Lucifer. After a few moments, she intones several healing spells at once and focuses them on Lucifer's heart and severed limbs.

"Satan. Do you know what happened to Diablo? Have you seen him?"

Satan shakes his head. "Not a clue. I only revived a few minutes ago. The Great Demon has been ravaging Heaven. However... as I recall..."

Satan's mind flashes back to an hour in the past, just before Chantis began repeatedly stomping him into puddles of blood.

"...Michael beheaded Deebs. That's the last thing I remember."

Belial nods. "I saw a little more than you. After Michael severed Diablo's head, I remember hearing a strange voice whispering Lucifer's name. I thought it might have been a hallucination, but now I know better. Diablo is the Great Demon."

Belial's words contain no emotion. She does not utter them as if they were a profound truth, but instead, a simple observation.

However, they rock Satan's heart to the core.

"Deebs is the Great Demon?! No way! How is that possible? I always knew he was pretty strong, but this is a whole new level of insanity!"

Belial shrugs. "Lucifer healed his fatal wounds from our original attack on Heaven by using Agares' transformation powers. She then went on to use those powers on several other demons afterward. Diablo, Bael, myself, and even herself... each time, Agares' transformation abilities had a different effect."

Belial's fingers deftly press against the injured parts of Lucifer's body. Healing energy flows into the Emperor of Providence, regenerating her limbs and restarting her heartbeat.

Satan falls silent. He watches with vacant, unseeing eyes, as Belial brings Lucifer back to life. His mind wanders, causing him to think of the possibilities Diablo's transformation might bring.

If Deebs was capable of such a powerful transformation, then that means we could have easily overpowered the angels anytime in the past. However, based on his current actions, I have to assume the dude's gone totally nuts! If Belial is right, then it means he can't control when or how he transforms, nor his actions. He might be powerful, but he's a threat to his friends and his foes as well.

"Kuhk!"

Lucifer gasps for breath. She bolts upright and clutches her heart.

"MICHAEL!!"

"Calm down, you're safe," Belial says, as she grabs the Emperor of Providence by her shoulders. "I healed you. You're fine."

Belial's words cause Lucifer to pause and examine her surroundings. The Third Emperor quickly swivels all three of her eyes in a 180-degree radius, allowing her to take in the situation around them.

"What the Devil is that... that huge monster over there?!"

"Diablo, I think."

"Diablo?! Impossible! How could he have- augh! What are those horrible giant mouths?!"

Lucifer's gaze falls upon the fifty chomping Flesh Eaters being fought off by Bael and the orc protectors. Every time one of them ends up smashed into a pulp, their heads fall off their tentacles, and new ones grow back, causing an infinite amount of annoyance.

"Fuckin' die already!" Bael bellows. He jumps at the nearest Flesh Eater right as it opens its mouth and lands inside its gaping maw, only for it to bite down and try to chew him up.

Two seconds later, the Flesh Eater pauses its chewing and freezes in midair. Its mouth curls into an expression of disgust, and it spits Bael out to land on Heaven's Soil.

Bael jumps to his feet. "Oh, what's the matter?! I don't taste good enough for you?! Huh? HUH?! C'mere, you ugly barf-face!"

He leaps at the Flesh Eater that just spit him out, grabs it by the back of its 'neck,' and strangles the tentacle with all his strength. Bael crushes and mashes it into pulp, causing the maw to fall off and slap against the ground.

"Screw you, you stupid toothy-head thing! I'll show you who's boss!"

Lucifer and the other two Emperors watch with dumbfounded expressions as Bael starts yanking on the tentacle and pulling it toward himself to spool it around his arm. After a few seconds of pulling, he yanks with all his strength and tears the tentacle off Diablo's main body, causing the Archdemon to roar in pain and swivel its head toward the one who maimed it.

Lucifer's third eye jumps upward toward the angered Archdemon standing only a couple of miles away. "Belial, you said that thing was Diablo, didn't you? Why is it looking at us with such hatred? It's... it's about to attack!!"

Diablo boils heat inside his body. He targets Bael, the one being who has managed to cause the Archdemon permanent injury, and unleashes a blast of laser-like fire at the Duke of Pain.

Bael freezes in place as the heat of the sun fires at him.

"Aw, fuck."

Satan slaps the ground. He uses his power of earth manipulation to suck the other Emperors and their orc guardians underground, but Bael isn't close enough for Satan to bring him along.

BOOM!

Ten thousand degrees of concentrated heat slams into Bael, incinerating the world around him. Bael's body disappears from the vision of anyone hapless enough to stare at the Archdemon's blinding attack. However, after a few seconds, Diablo's mana dips, and he ceases his assault on the tiny little Demon Duke.

Smoke rises from where Bael once stood. After half a minute, Bael stumbles out of the smoke and waves his hands.

"Shit! Shit! Owie, ow! That hurt like hell! Hey! What's the big idea?! Ain't we on the same side! You're pissing me off, buster!"

The Archdemon's mindless rampage ceases for a moment. Diablo's consciousness, trapped within a sea of rage, pauses to evaluate the single remaining speck of light where he aimed his last attack.

SOMEONE SURVIVED? IT MUST BE MICHAEL; THE BASTARD WHO KILLED LUCY?! I FINALLY FOUND HIM!

Diablo's thoughts cause him to become even more enraged. He turns his entire body to the east, where Bael stands all alone amidst a field of molten rock. Bael ignores the lava melting against his toes.

"Hey, you! Yeah, you! You big, ugly, no-good, worthless piece of shit! You ain't that tough! I ain't scared of you, not one bit! Is that the best you've got?!"

The Archdemon screams at Bael.

"SCRREEEEEAAAAH!!!"

Bael howls right back.

"BLEEEEAUGH! Yeah, do you hear that? That's what you sound like! A big, dumb friggin' idiot!"

As Bael goads the Archdemon, he hasn't the faintest clue that none of his words reach Diablo's ears at all. Instead, Diablo's mana-attuned senses gaze upon Bael's juicy glowing form with glee as the Archdemon imagines how much anger he'll get to let out upon 'Michael,' the one who killed his wife.

Diablo accumulates the energy needed for three attacks at once. The superheated flames from his belly, the electrical bomb from between his horns, and the power of gravitation all aim toward Bael, who remains blissfully unaware of his impending doom.

* * *

Satan and the others emerge from underground. They gaze upon Bael's suicidal idiocy with looks of disbelief.

"Oy! What's Bael thinking?" Satan yells. "He's gonna get himself killed!"

Lucifer flicks her gaze from the godlike Archdemon to the comparatively insignificant Bael. "I wouldn't count on it. Bael took that attack like a champ."

"If there's anything left of him, I can heal him afterward," Belial adds. "Come on. We can't leave him to fight the Great Demon alone."

"We can't fight Diablo in the first place!" Lucifer hisses. She turns her sharp gaze on Belial and glares daggers at her. "Are you stupid?! He's our greatest weapon! With Diablo's power at our disposal, nothing will stop us!"

Satan and Belial both scowl at her. They take a minute to explain the situation to Lucifer, and soon, her eyes shine with understanding.

"I see. So Diablo is our enemy, then?"

"Something like that," Belial replies. "We need to defeat him. If we don't, we might all perish. Even Satan has a limit to how many times he can rebirth himself."

"Oh? Does he, now?"

Lucifer shoots a suspicious glance at Satan. The Devil rolls his eyes at her. "Belial, you need to learn to keep your trap shut..."

Suddenly, one of the orcs cries out. "The Great Demon! He's gonna-!!"

Diablo unleashes all three of his prepared attacks. A blast of fire, a surge of lightning, and a ball of concentrated gravity all rush toward Bael with killing intent.

Bael presses his feet against the ground. "Oh, man. I hope I don't regret this..."

Satan and the others dive underground yet again. Heaven shakes and rumbles from the unrelenting power of the Archdemon's assault.

* * *

Five miles away, at the Archdemon's south side, Raphael and the other Archangels all levitate in a circle around Michael.

Michael wipes a river of sweat from his forehead.

"I feel it, Raphael. It's..."

"It's ready!" Raphael says. "Go, brother! Show us thy courage! Thou art our last hope!"

Michael nods. His body glows with radiant light.

"I will not allow my brothers and sisters to perish today. Raphael, this gift thou hath given me, I won't forget it!"

Michael flaps his wings and rushes toward the Archdemon. As he does, his mana bursts out of his body like a waterfall erupting from a mountain. Spiritual energy condenses and hardens around himself. It transforms into a cocoon and envelops him in ancient magic from the Primordial Era, the might of which only a few people on the battlefield have ever witnessed.

Neptune hovers high above the Archdemon. Ivaldi gazes out from his eyes, and anger boils in her heart.

"Hmph. Michael: The one who slew Jörmungandr. Catherine might possess the dragon's fire, and Gabriel her mana, but Michael controls her body. How desperate must Raphael be to allow his tainted brother to unleash a power he cannot control?"

Neptune shakes his head. The other two Titan Kings frown at Ivaldi's words, while quietly wondering to themselves what events transpired in the past to cause her such anger.

But, without accessing her memories, they will never know.

Only Raphael and Ivaldi understand the secrets contained in Michael's ultimate magic.

* * *

The Archangel of Courage leaves behind his cocoon. His mana deforms, wraps around him, and rapidly expands into a five-hundred-foot-tall body of magical energy.

"Jörmungandr, lend me thy strength! Together, we will annihilate the Great Demon and save my people!"

Part 169: Heaven's Destruction

Recommended Listening

Bael howls at the top of his lungs.

"FUUUUUUUUUCK!!"

Three combined magical attacks, each with the power of hundreds of tons of TNT, smash into Bael simultaneously. His vision turns white as the air around him ignites with the heat of the sun, tearing the breath from his chest.

Kathoom!

Diablo's rage-imbued spells pulverize Bael backward, batter him over a thousand feet underground, and bury him under the weight of hundreds of tons of molten, electrified rock. Smoke fills the area, coating an enormous portion of the battlefield in toxic fumes. Many demons, a sizable distance away, are forced backward by the unbreathable gasses.

The Archdemon howls with glee, pleased that its assault on 'Michael' worked so well. Diablo leans forward to peer through the gas erupting from the area, but a flash of light in the skies near its chest causes Diablo to jerk his head to the south.

Michael transforms into Jörmungandr. This unexpected development startles the demons at Diablo's feet, as well as all of the lower-level angels. The Archdemon himself sees only a brilliantly shining soul hovering in the sky, and not Michael's dragon-form, but nevertheless, alarm bells ring out in Diablo's mind.

AH! A POWERFUL SOUL! IT MUST BE MICHAAAAEL!!

Diablo immediately forgets about the other 'Michael' he just defeated. The Archdemon lunges toward the brilliantly shining light in his vision, only for an invisible force to hold him back. Michael's dragon body, now 500-feet-tall, shrouds him in dense mana, protecting him like a mother's womb. The Archangel moves his arms and legs to manipulate Jörmungandr's limbs, and likewise for his wings.

Diablo tries to grab at the shining soul with all four of his arms, but Jörmungandr slaps aside Diablo's limbs, leaps into the sky, and uses its smaller form to slip through the Archdemon's grasp. Diablo closes his arms on empty air and scowls angrily as the shining soul leaps over his head.

MICHAAAAEL! YOU'LL PAY FOR WHAT YOU DIIIID!!

Neptune transforms into light. He circles behind the Archdemon and begins smashing into him over and over. The 250-foot-tall Titan King and 500-foot-tall False Dragon join forces against their 1000-foot-tall enemy to execute a series of combination strikes. Every time Neptune crashes against the Archdemon's spine, he zips away and slingshots back. His body becomes a battering ram of light as he hurls himself into his monstrous opponent over and over.

Meanwhile, Michael flaps his wings and dives toward the Archdemon from above. He swings his talons down and tears several gashes across the Archdemon's chest, spraying rivers of blood all over the southern end of the battlefield. The demons and monsters at Diablo's feet raise their arms to shield themselves as the thick, viscous liquid pours on them from above.

It doesn't take long for Diablo's wounds to heal, but Michael doesn't relent. He continues to swipe and bite at the Archdemon. He tears chunks of flesh and bone from his opponent's body and flings them backward, where they impact Heaven's Soil with enough force to summon minor earthquakes. Many times, the mountainous hunks of the Archdemon's body will impact the land and crush any demons and monsters unlucky enough to be in their way.

Enraged, Diablo fights back with his full fury. He blasts Michael with his atomic breath, but Jörmungandr's dragon body shrugs off the sun-like heat effortlessly. Not only does the Archdemon's flame cause no damage, it even heals the dragon a little, boosting Michael's strength.

With his front and back under constant assault, the Archdemon staggers back and forth, unable to take on both threats simultaneously. The demons at his feet continue slinging missiles of varying elements at him, while the angels in the skies pelt him with shots of holy energy.

Raphael watches the battle with bated breath.

One Great Demon versus millions of demons and angels means we have a chance! But... why does a feeling of dread still coat my bones? Why does the monster continue to gain strength over time?

Every time Michael swings Jörmungandr's talons, he gouges out tonnes of the Archdemon's flesh and muscle. However, those wounds heal far too quickly for the Archangel of Courage to keep up.

Minutes pass. The combined forces of the demons and angels sweat bullets as they realize their attacks aren't dealing enough damage.

At the eastern side of the battlefield, Bael bursts out of the ground with a look of rage etched into his face! The Duke of Pain peels several chunks of cooling, hardened magma off his skin. Despite the Archdemon's incredible combination attack, Bael appears completely uninjured. While Camael's hammer may have nearly broken his arm earlier in the day, Diablo's demonic attacks didn't daunt Bael at all.

"Screw you, you big, fat cunt!" Bael barks. "Were you tryin'a tickle me ta' death?! Next time, put on your big boy pants 'fore you come ta' tussle!"

The Archdemon ignores Bael. Faced with two incredible opponents raking his front and smashing his spine, Diablo hasn't a moment to spare for the tiny little Duke several miles away... not that he can hear Bael's words in the first place.

"Bael!" Satan yells. The Devil flies over to Bael, while Lucifer, Belial, and a horde of orcs quickly follow after him on the ground. "Are you okay?! I thought you might survive but... I mean... you ain't injured at all! What the hell have you been eating to get so strong?"

Bael scowls at Satan. "Water. Meat. What's it to ya?"

Satan sighs. "Never mind. Since you're alive, I hope you're ready to help us out. The angels are playing us for fools. While our guys get crushed and eaten by Diablo's tentacle-heads, the angels are keeping to the skies and using us as bait. We're taking heavy losses."

Bael blinks. "We are?"

"Yeah. Look!"

Satan gestures to the south, where legions of demons, orcs, and goblins all lay dead in heaps and mounds. The Archdemon fires a blast of fire at Michael's dragon body, but Michael deflects it with his shoulder toward the ground, where it incinerates ten thousand demons before they can dodge.

"Spawn of a- those sneaky chickens!" Bael snarls. "I shoulda known they'd pull something!"

Belial clasps her hands together. "Satan, aren't you misunderstanding? Michael isn't targeting the demons intentionally. He's fighting Diablo with all his strength! Deflecting Diablo's fire-blast onto the demons was an accident!"

Satan snorts. "Pft. Bullshit. C'mon, baby, were you born yesterday? Use your head. The angels want to defeat Deebs, sure, but it'd be pretty convenient if they could take us out at the same time, wouldn't it?"

Lucifer narrows her third eye to scout the skies. As she does, she spots Raphael hanging in the rear of the angelic contingent, where the defense is the highest.

"Hmph. As much as it pains me to say this: Satan is correct. The Archangels are hanging back where their safety is guaranteed. Look at how little effort the cherubs put into their attacks! They're barely even using any energy. It's all a show. A front! They plan to whittle us down through underhanded means... the damned dirty..."

"GEEEYYYOOOARGH!!"

Diablo roars once again and flattens the nearby land. His soundwave shatters the brains of thousands of demons and monsters at his feet, while only a few hundred angels on the frontlines perish. With a sweep of his hand, Diablo fires off thousands of bolts of lightning to tear apart all in his path. Unsurprisingly, the angels all fly in different directions to evade Diablo's attack, while the demons take the brunt of it.

Belial's expression pales. "Oh, devils... how could I not see the angel's evil ploy? Were Uzziel's words merely one of Raphael's weapons, meant to make us lower our guard?"

"Nah," Satan grunts. "I guarantee her intentions were pure. Raphael's using her to advance his schemes. He's one disgusting little worm..."

"So, what do we do?" Bael asks. "I'm not the idea guy. You know I'm not the idea guy."

Satan smirks. "Exactly what we intended to do. From the very beginning, I said this would be a suicide mission. Our plan hasn't changed; only how we'll have to go about it."

Lucifer narrows her eyes. "Don't be cryptic, Satan. Explain."

Satan's smirk deepens. He gestures toward the orcs behind Lucifer. "It's simple. We let the angels win so that they'll lose."

Bael scratches his ass. "I... I don't get it."

"You'll see, soon. I've got everything all figured out."

Recommended Listening

Diablo's anger rises further and further. Spasms of pain wrack his body every time the dragon and Titan batter him from the front and back, but it always fades into the back of his mind, pressed there by his overwhelming, unstoppable rage.

I HATE YOU, MICHAEL! HATE YOUUUU!! YOU KILLED MY GIRL! I'LL KILL EVERYONE YOU KNOW AND LOVE! I'LL GRIND YOU INTO PULP!!

Despite Diablo's inner thoughts, his mind gains the slightest hint of sanity. For a brief moment, a realization occurs to him.

I... I CAN'T WIN LIKE THIS! THERE ARE TOO MANY ANGELS!! I HAVE TO... HAVE TO... BECOME EVEN STRONGER...

Slowly, an idea creeps into the Archdemon's mind. He concentrates on his stomach and begins inhaling air like before, but this time, he doesn't boil his rage to ignite a fire-laser. Instead, he sucks in mana from the air itself.

POWER. POWER! POWERRRR!! I NEED MORE POWERRR!!

* * *

Raphael clenches his fists. Hints of excitement appear in his eyes as Michael and Neptune step up their attacks. Whenever Michael deflects one of the Archdemon's fire-blasts onto the demons below, Raphael shakes his fist. Yes! Yes!!

The old man's thoughts rampage uncontrollably. Victory is within our grasp! The Great Demon isn't invincible. Its attacks are slowing down over time. If Michael can maintain Jörmungandr's body for a while longer, we will overwhelm this enemy and stomp the demons into meat paste! Today's battle results will change from mutual destruction into our victory!

Raphael's excitement builds silently inside himself, where nobody can see, but Uzziel notices a spark of light in her brother's eyes. "Raphael! Is something the matter? Art thou worried about something?"

Raphael pales. He quickly turns to look at his little sister and shakes his head. "No, no, it's just... the Great Demon's attacks seem to have lost their steam, haven't they? This bodes well for us!"

Uzziel nibbles on her lip. "Mmm. I suppose so..."

Raphael's eyes flick back to the Archdemon. He gazes upon the 1000-foot monstrosity and frowns. "Hm? What's this? Why has it stopped attacking?"

Diablo curls his arms around his chest protectively, allowing Michael to use the Archdemon's passiveness to launch into a flurry of claw and teeth attacks. He rips and tears Diablo from his head to his belly, spraying rivers and seas of blood and gore in a large radius around the battlefield. The sudden deluge of plasma drowns a few hundred demons alive, while the rest sink their toes into the soil to hold on for dear life.

Michael narrows his eyes. He gazes at the Archdemon from the safety of Jörmungandr's scaled body and frowns.

I sense power building within the Great Demon's chest. Could it be planning to unleash some new, hellish magic?

* * *

Neptune assaults the Archdemon from behind. He fires a concentrated blast of electrified holy water at the base of the Archdemon's neck and drills deep into Diablo's muscle, but it heals within seconds.

"Again!"

Neptune summons mana into his feet and launches at Diablo. The moment he strikes the Archdemon's body, a shudder goes through the unified Titan's soul, causing his attack to lose more than half of its striking power.

"Augh! What happened?!"

"Our unity is weakening!"

"How? Why?"

"The Binding Arts are supposed to be temporary. We can't maintain it for long, or our souls and bodies will permanently merge. However, the resulting chimera will be far weaker than we are now. We absolutely cannot allow that to happen!"

Neptune flies away from the Archdemon and explains the situation to himself. After all, since Ivaldi is the only one among the three Titan Kings with knowledge of how the Binding Arts work, only she can elaborate on its intricacies.

As Ivaldi opens Neptune's mouth to explain further, a massive earthquake rumbles through Heaven. Heaven's Light dims significantly, turning from the blinding brightness of a summer day to a color much closer to the waning of dusk. Visibility drops to a percent of what it was only a moment before, causing Neptune's blood to turn to ice in his veins.

"By the ancestors! What... what has the fiend done now?!"

The Archdemon leans forward. Diablo continues to press his arms against his chest and inhale deeply, sucking vast amounts of mana into his body.

Ivaldi gazes around Heaven. Heaven's Light dims even further, making the pitch black of night descend in its place.

Fireballs and blasts of holy light illuminate the battlefield in colorful flashes of white and yellow. The demons and angels intensify their assault as the encroaching darkness causes an unspoken fear to materialize in their hearts.

The towering visage of the Archdemon appears ten times more threatening in the gloom. Electricity crackles on Diablo's fingertips, while deep inside his chest, his heart glows with a furious red light.

Lub-lub. Lub-lub. Lub-lub.

The Archdemon's beating heart barely makes any noise, but as the darkness intensifies, Diablo's heartrate increases.

Lub-lub-lub-lub-lub...

Raphael swivels his head in every direction. All of his confidence vanishes.

"Uzziel! UZZIEL! This is bad! This is worse than I ever could have imagined!!"

"Brother? What's wrong? What has happened to Heaven's Light?"

The Archangels and low-ranked angels all glow faintly in the sky. Their bodies emit trace amounts of holy light, giving them the appearance of fireflies hovering above the Archdemon.

Uzziel turns to look at her brother, and his expression fills her with unspeakable horror.

"Raphael? Raphael?! Why has Heaven gone dark? Tell me, please!"

The Archangel of Wisdom whips his head to the left to look at the Archdemon, then back to Uzziel.

"I should have known! Damn! The Great Demon might take a small amount of damage from holy magic, but it also increases its power! It's not only wasting our stamina; it's sucking Heaven dry! If the Great Demon continues, Heaven will implode! We'll return to Earth and have to fight it there, where we won't be able to contain it! The end-times are upon us!"

Wisps of fire trails from the Archdemon's mouth. He swings his arms in every direction, sending brilliant flashes of lightning to cut through his angel and demon opponents. Within seconds, tens of thousands of troops on the ground and in the skies end up fried to ash, unable to retaliate. Only a couple of million angels hover in the skies, while barely a million demons and monsters surround the Archdemon on the ground below.

Uzziel stares at her brother with wide eyes. "Can we stop the Great Demon before we're too late? Can we save Heaven?!"

Raphael clasps his hands together. "Possibly! But the only method I can think of- ah! Neptune! Watch-
"

The old man barely gets a word out before something truly horrifying happens. Neptune rushes the Archdemon once again, but despite his incredible speed, accelerated by both Ivaldi and Zeus, the Archdemon catches him off-guard. Right before Neptune's enchanted fist makes contact with Diablo's skin, the Titan King's heartbeat freezes.

The Archdemon's senses zero in on the incoming threat.

Diablo turns his head slightly. He spots the diminutive Titan King, only a quarter of the Archdemon's size, rushing in for another round of attacks.

Diablo's thought patterns shift. Instead of mere rage controlling him, a dark, sinister thought occurs to him.

Why kill everyone all at once when I can make them suffer?

The moment Diablo has this realization, the Archdemon swivels his waist to face the Titan King. His movements become a blur, greatly outclassing the formerly untouchable Titan King.

Ivaldi's soul trembles.

Im...possible...

Diablo reaches out with his hand. The 250-foot-tall Titan seems to freeze in the air. Neptune's speed slows to a crawl in the eyes of the Archdemon.

You... want... to hurt... me? Hah... hah hah.... I won't allow it.

Snatch!

Diablo's hand grabs the Titan King before he can react. In the eyes of those watching the battle, all they see is a blur of movement, a flash of light, and Neptune's body landing in Diablo's grasp.

When did the Great Demon turn around?

How did it seize the invincible Titan King out of the air?

Neptune howls in pain. "Aaaaargh!!"

Diablo's giant hand squeezes around his Titan prey's waist, pinning Neptune's arms to his side. His already formidable strength rises ten realms higher, allowing him to subdue Neptune without batting an eye.

"Hah... hah... hah... I... smart... now... see... through... your... fear..."

For the first time since the battle started, the Archdemon doesn't scream, bellow, or howl in rage. Instead, he speaks, haltingly, sending waves of terror through the minds of his enemies.

Neptune raises his head. Sweat drenches his skin as he gazes at the eyeless head of the monstrous giant dominating Heaven.

"You... you can talk?!"

Ivaldi takes control of Neptune's body. Her eyes flash with realization, and she uses the slightest movement of her fingers to transform into a ray of light.

Before she can jump away from the Archdemon, demonic mana floods through Diablo's arm to wrap around his captured Titan enemy. The blood-red energy rips apart the Titan King's magic and reverts Neptune to his physical body.

"No! It can't be!!"

Ivaldi howls in rage as she realizes what's happened.

Magic Neutralization! The Great Demon is too powerful! It's going to kill us! It-

Before any escape plans can materialize in Ivaldi's mind, Diablo raises his arm to lift Neptune high above his head.

"Hah... hah... no more running... for you..."

Neptune screams. "No! No! Someone help us! HELP!!"

Michael stares, wide-eyed with disbelief, as the Archdemon swings his arm down toward the ground. At the last second, he releases the Titan King, throwing Neptune into Heaven's Soil with a thunderous crash. The two-hundred-ton Titan King hits the ground so hard that an earthquake instantly ravages Heaven, destroying angelic cities tens of miles away. Neptune's bones shatter from the impact, causing all of his limbs to turn into jello. He bounces off the ground and flies into the sky, unable to stop his momentum.

The Archdemon watches without speaking as one of its two most annoying enemies plummets from the sky and crashes into the soil a second time.

THUNK!

Neptune tumbles and rolls a few times before coming to a stop.

He doesn't get back up.

"Hah hah hah... tiny angels... weak pests... you will all suffer."

The Archdemon turns around. His eyeless head swivels to face Michael, making the Archangel of Courage take a step back as powerful demonic energy sweeps across the battlefield.

"Michael. I see you. You hurt me. You... will... die."

Recommended Listening

Diablo lunges toward Michael. His blinding speed proves impossible for the Archangel to dodge, and Michael takes the full force of the Archdemon's fists straight to his face.

Over and over, the Archdemon pummels Michael mercilessly. The fearsome dragon and its heavily armored body fail to hold up against the savagery of the Archdemon. Michael tries to deflect any attacks he can, but even with his Omni-Perception, the dragon's body isn't nearly fast enough to keep up with his eyes.

Crack-crack-snap!

The Archdemon blasts Jörmungandr with lightning and rains down a hail of punches as well. His Flesh Eaters coil around the dragon's legs and wings, preventing Michael from escaping, while also pulling the dragon in closer.

"MICHAEL! YOU ARE WEAK! TOO WEEEEEAK!!"

One of the Archdemon's punches hits the dragon's head so hard that its force reaches Michael in the center of the dragon's chest.

"Aaugh!"

Michael's soul trembles from the punch. Despite his soul's hardened properties giving it a million times the strength of any mortal, Michael still receives incredible backlash from the Archdemon's attacks.

I'm losing! Damn! I can't let a bloodskin treat me with such disregard!!

Michael's rage flares up. He snaps his head forward, and Jörmungandr echoes his movements. Mana materializes in his body, travels to the dragon's mouth, and fires outward with a blast of holy energy.

"HARUUUGH!"

Jörmungandr unleashes an attack upon the Archdemon that could wipe out a whole city under different circumstances. The wave of power smashes into Diablo's chest and sprays outward in every direction. Thousands of demons perish as the slightest trickle of Michael's mana tickles them. Their souls evaporate, and their bodies fall to the ground, lifeless and empty.

The Archdemon loosens its grip for the briefest of moments. Diablo grunts as the energy simultaneously boils his demon blood while also strengthening his power.

"Foolish angel… your power… only makes… me… STRONGER!!"

The darkness pervading Heaven causes everyone to gasp as a violent blast of flames fires from Diablo's mouth and hits Jörmungandr's head like a freight train. Before, the dragon would have shrugged off any flame-based attack, but after suffering a beatdown under Diablo's power, the dragon can only recoil as scorch marks cover its head. Superheated flames ricochet off the dragon and impact thousands of angels, frying them alive before they can react.

Michael sags in Diablo's grip. The Archangel of Courage pants for breath. With his stamina drained, his control over the dragon's body begins to slip.

I won't last much longer… this damned demon is… is… too tenacious…

* * *

Not far away, Raphael and the other Archangels look to one another for ideas.

"I have my sword!" Camael says. She unsheathes Excalibur and holds it up to prove her point. "If I unleash Excalibur's full power-"

"No! No, don't even think of it!" Raphael hisses. "The Great Demon absorbs holy energy to empower himself! If thou were to gift him the full might of Excalibur, the universe in its entirety might fall into darkness!"

Uzziel shoots a glance behind the Archdemon. "I can heal Neptune! With his help-"

"That won't be enough, either," Raphael growls. "No… our only option left is… to retreat…"

Camael and Uzziel raise their eyebrows in surprise.

"Retreat?" Camael asks. "That would ensure our temporary survival, but if we don't stop this fiend here…"

Raphael balls his hands into fists. "I have only one other option, and that is to summon the Cherubiim!"

Camael blinks. "What? The Cherubiim? But... thou hath always said..."

"Aye. If Gabriel, Michael, and I combine our powers, we might be able to crush the Great Demon. However, t'would require sharing our memories amongst one another. Unless I have no choice, I mustn't let knowledge of the Primordial Era slip. That was our agreement, all those eons ago!"

Raphael shoots a look at Michael. His expression pales as he witnesses the light fading from Michael's body.

"Gods! I have to do something! I can't just stand by and let-"

"Brother."

Gabriel interrupts Raphael. He places a hand on the old man's shoulder and smiles.

"We must be ready to sacrifice our lives for the greater good. Do not fret. I will re-enter my Cosmic Form."

Raphael freezes in place. He opens his mouth to speak, but it takes a few moments for words to come out.

"Th-thou shalt... no... no! Gabriel! Do not speak in haste! If thou dost activate thy Cosmic Inflation a second time, thy body-"

"Shall surely perish."

Gabriel finishes Raphael's sentence without hesitation. His smile fades, and he shakes his head.

"I have made my decision. If I must fall here, today, then so be it. However, we have a trump card that may assist me."

Gabriel gestures to Excalibur in Camael's grasp.

"This weapon can provide me with the energy I need to activate my power a second time, forcefully. We have no other options."

Hesitation appears in Raphael's eyes.

The old man trembles inwardly. He tries to come up with an excuse, a rationalization, anything to stop his brother's actions.

However, Gabriel's words linger in the air just long enough for the Archangel of Power to assume Raphael has no retort. Without another word, he turns to his sister.

"Camael. If thou woulds't be so kind."

He holds out his palm and waits for Camael's response. His elder sister lowers her eyes to stare at the divine blade in her hand.

Never before did I expect a weapon of this power would feel so... heavy.

Camael swallows her doubts. She takes Gabriel's palm with her hand and activates her weapon's magic. Seconds later, a flood of holy energy passes from the sword through her into her brother.

Unlike Raphael's pained expression, Gabriel doesn't even flinch. However, his pupils shrink slightly as blinding pain surges within his body. He closes his eyes to concentrate, and after a few seconds, manages to stabilize his inner mana flow.

"I thank thee, Camael. Now, I will take my leave."

Raphael's retorts hang unspoken in the air, while Camael only offers a farewell with her eyes. Both of them gaze upon their brother with a mixture of awe and reverence.

Gabriel flaps his wings and flies away. As he leaves his family behind, he motions with his hands to summon forth his cosmic might.

The Creator bestowed my people with the right, the honor, and the responsibility of conceiving the universe.

Holy energy bubbles through Gabriel's skin, muscle, and bone, causing his body to expand.

Our mission was to populate the universe with kind, loving creatures. We were meant to bear the load of the low-born so that they might someday rise to the same heights as us.

Gabriel's feet pound onto Heaven's Soil right as his expansion reaches its exponential growth rate.

But, sometimes, a father raises a son who grows into a monster. What then?

Gabriel's body increases from twelve feet to twenty, then to thirty.

The answer is simple. A man must correct his mistakes. He must restore order, even if it costs him his life. He must teach that unfilial son a lesson, and use his corpse as a tool to educate others.

Fifty feet. A hundred.

Sometimes... to kill a monster... one must become a monster!

Gabriel's overwhelming mana pours from his body like a hurricane. He smashes through the hundred-foot barrier and doubles in size, reaching a height he's never before achieved. Two hundred feet. Five hundred!

The Archdemon's gaze falls upon a brightening soul; one whose energy agitation reaches a height rivalling his own.

What?! Not Michael... someone else!

Gabriel raises his eyes toward the rapidly approaching head of the Archdemon.

Seven hundred feet. Nine hundred!

Gabriel rears his fist back.

If I must die today, then so be it!

One thousand feet!

"But if I die, then thou shalt come with me!!"

Recommended Listening

One thousand feet of Archangel Flesh towers into the sky, matching that of his Archdemon opponent. Gabriel tackles the Archdemon before Diablo can untangle his tentacles from Michael's legs and wings.

Gabriel rears his head back, then swings it forward.

CRACK!!

He headbutts the Archdemon, sending a shockwave throughout the battlefield. Boulders explode, trees rip from the soil, and the endless craters spread across Heaven's Soil flatten like the surface of a lake.

Gabriel's mountain-flattening attack sends the Archdemon reeling backward. Before Diablo can react, Gabriel summons his divine greatsword, a weapon forged from holy energy, and lunges at Diablo.

"Demonic hellspawn! Return to the darkness!"

Gabriel impales Diablo through his chest. He skewers the Archdemon and pushes him backward with all his strength. Diablo's tentacles stab into the ground and bite down to hold on, but their efforts mean nothing compared to the Archangel of Power's might.

Diablo struggles to hold off his Archangel opponent, but Diablo's tentacles rip in half, one by one, as they snap after failing to withstand Gabriel's power.

The Archdemon tries to summon a blast of fire, but the sword pierced through his chest prevents him. Enraged, Diablo summons lightning into his palms and slaps them against Gabriel's sides.

KZZZAT!

Millions of volts of electricity surge through Gabriel's armor. Gabriel's pained expression lights up in the darkness under the brightness of Diablo's thunder, causing the nearby angels and demons to wince in sympathy.

"ARCHANGEL SCUM! PERISH!!"

Diablo claps his hands together. Suddenly, the gravity around his body multiplies by ten times. Gabriel staggers as his body loses its lightness and inflates from one thousand to over ten thousand tons.

"Grrrrgh!"

Gabriel grits his teeth, but his grip on his greatsword falters as he struggles to stand up.

Diablo rears his fist back.

THOOMPH!

He punches Gabriel in the face and sends the giant tumbling backward. Gabriel crashes into Heaven's Soil and gasps for breath. His impact creates a crater, spraying hundreds of tons of rock and dirt outward to coat the battlefield.

* * *

Meanwhile, back at the Archangels, Raphael's expression turns grim.

"Uzziel. Can thou sense something amiss with Heaven?"

Uzziel nods. She scrunches up her forehead and frowns as she peers into the darkness as the giants trading blows. "Heaven's Soil is turning gray..."

"Aye. I did not realize what would happen until now. When Gabriel activated his Cosmic Form, where did he pull the energy from to break through three realms of power? Not from within himself, but... but from Heaven."

Camael grabs her brother's arm. "What?! Will Heaven disappear?"

"Aye. We haven't much time. When it implodes, it will fall apart and dissolve into nothingness. We will travel through the folds of space and arrive back on Earth. My second greatest fear has come to pass."

Uzziel and Camael don't ask what fear takes his number one spot since the answer is obvious: the extinction of angelkind.

"Can we save Heaven?" Uzziel asks. "Can I do anything to help?"

Raphael smiles, but his expression is one of a man who has gazed upon horrors he can never forget.

"When I created Heaven, twas none other than thee who assisted me, Uzziel. The two of us may yet be able to save our home."

Uzziel and Camael wait, but the old man doesn't elaborate.

"Yes? What must we do?" Uzziel finally asks, breaking through his contemplation.

Raphael sighs. "Saving Heaven is no trivial matter. It will require a vast amount of mana. With our reserves already lower than ever and five million of our brothers and sisters dead, I must consider whether saving it is our best course of action. To preserve the two million angels who remain and seek out a new home, or to save our home we spent so much effort creating for the sake of the future... what path should I take?"

Raphael muses to himself distantly, as if Gabriel's battle no longer holds any significance. The Archangel of Power and the Archdemon trade blows, each one jarring the senses of those witnessing their battle.

Eventually, the Archangel of Wisdom nods. "Aye. At the least, we must restore Heaven to trap the Great Demon here. Uzziel. I will rely upon thee, as thy powers of Nature are most suited for this task."

Raphael launches into an explanation about the powers of nature and how he originally stabilized and created Heaven inside a pocket of space. Forged inside Earth's gravity field, Heaven was created to be a separate realm of existence to separate the Titans and angels from one another.

"I will do my best," Uzziel replies, as Raphael finishes his explanation. "But... drawing nature energy from Earth... that will cause much harm to the planet."

"Aye," Raphael nods. "The last time thou dids't such a thing, a mass extinction wiped out millions of lives across Earth. This time, I know not what will happen."

"But... if I do it, will I be able to save Heaven?"

Raphael sighs.

"At this point, all we can do is hope for the Creator's blessing. Go. Do not delay!"

Raphael motions with his hands and activates a portal to Earth, revealing a beautiful plain filled with flowers and animals. Uzziel follows up by summoning the power of nature. She reaches through Raphael's portal and begins pulling the essence of life from Earth's soil.

Seconds later, the grass shrivels up. Rocks crack and crumble, and the sky on Earth darkens.

However, all around Uzziel, Heaven's Light brightens slightly. As the seconds pass, Heaven's Soil regains some of its vitality, while the all-encompassing light brightens further and further.

Raphael fixes his eyes on Uzziel. "Yes. Yes, little sister! Thy magic is working!"

Uzziel's body trembles as her nature energy drops precipitously. However, after focusing her mind, she drains some of Earth's energy for herself. Outside, cold winds begin to blow, and an icy chill spreads across the portal's vision.

"Retract thy arms!" Raphael yells. "I'll find another place rich with life!"

Raphael opens another portal, and this time, a beautiful forest appears. Uzziel quickly continues draining nature energy from Earth to revive Heaven, causing the trees to crackle and snap. Some of them fall to ash, revealing the startled animals and bugs within. The various forest creatures flee for their lives, uncertain as to what disaster is befalling their home.

"I'm sorry..." Uzziel mutters. "The Saharan jungle teems with life, but I must drain it for the sake of my people! Earth will heal its wounds, but Heaven will not... not without my power!"

Minutes pass. Gabriel howls in pain as the Archdemon frees himself from the greatsword and unleashes a torrent of fire upon his Archangel opponent. However, Gabriel's mana barrier shields and protects him from the worst of Diablo's attack.

"D-done!" Uzziel yells. Outside the portal, all that remains of the Saharan Jungle is a sandy desert, one filled with confused critters and animals, all of which haven't a clue what happened to their home.

Raphael frowns. "Those creatures will perish without the jungle, and their bodies flow with life energy. Spare them a slow, tortured death, little sister. Kill them to revitalize Heaven."

Uzziel balks. "No! Not a chance! I won't kill unless I must! Raphael, why must thou test me?!"

Raphael glances at Camael, then back at Uzziel. He smiles. "A-aye, t'was just a test, nothing more. Thou hath done it! With Heaven's Core restored, this dimension will not collapse under the Great Demon's-"

"GOOOOAAAAHHH!!!"

Diablo bellows in rage. He uses his tentacles to move far faster than Gabriel, circles around his Archangel opponent, and swings his fist at Gabriel's back.

THWICK!!

Diablo's fist rams through Gabriel's back and bursts out of his chest. He smashes through the Archangel of Power's barrier, causing Gabriel's body to spasm violently.

Camael, Raphael, and Uzziel all scream in terror. "Brother!! NOOOOO!"

Michael gathers strength in Jörmungandr's legs. He leaps at the Archdemon's exposed back and swings his claws toward the monster's head.

"BASTAAAARD!"

* * *

Diablo turns his head slightly to the side. He watches as the dragon leaps at him.

Then, he smiles.

FWUMP!

Diablo swings his fist backward and smashes the side of Jörmungandr's face. The dragon wrenches to the side, spins through the air uncontrollably, and crashes against the mountain atop Heaven's Gate.

Thoom!

Michael hits the mountain, bounces off, and lands on the plains nearby. His dragon body shudders for a moment, then goes still.

The Archdemon's joyful grin reveals the excitement boiling within him.

Heh heh heh… with only two moves, I've won this war.

He yanks his hand back from Gabriel's chest and gives the Archangel of Power a slight push. Gabriel's strength fades, and he falls to his knees. A moment later, he falls forward and flops against Heaven's soil, sending a mountain of debris in every direction.

The Archdemon slowly, deliberately, turns to face the south. He raises his bloodied hand and points at the cluster of angels flying high in the sky.

"Now… the slaughter… begins…"

Part 170: Return of the Balrog

The Archangels of Power and Courage lay motionless on Heaven's Soil. Michael's mana-infused dragon body dissipates into particles of light, while Gabriel rapidly shrinks from 1000 feet tall back to his original size.

"Quickly!" Raphael yells at Uzziel. "Pull our brothers back before the Great Demon finishes them off!"

Uzziel's nods her head, but the blood-drained expression on her face reveals her panic. "O-okay!"

Uzziel flies to the ground to save her brothers, but Raphael hasn't a moment to spend worrying about her efforts. Instead, his attention falls upon Camael as she flaps her wings and charges at the Archdemon.

"BASTAAAARD!!"

The Archangel of Divination loses all her ability to reason. Having witnessed millions of siblings perish during this war, all of her sanity crumbles away when she sees both of her Archangel brothers nearly lose their lives.

"Camael! No! Stop!" Raphael yells. He tries to chase after her, but Excalibur's power increases Camael's speed by several factors. She travels two miles in the blink of an eye and smashes into the dirt before the Archdemon.

"Fight someone thy own size! EXCALIBUUUR!!"

Diablo's head jerks downward as he detects an immense buildup of holy energy. He sends a legion of Flesh Eaters toward the rapidly brightening speck of light below him, but before they can get close, each of his maws crashes against a barrier of mana surrounding Camael.

Magical power condenses inside Excalibur. It passes through the hilt and swirls into Camael's body like a typhoon at sea. Camael cries out wordlessly as she uses every part of her soul to stabilize and magnify Excalibur's energy.

"Stand right there, ye damned bastard! Don't even THINK of dodging this!!"

Camael concentrates and focuses her mind. More energy spins inside her body than she has possessed in possibly her entire life, even during the Primordial Era. All around her, Heaven's Soil soaks up the excess energy emitted by Excalibur to sprout grass and plants at her feet. Heaven's Light intensifies as Heaven's Core greedily gulps every drop of spiritual energy Camael can't contain within her soul.

Raphael comes to a screeching halt as astoundingly bright light bursts from Camael's skin, pierces her armor, and transforms her into a miniature sun. "Gah! Sister... no! Stop! If thou unleasheth the full might of that blade...!!"

Camael doesn't hear him. Her hair shifts from white to gold, while her muscles double in size. She places all of her attention on the mountain of flesh towering over her, then lifts Excalibur with both hands to points its tip at the Archdemon's chest.

"HAAAAAAAAAAAAA!!!!!"

Diablo's rage-filled body trembles. A new emotion passes through his mind, one he hasn't experienced since his rebirth.

Fear.

The Archdemon retreats a single step, but that's all the distance it gets before Camael unleashes Excalibur's full power.

BOOOOM!

Camael fires a blast of holy energy from Excalibur with a circumference twenty-times wider than her entire body. The explosion of mana flattens the plain around her and sends several-hundred-mile-an-hour gusts of wind sweeping throughout Heaven. Demons and angels instantly lose their footing and go flying in every direction, unable to save themselves.

In less than a second, Excalibur's hyper-blast pounds into Diablo's midsection like magma bursting through the Earth's crust. Diablo's chest and spine explode outward, spraying countless tons of flesh, bone, and muscle all across Heaven. Camael's attack pierces the Archdemon's body like a javelin hurled into wet sand, causing catastrophic damage across his colossal figure.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAAHH!!!"

Camael continues shrieking, as Excalibur's energy reaches its peak potential.

Suddenly, the blade's power flickers.

A moment later, Excalibur explodes.

The divine blade, Camael's mightiest weapon, shatters into countless shards. The blowback from releasing all of its energy destroys the unfinished blade and rips Camael's arms off her body. The Archangel of Divination goes flying backward, smashes into the dirt, and skips across Heaven like a rock across a pond.

Seconds later, Camael grinds to a stop. She flops lifelessly to the ground and falls comatose, unable to move.

Meanwhile, with Excalibur's power suddenly inert, the Archdemon staggers forward and flops to the ground. Diablo lands with his arms outstretched to rest upon his palms, but his body trembles due to the giant gaping hole in his chest.

"Huhk... hurk..."

All of the nearby angels and demons gaze at the Archdemon with trepidation and dismay.

"Shrakh! That angel lady blew a fuggin' hole in the big guy's chest!"

"Is the Great Demon going to die? I never imagined our sister could unleash such a fearsome power!"

"As expected, our forces don't lose out to those of the bloodskins..."

Both sides quietly gaze upon the Archdemon's failing body, but within seconds, their dismay turns to fright.

"It's... it's getting back up! The Great Demon still lives!"

"How could it heal from such a wound?! It must be on its final legs!"

"Look out! Those jowls are about to attack!"

The angels spread out and dive down to the right and left as Diablo's Flesh Eaters pounce upon their ranks. Each time an angel or a demon perishes to the horrible, teeth-filled maws, Diablo regains a little vitality.

After a few minutes, the Archdemon lifts himself to a standing position. The hole in his chest visibly shrinks to a quarter of its size, causing panic to appear among the ranks of both sides.

Raphael flies to Camael's motionless form, and Uzziel follows him. "Heal Camael at once!"

Uzziel summons nature energy to envelop Camael. Her sister's armless figure sits amidst an expanding pool of blood, giving her the appearance of a dead woman. Luckily, Uzziel manages to bring Camael back from the brink of death and regenerate her arms.

"Ngh," Uzziel grunts. "At least Camael's arms weren't poisoned like Michael's. I can still regrow them."

"Yes, yes, good," Raphael mutters. He turns his head around to look at the Archdemon, and a sense of despair enters his mind. "We've used nearly all of our trump cards. Must... must I unite with Michael and Gabriel? Will the Cherubiim be any use against such an unstoppable force?"

Uzziel waves her hands to summon healing energy into Camael's chest. "We must retreat, brother. We can take to the stars. At the least, we can preserve those who remain. We can always make another Heaven elsewhere."

Raphael grinds his teeth together. "No, we cannot. The mana needed to create a second Heaven would be far more than what we can produce today. Curses... if I had known the demons were capable of such power, I would have sealed Heaven's Gate and prevented them from ever entering!"

"'Tis too late to second-guess ourselves," Uzziel mutters. "Now, we can only try to save as many of our people as possible."

Raphael continues to gaze at the Archdemon, but after a moment, his eyes change their focus to a speck on the Archdemon's body.

"Gods! What is that... that demon thinking?!"

"Hm? What demon?" Uzziel asks. She finishes regenerating her sister's arms, then turns to follow Raphael's gaze.

"There! On the Great Demon's body! There's another demon climbing it!"

Uzziel narrows her eyes.

"What fool would court death in such a manner? Has he not seen the devastation the Great Demon can unleash? Forget him! We must tell our brothers to retreat at once."

Uzziel moves to grab Raphael's arm, but the old man doesn't budge. Instead, he squints even harder to try and make out the demon's figure.

"I recognize him! He's... he's...!"

* * *

A few miles away...

"Just gonna ignore me, huh? Dickhead! I thought we were friends!"

Bael reaches up and stabs one of his fingers into the next layer of the Archdemon's skin. With Diablo distracted by the hole in his chest, he hasn't any interest in the tiny gnat clinging to his lower body.

"Yo, ugly! I'm talkin' to you!"

Bael continues yelling at Diablo, but the Archdemon pays him no mind. Frustrated, Bael stabs his hands into Diablo's torso and climbs up, one handhold at a time. Every so often, he coils strength into his arms and yanks himself upward, leaping thirty feet skyward in a single bound. Then, he thrusts his arm out to create another handhold.

"You smell like shit, Deebs! Anyone ever tell you that?! After I beat some sense into ya, I'm gonna throw you in a lake and scrub your asshole real good!"

Bael pauses for a moment.

"Okay, maybe I won't, cuz' that's kinda gross! Hey! Are you even listening to me?!"

The Archdemon aims his hand at the ground. A moment later, he exhales a blast of concentrated electrical energy and instantly kills two thousand demons. Their corpses explode, sending fountains of blood in every direction.

Bael jerks his eyes to the ground. "Whoa, whoa, whoa! Stop it! Stop killing my friends! That ain't cool, bub!"

Bael increases his climbing speed. Despite the extra ton of weight wrapped around his body in the form of his new flail, Mjölnir, Bael traverses the Archdemon's body without slowing down in the slightest.

Diablo finishes healing his chest. With all signs of Camael's attack gone, the Archdemon's presence once again dominates the battlefield. All around him, demons and angels flee, unable to hold out hope any longer.

Raphael summons a portal to the outside realm, allowing his brothers and sisters to slowly pass through. Meanwhile, the demons head for Heaven's Gate. With only a few hundred thousand demons left, compared to nearly two million angels, the demon's numbers appear insignificant in comparison. Still, Diablo aims his hand at them and blasts them with lightning over and over.

Crack! Crack!

Every time Diablo unleashes his power, thousands of demons perish before they can react. The angels continue streaming out of Heaven, but a few of them pause to gape at the Archdemon's relentless onslaught.

"Look! The damned fiend slaughters his people even more mercilessly than he does ours!"

"What sort of callous, black heart does the Great Demon possess?!"

"'Tis none of our concern! Leave the Bloodskins to their devices. We must leave while we still can!"

After a few minutes, only a thousand angels manage to flee Heaven, along with a couple thousand demons and monsters.

However, the Archdemon's next attack shatters the morale of the demons. He fires a bolt of super-powered lightning at the demons, but instead, it strikes Heaven's Gate. The resulting explosion annihilates their only path of escape and crumbles the mountain, causing a landslide to plummet downward and bury thirty thousand demons and monsters alive.

Raphael continues motioning his brothers and sisters out through his portal. His expression darkens as he watches the demons scatter in panic and flee in every possible direction. With no way of fleeing Heaven, many of them burrow underground in the hopes of saving themselves, but the Archdemon continues systematically blasting them to smithereens one after the other.

"Uzziel, take the other Archangels and leave. Once the Great Demon finishes slaughtering his kin, he'll come after us. We don't have any methods left to fight back."

"Not even one?"

"Nay. None that I would consider worth the cost."

Raphael shakes his head. The aching in his heart fades away, replaced instead with a cold rationality entirely removed from emotion.

"We have no counter to this fiend. Perhaps, after fleeing for a thousand lightyears, we may find some remote rock suitable for our people. Perhaps... perhaps..."

Raphael trails off. He continues waving angels through his portal, but his thoughts drift away to ancient memories, places long since forgotten.

* * *

Bael launches himself up Diablo's chest. It doesn't take him much time before he arrives atop the Archdemon's shoulder, only fifty feet away from Diablo's gigantic head.

"Hey! Stupid! Stop killing my friends! I ain't warning you again!"

Diablo pays no attention to the single soul on his shoulder. It doesn't shine brightly enough to attract his interest, especially compared to all the juicy, clumped-together lights running away on the ground.

He inhales for a moment, then unleashes a terrific blast of laser-fire. Instead of aiming at one particular spot, Diablo sweeps his head from side to side to carve out a swath of death and destruction.

Bael gapes at the bloodshed on display.

"Oh, now you've done it, punk. Now you've fuckin' done it. You've pissed me off!"

Bael unwraps Mjölnir's chains from around his body. He spins the flail around over his head, causing it to pick up speed and transform into a blinding blur.

"If you ain't gonna listen, then I'm gonna hafta knock some sense into ya! Ha!"

Bael releases the flail, sending it flying at Diablo's head.

Diablo senses the faintest whiff of danger coming toward him, but he doesn't react in time.

Thunk!

Despite only weighing one ton and paling in comparison to the monstrous giant, Mjölnir smashes against Diablo's face with astounding force. The Archdemon yelps in surprise and staggers to the right as pain erupts through his left cheek. Immediately, he swivels his head to face the tiny gnat perched on his shoulder.

"Yeah! That got your attention! Maybe next time, you oughta perk up them ears and-"

Whap.

Bael's body disappears as Diablo's hand reaches up and crushes him with the barest amount of effort. The Archdemon slaps the tiny soul on his shoulder and flicks Bael away like a bug.

The Duke of Pain falls from the sky and careens toward the ground below.

"You spawn of a-!"

CRASH!

Bael hits the dirt with the power of a cannonball plowing through a dinghy. His body and Mjölnir combined weigh nearly two tons, and together they create a crater bigger than a five-story building.

"Ugh..."

Bael grunts. His body creaks like the doors on an old house, but otherwise, he feels no pain.

"Fuckin'... that little bitch... did Deebs hit me? Me? Okay, now I'm pissed. Real pissed."

Bael grinds his teeth. Rage boils in his mind, causing him to stare at the figure towering over him with bloodshot eyes.

"I'm... gonna... SMASH YA!"

Recommended Listening

Diablo flicks the gnat off his shoulder. It falls to the ground, and he immediately forgets its existence.

First, I KILL the angels on the ground, then I DESTROY the ones in the sky! Filthy bastards... they took her from me! THEY KILLED LUCYYYY!!"

Diablo swings his four arms out and shreds thirty thousand demons with chained lightning bolts.

KILL! KILL! KILL!

Diablo gazes upon the fleeing souls with a mixture of hunger and hatred. However, after a moment, his mind jolts back to that one soul he casually discarded a minute ago.

It leaps from the ground and rushes toward his head at speeds exceeding imagination.

Hm?

The instant the soul strikes Diablo's head, a wave of pain surges throughout his entire body. The Archdemon staggers backward several steps, only to gasp as he eyes the tiny, insignificant soul suspiciously.

What angel dares attack me?!

CRACK!

It leaps at his head again and smashes into his chin with the power of a meteor. Diablo lurches violently as his brain turns to mush for a moment.

STRONG! DANGEROUS!! This angel is my enemy! MICHAEEEEL!!

Diablo swings his hand at the tiny speck of light, but the instant he makes contact, the unknown soul strikes his hand so hard that its bones break, making his arm drop to his side uselessly.

* * *

Bael, now in his Balrog form, howls in rage.

"YOU KILL FRIENDS! ME KILL YOU! STUPID DUMB-HEAD!!"

He swings his flail overhead, and this time, enhanced by his incredible Balrog strength, it pounds against Diablo's head like a cruise missile, causing immense damage and shattering his jaw-bones.

"SKREEEE!"

Diablo howls in pain. His mouth hangs open uselessly, preventing him from using his fire-blasts. He tries to swipe at the Balrog, but each time, Bael deflects Diablo's hands with Mjölnir and breaks one of the Archdemon's arms.

Crack! CRACK!

Bael pummels the Archdemon relentlessly. Diablo staggers again and again. His arms hang at his side, while his mind trembles from the shock of the Balrog's attacks.

ONE LITTLE ANGEL CANNOT KILL ME!! WORTHLESS FUCKER! I'LL KILL YOU INSTEAD!!

Bael swings Mjölnir at Diablo once again, but this time, Diablo activates his powerful gravity field.

Instantly, Mjölnir's weight increases by 100 times. Instead of launching at Diablo's head, it falters mid-flight and plops to his shoulder, then rolls off and drags Bael along with it.

"AH! SHIT! SHIIIIT!"

Bael howls in surprise as the immense gravity catches him off-guard and causes him to lose his footing. He falls off Diablo's body and plummets to Heaven's Soil below, where he strikes the ground with the force of a tactical nuke.

FWOOOOM!

Rocks and soil explode outward in every direction. Countless Flesh Eaters at Diablo's base end up pummeled into mulch from the incredible impact of the Balrog's body, but they grow back within moments, leaving no lasting damage for the Archdemon.

Damned angel! That's what you get for messing with me!

Diablo waits for a minute, allowing his body to regenerate back to pristine condition. Meanwhile, Bael's Balrog form wears off, having been defeated in one move by the Archdemon's power.

As Bael reverts to his base form, Satan jumps out of the dirt beside him.

"Good try, bub. Nice effort. I'll take it from here."

Bael groans. "Ugh... I couldn't do anything, after all..."

"Nah. You did plenty."

Satan lifts his head to gaze upon the Archdemon. Diablo resumes his annihilation of demonic life, but now, he occasionally targets the angels flying in the sky as well.

"I've only had one plan, all this time, Bael. The whole point of attacking Heaven... and now, I'm gonna do it."

Bael blinks. "Wha...? You can't be serious! Deebs is too strong!"

"Sure, he's strong, but he ain't invincible. Nobody is."

Satan winks at the Duke of Pain. "'Cept you, but that's different."

Bael pulls himself to his feet. He glances around the crater and scowls at the devastation. "How're you gonna win, boss?"

"It's better you don't know."

Satan motions with his hands, causing a portal to appear.

"This will take you back to Earth. Go. Belial and the others have already left."

Bael's eyes widen. "What?! You want me to run away? Nuh-uh! I ain't lettin' you take all the glory! I can still fight!"

Satan shakes his head. "Sorry, Bael. Deebs isn't an enemy you can beat, not right now. Maybe if you were an Emperor, things would be different. It takes an Emperor to defeat an Emperor, and that's just how things are."

"What about the other demons?"

Bael gestures to the west, where the Archdemon lights them up with a blast of hellfire.

"This was always a suicide mission."

Bael opens his mouth to protest, but suddenly, an invisible hand reaches out and grabs him. Before the Duke of Pain can retort, Satan hurls him through the portal, where he lands unceremoniously on his ass and skids to a stop.

"Hey! What the hell?! Satan! You worthless-!"

Satan closes the portal, leaving Bael to curse uselessly at the empty air.

The Devil raises his eyes skyward.

"Tch. By now, Raphael must have allowed ten thousand of his people to escape. If I'm gonna do this, I'll have to move quickly."

Nearly two million angels hover in the skies above. The Archdemon only attacks them occasionally, but much of his effort goes into extinguishing demon and monster lives at his feet.

Satan ignites fire from his feet and jumps into the sky.

"Hades. Have you allocated the souls?"

Aye, comes the response inside Satan's mind.

"How many?"

Nearly three million. A lot of demons died, today.

"We'll survive. We have broodmothers, while the angels don't. They can't reproduce."

Mmm. Still, what about the demons in Heaven? If thou dids't allow the Warpers to use their magic...

"I don't have time for that. Every angel that escapes is one more pain in our asses. Alright, talk-time's up."

Satan flies in front of the Archdemon. He stares at the colossal giant with a mixture of pity and disdain.

"Last check. You aren't wasting any Titan souls, are you? I don't have many in there."

No. I am not. I've saved roughly ten thousand souls for later. All of them should provide thee with plenty of utility.

"Great. Burn the rest. Let's do this."

A moment passes. Hades speaks once again, but this time, he lowers his voice.

Satan... this is going to hurt more than anything thou hath ever experienced before.

"I'm used to pain."

Not like this.

Hades sighs. He casts one regretful gaze toward the hundreds of thousands of clumped-up angels waiting their turn to pass through Raphael's lone portal, then sets his mind to the task at hand.

I am starting now.

The moment the words leave Hades' mouth, he reaches deep into Satan's mind. There, nearly two million demon, angel, and Titan souls rest in captivity, unable to escape.

Burn.

The former Archangel of Change begins extinguishing souls one by one, then in clumps and groups and batches and droves and hordes as well.

One soul, a hundred, a thousand...

Within seconds, the mana in Satan's body builds up to a level never before seen in all his life. The Devil's eyes bulge, his teeth clench, and he curls up into the fetal position, barely managing to hold himself aloft.

Like a waterfall crashing upon a beetle, Satan's entire body begins to tremble and shake under the incredible, immense power bursting from within himself.

"Ahhh! AHHHHHH!!!"

He screams in pain, his voice rising to a volume that nearly everyone in Heaven can hear.

A few miles away, Raphael continues to usher angels through his portal. However, the moment he hears Satan's unceasing screams, he lifts his eyes to gaze in astonishment at the Devil's rapidly expanding presence.

"WHAT?! O, Creator, what is happening? Satan's mana is intensifying! It's expanding! If it continues unfolding, his entire body will explode!"

Several nearby angels hear Raphael's words. They turn around to gape at Satan's power, and a horrifying sense of dread fills their minds.

"Ah! If the Devil explodes, what ungodly destruction will that much mana unleash?"

"He's getting stronger every second! Look at the Devil's power! How can a mere bloodskin possess such limitless potential?!"

Their eyes widen, and their hearts turn to ice. All of the cherubs and seraphs panic and rush toward Raphael's portal. Raphael winces as the strain of so many bodies passing through rapidly drains his mana.

"Ah... my mind is starting to ache... what immense pressure! Satan's mana is driving me to the brink of sanity! His energy is... it's exceeding the Great Demon's! He can't possibly continue any further!"

A minute passes. Satan's godlike mana doubles in power, causing the brains and hearts of all the beings in Heaven to tremble. The Archdemon attacks Satan, but his fire-blasts and punches reflect off an immensely powerful energy barrier protecting the Devil.

"AHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!"

Satan's screaming never stops. In Diablo's eyes, the Devil's mana shines like the midday sun, while everyone else appears only like fireflies or pinpricks of light.

I CAN'T HURT HIM?! THIS ANGEL IS STRONGER THAN ME!

The blood drains from Raphael's skin. A realization strikes him as he watches the Devil's power increase.

"Oh my god... Satan... he's planning to detonate his body! The blast will surely kill the Great Demon, but Heaven... it will... everyone here will perish!"

To the surprise of all the cherubs and seraphs trying to escape, their elder brother suddenly pushes his way past everyone and dives through his portal.

"Only seconds remain! I have to save whomever I can!"

Raphael claps his hands together. His portal, the only lifeline allowing his angel brothers and sisters to escape Heaven, seals shut.

The last face Raphael sees is one of his beautiful sisters. She screams and begs him to let her through, but he closes the gate, sealing her within Heaven.

Uzziel and fifteen thousand other angels all stand nearby. When they see the panicked looks on the faces of those who have recently fled Heaven, along with the sealing of Raphael's portal, all of the other survivors stare at Raphael in disbelief.

"Brother! What's wrong?! Why have thou closed the portal? Our brothers and sisters are still in Heaven!"

Camael, now healed, flaps her wings and jumps to Raphael's side. Immediately, upon seeing the look on her brother's face, her expression turns as black as night.

"Raphael. Why have thou sealed our brothers in Heaven? The Archdemon will kill them."

Raphael shakes his head.

"No... no... the Devil... he's... he's going to..."

RUMBLE...

A massive tremor strikes the entirety of Earth. Every one of the continents shudders as, in a dimension adjacent to the planet, an explosion of previously-unseen scope detonates inside Heaven's pocket dimension.

Raphael and his remaining family members, all bunched up in the plains outside of Mount Sinai, jerk their heads upward. In the sky, several spatial distortions appear, causing the clouds to rush away at blinding speeds. Rips in the fabric of reality tear across the horizon, while beams of blood-red light cascade down to fall upon the Earth. Everything the demonic miasma touches turns to ash, while the rest remains in its former pristine condition.

Uzziel gasps. "By the Creator! What's happening?!"

Half a minute later, the interspacial tears seal up and vanish. All that remains are the ashen remnants of plants, trees, and animals caught by the demonic power.

Raphael slumps to his knees. Tears boil in his eyes as waves of guilt and rage overwhelm him.

"Dead... dead... they're all dead..."

Satan's body regenerates. After detonating himself in a brilliant explosion, his mind wavers for several seconds. He stands up in a blood-red crater, his senses reeling from the stench of copper and plasma.

"Guhk... where... where am I? What happened?"

Several seconds pass before Hades answers him.

Congratulations. The deed is done.

His monotone voice sends shivers down Satan's spine. The Devil pulls himself to his feet, but bolts of electrical pain shoot through his arms and legs. Lingering after-effects from his violent explosion cause his body to moan and groan while begging for forgiveness.

"Fuck... everything hurts... my whole body burns like a bitch..."

Hades says nothing. Instead, his soul emits a sensation of lingering anguish. When Satan peers inside his mind, all he sees is Hades' apparition sitting down, staring at nothing.

"Hades? What's wrong? Are you okay?"

The former Archangel shakes his head.

Satan. Look around. Thou haven't a clue what thy actions... what they've...

Hades trails off. Frowning, Satan ignites flames from his feet and jumps into the sky.

Immediately, the stench of blood assaults his senses — once he obtains an aerial viewpoint, his confusion increases.

"Where the hell am I?"

Heaven, Hades replies.

Satan sweeps his eyes to the north, east, south, and west. No matter where he looks, the only thing he sees is blood-red land. Heaven's Light, once a mixture of white and gold, now tints the world crimson, giving the entirety of Heaven a horrifying, eerie atmosphere.

Instead of trees and grass, an endless wasteland stretches out as far as Satan can see. A tremendous crater, nearly five miles in circumference, engulfs the area where Satan woke up. Beyond that, the cataclysmic damage Heaven suffered renders the rest of it inhospitable to life.

Streams and rivers of blood coat the soil. Much of it boils slightly, revealing the presence of intense heat beneath Heaven's surface, but as the minutes pass, the temperature dies down somewhat, causing Satan to breathe a little easier.

"I see. So... I did this."

Satan speaks to himself, more than anyone else, but Hades still responds.

Aye. They're all dead, now. All of my former brothers and sisters. All of the demons. Anyone unlucky enough to end up trapped in thy suicidal blast... they've left the realm of the living.

Satan nods. "All according to plan."

Mmm. Was this the right way to win the war, though? Without hesitation, thou dids't sacrifice thy fellow demons. My former brothers and family... I cannot help but wonder if... if we've made the right choice.

Satan coughs. The stench of blood strains his breathing.

"Kuh. It's too late for regrets. Raphael didn't leave me another option."

Satan flies across Heaven. He eyeballs the ground and keeps an eye out for survivors.

"How much power did I release? I can't find a trace of life, not even a plant, anywhere."

'Twas immeasurable, Hades murmurs. Not even the great Morva, a mighty Titan from the Primordial Era, could have caused such devastation. Not with a single attack. Such is the might of a fully realized soul manipulator.

"I hope I never have to do it again. The pain made me wish I was dead."

* * *

Soon, Satan's eyes fall upon an enormous chunk of flesh, one the size of a two-story building. It rests in a crater, while bloody smoke boils from its charred skin toward the skies above.

"Spawn of a- is that a piece of the Great Demon? I thought I killed it!"

Hades nods. Aye, 'tis dead. Not a drop of life-force remains. This bloody husk appears to be a remnant of its skull.

Satan flies to the ground and lands a few feet away from the lump of blackened flesh and bone. The stench of death makes him recoil, but after forcing down his disgust, he takes a step forward.

"Well, I'll be damned."

Hm? Found something?

"I think I have."

Satan jumps atop the mass of flesh and cranes his neck to look at a giant gash across the top. There, inside the remnant of the Archdemon's brain, a 6-foot-tall figure lies drenched in blood and guts.

"Deebs! He's alive!"

Satan reaches inside the Archdemon's skull, grabs hold of his friend, and pulls him out. With a look of pure joy, he grins from ear to ear at Diablo's unconscious figure.

"I dunno how he survived, but that makes today our lucky day."

Satan shoots another glance around Heaven, then motions with his hand and activates the power of a warper within himself. He summons a portal back to Earth, but before he can step through, a male voice cries out from the skies.

"Satan! Bastard! Don't even think of leaving here alive!"

Raphael, Uzziel, Camael, and a hundred cherub warriors soar high above Satan. They drop to the ground and splash their legs into the bloody swamp.

Raphael's expression oozes with rage. He stabs a finger toward the Devil, perched atop the Archdemon's skull, and growls deep in his throat. "Foul demon! Thy attack slew millions of my brothers and sisters! Not only that, but the audacity required to slay thy own people as well boggles my mind! Thou art a source of evil worse than any I've ever seen! We won't allow thee to leave alive!"

Satan stares, unblinking, at the Archangel of Wisdom. His smile fades away, replaced with an expression of doubt.

"You think I wanted to kill millions of angels and demons? My intention was to kill the Great Demon. Had I waited any longer, he'd have killed everyone anyway."

Several veins bulge along Raphael's head. "Lying snake! My people were on their way out of Heaven! Were it not for thy cowardly attack; they might have survived!"

Satan narrows his eyes. "The Great Demon destroyed Heaven's Gate. My people were going to die while yours would have escaped safely. I didn't see you offer to help them."

"I can only open one portal at a time!" Raphael bellows. "Blackheart! Don't even think of slandering me! 'Tis none other than thy suicidal attack that killed three million angels and demons! Thou art a stain upon the mortal realm!"

Camael walks over and places her hand on Raphael's shoulder. After taking a moment to calm Raphael down, she gestures toward Diablo, still held in Satan's grasp.

"That fellow there. He's the one who transformed into the Great Demon. Give him to us. He must pay for his deeds with blood."

Satan narrows his eyes. He glares at Camael with a look of fire and fury.

"Hm? Are you stupid, grandma?"

"Excuse me?"

"You saw me unleash enough power to kill the Great Demon. If you want to continue pissing me off, maybe I'll do it again."

Camael falters. "...No. D-do not jest, Devil."

"I ain't in the mood to joke around," Satan mutters. "You wanna know the truth? I'll tell you. I planned for this. My goal, from the beginning, was to take your kind down a few pegs. I succeeded. I won the war."

Satan smirks.

"What can you do? Your best fighters are down for the count. You're exhausted. You're running on fumes. Me? I just blew up all of Heaven and killed the Great Demon without batting an eye, and I've got tons more kick left in my step. Face it, grandma, grandpa, your time's up."

Satan turns around to face his portal. His smirk widens.

"The Age of the Angels is over. The Era of the Demons is here. Maybe next time you guys see me, I'll finish you off. That depends on my mood."

Raphael stares at Satan's back. Every second, a new understanding of Satan's planning enters his mind.

"Blackheart. All of this death and destruction... and thou expect me to let thee walk away? Not a chance."

Raphael's eyes flash with anger.

"I shan't let thee take another step. Today is the day thou die, damned soul-manipulator."

Raphael's wings twitch. He coils strength into his legs and prepares to jump at the Devil, but before he can make his move, Satan whirls to face him.

"I don't think so, pops. I already beat you once. Your little illusion tricks won't work on me. Why don't you just thank me for sparing your life, eh?"

Raphael pauses. "My... illusion tricks?"

Several seconds pass. Satan says nothing, but instead continues to grin like a maniac. As he does, Raphael's frown deepens.

That's right... I awoke to find myself resting only a short distance from the Devil while he battled the Reaper. But... how did I end up on the ground? AH! Don't tell me... I lost?! The Devil defeated me in a clash of souls?!

Satan nods. "That's right. I see the gears turning, old man. Seems you've pieced it all together. I beat you. I left you to rot, and yet you still haven't thanked me for sparing your life. Oh, well. It seems good manners are out of style these days."

Satan rolls his eyes. He turns back to his portal and takes a step toward it.

"How many angels are left, I wonder? How will your kind hold out, while we demons replenish our numbers? Better start planning for the future. The clock's ticking. The hunt is on."

Satan steps inside his portal. It seals shut behind him, sending an ominous silence through the air.

Raphael stares, unmoving, at the spot where Satan stood only a moment before.

Camael echoes him. Her eyes turn misty as a flood of emotions surges through her mind.

"Satan played us for fools," Camael mutters. "All along, we assumed the Devil was after the Archangel's heads... but he wasn't. He only wished to reduce angelkind's numbers. In a war of attrition, he always held the advantage."

Raphael nods.

"We've lost the war. There's... there's no hope left."

Uzziel stands behind her elder brother and sister. A complicated series of emotions pass over her face — guilt, denial, self-loathing.

I created the demons. It's because of me that... that all my brothers and sisters died. It's my fault. If only I hadn't been so damned foolish...

The stench of blood hangs in the air, warning the gathered angels of their inevitable future.

Whether one year or one thousand, eventually... they will fall to the might of demonkind.

* * *

Elsewhere, on Earth, a single human male sits atop a rock several miles from Mount Sinai. His hawk-like eyes scrutinize the rippling tears in space as they fade away, and a mixture of emotions washes over his face.

"Master Hercules. With you gone, what must I do? Was any of this within your expectations?"

His eyes lower to a field of angels. Nearly ten thousand of them mill about in the grass. Some sit, some stand, while others pace back and forth while they wait for their brother to return with news of Heaven's fate.

"With the angels all but extinct, my people will have to fend for themselves. How will we survive when a single demon outmatches a hundred of our finest warriors?"

The human lowers his eyes. He gazes at a nearby flower, as if waiting for it to give him a reply.

"Is that why, in your final moments, you gave me the rest of your power? Did you choose me as their leader?"

The human climbs off the rock. He stretches for a moment and pops his back.

"I am but one man. To defeat the demons, I will need an army."

He raises his eyes to the perfectly blue sky above. Already, all traces of the deadly demonic energy from Heaven have dissipated, leaving Earth in its former pristine state.

"So be it. I will raise an army the likes of which the universe has never seen. I will stay true to my heart, and I will take my revenge."

"I will kill them all. Every. Last. Demon."

Part 171: The Neverending Cycle

In the realm of the Ancient Titans, at the High Court of the Allmother, several hundred former Titan Kings and Queens sit at a table laden with a magnificent spread of scrumptious food. Every form of culinary delight lines their dishes, ranging from seafood to beef to vegetarian delights as well.

And, at the end of the several-thousand-foot-long table, a single Titan Queen, only fifty-feet-tall, stands atop it while hanging her head in shame. Her fellow Titans tower over her like mountains above boulders. Their expressions range from pity and empathy to scorn and disgust.

Queen Odin, the Allmother, mightiest of her people, sits at the head of the table. She takes a sip of wine, sloshes it around in her cup for a moment, then places it on the table. After crossing her arms, she sighs.

"Ivaldi, the so-called Queen of Divinity. We gave you a most fortuitous chance to elevate yourself two hundred positions. You were to take Hrothgar's seat at the High Table, a spot he has shown no interest in, nor has he so much as sat in for a dozen generations. Now, please, my beloved god-daughter, tell me why you have claimed no victories in your return to the mortal realm. Explain to your fellow clansmen why you have disgraced our names."

Murmurs spread around the table. Several Titans whisper to one another about the battles they saw.

"Perhaps Ivaldi was too weak to handle that terrible fiend from the Primordial Era."

"Bah. She is, of course, the lowest-seated among us. Had we known such a mighty beast was to appear, we might have jumped at the chance to fight it."

"I'd have given up a few positions to fight such a blood-stirring battle. Alas! The Queen of Divinity was no match for such a terrifying monster."

Having witnessed Ivaldi's exploits for themselves, many of the Titans present brag amongst themselves about how easily they would have felled the Great Demon. However, none of them step up to defend her.

Ivaldi hangs her head in shame. "I failed, Allmother. I attempted to slay the Hydra, but the Plaguebringer, the Archangel of Creation, Uzziel, defeated it first. When I directed my vengeance toward her, she crushed me. I should like to point out that one of Hrothgar's descendants, a young Titan named Hercules, was manipulating Uzziel behind the scenes. I know not how he overpowered her soul, given her status as an Archangel, but he succeeded."

The murmuring around the table falls silent for a moment.

Several Titans shoot looks of disdain at one another.

"Hrothgar's line now includes a soul manipulator?"

"Hmph. I'd sooner die of embarrassment than suffer such an indignity from my progeny. Who knew his kin would fall so far as to walk Morva's decrepit path?"

Odin raises her hand. "Quiet. Ivaldi, I understand your inability to defeat the Great Demon, since its might exceeded most of the Titans seated at this table. However, my issue lies with your embarrassing loss to the Plaguebringer. As everyone here knows, my firstborn fell to the Earthmother's violent fury. I could understand a close loss, but from what I understand, her magical power has fallen from its once-lofty heights, and yet you barely put up a fight. Have you no shame?"

Ivaldi clenches her fists. The once-imposing aura of the Divine Queen loses its luster under Odin's wrathful gaze. "I make no excuses for my failure. I, too, assumed Uzziel would be as weak as her brethren, but I did not realize she was capable of pulling mana from the essence of nature. It seems that Hercules was somehow able to tap into her primordial powers to defeat me. My lack of vigilance caused my defeat."

Odin furrows her brow. "Hm. Indeed. More importantly, I noticed that you used your Binding Arts to merge with two of Hrothgar's Descendants. Why have I heard nothing of this technique from you in the past? Such a deadly kill move might have aided us greatly during the Third War."

Ivaldi straightens her stance. She shifts her arms behind her back and clasps her hands together. "Ah, regarding my Binding Arts, I only created them out of boredom after I arrived in Valhalla. I used my knowledge of the Cherubiim, Seraphiim, and Ophaniim to create a technique that merges multiple Titans into one entity. Sadly, its efficiency and power level is far lower than what the Archangels can unleash. I consider my performance unworthy."

"Nonsense," Odin mutters. She waves her hand flippantly, dismissing Ivaldi's concerns. "Even with its limited power, it could have provided us with a much-needed boost in fighting capability during the ancient wars. You may have utterly failed in defeating three legendary opponents, but I must admire your inventiveness in the ways of combat. You did not waver and unleashed every tool in your arsenal without holding back. From where I stand, your foolishness and naivete come second to your ingenuity and creativity."

The Ancestor's Hall falls silent as several Titans stare at Odin with looks of incredulity.

The Allmother is actually praising Ivaldi after her shameful performance? Never in a million years did I expect such a bizarre twist of fate to occur before my eyes!

Gods! How could Odin gaze upon Ivaldi with anything but scorn? Having that diminutive daughter in my presence sickens me. The Allmother's compassion seems to have grown over the last few eons.

Odin pushes around a piece of chicken on her plate. An absent-minded look appears in her eyes as she stares at the table for a moment.

"How strange, though, that the Archangels and the remaining descendants of Hrothgar's line all chose to seal away their memories. Why did I hear nothing of this revelation?"

A Titan King sitting beside Odin at her right, clears his throat.

"Ahm, ah, Allmother, it's like this, you see..."

He presses his fingers to his temple and sends a telepathic message to her.

Several seconds pass. Odin says nothing as she receives her advisor's message. Eventually, she nods.

"Ah, thank you, Hyperion. I see. So we've known for a long time, but it slipped my mind. The state of the outside universe has remained outside my interest for a very, very long time. I suppose my only concern would be whether we will need to worry about these 'demons' finding a way to attack Valhalla or not. Have they any means of entering our realm?"

Ivaldi bows her head. "With all due respect, Allmother, I possess limited knowledge of the demons. While the Great Demon was a terrifying deity, it seemed he was an aberrant among his people. The others were like gnats compared to his godlike existence. I would not worry about them."

"We've underestimated these children of the Plaguebringer once already. I won't have another incident unfold a second time. Hyperion, how goes Helios's experiments? Has he uncovered a method for reviving our bodies? Has he found even a hint?"

Hyperion shakes his head. "Nothing so far, my queen."

"Ah, how unfortunate. Returning to the mortal realm may prove impossible."

With a shrug of her shoulders, Odin waves her hand at Ivaldi. "For your performance in the mortal realm, I will promote you fifty positions. That is all."

Ivaldi stiffens. She stares at the Allmother with a mixture of surprise and reverence. "F-fifty positions?! Queen Odin, I am unworthy! I failed in my quest! I was unable to defeat even a single enemy during my return to the mortal realm! Your generosity might be boundless, but I-"

"Quiet."

Odin's expression darkens.

"Know your place. I do not hand out rewards flippantly. Have you forgotten? Hrothgar's descendant sent us a request. His appeal was 'to save the Titans from the demonic calamity.' Killing the Hydra was only a secondary objective. You created a portal out of Heaven and saved many Titans from the Devil's final cowardly act of self-destruction. Additionally, you unleashed a new power, one which might prove useful to our people if we ever return to the mortal realm. For your achievements, I am awarding you a small promotion among this table's ranks."

Odin continues. "Beyond that, you gave Zeus a chance to redeem his cowardice by teaming up to battle the Great Demon. He did not flinch from his duty, and thus, you have partially redeemed his weakness. It remains his responsibility to carry on into the future if he wishes to reobtain a spot at the High Table. With any luck, he might take your former seat at the end of the table."

Odin chuckles.

"Hah. Oh, what great entertainment we've enjoyed over the last twenty-four hours. I look forward to witnessing the antics these demons unleash upon the mortal realm, as well as how Hrothgar's descendants will deal with them. Hyperion, how many Titans remain alive after the war against the Great Demon?"

Hyperion strokes his long, luscious black hair. "I believe the exact number was forty-two, my queen."

"Hmph. If the living Titans can bring themselves back from extinction, I will laud them."

After a moment, Odin leans back in her chair and gestures to Ivaldi. "Go on, then. Take your seat. My judgment is over."

Ivaldi smiles. She kowtows to the Allmother and nods profusely. "Yes, Queen Odin. Your graciousness knows no limits. I will consider myself in your debt until the day I... die? Well, I suppose a second death might be possible... haha..."

Odin rolls her eyes. "That would defeat the point of Valhalla, little one."

Satan, Belial, Lucifer, and Bael all trudge through a dense forest several miles from Mount Sinai. Their feet snap twigs as they walk, and their eyes gaze upon the desiccated remains of a once-beautiful jungle that previously hid their movements from their angelic oppressors.

"Something ain't right," Satan says. His eyes flick from left to right as he and the other demons slowly make their way through the forest.

"Mmm," Lucifer mutters. "My third eye is picking up strange mana fluctuations in the air. They appear... foreign."

Behind the three Emperors and Bael, fifty thousand demons stomp along, ignorant of the danger ahead. Orcs and goblins intermingle with various demon grunts, lords, and even a baron or two.

Meanwhile, at Lucifer's side, a single Hellhound matches its pace to hers. Diablo's comatose body rests atop the fifty-eyed beast's back. He sways from side to side as the monster takes slow, plodding steps.

Bael smirks. "Whaddya scared of, eh? I'm here. I'll knock out anyone in our way."

Satan nods. "I'm sure you will. However-"

"Satan! Satan!"

A voice up ahead startles the demons, causing them to slow to a halt. Satan frowns as a Lord stumbles toward him.

"Orias? What's wrong?"

The haggard-looking Lord of the Moon falls forward and lands in Satan's outstretched arms. His body, still weakened from expending so much power against the Valkyries earlier in the day, trembles and shudders as he struggles to hold himself up.

"Oh, devils! It's terrible! Terrible! The broodmothers! They're dead! Some horrible monster is ripping them apart! I barely escaped with my life!"

Immediately, Satan's cautious attitude turns to alarm. "What?! Someone's killing the Broodmothers?! What sick spawn of a- Belial! Bael! Lucy! Come with me! We've gotta stop them!"

The other two Emperors and Bael nod along with Satan's words. "Right!"

They skip the formalities. Satan gestures to the demons behind him. "Come on! We can't let a few angel infiltrators take out the Broodmothers! They're our key to winning this war, dammit!"

Orias opens his mouth to say something, but the words don't come out in time. Before he manages to say, "The intruder isn't an angel! It's-" he's too late. Satan and the others rush past him, their battle instincts kindled and roaring to go.

"W-wait, stop..." Orias coughs. "The monster is too dangerous... it kills without mercy..."

Orias staggers after the others, but his speed is nowhere near capable enough to keep up with them. He slumps to the ground in defeat and sighs as the horde of demons, orcs, and goblins head toward their base, ready to kill whoever is threatening their survival.

"I hope Satan can defeat that damned fiend..."

Recommended Listening

Satan and Belial split apart from Bael and Lucifer. They group into two teams and summon half of their warriors to check on the various hatcheries and spawning rooms.

What they find is a stomach-churning disaster.

"Oh, no!" Belial gasps.

She splits off from Satan and heads over to an alcove where the body of a formerly-plump Broodmother lays lifelessly on the dirt. A giant hole in her chest reveals she perished in a single blow, unable to defend herself.

"Who did this?! Who killed Haley?!"

Tears well up in Belial's eyes. As a former succubus, the Broodmother before her was once one of her beloved sisters... until Lucifer turned her into a demon-whelping invalid incapable of defending herself.

Satan scowls as his gaze falls upon one corpse after another. Dozens of broodmothers, as well as their unborn hellspawn, lay in puddles of blood and gore. The expressions of many reveal their terror, sending chills down Satan's spine.

"I never imagined Raphael would be so devious! When I get my hands on the worthless little cherub who did this..."

"EEYAAH!"

A Broodmother cries out in pain from an adjacent room. Satan and Belial's hearts leap into their throats. In the blink of an eye, both of them dash over to a burrowed-out hallway, run down a corridor, and arrive at a horrifying scene of death and destruction.

Dozens of demons lay dead around another of the Broodmother's rooms. This time, the fresh corpses send up a pungent stench in the air, causing Satan's brows to tighten.

"What the hell?! Someone killed these guys just now! It didn't take us five seconds to get here! Where'd the killer go?!"

His gaze falls upon a Broodmother at the edge of the room. A gaping hole in her chest oozes blood. With her giant rump stuck in the wall to birth children, she cannot free herself to move around or beg for help.

Belial dashes over to her and summons healing magic. "Lophi! Stay with me! You're not dead yet!"

After a few seconds, the hole in Lophi's chest heals. She raises her head and stares at Belial with a look of terror.

"A-awful! Scary! Big monster! Killed Mari! Killed Fee!"

Satan walks over to Belial's side and touches Lophi's chin. "Who did this? Who's killing the Broodmothers? Did you see them?"

The demoness shudders as memories appear in her mind. "The eyes! The horrible, glowing eyes! I couldn't run! I couldn't escape! Help me get out! I don't wanna die!!"

She breaks down into uncontrollable sobbing. Belial tries to comfort her, but after a few moments, she turns to glare icy daggers at Satan.

"Glowing eyes. Hercules. He must be the one attacking us. That's how our Grunts and Lords are dying, even in these cramped-"

"Guwahk!!"

Several squishy sounds like balloons bursting with blood pop outside the room, startling both Emperors. A quick clattering of fists and bone echoes in the hallways, but before Satan and Belial can take two steps toward the doorway, the noises cease.

Both of the Emperors arrive at the scene to find fifty dead demons and orcs lying in heaps and piles. With their necks snapped and their heads crushed, their appearances send rage washing through both Emperor's hearts.

"Hercules!!" Satan bellows. "You damned coward! Show yourself! Where are you?!"

Satan's angry cry echoes down the hallway ahead, but after several seconds, he only receives silence as a reply.

Belial presses against Satan's side. Her eyes flick from left to right as she scans the nearby area for threats. "I don't like this. We need to rescue as many Broodmothers as we can and leave."

"How?" Satan asks. "They're too big to move."

"I... I don't know..." Belial whispers. She steps away from Satan and presses her back to the wall. "All I know is- shit!"

Before Satan can react, Belial leaps toward him and transforms her fists into bone-hammers.

CRACK!

A deafening explosion rings out as her fists collide with someone else's. A previously unseen assassin tries to take out Satan in one blow, but Belial foils him, making him leap backward and land in a crouch.

Satan and Belial quickly turn to face their mysterious enemy. A moment later, the Devil hesitates as confusion appears in his gaze.

"What the fuck? That ain't Hercules. That's a human, right? He looks different from the others I've seen, though."

A dark-skinned, muscular man, crouches in a defensive stance ten feet away. His glowing eyes fixate on Satan and Belial as he waits for an opportunity to strike. His eyes glow far brighter than the torches on the wall.

"Demon Emperors. We finally meet."

Satan purses his lips. "Did Hercules send you?"

"Hercules died," The man replies. His lips curl into a faint smile. "I serve a new master now. We all do."

Footsteps.

Satan turns around to gaze into the shadows behind himself. Five pairs of glowing eyes stand apart from each other as five humans become faintly visible.

"We serve the Illuminator, the one who will deliver us from darkness," The first human says. "Before, we were helpless, but now, we have the power to fight back."

Satan smirks. "Hah. And here I was, gettin' all fidgety. A buncha possessed humans ain't no match for me. Better leave now, punks, before you get burned."

Belial clenches her jaw. "S-Satan... just now, when my fist collided with his... his strength was far beyond the ordinary. Don't look down on them. There's... there's something about these people that unnerves me..."

Satan's smugness dissipates. He eyes his girl for a moment as several thoughts enter his mind.

Belial might be the strongest demon I know. If she thinks these punks are tough guys, then I'd better not take 'em lightly.

The Devil straightens his posture. He presses his palms together and licks his lips.

"You think you can come into my home and kill my girls? You're in for a wake-up call, chums."

The first human's grin expands across his whole face. "We know how strong you are, Satan. We've prepared many counters for you. The Illuminator knows all your weaknesses."

Swish!

Five demi-humans leap at Satan and Belial from the back, while the other one charges them from the front.

Both Emperors put their backs together. Belial transforms her arms into blade-tendrils and lunges toward her enemies at twice the speed of sound.

Cling-cling-clang!

Her razor-sharp bones slash at the demi-humans with the rage of a hurricane and the power of a tornado. To her astonishment, the humans manage to keep up with her speed and power. They use their bare hands to swat and bat aside her blades, while also delivering brutal punches to her face and chest.

Thunk-thunk!

Several fists collide with Belial's chiseled abs, only to bounce off an invisible barrier created by Satan's Vectors. The Demi-humans immediately leap backward to get out of Belial's attack range, while their leader attacks Satan from the front.

Whiff! Whiff!

He slashes at Satan with his fingers, but Satan counters with his Vectors and his Octopus Form as well. Ten invisible and visible limbs work together in tandem to fend off the single opponent while a few others hang back to assist Belial. However, to Satan's alarm, his speed pales in comparison to the empowered demi-human.

"Shit!"

Time after time, Satan attacks, only for his opponent to bat aside, dodge, or counter his blows with ones of equal or greater power.

The man snorts. "What's the matter, Satan? Can't keep up?"

Hades speaks from within Satan's mind. Gods. I can't believe it! Satan, each of these humans has nearly the same strength and speed as Hercules! I don't know how that's possible!

Sweat pours off Satan's brow. While he tries to find off his attacker, the other five demi-humans swarm Belial and resume their barrage of attacks.

"No kidding! This fucker's a lot smaller, too, so he's a lot nimbler! How're you doing back there, Belial?!"

"Terribly!" Belial howls. "There's too many! I can't fight them all off!"

"That's right; you can't," The human's leader says, a cold glint in his eye. "Once we crush your body for the first time, we'll keep mashing you to paste until you run out of souls. As for your woman, we'll spare her a slow, torturous death. We're not animals... not like you."

The leader of the demi-humans leaps at a nearby wall, plants his feet against it, and pounces straight at Satan's stomach. The Devil hardens his Vectors and holds them up to protect himself, but a split-second before the human's fist connects, his body disappears and reappears inches from Satan's face.

Shit-!

Crunch!

The leader of the demi-humans punches Satan so hard that the Devil flies to the right and crashes into the hardened dirt wall. Dozens of his bones crack and snap like dried-out wood, while portions of his brain explode through his various orifices.

"Kuhuk!"

Satan loses his stamina. A moment later, the human follows up with a devastating punch aimed at the back of his head.

Splurt!

Satan's brains explode in every direction. The human kills him without hesitation, crushing the Devil before he can react.

"Satan!!"

Belial shrieks in horror as she catches a glimpse of her beloved perishing to the human leader's attack.

Immediately, the demi-humans put all their attention on her.

The leader barks a command. "We have sixty seconds before the Devil revives. Finish her off, now."

Belial's heart turns to ice. All five of the enemies she was already fighting intensify their attacks, while their far-more-capable leader joins in as well. With six people assaulting her from every direction, not even her incredible strength and speed allow her to avoid injury.

Thump!

Every time Belial dodges two attacks, a third slips past and impacts her gut or chest. Several of her ribs crack, her stomach ruptures, and her heart rumbles. Belial's eyes dart from left to right.

I have to hold out until Satan revives!

The leader calls out as he attacks her from behind. "Only fifty-five more seconds!"

Chills spread through Belial's veins. Only five seconds have passed?! It feels like an eternity! I can't keep this pace up!

With so many enemies attacking her, she eventually slips up.

FWAP!

The leader lands a decisive punch. He smashes Belial across the back of her head and sends her flying forward. She plows into one of the other demi-humans, causing both of them to tumble and sprawl down the corridor. By the time they both land in a heap, Belial's vision begins to waver.

"Unn... nnn..."

She tries to jump to her feet, but her arms fail her. Instead, she slumps forward and lands atop the human she hit.

After blinking for a moment, she stares into the man's eyes. His gaze meets hers, and his look of hatred startles her.

"Filthy demon whore! Get off me!"

The man starts to push her off, but Belial's trembling face causes him to freeze in his tracks.

"P-please... don't... don't do this..."

She coughs out a few weak words, begging him to take pity on her.

To Belial's surprise, the human hesitates. As he gazes into her eyes, his pupils start to dilate.

"I... I didn't mean to..."

He stops just short of throwing the disgusting demoness off him, and instead, strange feelings emerge in his chest.

Now that I look into this woman's eyes, I notice how... how beautiful she is. Why was I attacking her? What's wrong with me? How could I bring harm upon such a fair, innocent girl?

Unwittingly, Belial releases her succubus hormones. The man's inner desires rapidly overpower his senses.

Everything happens too quickly for the demi-human's leader to put two and two together. "Hey! Forhan! Get up, already. You're not even hurt!"

His annoyance turns to anger as his subordinate pauses for a few seconds to stare at the helpless demoness lying atop him.

"Forhan! Are you listening to me?"

The demi-human's leader trudges over with his other four lackeys. He reaches down to grab Belial by the back of his head, but at that moment, Forhan leaps into action. He wraps his arms around Belial and rolls with her to the side, narrowly evading his leader's grasp. After landing atop Belial, he jumps to his feet and stands over her protectively, facing down his commander and companions.

"Stay away! She's mine! MINE! You can't have her!"

The commander blinks. "What's wrong with you? She's a bloodskin!"

"She's beautiful! She's the love of my life! I won't let you HURT HER!"

Forhan charges his former companions. All reason leaves his mind as the horrifying thought of them hurting the woman he 'loves' takes over his thoughts. He leaps at the nearest warrior and swings his fist.

Fwump!

Forhan's fist crashes against the other man's head, catching him by surprise. He gets battered backward and stumbles to the ground, unable to comprehend the actions of his comrade.

The leader puts two and two together. "Worthless little-! The she-devil must have bewitched Forhan! Take him out!"

A furious fight begins as the lone warrior battles his comrades. However, with his skills sorely lacking compared to his leader, as well as facing a numerical disadvantage, Forhan perishes seconds later when his leader shoves a fist through his chest and tears out his spine.

"Gah! Damned traitor! Forhan was too weak-willed! Don't fall for the bloodskin's tricks! Kill her before Satan revives!"

Belial smiles. After her unexpected savior gave her a few seconds, she used the time to heal herself. She leaps to her feet and transforms her arms into blades.

I didn't realize I could make men do anything I wanted! I always assumed they just thought I was sexy. Maybe my succubus powers are useful after all!

She aims her gaze at another of the human warriors. Before he can react, her entrancing stare meets his glowing eyes, causing him to shudder.

"Nnngh!"

The man staggers backward, unable to resist the sultry gaze of the demon woman before him. He, too, leaps at his comrades and attacks them before they can react.

"Dammit! You, too, Lonquo?!"

The leader of the demi-humans starts to fight off the second traitor in his ranks, but the moment he takes his eyes off Belial, she strikes.

THUNK!

Belial charges him and delivers a gut-busting kick straight to his spine. The leader of the demi-humans goes flying forward. He skids across the ground and strikes the far wall at the end of the corridor with a tremendous crash, sending shudders through the underground passages. With his spine crushed, he flops to the ground, unable to move.

"Darrol! Leader!"

The others cry out in surprise, but with their leader gone and one of their colleagues turned to Belial's side, their formation falls to pieces. Belial chops their arms off, gashes out their legs, and leaves them rolling on the floor to cry out in pain.

Once she finishes, Belial turns to her newly acquired ally. The man grins at her like a dog and mentally wags his tail. "Mistress! I fight for you! I die for you!"

Belial glances at the demi-humans before her, all of them hanging onto their lives by a thread. "Mmm. Yes, you do."

Seconds later, Satan revives. He jumps to his feet and jerks his head from left to right. "Belial?! Where are you?! Are you-... uhm... alright...?"

The Devil trails off when he spots the battered bodies of the demi-humans before her, as well as their leader at the end of the hallway.

"Wha... what happened? What'd I miss?"

Belial fans out her fingernails and bats her eyes innocently. "Oh, nothing much. I shook my honkers a couple times, and these boys tore themselves apart in a lust-filled rage. Sometimes I can't help myself."

Satan stares at her, dumbfounded. "You're kidding."

With a shrug of his shoulders, Satan turns to the defeated men at Belial's feet. He takes a step toward them. "Well, guess I'll just put the bastards out of their misery."

"What?! No!" Belial cries, as she jumps in front of them. "Satan! You can't just kill everyone you hate!"

"Why not? It's worked pretty well for me so far."

"Y-yeah, but it's wrong! It's bad! We've already beaten them, why not show them a little compassion and let them go? Let's prove we're the good guys!"

Satan frowns. "I'm not a good guy, sweetie. If you wanna be all cute and caring, do it on your own time. Or have you forgotten? These dickbags killed a bunch of your friends! They murdered and butchered our broodmothers without showing any sympathy! They deserve what I'm gonna give 'em."

Satan pushes past Belial and turns his attention on the demi-human still standing, the one Belial bewitched.

"Who's this guy? Why's he staring at me like an idiot? Don't tell me... he's braindead?"

"No. I entranced him. He works for me, now."

Satan's jaw drops. "You can DO that?!"

"Apparently."

"Dang, toots. You scare me sometimes."

Satan's light-hearted words merely conceal the anger in his heart. He turns away from Belial's thrall to face the broken bodies at his feet.

"I can't leave these guys alive, Belial. Look away for a moment. I don't want you to see this."

Belial scowls. "Don't give me that! I've seen plenty of death, Satan. I know what it looks like. I just don't like it. If we let these humans live, maybe-"

"Maybe they'll heal up, come back, and kill more demons," Satan says, interrupting her. "Or do you think they're the types to forgive and forget? I don't think so. Maybe you can beat 'em with one hand behind your back, but the rest of the demons can't. That leader guy got the jump on me pretty good. I doubt anyone else would have stood a chance against these monsters."

"Heh heh..."

One of the humans chokes out a laugh. His glowing eyes tilt toward Belial, and a smirk appears on his face.

"Keh... the Devil's right... we don't... we don't want your pity... finish us off, already. If you don't, we'll come again. You'll never know... never know the meaning of safety, so long as we live. The Illuminator never forgives, and he never forgets. He'll hunt you like the dogs you are. He'll-"

Before the human can continue, fury erupts in Satan's eyes.

SPLAT!

One of Satan's Vectors pounces at the demi-human and crushes his head mid-sentence. His brains coat the ground, while bits of his skull and grey matter spray all over the place.

Belial freezes in place. She stares, wide-eyed, at Satan.

"No... no... no..."

Satan quickly wipes his face. He doesn't look at Belial, but instead, the headless corpse at his feet. "You heard the man. It has to be this way."

Belial lowers her trembling fists. A moment later, Satan crushes the heads of every other human nearby. He only pauses momentarily before killing Belial's thrall. She stares ahead numbly and watches her husband without saying anything.

"Damn," Satan mutters. "I thought they'd have special souls. Their power ain't their own."

Satan heads over to their commander, Darrol, lying against the wall at the end of the corridor. The paralyzed human gurgles blood as he spots the Devil walking toward him, but unable to fight back, he can only watch as his death approaches.

"You came here to kill," Satan says. "So I'm here to pay you back. I don't even know why you punks hate us so much. I didn't do anything to you."

Darrol coughs.

"Kuh... shit-fucking demon bastard... you don't know why we hate you? You don't know... what your little monsters do to our people?! Gurgh... curses... after all the children you're killed... all the women your kind have defiled... we won't rest... we won't let you- uhk?!"

The man's glowing eyes suddenly intensify in luminosity. A look of shock passes over his face.

"Ah! Ahaha! Ahahaha! Kahaha! Stupid Devil bastard! Hahaha! It's over for you, now! Haaahaha! He's coming! You're already dead, and you don't even know it! Bahahaha!!"

The human's expression turns maniacal. He laughs like a crazy person, each breath forcing up mouthfuls of blood. He ignores the pain as his frantic breathing causes him to choke violently.

"Kahk! Kah... kahaha! Tremble and weep, accursed bloodskin! Jepthath is coming! He's coming for you! AHAHAHA!!"

As the man laughs, Satan's hands begin to tremble. Something about the human's absolute confidence in his master, coupled with his overwhelming display of power earlier, causes many unspoken worries to appear in Satan's heart.

"Shut up!" Satan bellows. He swings his fist down and crushes Darrol's head, ending the man's life mid-laugh. For half a second afterward, Darrol's maniacal laughter echoes throughout the hallways, sending shivers down Satan's spine.

"C'mon, baby. We need to leave," Satan mutters. He turns around to look at Belial, only to notice a look of dazed disinterest on her face. Belial stares ahead at the wall, a blank mask covering her face. Her arms sag at her sides, and a sensation of defeat swallows her whole.

"Baby? What's wrong? Come on; this ain't the time for moping around!"

Satan walks over and grabs her hand, but Belial doesn't react.

"...All everyone does is fight and kill," Belial mumbles. "When does it end? When does it ever end?"

Satan groans. "I don't know, but not today, it doesn't! Didn't you hear that guy just now? His boss is coming over! Let's hurry up and get out of here while we still can."

Belial lowers her eyes to the five headless corpses at her feet. "Why couldn't you leave them alive? They weren't going anywhere. They weren't about to hurt anyone."

"Maybe not now, but they would have in the future," Satan says.

The Devil pauses for a moment. He caresses Belial's hand, then starts pulling her along to follow him. "I get it, honey. I do. You think there's a better way we can do things, right? If everyone just set aside their differences, we'd all get along. I like the idea, but it'll never happen. As long as this chump or that punk has beef, they'll always be trying to set themselves up for a better position in life. The angels have their selfish desires, and so do the demons. Get it?"

Satan doesn't wait for Belial's reply. He drags her down the hallway toward the room from earlier and continues talking. "The world has limited resources. We demons need souls to power up and protect ourselves from the angels. The angels want to kill us because we've killed 'em first. Of course, we killed 'em because they enslaved us and treated us like dirt. At this point, it don't even matter who started what, 'cause we ain't never gonna fix the cycle. These humans are just the latest enemies we've made. They'll get sucked into the void, and we'll have to fight 'em off, too."

Finally, Belial speaks. "I see. So, do you think we can break the cycle?"

Her monotone voice makes Satan pause for a moment before replying. "Yeah, maybe. I don't see it working right now, though. Hell, I don't see it happening for a long time. Maybe in the future, we can patch things up."

Belial nods. She stares at the back of Satan's head as the two of them round the corner and enter the Broodmother's room. "The future... okay. Alright. Maybe in the future we can fix things."

Satan bobs his head. "Yeah. Who knows? Anything's possible... alright! Hey, Lophi! We're back. Come on, girl. I can't fit that big, birthing ass of yours out the door, but I can make a portal for ya."

Lophi raises her eyes to look at Satan and Belial. "You can save me?! Please hurry! I don't wanna stay here anymore! I'll die! I'll die!!"

Satan swaggers over and places his hand on the broodmother's shoulder. His eyes scan her body to look for injuries, but Belial's healing magic left no traces behind. Then, he flicks his gaze to the ant-queen-like posterior sticking out from behind her, with its faintly pulsing life energy revealing the demon imps contained within.

"Oy, moving that big arse is gonna be a bitch. Welp, here goes nothing."

Satan motions with his hands and summons a portal half a foot in front of Lophi. When the warp-gate opens, all the demons see on the other side is a dark, rocky cave — the lack of light inside echoes the atmosphere within the demon catacombs.

Lophi shivers. Her eagerness to leave deflates, replaced instead with tension and worry.

"W-where does this portal go? It looks scary..."

"It's a backup cave," Satan mutters. "I found it a few years ago — no big deal. I'm just gonna put you there for a bit, then come and get you to move you somewhere better. It's totally safe. Nobody else knows about it."

"Is... is that so..."

Lophi swallows her fear. After a little bit of encouraging, she leans on Belial and Satan to shakily waddle forward an inch at a time and slide through the portal. Belial uses her strength and bendiness to lift and push Lophi's rump from the rear, while Satan uses his Vectors.

A minute later, they finish shoving the broodmother through Satan's portal, wave goodbye, and close it off.

Satan wipes his forehead. "One down, a bunch more to go."

"Assuming any others are still alive," Belial replies, her voice frosty.

The two Emperors step out of the room. They leave behind the corpses of the demons, monsters, and demi-humans, and head deeper into the catacombs.

However, they don't travel far before Satan screeches to a halt and stares forward into the darkness.

With all the torches extinguished, the pitch-black hallways might prove impossible for humans to see through, but Satan's demonic vision gives him an acute sense of night-vision surpassing that of any homo-sapien.

Satan frowns. A hundred feet ahead, a single figure limps toward them. His broken, battered body, barely clinging to the edge of life and death, causes Satan's hair to stand on the back of his neck.

"Who's that?" Belial asks.

"It's Bael..." Satan murmurs. "B-Bael! Dude! Are you okay?!"

Satan and Belial quickly close the distance between themselves and their friend. When they arrive, they try to meet Bael's eyes, but the Duke of Pain merely continues limping forward. His eyes stare blankly at the ground.

"Bael! Hey! What's wrong? What happened?"

Satan sweeps his gaze across Bael's body. The Duke's right arm hangs limp at his side, with several of its joints bent in the opposite direction they should be facing. Bruises and lacerations cover his chest and face. His right eye swells to the point he can't see out of it, while his puffy lips tell the tale of a savage beatdown unlike any other.

"H-he beat me..." Bael murmurs. "Gotta... gotta run... gotta get away..."

Bael pushes past Satan and Belial. He barely acknowledges their existence, let alone speaks to them in any meaningful way.

Satan gazes at Bael's back as the big guy hobbles further up the hallway.

"Someone... beat Bael? How? Nobody's ever managed such a thing..."

Belial swallows her saliva. A sensation like sand creeps into her throat.

"Let's get out of here, Satan."

The two lovers meet each other's gazes. Both of them share a moment of faint panic.

Satan nods. "Right. Yeah. Let's help Bael get to the surface. We can't stick around anymore."

Both Emperors nod. They glance down the hallway, into the pitch-black maw of the cavernous depths. For a moment, both of them imagine seeing a pair of glowing eyes, but they quickly shake off those terrifying thoughts and trail after Bael to guide him to Earth's surface.

* * *

In the darkness, a single human watches them leave.

Jepthath, the Shepherd, stares with rage-filled eyes at the demons he hates the most.

"Run away, bloodskin leaders. Your deaths will come last."

Jepthath's expression turns frosty. "You've yet to learn the true meaning of fear."

Part 172: End of Chapter Two - Abandoned

How long has it been since I experienced life outside of Solomon's Visions?

A day? A year? A thousand years?

I've spent so much time living with the demons and angels that I've nearly forgotten what it's like to be myself, Jason Hiro.

Solomon's visions fade away, returning me to a familiar bonfire. Once again, the Archangels of Power and Wisdom sit across from me on logs. Gabriel on the left, and Raphael straight ahead.

Gabriel presses his palms together, rests his elbows on his knees, and hunches forward. He touches the tip of his middle fingers to his chin and stares into the bonfire contemplatively.

Raphael, on the other hand, has the presence of someone who's lost everything. With his sagging skin and darkened eyes, the old man appears as little more than a husk of his former self, the person I first met at the start of Solomon's visions.

Solomon sits beside me on the ground with his legs crossed. He sips tea from a dainty little cup and stares silently at Raphael.

"Hello, Jason. It seems you've returned."

I nod. "You were controlling the visions, so that shouldn't be a surprise."

"Mmm."

Solomon doesn't look me in the eye. Instead, he continues to gaze at Raphael, while the Archangel of Wisdom stares emptily into the fire.

"Hmph..." Raphael grunts. "To think that Jepthath had possessed Hercules' power for so long... I never knew."

"There were a great many things you didn't comprehend during your lifetime," Solomon says. His words, while biting, do not come off excessively harsh. Instead, his tone is that of a father gently reprimanding his child for making several minor mistakes. "Camael's visions, the turbulent emotions swirling inside the first demons, the existence of Leviathan... your lack of foresight caused much heartache, old friend."

"Do not refer to me as a friend," Raphael growls. "What am I to do now? The Wordsmith knows everything. I harbored our secret without leaking it for ten eternities, yet casually, thou blabbed it in a single afternoon. If it weren't for thee..."

I raise an eyebrow. "Which secret are you talking about, Raphael? Was it the one where you created the demons? Or maybe the fact the dragons weren't as evil as you claimed? Of course, it's probably the one where you were a soul manipulator all this time, along with all of your fellow Archangels as well! Your hypocrisy knows no limits."

Raphael's expression sinks deeper into the depths of despair. He avoids my gaze and instead tries to suppress a look of shame. "What woulds't thou have done in my position, young one? 'Tis a simple matter to gaze upon the past and find solutions to problems via hindsight. 'Tis an entirely different issue when living during said time. Camael could see into the future, but even she did not have all of the answers."

Raphael raises his eyes to stare at Solomon. "Again, I ask, why dids't thou choose to show the Wordsmith our deepest secrets? What point is there in learning the Archangels were once soul manipulators?"

"The mistakes of others are a great teaching aid if one has an open mind," Solomon replies. "Further, knowing the extent of your mistakes will assist him in avoiding them during the future. Walking a path of lies will only cause embarrassing, deadly missteps in his quest to eradicate demonkind. If others don't believe his words, then-"

"Hold on," I say, interrupting Solomon. "Where do you get the idea that I'm going to eradicate demonkind? I never agreed to that."

Solomon pauses for a moment. He turns to look at me with a grave expression. "Every Hero must wipe out the demonic threat. That is our duty; our purpose."

"Who decided that? Not me."

"Jepthath was the first Hero," Solomon murmurs. "He was the first human to gain the gift of speech. He put our species on a path to greatness. Were it not for him, we would have perished to the demons shortly after the War in Heaven."

I cross my arms. "Yeah? So what? Just because he saved our species doesn't mean he was right about everything. George Washington was a great man, too, but he owned slaves. Nobody is perfect. I am my own person, so I don't need to follow the ideals of a man who died well over 100,000 years ago, especially when the state of humankind was very different then compared to now. Not unless you have a more persuasive argument."

After a breath's time, I raise an eyebrow. "Besides. What was the point of showing me thousands of years of demon and angel history, if not to give me a more balanced perspective? Didn't you want me to feel more empathetic towards the demons? Isn't that why you humanized Satan and revealed his struggle against the angels?"

Solomon's face turns several shades paler. He glances at Raphael, then back at me. "Erm, ah, not quite... I intended to show you the danger the demons pose. After witnessing the might of the Archdemon, how could you not see what a threat they are?"

"I get that they're a threat, Solomon. What I don't understand is why you would show me Raphael's failures and the demon's struggles, if not for the sake of equalizing my perspective. What were you thinking?"

Solomon swallows his saliva. "I... I thought... if I showed you how powerful Raphael and the Archangels were, and the control he wielded, you would understand what a meteoric rise the demons sustained. Even with the help of the dragon, their powers exploded into the stratosphere."

This time, it's Raphael who frowns. "Solomon! Neither this lad nor I was born yesterday! How could such a bald-faced lie sway anyone here? Admit it. Thou beareth a grudge against the angels. Revealing our secrets was thy method for rubbing salt in my wounds!"

Solomon winces. He turns to glare at Raphael. "Fine. I may have had a slightly self-serving motivation. You deserved to die, Raphael, along with all of the other angels. Your people were vile, disgusting monsters; worse than the demons on many fronts! Are you happy now? Is that what you wanted to hear?"

The Knowledge-Seeker shakes his fist at Raphael. "If you hadn't created the godforsaken demons and treated them like manure, the universe might have ended up a far safer place! Instead, you kicked them around and beat them like dogs, only to become shocked when they rebelled, just like the dragons and Titans! You never learn! You always repeat the same mistakes!"

Raphael leans back in surprise as Solomon berates him. Even I can't help but be awed by Solomon's anger. His words sound impersonal, spoken as if they are a grudge on behalf of the entire human species. However, his emotions are far more biting, coming from a place of personal pain.

The Archangel of Wisdom's expression darkens. "The demons slew thy wife and family. Dost thou blameth me for their deaths?"

Instantly, rage boils in Solomon's eyes. He jumps to his feet and stabs a finger through the air to point at Raphael. "That's right! I do! If the demons didn't exist, Naamah might still be alive today! I nearly had it, Raphael! I had almost concocted the elixir of immortality! It took me ages, decades of intense research, and I nearly held the flask in my grasp! But because of your failures, your lack of foresight, your lack of intelligence, she perished!! What have you to say in your defense?!"

Not in all the years I've known him have I ever seen Solomon like this. I once asked him about his family, but the look on his face told me everything I needed to know.

He lost someone important to him — Someone who mattered more than life itself.

If anyone but Solomon were to claim they had concocted an Elixir of Immortality, I'd laugh in their faces. Who is Solomon, but the Knowledge-Seeker? His crown contains information about tens of thousands of fantastical machines, devices, and futuristic weapons unlike any I've ever seen.

But why didn't he finish it?

Simple. After his wife's death, what purpose would living forever mean to him? Why would he want to exist in perpetuity without her?

Solomon bites his lip. "What can you say in your defense, Raphael? Nothing. After all, you tricked me! You tricked me!! I gave up on the elixir, thinking that I could once again see Naamah in the afterlife. Instead, I ended up trapped in this godforsaken crown! I couldn't even walk the physical world to enjoy the company of my children and grandchildren! I lost everything, and it was all because of YOU!"

Solomon's extended finger trembles. Tears boil in his eyes, and he finally turns around, unable to look at Raphael.

The Archangel of Wisdom stares stoically at the Knowledge-Seeker. His expression contains a wide variety of mixed emotions and feelings. He opens his mouth to say something, only to close it a moment later.

What can he say? What can he do to alleviate Solomon's anguish?

* * *

To my surprise, Gabriel is the next to speak. The Archangel of Power sighs as he lowers his palms from his chin. "Haah... how unfortunate that Solomon was not born in the era after Michael's sacrifice. If only we hadn't needed thousands of years to complete the Lazarus Tower, we might have saved Naamah's life."

My ears perk up. "Hm? The Lazarus Tower? What's that?"

Solomon wipes his eyes. He paces away from me and stares off into the forest. "Another of Raphael's failed experiments."

"Nay," Raphael murmurs. "'Twas no failure. It had the potential to tip the scales in our favor. Alas, for it eventually led to the demon's greatest increase in power. My greed was always at the heart of our downfall. Thou art correct, Solomon. I am a poor leader and a failure of an Archangel."

Solomon turns around again. This time, his eyes appear red and swollen. Having cried only a few tears, I'm almost surprised at the look of agony etched into his gaze.

"Spare me your self-pity. Give me answers. What in the Creator's name possessed you to repeat the same mistakes over and over? Why create demons, only to treat them in the same way as the dragons and Titans?! How could you not have seen the disaster which would occur?"

"I am not omniscient," Raphael replies. "In the beginning, I knew that my people required a vast amount of spiritual energy to sustain their lives. The best option in my hands was to use Uzziel to create much weaker, but far more plentiful, lower life-forms. They would regenerate small amounts of mana over time and then give it to us. Everything had a far more positive appearance in my eyes following the memory-wipes. However, I did not foresee how my people would treat the demons, and thus, I did not comprehend the anger the demons would feel."

Raphael continues. "I treated the demons neutrally. To me, they were little more than a source of mana for my people. I did not molest them, kick them, or treat them like dirt. However, my brothers and sisters did. I had no way of stopping millions of abusive cases every day and thus overlooked them. I had too much on my mind to worry about what I believed were abuses of insignificant life-forms. After all, compared to the power of the dragons and Titans, the demons never seemed like they would become a threat."

"But they did," I counter. "You underestimated the demons, and you paid the price. What was eating up so much of your time that you couldn't tell your people to treat the demons decently? It seems like you mostly had things made in Heaven. Plenty of food, lots of sunlight..."

Raphael clears his throat. "Rehabilitation, Jason. Rehabilitation is what sucked away my time. I could not change Michael's personality while also placing my focus on Uzziel. Splitting my attention between both of them would have halved my efforts. Instead, I focused on Uzziel exclusively to prevent her from reverting to her... former ways."

The Archangel's expression turns stormy. "I wish I could have brought such a sense of peace to Michael, as well."

The old man's words light a fire in my imagination. I take a moment to reflect on how Michael's personality pre-wipe and post-wipe were virtually identical, while Uzziel's flipped to the opposite extreme. How much time and effort did Raphael spend turning her from a hardened killer into a soft butterfly?

What if he had done the same for the other angels? Could he have managed such a feat?

Solomon punches his palm. "You were the leader of angelkind! No matter what excuses you give me, I won't forgive you. I've suffered for millennia inside this crown. Unable to kill myself, I finally emerged at the end of the Energy Wars to move as many artifacts into the Labyrinth as possible. Do you know the joy I felt when I felt my soul begin to fade? Had I known that exiting my prison would have brought about my end, I would have done so thousands of years earlier!"

Solomon continues. "But, in the end, my so-called death was merely a mirage. I awoke to find myself still trapped in this crown! Not only that, but the demons had gone on to thrive and spread across much of the galaxy! My second most hated enemies, the ones who slew my wives and children... they roam freely while I live in confinement! The very Devils themselves who wantonly slaughtered my family continue to walk the physical plane, and there is little I can do about it."

Solomon turns to look at me, and a sinking realization sets in my gut.

"I cannot exact my revenge," Solomon says, "but you can! Not only can you kill the demons, but you can set me free! I will continue to give you my knowledge, Jason. All you must do is use your Wordsmithing against our shared enemies. Then, once you finish, you can free me from my eternal torment. Kill me and allow my soul to enter the Great Beyond. That is all I want. That is my only desire."

The Knowledge-Seeker falls silent. His intent gaze meets mine, causing a wellspring of emotions to bubble up inside me.

I understand, now. Why has Solomon always been willing to help me? Was it because he was a kind, benevolent man? Was it because of some duty to humanity or a sense of righteousness? Perhaps it was a paternal instinct that guided him to teach a young Hero and show him the ropes?

No.

Solomon is using me.

Sure, his methods don't harm me directly or indirectly. However, what difference does it make?

Solomon's goal is genocide.

Solomon wants me to kill off the entirety of demonkind.

Every last one of them.

But... has he ever asked me what I wanted? Does he even know?

Of course he has, and he does.

Solomon has read my thoughts and lived in my head for years. I have demon friends now. Not many, but a few. One of those friends is Belial, who is an even greater friend to Phoebe than she is to me. I know from what she's told me that she has strong romantic feelings for Phoebe.

What does Solomon want?

He wants Belial dead.

How could I kill her? She is a kind and caring person. Her physical power is nothing compared to her magical healing ability. She is a soft-hearted demoness who wishes to see an end to war and suffering.

I agree with her beliefs. After watching the demons struggle against their angelic oppressors, I, too, understand their origins.

Of course, I am not naive.

Most demons are horrible monsters. They rape and kill humans wantonly, and their cruelty to their kind can occasionally exceed the evil they unleash upon mine.

In that sense, I empathize with Solomon. I don't want demons to kill the people I love. I also don't want to kill demons if it isn't strictly necessary.

Diplomacy. Peace talks. Treaties.

Humans fought and killed each other for thousands and thousands of years. When the world came under the threat of nuclear conflict, eventually, our self-preservation set in. We came up with a system of nuclear deterrence to put an end to the possibility of atomic warfare.

The demons are many things, but they are not brainless. When faced with the choice between extinction and survival, even they should choose the path that will cost them the fewest lives.

But... no!

No!

I won't use that path. Violence begets violence!

As a Wordsmith, perhaps I could create a machine of unimaginable power, something that would threaten the Labyrinth in its entirety. This weapon could possess the military might to destroy planets.

But even if the demons backed down, wouldn't they continue to gaze upon humanity with hate-filled eyes?

Of course!

What use is there in sustaining such a tenuous peace? Why would I want trillions of potential enemies to lie in wait and plot my demise, as well as the rest of humanity?

The answer is, I wouldn't.

Solomon wants to use me. I sympathize with him, but I need not obey.

* * *

Even as the thoughts pass through my mind, Solomon's smile slips away.

"Jason. Don't be unreasonable. Think through my words carefully. Search for the wellspring of wisdom within yourself. The demons slaughtered and captured humanity. I know you want to believe that peace with them is possible, but think about what will happen if you ever tried to use human means of enforcing peace. Do you think you can reason with the demons?"

"I do, and I have," I reply. "I've already convinced a few to join my cause. Guns and swords can only force the flesh to obey, but words can move the heart."

"Yes, you're right," Solomon says, "but you're ignoring the issue of time. How many demons can you convert to your side in a day? One? Ten? A hundred? Do you think that a simple loudspeaker announcement will stir the sympathy in their chests? The demons are beasts, Jason! Animals!"

Solomon's eyes once again ignite with fiery rage.

"They kill for sport! They treat human slaves like garbage! Even if you somehow convinced one hundred percent of all demons to join your side, eventually, their cruel, baser instincts would take over. The demons live for blood and glory. They baked those desires into their genes!"

"I know," I say, keeping my voice neutral. "Demons kill, murder, and ravage humans indiscriminately. However... Paimon set aside his evil ways after I showed him a better path. What use is there in being a Hero if not for me to summon the power of righteousness? Perhaps my thinking seems naive, but I do not believe demons and humans are all that different. You once told me demons influenced the Mayans, and thus, they grew to love the taste of flesh and blood. Perhaps that was the case! Even so, that only shows how much in common we share and how much we can influence one another!"

"Nonsense!" Solomon barks. "Have you learned nothing from my visions?! The demons will stop at nothing to secure a victory! Satan sacrificed hundreds of thousands of demons in a last-ditch effort to defeat the Archdemon and wipe out angelkind! Why can't you see the light, Jason?!"

"I can see the light!!"

I leap to my feet and stand my ground against Solomon's fury. With only half a foot separating us, I shout in his face. "You are the blind one! Your family's deaths have clouded your judgment for so long that the only path you'll consider is the path of blood! But what if there's another way, Solomon?! If I try to kill the demons and succeed, I will lose a chance at making them my allies! But if I try to befriend them and seek common ground, I will always have the choice of seeking violence! Once someone dies, there's no going back! Once I decide to start killing, I'll be no better than them! I'll be just as bad as the demons are now!"

"That's the point!" Solomon howls. "The demons have murdered and slaughtered and gutted humans for so long that their only way to move forward is to seek out our destruction! How can you worry about turning into an irredeemable bloodthirsty monster when your enemies have already beaten you to the goal?!"

My teeth grind together. "Because I know myself, Solomon! I know who I am! If I, personally, choose to start killing, I don't see how I'll ever stop!"

Solomon and I stand mere inches from each other. If we weren't in his fake dream realm, I might be able to smell his breath.

His gaze softens ever so slightly.

"What are you implying, Jason?"

"I'm not implying anything. I'm saying that if I choose to start killing, my logical nature will take over. I believe in the slippery slope. Why should I discriminate between right and wrong? If I'm going to kill all demons, then I'll have to do it equally. And what about humans with a demonic nature? Why not kill them too? Why not kill human murderers and cannibals? What about people who intend to harm others, but don't follow through? What about people who make threats? Where does the killing end, Solomon?"

I hold up my palm.

"This discussion is over. I'm not going to commit genocide, not unless I have no choice. It's not in my nature, and I wouldn't be able to live with myself if I did. Further, I'm not even sure I can kill them all. Maybe my Wordsmithing is powerful enough, or perhaps I'll end up dead at some point, and the rest of humanity will be rightly fucked!"

Solomon hesitates.

His eyes shift slightly. He turns to look at Raphael, but the old man says nothing. Instead, the Archangel of Wisdom gazes into the fire and sucks on his pipe, exhaling smoke through his nose without commenting on our dispute.

Solomon turns to me.

"After all the history I've shown you, and after everything we've been through, you choose to reject me?"

"Yes. I will. Not because I hate you, but because I cannot bring myself to commit an act of evil that I know in my heart is wrong."

Solomon frowns.

"Tch. I was wrong about you."

I raise an eyebrow. "Excuse me?"

"You're not the Hero I thought you were," Solomon continues. "You're weak. All you want is to skip around, pick daisies, and pretend everyone can simply get along. Well, I have news for you, Jason. They can't. The demons are incompatible with humans. They're uncivilized monsters who seek out death and destruction. If we don't kill them, they'll kill us first."

"Yeah?" I counter. "And who are you, but a man who wishes to trade an eye for an eye? If you want to meet the demons on their terms, then that makes you no better than them."

Solomon raises his hand to his chin. He strokes his white beard for a moment and sighs.

"At least I am a realist. You are still a child — a naive young boy whose mind is clouded with fantasies and delusions of grandeur. I'll tell you this; Jason. Someday, the demons will take someone, or something, from you. When they do... you will understand. You will comprehend my words."

Solomon's expression darkens.

"But, sadly, it will be too late. You will have lost that which you cared about most. You will be the same as me."

I nod.

"Maybe that will happen, and maybe it won't. I never said I wouldn't fight to protect those I love. I simply won't seek out death and destruction for the sake of old grievances."

"Legitimate 'old grievances,'" Solomon murmurs. "In the end, you are too young to understand your folly."

"And you are too old a dog to learn a new trick," I remark.

The air between us frosts over. Solomon takes a step back, while I echo his movements.

Both of us stare at one another for several long, agonizing seconds.

This is it. After everything Solomon has shown me, I cannot agree with him and walk the path of violence.

I am a Wordsmith. I will step forth into a future that I can be proud of, or I will die trying.

Solomon waves his hand. "I'm sorry, Raphael, but it seems our discussion is over. Even if I hate you, I must admit it was good to see you again. At least you were willing to do anything to save the lives of the angels."

I scowl at Solomon. "Now you're praising him? After first insulting Raphael and saying he was a fool who repeated the mistakes of the past? You're a real piece of work, Solomon. You and Raphael are birds of the same feather. I'll change the future, whether you like it or not."

Solomon smiles. "Aye. You may do as you please. However, we must go our separate ways, Jason Hiro. I wish you the best, but when you fail, don't come crawling back to me for help."

"Don't underestimate me, Solomon. I'll succeed where others have failed."

"You will try."

Solomon waves his hand. A thick veil of darkness falls from the sky and sweeps over the campfire. I glance around at the Archangels as they begin to fade away. Raphael doesn't meet my gaze, but Gabriel waves politely.

"Farewell, Jason."

"Farewell, Gabriel."

I wave back at him a moment before he disappears. Solomon dissolves into nothingness, leaving me to fall through an empty void.

* * *

A minute passes. Two minutes. Five.

I raise an eyebrow as my eternal falling begins to drag.

"Hello? Solomon?"

...No response.

Several minutes pass again. My concern increases as I continue to lay trapped inside a void of blackness.

"Awaken! Wakey! Open! Appear!"

I yell into the void, but nothing happens. My Wordsmithing doesn't work in my dreams.

Right as my concern reaches its apex, the blackness dissolves away, and my eyes bolt open.

I'm awake!

I jerk up in surprise and nearly bang my head on a metal toolbox. It takes me a second to regain my bearings. I sit up and sigh as the familiar surroundings of my spaceship, Esther, surround me.

Everything is exactly as I remember it.

Daisy lies motionless on the bed beside me. Her chest rises and falls as she naps peacefully, dreaming of horses and unicorns and whatever other cute things little kids like to imagine in their dreams.

But, unlike her, my thoughts tumble and twist uncontrollably. Memories from thousands of years of demon and angel warfare appear in my mind unbidden.

Solomon showed me the Ancient Era not to educate me, but to influence my actions. He intended to shift my values toward killing demons. However, my mental fortitude was stronger than he expected, and thus, he failed.

I feel bad for Solomon. He's lived far longer than other humans, and his longevity has only extended his mental agony. What could be worse than living a tortured existence for 100,000 years, suffering under the weight of everything I've lost, while also remembering the faces of people long-dead?

Nothing.

"Solomon," I murmur, keeping my voice low so that I don't wake up Daisy, "let's talk for a minute. I know we have our differences, but they shouldn't mean we can't be friends anymore. We're on the same side; the same team. We're both humans fighting for humanity's sake. Don't you agree?"

...Silence.

Solomon doesn't reply. His astral figure doesn't appear beside me, nor is there the faintest whisper to reveal his presence.

I frown. "Come on, man. Don't give me the silent treatment. You're better than that."

Absentmindedly, I fiddle with the three Archangel rings while I wait for Solomon's response.

Still, he says nothing.

"Hello? Are you still alive in there?"

I reach up to tap my finger on the crown, hoping it will jar him awake.

However, a moment later, my blood turns to ice.

There's nothing on my head.

Solomon's Crown is gone.

Part 173: Hope's Crowning Achievement

Raindrops lightly sprinkle against the top of a Victorian-style mansion — their pitter-pattering echoes through the tin roof, into the attic, and throughout the interior. The darkness of night imposes on the manor, daring its residents to step outside, where countless wild animals lurk in the distance, waiting for their prey to exit.

However, thanks to the state-of-the-art automated defenses mounted atop the building and around its walls at regular intervals, the hungry beasts of Maiura keep their distance, unwilling to risk their lives for the tasty morsels contained within.

Inside the spacious dwelling, two residents press their nude bodies together. They snore soundly, having long since fallen into a deep sleep after a raucous night of passionate lovemaking.

Hope, the owner of the villa, lays on his back. His nostrils flare open and shut, but it is not he who snores audibly. Instead, it is the beautiful, dark-haired woman lying atop his right flank — her face presses against the gap between his shoulder and neck. Every ten seconds, she inhales audibly, snoring loud enough to wake the dead.

Hope doesn't hear a thing. Thanks to several years of living together, he has long since grown used to her night-time noises. Instead, his eyes dance about under his eyelids, jumping to and fro as he dreams of this and that.

"Grrn..."

Hope grunts softly. His brows tighten into a knot. Suddenly, his eyes bolt open.

The Wordsmith doesn't move a muscle. Instead, he stares into the pitch-black darkness of his bedroom, forcing his eyes to adjust.

A drop of sweat slides down Hope's forehead.

What... what the hell was that?

Hope says nothing. He listens to the woman snoring beside him for several seconds, but the unease in his heart doesn't dissipate.

Someone was watching me, just now. I felt their gaze.

In the back of Hope's mind, a mechanical voice whirs to life.

SLEEP MODE DISENGAGED. WARNING! PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR'S MENTAL STATE COMPROMISED. SYMPTOMS OF ANXIETY PRESENT.

Hope frowns. Centurion, run a sweep of the premises. Is there anyone nearby?

Two seconds pass before Centurion replies.

NEGATIVE. NO INTRUDERS DETECTED ON THE MANOR'S GROUNDS.

Hope's frown deepens. "Detect," he whispers.

The Wordsmith's senses expand like a bubble, allowing him to investigate the manor's premises without lifting a finger. Within seconds, his mind's eye travels above the mansion and flicks in every direction to look for intruders. The bloodthirsty beasts of Maiura lurk outside his estate's walls, but he ignores their heat signatures to search for different prey.

There isn't anybody here but Amelia and I. Impossible. I know somebody was watching me. Who was it?!

Hope's spirit returns to his body. The darkness of night swallows him once again, and he shivers slightly.

HEARTBEAT IRREGULAR. STABILIZING NEUROLOGICAL PATHWAYS NOW.

Centurion's nanites react to Hope's agitated mental state. Within seconds, the dopamine in his brain drops by seventy percent, restraining his physical reaction to a fraction of its original intensity.

Hope stares at the ceiling silently. His nanite-enhanced eyes pierce the darkness as easily as if he were standing in daylight, yet his sense of unease doesn't disappear.

Centurion, turn on the lights and set them to 10%.

COMMAND ACCEPTED.

Hope's worries finally disappear as a soft, yellow glow pushes the darkness away. He sighs as the faint light from the overhead bulbs reveals no enemies lurking at the corners of the room.

"Damn..." Hope mutters. "I'm getting too jumpy, these days."

His words barely squeak through his lips. However, the slight glow in the room causes the woman sleeping on his right arm to stir.

"Nnn... hmm?"

The black-haired beauty grunts for a moment before raising her head to blink her bleary eyes.

"Uhn... Jason? What's going on...?"

Hope sighs. "Sorry, Amelia. I didn't mean to wake you."

"No, no... it's fine."

Amelia's hair spills over her eyes, forcing her to lift her hand to brush it aside.

"What's wrong?" Amelia asks. "You don't usually wake up in the middle of the night."

Hope smiles as he meets his lover's gaze. "Oh, it's nothing. I just had this weird feeling someone was watching me. Someone other than you, I mean."

"Oh? A creeper in the dark? I'm scared. Hold me tighter."

Amelia echoes Hope's smile. She pulls herself toward his face, and their lips meet. Both of them fall silent as they embrace each other for a moment or two.

Eventually, Amelia pulls away and licks her lips. "Mmm. That's a nice way to wake up. You should come home more often."

Hope's smile falters. "Ah. Yeah, I should. It's just... Neil always has me going on missions, and then there's all the political stuff I have to deal with..."

Amelia lays down again and rests one arm across Hope's bare chest. She snuggles a little closer and shivers as the cold of the night presses upon them. "I get lonely without you here. I don't have anyone to talk to, and I'm always bored."

Hope winces. "I'm sorry. That isn't fair to you."

"Well, you're the leader of humanity. I'll deal with it."

Hope's smile vanishes, and a frown takes its place. He uses his free arm to lift Amelia's chin so they can look into each other's eyes. "Don't say stuff like that. I don't want you to be lonely, sweetheart. As soon as the situation changes, I'll... I'll take you out there and introduce you to everyone. You won't have to stay in hiding anymore."

Amelia's fiery red irises meet Hope's opposing blue. The two lovers stare at each other for a moment before she pulls away and averts her gaze.

"You always say that. It's been years, Jason. You don't have to lie to me."

"What? I'm not lying. Amelia! Come on..."

Hope tries to reassure the woman in his arms, but she ignores his words.

"I'm a monster. Humanity will never accept me. Not after... not after what I did."

"That wasn't you," Hope says, his voice tinged with anger. "That was Blaarjiim. He isn't around anymore. He can't influence your mind."

Amelia immediately retorts. "Yeah, well, I miss him. He was my good friend."

Hope thinks of a counter, then immediately rejects it. Instead, the Wordsmith falls silent for a few moments.

"Well. Good friend or not, he's gone, now. Not even I can bring him back."

Amelia replies, her voice barely a whisper.

"You resurrected me."

"That was different. You're human. Blaarjiim was a weird... orb thing."

Hope and Amelia fall silent once again. However, after a few moments, Amelia pulls away and sits up in bed.

The distance between the two lovers only increases by a couple of feet, but to Hope, it becomes an immense gulf.

"I know you didn't like Blaarjiim," Amelia says, "but when I lost my best friend of ten thousand years, only Blaarjiim was there for me. His ways were wicked, but still, he helped heal the wound on my heart."

With the weight of Amelia lifted off his arm, Hope takes a moment to flex and squeeze, eventually returning sensation to his nerves. "I'm not disparaging your relationship with Blaarjiim. All I'm saying is that he took you to a dark place, mentally. You can't blame yourself for what you did, all while ignoring his influence."

Amelia nods. "I know."

She sits in silence for a minute, staring ahead into the barely-illuminated darkness. Hope reaches his hand out and strokes her back.

"Hey..." Hope begins. "I, uh, I was thinking of making this vacation a two-weeker. If you want, we could go somewhere, just the two of us. Maybe a trip to the mountains? A visit to the lake?"

Amelia turns her head to look at Hope from the corner of her eye. "Really? I thought you were busy. I can't keep you away from work."

Hope waves away Amelia's concerns. "Nah, nah. It's fine. You mean the world to me. I can't just leave my girl here all by herself. Hell, I was even thinking we could... could..."

Hope tries to finish his sentence, but a lump forms in his throat, preventing the words from getting out.

"W-we could... well, just the two of us... and maybe Neil... we could find a way to, uh..."

Amelia raises an eyebrow. "Uh-huh? We could... what?"

Sweat drips down Hope's face. As he stares at the woman he loves, a strange mixture of emotions enters his mind.

Guilt. Fear. Disgust.

He lowers his eyes and instead opts to stare at his stomach.

"Haah... nevermind. I'm getting ahead of myself, like usual."

Amelia rolls her eyes. "O-kay. There you go with that weird, mopey attitude, again."

Hope doesn't retort. Instead, his thoughts become a jumbled mess.

I can't ask her to marry me. Why would I ever think of such a thing? I'm not like Jason. He's a good cop, while I'm the bad cop. I've done too many terrible things to deserve the gift of marriage.

Amelia searches Hope's face for answers, but he doesn't meet her gaze. The two lovers fall into a strange, uncomfortable silence for a few moments, before she eventually shrugs and climbs off the bed.

"Well, since we're awake, I might as well make breakfast. Want some bacon and eggs?"

Hope smiles. "I can Wordsmith some food. Come on; it's cold. Just get back in bed."

"Homecooked food tastes better," Amelia replies. She pulls on a pair of sweatpants and a sweater. "How about you come out here and help me make a few omelets?"

Hope's smile fades. "Yeah, alright. That sounds like fun. At least you have your sense of taste back. That's another plus, right?"

Amelia rests her hands on her hips. She smacks her lips, and a sardonic expression covers her face. "Oh, I don't know. Human flesh ain't all that bad. You should try it sometime."

"Eugh. Forget I said anything."

Hope swings his legs out of bed. As he stands, he speaks to the air.

"Clothes."

Fwoop!

Instantly, a matching tracksuit filled with warm fibers and cushy padding materializes over his body to protect him from the cold.

"Hmm. I could warm it up in here," Hope remarks. "Then we can walk around naked."

"I don't want to splash bacon grease on my bare skin," Amelia says with a playful smile. "Though, the nudity does sound tantalizing."

"You're a dirty girl."

Hope walks around the side of the bed. As he nears Amelia, he reaches out and wraps his arms around her.

Both of them settle into a moment of silence as they hug each other, each one thinking of how much they love the other.

Soon, Hope thinks to himself. Soon, I'll have to pop the question. I can't keep going on like we are now. Amelia... she deserves better from me.

As Hope's thoughts spin in his head, a strange sensation swallows his mind.

The hairs stand up on his neck.

Suddenly...

Foomp!

A sound like air rushing into a vacuum echoes throughout the room. Hope's eyes laser toward the bed.

"What the-?!"

His pupils shrink as he stares in disbelief at an object falling out of midair.

Plop.

Amelia turns her head to follow Hope's gaze. Her jaw drops as she, too, spots the plain golden circlet lying on the bed.

"What? Is that... Solomon's Crown?!"

Hope's face turns white as a bedsheet. He quickly pulls Amelia behind himself and stares at the divine artifact with a mixture of terror and dread.

Solomon's Crown lies motionless on the comforter. It produces no magical energy, yet all Hope can do is stare, transfixed, at the object Jason has never let out of his sight once in the last several years.

Jason knows, Hope thinks to himself. His heart races as several realizations come rushing to him all at once. He knows about Amelia. He knows everything! This must be a sign! He's taunting me — telling me that he'll expose everything! What do I do?! Solomon is watching me, right now, scanning my every move! How can I get out of this? I can't just erase Jason's memories! I'd have to keep doing it over and over again! Oh god, what can I possibly-

"Jason?" Amelia says, startling Hope. She steps out from behind Hope and stares at him with a quizzical expression. "What's the matter? Aren't you happy? You lost the Crown during the battle against the Archdemon, and now, here it is! Aren't you going to put it on?"

Hope's heartbeat intensifies.

Amelia doesn't know about Solomon. She only knows what I told her. I can't let her know about Jason, or my real identity. Damn! The fucking bastard has me against the ropes. How much does Jason know?!

Hundreds of conflicting thoughts collide with one another in Hope's mind, but he quickly forces a nod and a smile.

"Y-yeah. You're right. It's just... this feels a little convenient. I, uh... it could be a demon trap!"

Amelia's confusion disappears. After a moment, her eyes brighten. "Ohh, so that's why you look so shocked. True, it might be a trap. Still, you can use your Wordsmithing, right? Check the Crown for anomalies."

Hope nods quickly; perhaps a little too quickly. He stumbles toward the bed and reaches out to touch the Crown. Already, he can practically hear Solomon's cackling laughter in his ears.

We've got you right where we want you, Hope. Stupid little clone. You brought back the dead! You brought back the Black Queen! Don't think we'll let you off easy!

His hands tremble as he finally touches the plain, unadorned golden circlet.

"I-inspect."

More for Amelia's sake than his own, Hope performs a perfunctory analysis of the Crown's magical energy. It comes back negative, as expected.

"...No traps here," Hope whispers. He forces a smile, but Amelia merely cocks her eyebrows.

"Well? Is it the real deal, or what?"

Hope swallows. A deep sense of shame overcomes him as he lifts the artifact to the top of his head.

"...Only one way to find out."

Two seconds later, the world slows to a halt. Amelia freezes in place, her eyebrow permanently raised in a quizzical expression.

Agonizing pain engulfs Hope's mind as the power of Solomon's Crown floods his neuroreceptors with information. However, unlike the last time Hope wore the Crown, when he was still Jason, the agony wears off almost instantly. Centurion mobilizes the nanites inside the Wordsmith's body to suppress Solomon's Magical energy, and within moments, Hope manages to open his eyes again.

Standing before him is the faint apparition of a familiar figure; one Hope has spoken to and met on only a few occasions, when Jason Wordsmithed his spiritual body into existence.

Solomon.

The ancient king stands before Hope with both of his hands clasped behind his back. He smiles, but the expression gives Hope a distinct sense of unease.

"Hello, Hope. It's been a while."

"Solomon."

Hope growls out the ancient king's name. He flicks his eyes to Amelia, only to frown as he spots her immobilized form standing in the same position as before he wore the Crown.

"Don't worry about your... friend," Solomon says, placing extra emphasis on the last word. "I've temporarily suspended your perception of time. We're currently using the full power of my Crown's mind-space. I'd like to speak to you about several important matters, so I won't allow any interruptions."

Hope flicks his gaze away from Amelia. "What the hell do you want, Solomon? What does Jason want? Are you here to punish me? To threaten me?!"

His tone turns menacing, but Solomon ignores it. The ancient king frowns as a look of concern passes over his face.

"Ah, no. You misunderstand the reason I've come. Since I now have access to all of your memories, I'm quite aware of everything you've been doing, of late. I'm not here about any of that, though I do find the details of your exploits over the past few years to be quite fascinating."

Hope narrows his eyes. "I... I don't follow. What are you saying?"

"Mmm... how to put this? Let's just say that Jason and I... have... parted ways."

"You two stopped working together?"

"Yes."

Solomon purses his lips. A strange look of annoyance mixes with agitation.

"I've spent six years bonding with Jason. We've grown quite close, and at one point, I thought I knew his personality like the back of my hand. After all, being able to comb through his memories let me see his public and private life in exquisite detail. Unfortunately, it ended up that, in the end, he and I weren't a good match for each other."

Hope knots his eyebrows together in frustration. He sits on the bed quietly, flashes a look at Amelia's immobilized form, then returns his gaze to Solomon. "So... you've come to me? Why?"

Solomon smiles. "That's right. I came because while you might resemble Jason, the evidence I've gathered observing you over the past several years made me realize you are a far better Hero than him. I love your ambition, your drive, and, most importantly... your goals."

Hope nods. "Okay. Spit it out. What do you want, then? If you're done with Jason, and if you're considering working for me-"

"With you," Solomon says, a slight hint of annoyance in his voice. "I am nobody's slave. My Crown is my home, and I won't allow someone to use it for the wrong purpose."

Hope nods, but his concern deepens. "Right. If you intend to work with me, then what can I offer you that Jason can't?"

Solomon doesn't answer. Instead, he turns his gaze to Amelia and strides over to her side. After a moment of scrutinizing her face, he touches her chin. His aetherial hand passes through, but the gesture has a symbolic feeling to it. "You've been busy over the last few years, haven't you?"

Slowly, Hope pulls away from the bed and rises to his feet. "Don't touch her."

"I wasn't alive when Jason met Amelia," Solomon says, ignoring the anger in Hope's voice. "But I know he possessed strong feelings for her. It seems you inherited those emotions. I must say, I'm impressed. If I had the power to bring back the dead, my life might have taken a very different turn."

"I told you to stay away," Hope says, repeating his previous words. "If you think of hurting Amelia... I won't forgive you. I'll melt your Crown to slag."

Solomon turns around and smiles at Hope with a hint of condescension. "Oh, please. Don't threaten me with a good time. I might just take you up on that offer."

Before Hope can reply, Solomon waves his hand flippantly and brushes aside the Wordsmith's concerns. "I don't care about what you've done, here. You can have your woman and your fun all you like. I'm a little disappointed in the means you used to bring her back, but ah, well, if you can't have Phoebe..."

Solomon shrugs.

"...Well, better to bring back your first love, right? Of course, you do still have some feelings for Jason's wife, don't you? How did you reconcile those with your love for Amelia?"

Hope scowls. "Goddamn it, Solomon! What the fuck do you want?! Stop pissing me off!"

"Alright, alright," Solomon says, raising both palms. "I think I've touched a nerve. No need to unleash the beast against me. How about I speak more plainly? Would you prefer that?"

Hope snorts hot air. "Yes. I would."

"Good, good! How should I say this? I love your... ethical greyness. Unlike Jason, you don't have that silly moral code guiding you. You do what you think is right, even if you know people won't look kindly upon you in the end. Is that a fair description of your character?"

The Wordsmith bristles. "Maybe a little. What I love about you is your inability to string two sentences together without sounding like an asshole."

"Hah! It's a talent!" Solomon laughs. "Well, my boy, you and I are birds of a feather. Jason tries to appease the demons while rebuilding humanity, but you've been getting down and dirty in the trenches. Look at all the blood on your hands. Going by your memories, it seems you've killed... ten thousand demons? I'm rounding down, of course."

"Of course," Hope echoes. "Demons are our enemies. Jason can spew whatever crap he wants about making peace with them, but I've seen what they can do. They're animals. Monsters. They rape, kill, pillage, and plunder without mercy. We're nothing but soul Slurpees to them. I won't make peace with monsters who eat human flesh for fun."

Solomon's smile fades. In its place, a dark haze appears. "Hmph. Well said. If only Jason had a hundredth of your insight, we might have started crushing the demons nonstop. I've seen the power Wordsmithing can unleash. He's too afraid to use it."

"That's right!" Hope yells, a sudden flash of anger erupting in his eyes. "He's a limp-wristed little wuss! He has everything handed to him on a silver platter! He doesn't know a goddamn thing about what it means to lose someone!"

Solomon nods. His expression turns melancholic as he evaluates Hope. "You feel hatred toward Jason. Why don't you just kill him? Using your Wordsmithing, you could easily take over his position as the leader of humanity."

Immediately, Hope shakes his head. "No. Don't even say shit like that. I kill demons and monsters, not humans. There's only one person who kills humans, and that's Jason. I'm better than him."

Solomon frowns. "Hm? Since when did Jason ever kill a human?"

"You don't know?" Hope asks, a smirk materializing on his face. "Thousands die every day as a result of his inaction. Amelia perished because he couldn't take the proper steps to save her. Unlike him, I do whatever it takes to rescue my fellow men, women, and children from the demons. If someone dies on my watch, it's because I failed to move quickly, not because I didn't try in the first place."

Solomon returns his gaze to Amelia. "Mmm. You and Jason were one and the same until the moment he created you. Don't you share some culpability regarding this woman's death?"

"That's the thing!" Hope says, raising his voice again. "I might share Jason's memories up to the moment of my creation, but I'm not him! He's not me! If you had put both of us on that doomed planet, I would have saved Amelia! Jason would have let her die, just like he did the first time."

Solomon presses Hope for an answer. "How would you save her if even he couldn't?"

"There were many possibilities," Hope says. "However, the best thing he could have done would be to destroy Blaarjiim's orb. Without Blaarjiim corrupting her, Amelia wouldn't have become a world devourer."

Solomon falls silent for a moment.

"You don't know that."

"I do!" Hope says, gesturing to Amelia. "The proof is right before you."

Solomon snorts. "Amelia died. This woman is not the same person. She's a copy. A facsimile. She possesses none of Amelia's powers. You can't use her as a baseline example."

"I can, and I will," Hope says, his voice defiant. "What do you know, anyway? You might be the Knowledge-Seeker, but you don't know everything about the universe. My grasp on Wordsmithing greatly surpasses yours."

"I've looked into all your memories," Solomon counters. "I know plenty more than you'd like. That's not the point. I know about the Great Beyond. Souls can't simply come back once they've passed through it."

"Of course not," Hope replies. "But I'm a Wordsmith. I'm not some simple demon Emperor."

Solomon rolls his eyes. "Delude yourself, and delude everyone else, but don't think you can fool me. As a clone of Jason, you believe yourself to be your own person, separate from him. How can you not see the similarities between your situation and cloning Amelia after she died?"

"It's not the same!" Hope snarls. "I brought her back! I didn't copy her!"

Once again, Solomon falls silent.

This time, when he replies, he keeps his voice low.

"No. You didn't. Jason cloned himself, but that was only possible because of my Crown. You never possessed it. You couldn't replicate his feat. You had to use an alternate method."

Hope's eye twitches. "Yeah? So what? I did what I thought was right. Don't judge me."

"I'm not, and I won't," Solomon says. He finally steps away from Amelia and walks over to Hope. "As I said, I don't care about any of that. All I want is for you to fulfill my request. If you can do that, I'll grant you all of my power."

Solomon rests his hand on Hope's shoulder, surprising the Wordsmith when he feels the weight of the ancient king's hand.

"Okay. What is your request?"

Solomon closes his eyes.

"Promise me that you will fight with all your might to exterminate the demons. After that, I want you to destroy my Crown and send my soul to the Great Beyond."

Unlike before, Solomon doesn't quip, nor lace his words with snarky undertones. Instead, his expression becomes stern as he looks Hope in the eye.

"I'm tired of living for all eternity, trapped within this Crown. I want to die, but I can't end my life without seeing the ones who killed my family pay for their crimes. Only you can satisfy my revenge."

Solomon's chin quivers. He forces himself to swallow his emotions, but Hope doesn't miss the moment of weakness.

Hope nods. "I see. If that's what you want, I don't see why we can't work together. I'm no friend of demonkind. I hate them all."

"As do I," Solomon murmurs. "Jason and Phoebe play house with that succubus, Belial, all while ignoring her position as the Second Emperor of demonkind. That alone should tell you how compromised Jason has become."

"Oh yes, I know," Hope says. "Neil and I both hate her. There's no way we can trust a damned shapeshifting demon. She could be anyone, anywhere, corrupting our troops without us knowing."

"Exactly," Solomon says. A smile crosses his face. "Especially when you know what I do about her past. About what she did for her husband."

"Satan?"

"That very same Devil," Solomon nods.

The ancient king pulls away from Hope. He takes a few steps back and leans against the wall nonchalantly.

"I took some time to show Jason the ancient history of demons and angels. Sadly, he took away the wrong lesson from my visions, which is why I had to depart. However, I don't think you'll make the same mistake. After all, you're better than Jason. Aren't you?"

Hope nods. "Damn right, I am."

"Good. I'd like to take you on a little trip 100,000 years into the past. After that, I have a few friends you need to meet. I was going to introduce Jason to them, but I think you'll like them more."

"Who are they?"

"You'll see."

Solomon raises his hands and weaves a series of intricate magic symbols.

"This won't take long."

Hope sighs. "It had better not. I was looking forward to two weeks off with Amelia."

Solomon spreads his arms and grins. "You won't regret this. We're going to have a fabulous relationship, Hope. You kill demons, and I help you kill them faster. It's a win-win."

The world begins to shift around Hope. Within seconds, he finds himself in the body of an angel woman, during the Ancient Era.

"Don't act like I enjoy genocide. I only kill out of necessity. If there was a better way, I would do it."

Solomon's body fades away, leaving Hope to experience a vision of the past.

"Whatever helps you sleep better, my boy."

AUTHOR NOTE!

Welcome to chapter 3 of Cryopod Refresh! From this point on, the story is going to intensify dramatically! Since you have now completed the Ancient Era, I highly recommend checking out my blog post regarding the entirety of Chapter 2. I had a bunch of stuff I wanted to address, and this 8,000-word post was the best way for me to do it.

https://www.patreon.com/posts/klok-blogs-era-28683765

Thanks for reading!

Part 174: Superhuman

"Daisy. Come on; it's time to wake up."

I poke my daughter's cheek several times, but it takes a full minute for her to yawn and open her eyes.

"Nnn! Where are we, daddy?"

Daisy sits up in bed and stretches. When she finally meets my gaze, I can't help but notice a strange look in her eyes.

"We're aboard our spaceship: Esther. Are you okay? You look sick."

I press my hand against her forehead, but her temperature seems fine. My daughter wraps her arms around her legs and curls into a ball.

"...I had a bad dream."

"A bad dream? Aww, sweetie. I'm sorry about that. Wanna talk about it?"

Daisy nods slowly. Her eyes travel to the window, where the world of Tarus II gradually comes into view as our spaceship descends to the surface.

"I don't know. There were these people in... in white clothes... and they had big bird-wings... and they were fighting a bunch of people who looked like Aunt Sammy..."

Daisy concentrates harder to remember her dream.

"And... and there were big booms! Lots of booms! And a big scary monster, he was like this big! He was shooting laser beams out of his mouth, and he kept screaming and yelling... he scared me the most."

Daisy stretches out her arms to demonstrate the size of the 'monster' in her dream, but immediately, I know what monster she means.

What the hell did Solomon do? Why did he show my daughter images of the Ancient Era? Christ! My daughter's only six, and that asshole went and transmitted scenes of death and despair into her brain. Hell, now I have to ask how he did it since, as far as I know, he can't telepathically link to someone not wearing his Crown.

More importantly, how in the hell did he leave? Did he jump off my head and roll away?

A sudden thought occurs to me.

Solomon may have taken over my mind and used my Wordsmithing.

He's never done it before, but as the knowledge seeker with a crown of infinite wisdom, perhaps such a feat isn't all that farfetched.

And, if so, I have to wonder where he went.

"Locate."

Daisy watches as I wordsmith to try and find Solomon's Crown, but my search comes back negative. I can't use 'Locate' on dead people or inanimate objects, and Solomon's Crown counts for at least one of those things. I'm shit out of luck.

"Daddy...?"

"Sorry, sweetie," I say, turning my attention back to Daisy. "I'm sorry you had a nightmare. Why don't we get some ice cream once we land? Mommy can read you a story later."

Daisy lowers her eyes. "It didn't feel like a dream..."

"Sometimes dreams can feel more tangible than real life," I say, as I pat my daughter's back. "Come on. Why don't you help daddy fly the spaceship?"

"Okay..."

Daisy slides off the bed and follows me to the cockpit, but her movements seem duller and less energetic than usual. A sense of gloom follows her everywhere she walks, which only further angers me at Solomon's jackassery.

He showed me the Ancient Era! I didn't ask for it. Then he went and showed Daisy too?! Fucking asshole! God, I can't believe I trusted him. I yearn for the time when the Crown was just a tool I used to increase my cognitive power, back before Solomon woke up. The more I think about him, the angrier I become.

Daisy and I plop down in the pilot and co-pilot seats. I try to make conversation, but she merely pokes at the buttons, barely listening to my words. As the ship descends, she sighs and leans back in the chair to stare up at the clouds in the sky.

"Daddy... who were the people with the wings?"

I frown. "Angels, sweetie. Those were angels."

"Does aunt Sammy hurt angels?"

"Of course not."

Daisy crosses her arms. The ship shudders to a stop atop a landing platform on a building's roof across from our house. Even with the sight of 'home' before her, Daisy's expression barely changes. She remains distant and unfocused, as if contemplating more than her childish mind can handle.

"Where are the angels? Are they gone?"

"Yeah. Gone for good."

"That's not dope at all."

Daisy climbs out of the chair and exits the cockpit, leaving me to scratch my head.

Dope? Jeez. I need to stop running my mouth in front of her. She's picking up my worst habits.

I follow my daughter to the exit door. Soon, it opens up and lowers a platform to the rooftop below, allowing us to exit the ship.

A group of men and women arrive on the roof, nod at me, and head over to start cleaning and inspecting my ship. I could do it myself, but I figure it can't hurt to have someone else give Esther a onceover. Among the group are a pair of goblins, both of whom are the top experts in mechanical engineering on Tarus II.

Daisy and I head to the rooftop elevator. I could teleport us to the ground floor, but Phoebe always worries and frets about me popping Daisy into a wall or a pillar, so I'd prefer not to take any chances.

Once inside, I rub Daisy's head playfully. "Hey, how about we go over and say 'hi' to your friends from school? Like that one Felaris kid... uh... what was his name again..."

"Likil," Daisy mumbles. "His name is Likil..."

"Right, yeah! You like hanging out with Likil, right? Maybe he and his sister will be home. You guys can, I dunno, chase a ball of yarn or something."

Daisy shakes her head. "I don't wanna."

"Oh. Alright."

My daughter's somber mood is way beyond my capability to handle. No matter what I try, I can't get through to her. I've never been good with kids, which is why I often rely on Phoebe for this stuff. But when I think about it, it makes no sense for Phoebe to be any better with kids than me. She spent 100,000 years living under the control of Bahamut, so I can't see how she cultivated any parental instincts.

Maybe I'm worse on average with kids than other guys. That might be it. I didn't have a mother or a father growing up, so I never learned any parenting techniques. Phoebe at least lived in a dual-parent family, even if she barely remembers them.

Damn. Come to think of it; I ought to use my Wordsmithing to refresh Phoebe's memories sometime. I bet she'd be thrilled to have images of her parents and friends fresh in her mind!

...Or not. They're long dead. Maybe bringing them back would only make the pain of their loss fresh and raw in her mind.

Solomon once told me that my power has no limit to its applications. He swore I could repair the universe with it and mend the old rifts and rivalries. That might be true, but when it comes to the small day-to-day aspects of my life, I can't help but feel as though wordsmithing creates more problems than it solves.

Perhaps if I was more willing to ignore personal ethics, I could fix my problems, but I don't like that idea at all. Erasing memories, changing people's opinions, and rewriting reality to make it suit my fancy isn't something I ever want to do.

* * *

The elevator arrives at the bottom. By the time we reach the lobby of the Tarus II command center, where I perform most of my day to day duties, there are already several people waiting for us.

"Jason, we need you to authorize and notarize these forms."

"Commander, it would be great if you could head over to the western outskirts in the next few days and speak with the Dilithium miner strike. We're not able to build up our reserves without them."

"Sir! Your wife called and wanted to know what time you would be home for dinner!"

I reach down and take Daisy's hand while smiling and nodding politely at each of the people pestering me.

"Yeah, uh-huh. I'll be right there, Janis. I'm heading home right now. Mark! Good to see you. Yeah, I'll just- okay. Sure, I'll get right on that."

Sweat builds up on my forehead as the various demi-humans and monsters bombard me with requests and questions. I fend them off as best as I can, but without Solomon's Crown, my attention span feels like it's a tenth of its usual self. Damn! I didn't realize my concentration levels would drop so rapidly without him around.

I push through and eventually leave the crowd of people behind. Daisy bobbles along beside me and pulls her hand away.

"Sorry, sweetie. People never stop pestering daddy."

"Mhm."

Daisy barely says anything and instead opts to grunt in response.

Once we step through the front doors and spot our gigantic multi-story palace across the street, Daisy's eyes brighten.

"Mommy! I see mommy!"

I raise an eyebrow as my gaze sweeps toward the entrance. I don't see Phoebe at all.

A moment later, the door opens, causing my confusion to double as both Phoebe and Samantha stride out of our house. Phoebe chats amiably with the Second Emperor, then spots us and waves. How did Daisy see them before me?

Phoebe waves at us. "Hey, Sammy! You were right. They're back!"

Samantha smirks. "Mhm. I told you I saw Esther."

Daisy immediately pulls away from me and dashes across the street. "Mommy! We're back!"

HONK! HONK!

My heart stops.

In the blink of an eye, I jerk my head to the left. A bus barrels down the street toward Daisy and slams on its brakes. The kobold driver inside spots my daughter and gasps as he realizes he can't stop in time.

"Daisy!" I yell, pinned on the spot. Before I can make a move, a blur of movement rushes toward my little girl. Phoebe jumps in front of the bus and spreads her body out as wide as possible.

CRASH!!

Metal and glass explode like a bomb. The bus comes to an instant stop as it strikes the mass of flesh and bone protecting my daughter. Phoebe stands, rooted on the spot, as the bus crumples around her.

A moment later, time resumes.

I dash over and gasp at the blood covering Phoebe's body. She pulls away from the front of the bus and winces, only to fall on her ass.

"Mommy? Mommy!" Daisy cries. "Are you okay?"

Phoebe grits her teeth. Despite a fifteen-ton vehicle crashing against her, her injuries are mostly superficial. "Ahhn... fuck, shit..."

"Heal," I say, aiming my Wordsmithing at her. A few seconds later, the bloodied scratches covering Phoebe's body vanish, returning her to her peak physical form.

"Devils! Phoebe, are you alright?" Samantha asks. The succubus appears on Phoebe's right, opposite me. She quickly scrutinizes Phoebe's body, then breathes a sigh of relief. "I should have paid more attention! Why did you jump out like that? Next time, throw me in the path! You could have died!"

Phoebe turns and hugs Daisy. "No, I'm fine. Jason Wordsmithed my body to become much stronger and more durable. I didn't have time to think, and just did what I had to."

"We're lucky you were paying attention," I say, with a deep sigh. "My daughter and my wife's lives just flashed before my eyes. Goddamn, what a day."

Behind me, the bus door opens. A bloodied kobold stumbles out of it and falls to the ground. "M-Mish Hiro! Me shorry! I didn't mean tuh hit yuh!!"

All the passengers on the bus stumble to the front to see whatever the bus struck. A few of them suffered minor scrapes and bruises, but for the most part, nobody appears critically injured.

"Oy! That Miss Hiro!" A goblin gasps. "She okay? She hurt?! Stupid Glim-Glim nearly killed her!"

"Shrakh," the Kobold's mate cries. "We no want lose Miss Hiro! Me heart shatter in pieces!"

Phoebe rises to her feet and embraces Daisy. "I'm fine, everyone — no need to worry. Daisy, are you okay? Are you hurt, anywhere?"

Tears well up in Daisy's eyes. "I'm sorry, mommy! I didn't mean to run out like that! Uwaaah! It's all my fault mommy got hurt..."

My heart continues to pound at a thousand beats per minute, but with the shock wearing off, my adrenaline eventually drops to a more sustainable level.

Belial leans down to pat Daisy's head, while I turn my attention to the injured people on the bus. "Heal. Heal. Heal."

One by one, I regenerate each human and non-human to pristine physical condition. However, a problem occurs when I try to fix the bus.

"Repair."

...Nothing happens.

While Belial and Phoebe comfort Daisy and try to calm her down, my eyes laser in on the damaged bus and my inability to fix it.

Why can't I do something that would have been the simplest thing in the world yesterday?

Because I no longer have the Crown.

Solomon's Crown accomplished many tasks for me. Not only did it accelerate my thoughts and reflexes, but it also gave me a vast library of knowledge regarding devices and concepts from the past and future. I could craft any device by constructing it in my mind and speaking a word out loud.

But now... without the Crown... my Wordsmithing loses more than half of its power.

Losing the Crown isn't a tenth as important to me as protecting Daisy or Phoebe, but if I don't have it, I lose a lot of my power to shield humanity from the horrors lurking within the Labyrinth.

One reason the demons haven't attacked yet is that I haven't given them an opening. We surely have a few spies living on Tarus II, but it's unlikely they've infiltrated our mightiest defenses. I've spent the last five years turning this planet into an impregnable fortress, but I never feel that I've added enough weapons to protect the people I love.

That's the thing about me. I don't want to kill if I don't have to... but if someone attacks my home, I won't hesitate to fight back. At least, I pray I won't. If I'm lucky, I'll never have to make that choice.

Phoebe wraps her arms around Daisy and rises to a standing position. She cradles our daughter in her arms and smiles at me. "I'm glad you're back, Jason. Sorry for all the, um, distractions."

"You got hit by a truck," I say while trying to act nonchalant. "If anyone needs to apologize, it's me. I should have paid more attention while walking with Daisy."

Samantha crosses her arms. "I'm a Demon Emperor. If my brain hadn't been running on molasses, I'd have beaten Phoebe to the bus by a mile!"

The bus driver wrings his hands together. "Plenty of blame to go around, all of it mine! Sho shorry, sho shorry! I never meant to hit Mish Hiro! Eternally shorry! Life debt! Life debt!!"

The kobold flings himself to the ground and prostrates before Phoebe, begging her for forgiveness. Several of the bus's riders nod along and cross their arms angrily at him.

"Stupid Glim-Glim! He shouldn't drive anymore! We can't trust someone like him!"

I walk over to defuse the situation. "Now, now. Don't blame the poor guy. My daughter ran out into the road. It was her fault, not Glim-Glim's. Nobody could have reacted in time. Hell, Glim-Glim hit those brakes instantly. If he'd had a little more stopping room, he would have saved the day. I think he's an excellent bus driver! As for Phoebe, I healed her with my Wordsmithing. She isn't injured, not even a little bit."

Phoebe glances in my direction. "Jason is right. I'm fine, everyone. Don't worry! It was just a little scare, in the end."

The ten bus passengers grumble among themselves for a moment before nodding and accepting our words. "Hmph, yeah, alright, then. As long as you okay, Miss Hiro! We leave Glim-Glim alone!"

The assortment of monsters and humans turn to get back on the bus, only to pause and examine the front.

"Err, this thing still work? It look real beat-up."

I shake my head. "Sorry, guys. That bus is ruined. You'll have to have Ogie take a look at it."

Phoebe and Samantha walk over to my right. My wife continues to hold Daisy, who chokes back several sobs, but quickly regains her senses. "Jason? Can't you repair Glim-Glim's bus?"

I shake my head. "Not right now. We can talk about it once we're inside."

Phoebe raises her eyes to the top of my head. For the first time, she notices my missing Crown. "Oh. I see."

Samantha echoes her. "Did something happen?"

"We'll talk about it inside," I repeat. With a heavy heart, I wave goodbye to Glim-Glim, who shoots me a satisfied smile. I saved his reputation, and probably his butt, from a smackdown.

Without another word, my wife and I, along with Samantha and Daisy, all head toward our house.

We arrive in Daisy's room. Samantha takes Daisy from Phoebe and heads off to the corner to console her. Within a minute, she has Daisy giggling thanks to her infamous 'transformation game,' where she turns into a variety of cute and fluffy creatures, most of which I've never seen.

I take a few minutes to explain the situation to Phoebe, who merely nods along and grunts.

"Mm. Mm, yeah. Wow. Solomon did that? That seems a little out of character, don't you think?"

I shake my head. "Maybe not. He's one of the smartest beings in existence. He might have been manipulating me ever since his first appearance."

"Or... maybe something changed," Phoebe says slowly. "What happened on your trip to Tarus III?"

"Solomon showed me images of the ancient past. Specifically, the era when the angels and demons fought. I think he wanted me to, err... kill all the demons. Including Samantha."

Phoebe narrows her eyes. "Are you certain that was his intent?"

"I'm ninety percent sure."

"Wow. You think you know a guy..."

Phoebe trails off and gazes over at Samantha. Samantha turns herself into a five-foot-tall bunny rabbit, causing Daisy to squeal with glee.

"There's more," I add. "I think, somehow, Solomon transmitted all the images of the Ancient Era to Daisy. She was way too distant on the way back. Only now, with Samantha distracting her, is Daisy acting like her usual self. Fuck. I can't believe Solomon's nerve! I never thought he'd show my little girl such horrible, horrible images."

"How bad were they?" Phoebe asks. "You're not looking so good yourself."

I start to reply, only to pause for a moment.

Samantha isn't ten feet away. She might be playing with Daisy, but I don't want her to know what I've seen. It's not that I don't trust her, though I don't. Rather, it's that I don't know if I can, or should. Her demon name is Belial, and she was once Satan's spouse. Phoebe and I have known this since shortly after meeting her... but things are different now, for me at least.

I saw what Belial did. She transformed and took out Uriel, allowing the Archangel of Protection to end up devoured by demons. She didn't kill Uriel herself, but her actions directly resulted in the Archangel's death.

She's a shapeshifter. An infiltrator. How can I believe anything she says? She might be telling the truth about hating the violence of demonkind, but actions speak louder than words. She beat the shit out of Beelzebub, twice, and she unleashed plenty of violence during the War in Heaven.

I don't know what to say or think about her. For now, it's best I keep my mouth shut.

"Pretty bad," I reply, answering Phoebe's question. "Lots of gore. I mostly got a general sense of the emotions running wild during those ancient times, as well as a bunch of disjointed images of gory, over-the-top battles. I don't remember much specifically."

I don't want to lie to Phoebe about what I saw, but with Samantha mere feet away, I can't take any chances.

Phoebe nods. "Well, Daisy's our little girl, and we want her to have a wonderful life. However, she will have to learn about the violence enveloping us eventually. Maybe Solomon intended to show her the dangers lurking in the Labyrinth."

"Solomon never liked Daisy," I reply. "He always thought she was a nuisance. Maybe he wanted to scare her. Like the bastard he is."

"You don't know that..." Phoebe mutters. "Maybe Solomon is testing you. Maybe he's-"

"He's not," I say, cutting her off. "He left me after I rejected his revenge fantasy. I don't want to hear another word spoken in his defense. Right now, I have more pressing matters to worry about."

Phoebe sighs. Her eyes tell me she has more questions, but still, she acquiesces to my request. "Fine. What's the matter, now?"

"I tried to repair that bus outside, but failed. Without the Crown, I can't envision complex objects. I don't know what I'm going to do. Tarus II needs me. If any spies find out I've lost the Crown, the demons might attack."

Phoebe frowns. "They haven't made any moves for the last five years. Do you think it's because they're afraid of you?"

"Maybe, maybe not. All I know is that the demons haven't rested on their laurels. They won't sit idly while their food supply dries up."

"So what can we do? Go to war?"

I pause for a moment to think.

Solomon would love nothing more than for humanity to battle the demons. He believes that with his mind and the power of Wordsmithing, we could annihilate the demons with ease.

Maybe he's right.

I used my power against Satan and killed him several times. Even so, the battle exhausted me to my limits. Other than him, I've never killed anyone, demon or otherwise.

I don't want to fight. If I have to, I will... but given a choice; it would be my last option.

Therefore, initiating a war proactively to get the first strike would be my least favorite option.

So what if I go the opposite direction?

What if I place an offer of peace on the table? What if I go to the demons to negotiate directly?

A proactive declaration of peaceful intent!

The demons aren't 'good guys,' but they aren't evil, either. They have the same self-preservation instincts as humans. If I demonstrate the might of my people, perhaps they will realize a protracted war will do nothing more than cause immense losses on their side and ours.

Besides, demons and monsters don't even NEED humans! Why do they want our souls? For the sake of evolution! They're immortal with or without us, so peace wouldn't hurt them, beyond losing their ability to grow.

Maybe there's another option available for that one goal, then. Maybe they can evolve without human souls!

Solomon desires war, but I want the opposite. I will find a solution, no matter what it takes.

"No," I say, returning my attention to Phoebe. "I won't do something so rash and stupid as starting a war. I have no guarantee humanity will survive it, let alone win. And what about the demi-humans and monsters living among us, along with the minority of disaffected demons and imps? They'll end up as collateral damage, to say nothing of the conflict in their hearts about fighting their former brothers and sisters. No, I won't hurt our citizens like that."

I take a look out the window, at the bright, sunny world of Tarus II.

"I'm going to negotiate with Ose. She's the new leader of demonkind. Maybe I can reason with her. Maybe I can appeal to her emotions, or find some way to strike a balance between humanity and demonkind. I won't know until I try."

Phoebe frowns. "Ose. I've heard her name before. I think Sammy mentioned her once."

"Yeah? Maybe Samantha knows her. After all, she's the Second Emperor."

Daisy giggles loudly, catching my attention. I blink twice to spot Samantha, still in her giant, rabbit body, staring at me as she plays with my daughter.

The Second Emperor of demonkind gazes at me with her adorable bunny face and slowly shakes her head.

Don't do it, her movements say. You're making a big mistake.

When I look into her eyes, my blood pressure rises.

Belial knows something. I never bothered to ask her about Ose, but maybe that was a mistake.

It's time for answers.

Part 175: The Quest for Peace

"Ose?" Samantha asks, frowning. "Why do you want to learn about her?"

"She's the current leader of demonkind," I reply. "I need to know more about her before I make a decision."

Samantha sits on Daisy's bed, one covered with a bright pink comforter littered with pictures of dogs, cats, and other cute animals. Behind her, Daisy sits quietly and reads a book, wholly absorbed in its contents.

The succubus rests her elbow on her knee and her chin on her hand. She stares at me for a moment before replying. "A decision about what?"

"I'm debating going to Ose and striking a deal with her. I want to cease all hostility between humans and demons. I don't know anything about her, but maybe if we sit down and talk, she'll be more receptive to changes than Diablo."

While I lightly lean back against the wall and cross my arms, Phoebe stands next to me and loops her arm through mine. She rests her head against my shoulder and nods. "Peace between demons and humans is for the best, Sam. If we're lucky, Jason might be able to find a way to work something out with Ose."

Samantha sighs. "Haah... I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but whatever plan is rolling around in your head, forget it. It's doomed to fail."

The succubus flops backward and places both hands behind her head. Her tail flicks around lazily while her legs hang off the bed. "If anything, Diablo was your best bet. He was a reasonable guy, unlike Ose. She's nothing but a cold-hearted monster, devoid of all emotion."

I frown. "Tell me more."

"Ose is ancient, compared to most demons," Belial replies. "She isn't as old as me, but she lived during the Energy Wars. She is unique among my people, in that she is exceptionally talented with technology."

I nod slowly. "Right... what about it?"

"Demons suffer from technophobia," Phoebe says, replying before Samantha can say anything. "None of them have the slightest clue how human gizmos and gadgets work. Show them the simplest device, and they'll get a migraine from confusion."

Samantha blinks. "Mhm. I don't even understand most of the things you've made for this city, Jason, and I lived among humans more than most other demons. That's why Ose is special."

The Second Emperor of Demonkind continues to stare fixedly at the ceiling. "Ever since the humans tortured her brother to death, Ose has been obsessed with learning all she can about your weaknesses and vulnerabilities. The reason humans ended up trapped for 100,000 years was due to her familiarity with all manner of human quirks. She studied psychology at numerous human universities and used that information to devise systems that would keep humans in check physically and mentally."

Belial shakes her head. "Don't even bother trying to convince Ose to sign a peace treaty. You haven't a prayer of success. Her hatred of humans permeates her very being, from her head to her toes. If you appear before her, she might attack you on the spot for daring to speak. She cuts out the tongues of human slaves if they whisper even a single word of complaint."

Phoebe's expression turns grim. My wife shivers at Belial's words. "So sinister. If Ose is leading demonkind, then why haven't they attacked us for the last six years? It doesn't sound like she would be content to let us grow and flourish."

"No. She wouldn't."

Belial shakes her head.

"When Uriel appeared, she unleashed all of her power and crippled the might of demonkind. She killed several Barons and caused us severe losses. Bael, Mephisto, and Ose might be powerful, but they wouldn't dare charge in and attack humanity recklessly, especially with Jason here. Heroes are threats no demon would dare to provoke, especially after fighting an Archangel and Demon Duke fusion."

I narrow my eyes. "It's been six years since Uriel's appearance. Hasn't demonkind recovered from their losses?"

"I don't know," Belial says, shrugging. She rolls onto her side and props her head up with her palm. "But if I had to make a guess... I would assume Ose is preparing a massive offensive. You've not only liberated countless human colonies from the demons but also cut off my people's supply of souls. If things continue progressing, Ose will lose influence among the demon council. She's probably preparing for an invasion as we speak."

"An invasion?!" Phoebe gasps. "Why didn't you say anything? If Ose is going to attack us, we can't sit around and wait for our deaths!"

Belial raises an eyebrow. "Until today, I thought you guys knew. Isn't that why Jason has been building up humanity? To defend against the demons?"

My face flushes red. "Err, not exactly. I built many automated defenses to protect Tarus II, but I never knew anything about Ose's personality and disposition as a leader. My only goal was to defend the planet in case of unforeseen events. If the entirety of Hell comes pounding on our doors, I don't know how long we'll last..."

Phoebe pulls away from me. "We should be fine. I mean, those weapons you built atop Mount Gurren should obliterate any attacking army with ease, right?"

Despite her confident tone, Phoebe's phrasing betrays her doubt. She meets my gaze with a hint of worry, making me nod along with her words.

"Yeah. We should be fine. Nevertheless, it can't hurt to prepare a little more."

I turn my gaze to Belial. "You say Ose can't be reasoned with, but do you know that for sure? I have to try diplomacy before initiating a war. I can't just take your word on her stubbornness."

Belial wraps a few strands of hair around her finger. "Feel free to try, but don't say I didn't warn you. Ose is vicious. Now that she has the power of an Emperor, you ought to tread very lightly around her. Besides! Ose lives in Hell Harbor. How are you going to request an audience with her when an anti-Teleportation Matrice protects the whole planet?"

Phoebe smirks. "Oh, come on, Sam. This is Jason we're talking about. He's a Wordsmith. He doesn't need to request an audience, like some beggar kneeling before a king. He can simply... pop in and say hello!"

My heart jolts. "What?! That's just asking for an ass-kicking! Do you want ten thousand demons to jump me all at the same time?"

Belial rolls her eyes. "I'm sure you'll be fine, what with your 'invincible armor' and 'nano-books.'"

"Come on, ladies, let's not screw around with my life," I say, shooting a suspicious glance at both girls. "I'm far from invincible, and I'd like to make it to age thirty."

Phoebe wanders away from me and plops down beside Daisy. She glances at our daughter's book for a few moments, but Daisy doesn't acknowledge her mother's presence at all.

"I don't know what you should do," Phoebe says to me, "but I doubt Sammy is understating the impossibilities. Ose doesn't seem like a reasonable person. If you pay her a visit, you might set her off."

"If I don't, she's likely to launch an invasion anyway," I retort. "I have Wordsmithing. Maybe I can influence her thoughts somehow. You know... make her sign a peace treaty."

Belial's expression darkens. She sits up and looks at me with a solemn gesture. "Don't even think about it. Ose's mental resilience is incredible. Hope tried to influence the mind of a Demon Lord a few years ago. I had to clean up the bodies that barbarous rat left in his wake when he finally roused himself from his stupor. If you try to alter Ose's thoughts, you might get a few minutes of subservience out of her before she regains her consciousness and tears you to pieces."

"I only need a few minutes," I reply. "If I can get Ose to sign a Soul Contract, she won't be able to launch an invasion. It'll be impossible for her to go against the terms of the treaty."

Belial blinks in surprise. "A... a Soul Contract? But... how do you know about those? Only-"

"Satan used them," I say, finishing her sentence for her. "Yeah. Solomon showed me a bunch of demon and angel history. I know about Satan's powers."

Belial bites her lip. She lowers her eyes and leans forward to stare at the floor contemplatively for a moment.

"I don't know... I never liked Satan's power. It was too manipulative for my tastes. You shouldn't dabble with matters involving souls if you can avoid it."

"What choice do I have? If Ose won't accept a treaty willingly, then that means war is inevitable! I'd rather manipulate one demoness than have millions and billions of lives perish because I couldn't bend my morals even a smidge."

"I'm not worried about your morality," Belial says, a warning tone in her voice. "Soul manipulation is dangerous. It consumed Satan and countless others. It's an easy path to power and obtaining what you want, but in the end, it always comes back to bite you."

"So I've heard."

I nod along to Belial's words. Having had a former Hero and three Archangels speak of the dangers of Soul Manipulation, hearing a Demon Emperor speak similar words certainly unnerves me. After all, it seems that no matter who brings up Soul Manipulation, they always have nothing but bad things to say about it.

Interrupting my thoughts, Daisy looks up from her book.

"I don't want to die."

"Huh?"

I glance at Daisy and stare, slack-jawed.

"No, no, sweetheart! You're not going to die. Don't even think like that. Daddy is more than capable of stopping the big, bad demons."

Samantha jerks her head up. "Hey! We're not all bad, you know."

I shrug. "An exception doesn't prove the rule."

Her annoyance dissipates. "Mmm. True."

* * *

The three of us talk for a while, but no matter how we debate, we don't come to a definite conclusion.

"Alright," I say, rubbing the bridge of my nose. "I won't use a Soul Contract. I've never done one before, anyway. I might screw it up. I'll just... try and convince Ose to look at things from a different point of view."

"After everything I've said, you still intend to have a friendly chat with that white-haired witch?" Belial asks, awe in her voice. "Jason! She'll rip you to pieces! I'm not kidding; Ose is vicious, even moreso than all the other demons I know! At the least, if you're going to visit her, you ought to take some backup. If you go in there alone and she somehow takes control of a Wordsmith..."

Belial shudders.

"...I don't want to imagine the results. Ose would kill to have power like yours at her disposal."

I open my mouth to respond, but before I can say anything, Daisy suddenly raises her arm and points at the door.

"Daddy. Someone's coming."

Frowning, I turn to look at the doorway. Seconds later, a pair of stomping feet come running down the hallway outside, the footsteps barely audible even when I turn my full attention away from the other three in the room.

Bang bang bang!

Someone pounds on the door, startling Phoebe. She turns to look at the door, wide-eyed. "Wow, Daisy. You have good hearing."

Daisy nods. "Mhm."

I shrug. "Kids, am I right?"

A man outside our room yells loudly. "Sir! Commander Hiro, sir! Are you in there? It's an emergency!"

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "That voice... Henry? I thought he was stationed in the Core?"

I nod. "Let me see what he wants."

A moment later, I walk toward the door and grab hold of the handle. Upon opening it, I spot a 24-year-old guy, almost the same age as me. His buzzed black hair and military uniform might normally give him an imposing look, but at this moment, he's so busy gasping for breath that he looks like he's about to pass out.

"What's wrong, Henry?" I ask, quickly examining him. Immediately, I spot several specks of blood dotting his uniform. They appear not to belong to him, but someone else.

Henry swallows a breath and quickly spits out words rapid-fire. "There's a Behemoth-class native fauna rampaging near the outskirts of the city! I've got two platoons fighting to contain it, with three more on the way, but the goddamn thing is too powerful! It killed three troopers with a swing of its tail; not even the T-REX's saved them!"

Immediately, my gaze hardens. "What species is it? What size? Have you activated the defensive battlements? What about the advanced troopers? Has Neil offered battle strategies yet?"

My barrage of questions doesn't phase Henry. He quickly nods and follows up with a series of answers. After a moment, Belial jumps up from behind me and runs to my side, her eyes the size of dinner plates. "What?! You've got to be kidding me! It can't be a Hydra!"

Henry grits his teeth. "Kar confirmed it. He's witnessed one in the flesh a few thousand years ago. We're lucky that it hasn't fully matured! It's only fifty feet tall!"

"Only fifty-?!" Belial growls. "Spawn of a broodmother! Jason, we can't dawdle here! I've fought Hydras three times, and each instance was worse than the last! If the troopers start cutting off its heads...!"

Henry's expression darkens. "You're too late. Before Kar arrived on the scene, a few Thundercats severed two of its heads. Now it has four! We quickly learned not to do that anymore, but with four heads..."

My heart pounds like a drum. "Say no more. Phoebe, Samantha, stay here with Daisy. I'll go out there and help put the beast down."

"The hell you will!" Samantha yells. "I've by far the most experienced on this whole planet when it comes to fighting Hydras. I'm coming with you."

"Don't even think of leaving me behind," Phoebe replies. "I'm not letting you two have all the fun."

Belial glances at Phoebe for a half-second before nodding. "Grab your rifle. I'll take care of the melee combat. You need to stay in the back."

Phoebe chews her lip. "Alright. Daisy, sweetheart, you stay here. Mommy and daddy need to fight the big bad monster. Okay?"

Immediately, Daisy starts to pout. "I wanna go, too! I wanna see the Hydrant!"

"Daisy Brianne Hiro!"

Phoebe's words instantly carry a sense of power my Wordsmithing could never hope to achieve. The blood drains from Daisy's face as Phoebe shoots a death-glare at her.

"Uh... um... never mind! I'll read my book."

Daisy quickly ducks her face down, and her cheeks turn red-hot as she tries to avoid Phoebe's gaze. My wife only maintains her death-glare for a moment longer before leaning over to kiss Daisy's head.

"Mwah! You stay here and wait for us to return. Do you hear me, young lady?"

"Y-yes... mommy..."

Satisfied, Phoebe turns to nod at me.

"Let's go."

Part 176: Hail Hydra

It barely takes the four of us fifteen minutes to jump in Phoebe's monster truck, leave our house, and race out of the city. By the time we reach the ridge and start to drive down the ramp toward the forest road leading to the warp-gate, all of us can already see an intense battle happening several miles away.

Phoebe tightens her grip on the steering wheel. "By the Creator! Henry, you only told us about the Hydra! Didn't you think it was worth mentioning the dozen angry wyverns it brought along?!"

The four-headed Hydra howls angrily and tears apart several heavily armored tanks with its teeth and claws. Compared to the behemoth's gigantic body, the soldiers at its feet appear as little more than specks of dust.

In the skies, twelve wyverns fly overhead, each one twice the size of a school bus with a forty-foot wingspan. Some of them breathe fire on the soldiers at their feet, while others spit lightning and ice instead.

Belial, seated behind me in the passenger seat, grabs my shoulder and leans forward to peer our the windshield. "Elemental wyverns, at that! What the hell is going on, Henry? Did you disturb a spirit monster nest or something?!"

Henry immediately shakes his head. "Don't ask me! I had nothing to do with this! When I left, only the Hydra was attacking us! It came out of nowhere!"

Phoebe presses down on the accelerator, bringing our speed to over a hundred miles an hour. The perfectly straight road I carved through the forest six years ago stretches on ahead of us, while the distance to the Hydra shrinks rapidly every second.

Belial scowls at Henry. "Hydras aren't like other monsters. They're Lucifer's artificial creations. Considering I helped kill all three that have appeared, there shouldn't be any others still alive, let alone a random backwater planet like Tarus II! Not to mention elemental wyverns. Each one possesses nearly two percent the power of an ancient dragon. Do you mean to tell me-"

"Shit!" Phoebe howls in fright as a gigantic pothole suddenly appears in the road ahead. With her attention focused on the Hydra, she doesn't see it until the last second.

My eyes widen. Our truck flies over the edge and smashes into the bottom of a ten-foot-deep crater. At the last second, sensing the surge of adrenaline in our hearts, the T-REX's on all of our chests activate simultaneously.

CRASH!!

My vision turns spotty as the world comes to a screeching halt. Moments later, Centurion's robotic voice faintly appears in my ear.

"...ORGANS: MINOR. DAMAGE TO BONE STRUCTURE: INSIGNIFICANT. DAMAGE TO BRAIN TISSUE: ELEVATED. PILOT ZERO-ZERO-THREE'S OVERALL CONDITION: STABLE."

The disorientingly loud AI voice gives me a headache. I blink and rub my eyes, then turn to look at the driver seat. Phoebe leans limply against the steering wheel, but as my gaze falls on her, she pulls backward. "Aaaoo... shit, shit... broke my wrist..."

"Is everyone okay?" Belial asks. I turn around to see Henry also in his faceless armored suit, and Belial, still wearing only a few strips of cloth to cover her lady bits. Unlike us weak and feeble humans, her demonic body, strengthened by her rank of Emperor, gives her unparalleled defense.

"I'll be perfect in a sec," I reply. "Heal. Heal. Heal. Heal."

A few drops of mana leave my body and travel to everyone in the truck. Belial probably doesn't need my help, given her titanium defenses and nigh-omnipotent healing powers, but it can't hurt to be polite.

All of us shake off the daze enveloping our minds. I kick the side-door away and hop outside, while the others mirror my actions.

"We're only a mile from the Hydra," Phoebe says, as she shoots a glance at the crumpled front end of the truck. A look of dismay passes over her face, but she quickly recovers. "Let's run the rest of the way!"

With a nod, all four of us agree to her decision. We break into a dead sprint and unleash the full power of the T-REX suits.

The Transforming Replicant Exosuit is an invention made possible thanks to Phoebe and Hans Wagner's collaboration. Capable of granting its user unparalleled defense, the suit also gives them superhuman speed and agility. Since it can adapt to its owner's physiological strengths, it's become even stronger after I enhanced Phoebe's strength and durability. The only one of us who doesn't wear one is Belial, since she lacks even the most basic comprehension of any technology. Henry lags slightly behind Belial, Phoebe, and I, but it doesn't take long before all four of us close the distance to the Hydra.

Our feet smash against the ground and surge with strength. Without a vehicle, our sustained top speed reaches sixty miles an hour, while in the heat of combat, the suits allow any human to unleash even faster bursts of acceleration.

We reach the battlefield within two minutes. Immediately, the sight churns my stomach.

Dozens and dozens of bodies lay motionless in the area around the rampaging Hydra. Several armored Clinicians try to mend the wounds of downed soldiers, but I can tell at a glance those warriors will never again walk among the living. One of the combat medics senses incoming danger and instinctively leaps straight up, clearing thirty feet in the blink of an eye. A split second later, the Hydra's tail lashes across the area he was standing in and rips apart the corpse he was trying to heal, as well as two other combat medics who didn't dodge in time. The bodies of the clinicians and their deceased comrade explode; unable to withstand the Hydra's might.

Phoebe screeches to a halt a quarter-mile away from the rampaging monster, taps a button on her T-REX's wrist modulator, and summons a weapon out of her nano-storage assembler. Several kilowatts of electricity arc together before her, and three seconds later, a massive energy rifle springs into existence, becoming a weapon nearly as long as she is tall.

Belial and I don't spare a glance toward Phoebe. Before we can travel a hundred yards closer to the Hydra, Phoebe begins firing high-powered plasma shots at the Hydra's carapace.

Ksss-thoom! Ksss-thoom!

Each shot takes a split-second to build up energy before firing, resulting in energy blasts that travel five times the speed of sound. All Belial and I can see are brief flashes of light as the plasmoid bullets strike the Hydra and send it reeling.

"Skreee!"

The Hydra howls in pain. Two of its heads whip to the right to glare at my wife furiously.

Belial's face turns pallid. "Don't let the beast focus on Phoebe! We have to protect her!"

I turn around to shout an order at Henry, only to see him break off from the succubus and I. The young man leaves us and returns to the formation of other T-REX users to rejoin his companions.

Tch. I guess Belial and I will have to protect Phoebe by ourselves.

I plant my feet down and screech to a halt. "Grab the Hydra's attention!" I yell. "I'll take the middle position!"

"On it!"

Belial motions with her hands. Without pausing to concentrate her mana, her body rapidly shifts its form to one I saw in Solomon's visions. Her bright red skin darkens and turns into an ashen-grey color. Her hands morph into powerful claws. Leathery wings sprout from her back, while her features turn noticeably more monstrous.

She leaps into the sky and rushes at the nearest Hydra head.

CRACK!

Belial smashes her fist into the Hydra's kisser. The momentum and strength of her attack turns the monster's head into meat paste and sends it rocketing backward. It plows into another head, causing the second to sustain severe injuries.

I aim my mind at the first broken head. Before the Hydra can regenerate, I speak a word of power. "Seal!"

My words carry authority on par with that of the Creator. Poisonous black fog engulfs the Hydra's destroyed head to suppress its regenerative ability. Instead of growing a second head, the monster's pulverized skull rapidly decomposes and withers away.

I aim my mind at the second head. "Sea-!"

Before I can speak, two of the Elemental Wyverns screech angrily. I jump backward out of instinct as a massive ball of lightning crashes into the spot where I was standing only a moment earlier, followed by a hail of icy daggers.

"Gaugh!"

Despite avoiding the brunt of the lightning attack, several bolts of electricity arc toward my nanite-covered body. Clumps of nanites explode into melted metal, scattered by the electrical power of the wyvern overhead. With small patches of my skin exposed, a sense of danger quickly appears in the back of my mind.

This battle will be far more treacherous than I first expected!

I flick my eyes toward the sky, where both wyverns are preparing to launch another assault.

"PULL!"

A surge of power emanates from my body. As if an invisible hand had wrapped itself around them, both wyverns shriek in surprise and tumble from the sky. They hit the ground at terminal velocity, sending dirt and debris scattering in every direction. To my astonishment, both wyverns immediately leap onto their hind legs and screech at me, uninjured by the fall.

The bastards are resilient!

The ice-type Wyvern starts to lunge toward me, but a familiar sound resonates in the air.

Ksss-thoom!

A bolt of plasma smashes into the monster's head, sending it careening to the side. I quickly glance at Phoebe and give her a thumbs-up, but she ignores me and instead levels her rifle at the other wyvern.

Ksss-thoom!

The twenty-foot-tall ice-wyvern screeches in pain as the superheated bolt of plasma explodes against its skull, sending it tumbling as well. Despite the might of Phoebe's plasma rifle, it causes little damage to either monster. Both wyverns shake their heads in indignation and charge toward Phoebe. They duck and weave as they dart across the ground, allowing them to dodge two more of Phoebe's shots as they advance upon her.

"Phoebe!" I yell, aiming my mind at her. "Watch out! Teleport!"

Foop!

Phoebe vanishes a split-second before the wyverns can unleash a barrage of ice and lightning upon her. Their attacks strike the empty air, exploding against the ground harmlessly.

Foop!

Phoebe reappears three hundred feet away. With a tap of her fingers, her rifle rapidly alters its shape to transform into a massive two-handed broadsword. She stomps her foot on the ground and leaps at the lightning-type wyvern. Before it can dodge, her suit's inertia boosters activate, accelerating her speed by a factor of ten.

Half a second later, Phoebe reappears next to the ice-wyvern and swings her sword down. It slices through the wyvern's neck with ease, severing the monster's head from its body. She easily takes out one of the eleven threats on the battlefield without batting an eye.

"Skree?!"

The lightning wyvern howls at Phoebe. It jumps backward, flaps its wings, and takes to the sky to avoid her.

"You're not going anywhere!" I yell. "Break! Break!"

The sounds of two bones violently snapping, followed by a heart-wrenching howl of pain, resound throughout the battlefield. The wyvern's wing-bones snap in half, causing it to plummet toward my wife below.

Phoebe gathers strength in her legs and leaps straight upward. She turns her body and sword into a living spear and impales the monster before it can hit the ground. A moment later, the wyvern falls silent as a razor-sharp nanite blade stabs its skull and ends its life.

Phoebe falls and lands on her feet, while the wyvern crashes to the ground behind her.

"What are you staring at?" Phoebe asks. "Help Sam!"

I nod, then turn around and speak to the sky. "Predict!"

My perception of time accelerates by a factor of one hundred. For a few seconds, the entire world grinds to a halt, while a series of lines and patterns appear among the battlefield's combatants.

Squadron B is about to suffer a major blow when the third Hydra head exhales corrosive fumes on them. Their nanite suits will only dissipate 95% of the damage, but the rest of the fumes will penetrate their defenses and kill them! Following that, those four wyverns to the south will unleash a fireball encirclement, pinning Squadron H in place, which will allow those two electric-type wyverns to wipe out their nanites. Shortly afterward...

A massive flow of information surges into my brain. My eyes flick from right to left as I rapidly classify each enemy and ally movement into different threat levels, allowing me to determine which groups are in the highest likelihood of taking heavy casualties.

A moment later, time resumes.

"Seal! Shield! Block! Teleport! Pull! Wall! Disorient! Shatter!"

A flurry of words escapes my lips, each one targeted at specific enemies and allies. Walls of stone spring up behind one platoon of soldiers, saving them from a fiery encirclement, while I also pull down the lightning-type wyverns from the sky, stagger the Hydra with a mental blast, and teleport a small squadron of soldiers out of the way of the falling monsters.

Ten seconds later, the monsters break apart and gaze around in bewilderment as all of their attacks scatter to the four fucking winds. The lightning-type wyverns howl in terror as a group of soldiers leaps into action to stab and shoot them from every angle. With them gone, the threat of destabilized nanites vanishes from the battlefield, allowing me to breathe a slight sigh of relief.

"Jason! To the north!" Phoebe yells from behind me. A moment later, the sound of her rifle firing to my right makes me turn and look in that direction.

"What the fuck?" I ask, to nobody in particular.

Hundreds of orcs charge out of a burning thicket. Lit aflame by the flame wyverns, the patch of dense woodland connects to seemingly nothing, yet the monsters storm out of it as if stepping through an unseen portal.

I set my astonishment aside and narrow my gaze. "Examine."

Detailed information about each orc pops into my head.

Name: Grimlum. Rank: Orc Jerma. IQ: 75. Status: Berserked, frenzied, insane.

Name: Gorn. Rank: Orc Jerma. IQ: 50. Status: Lobotomized, berserked.

Name: Kiki. Rank: Orc Hudin. IQ: 89. Status: Berserked, mindless.

Waves of information flood into my mind, making me frown. The one thing all of the orcs share is their berserked state. What could cause so many orcs to appear on Tarus II, a planet where only a few have ever lived? More importantly, what could cause them to lose their minds and rush into a battlefield without regard for their lives?

Suddenly, from the south, a surge of movement catches my attention. A massive horde of monsters climbs up the edge of a canyon and rushes toward the troops at the warp-gate, creating a deadly encirclement when combined with the orc's charge.

"My god!" Phoebe yells. "Jason, those are Obsidian Goblins!"

"Obsidian Goblins?!"

My mind blanks out for a moment. It only takes me a moment to recall a lesson Phoebe once read to me about Obsidian Goblins when we first met, back when I was paralyzed in bed.

Obsidian Goblins are an extremely rare subspecies of the traditional Goblin family tree. Fewer than one in one thousand goblins will evolve to become an Obsidian Goblin, but when they do, they gain near-total immunity to flames and heat-based attacks, in addition to astounding defenses! Coupled with their small bodies and swift speed, they're capable of charging through a hail of projectiles without taking any damage. If faced with several obsidian goblins clumped together, one must keep their distance and pummel them with piercing weaponry; especially armor-piercing projectiles and the like.

"Enraged orcs and Obsidian Goblins, along with a fucking Hydra and Elemental Wyverns?! When did so many different monsters decide to work together? Why are they attacking us?!"

Phoebe shakes her head. "I don't know. All I do know is that normal weapons will be useless against those goblins. Cover me! I'll enter melee range!"

Phoebe charges to the south and taps a button on her sword. It rapidly reconfigures itself from a razor-sharp blade into a massive Warhammer, one capable of smashing diamonds into dust with a single blow.

"Shit!" I curse, unable to contain my anger. "What a bad day! What a bad fuckin' day!"

I aim my mind at my body and inhale.

It's time to put all of my lessons with Solomon to good use. I can't allow my emotions to get the best of me.

"Wings!"

Angelic wings explode from my back, each of them colored an ashen grey. My T-REX armor splits apart, allowing my rapidly forming appendages to sprout into their full glory before sealing up behind them. I pounce into the air to soar hundreds of feet over the battlefield. Thanks to half a year of practice, with Solomon's help, I've become extremely adept at manipulating my wings to achieve maximum speed and agility.

With a bird's eye view, I use Centurion's sensors to highlight and identify various targets. "Seal. Seal. Suppress. Shove! Heal. Heal. Collapse!"

One by one, I take out various threats, doing my best not to kill anyone, but merely batter them unconscious or knock them out. Clouds of sleeping gas erupt here and there as I attempt to take out one group of enemies or another, but every so often, I miss one, allowing them to penetrate my barriers to land a lucky hit on a soldier here and there.

Belial, still flying around and fighting the Hydra, dodges one of its attacks, barrel-rolls in midair, and flies over to fight beside Phoebe.

"I'm here to help!" Belial yells, as she stomps her feet into the ground beside Phoebe. The succubus claps her hands together, and with her tremendous strength, sends a shockwave outward, flinging a hundred Obsidian Goblins flying backward.

"Thanks!" Phoebe says, sparing as few words as possible. She swings her hammer down and pounds a goblin's head, shatters its obsidian skin, and flattens it against the ground. A moment later, she swings her hammer again, this time battering its back and breaking half the bones in its body. The monster goes limp and perishes, its soul vanishing from this world.

Belial's expression turns grim. "Brutal!"

"Anyone who kills my friends and family will pay with their blood," Phoebe says, ignoring Belial's concern for the dead goblin. "I respect your reverence for life, but I have my own way of doing things!"

Phoebe darts away from Belial and swings her hammer in a wide arc. She smashes one Goblin to bits and sends him hurtling into the body of one of his comrades. The second-hand impact of goblin-on-goblin ends up shattering both of their heavily armored carapaces while also rupturing multiple internal organs and fracturing their skulls. Both monsters slump lifelessly to the ground and perish under Phoebe's assault.

Belial's eyes widen as Phoebe continues her onslaughts. "Devils! Phoebe shouldn't be half as strong as me, yet when she wields that hammer..."

The succubus shakes the thoughts out of her head and joins Phoebe in battle. While merely trying to incapacitate our enemies, like me, Belial winces every time Phoebe instead opts to kill them, sending their bodies tumbling across the plains to land as lifeless, broken husks. Belial pounds the monsters with her fists, but holds back slightly during every attack, ensuring they'll just barely survive.

One after the other, both ladies tear ass through over three hundred Obsidian Goblins. Eventually, the remaining goblins turn tail and flee, having witnessed the frightening power of Tarus II's Dynamic Duo.

Phoebe slows to a stop and watches the Goblins retreat. A moment later, she spins on her heel and dashes toward the orcs, who I've managed to keep away from the main troops with my Wordsmithing.

"Wait!" Belial yells, panic in her eyes. "Go easy on them! Those orcs aren't in their right minds!"

Belial chases after Phoebe, but Phoebe merely shoots a gaze at the several dozen dead bodies of the soldiers who perished to the Hydra's maws.

"Neither am I!"

Smash!

Phoebe doesn't even use her hammer. She charges into the incoming orc army and uses her shoulder as a battering ram. Like an unstoppable bowling ball crashing through 7-foot-tall pins, Phoebe's diminutive figure sends orcs flying left and right as she knocks them out of her way and breaks their bones with impunity.

Suddenly, my eyes flick to the Hydra. The Behemoth-class monster notices Phoebe's dominating presence and lunges two of its heads toward her. Before I can speak a word, Belial leaps between Phoebe and the Hydra to clap her hands.

CRACK!!

A thunderous shockwave fires from Belial's palms, sending her flying backward to hit the ground while also knocking the Hydra for a loop. Both of the Hydra's heads swing around like an inverted rope and smash against the monster's back, momentarily stunning it.

"Skree?"

Having only one head intact, the Hydra evaluates its other three mangled and broken limbs with a sinister gaze.

Phoebe continues tearing through the orc horde, while Belial smirks at the Hydra.

"Skree, indeed."

The few remaining wyverns fly higher into the sky, unable to figure out how they can take out the humans. The orcs howl angrily, only to end up as pulverized mush when Phoebe stampedes over top of them, while the Goblins flee into the distance.

With all four monster groups in total disarray, a smile flashes over my face.

Victory is in our grasp!

However, the unthinkable happens.

The Hydra's remaining head lunges toward the necks of its other disfigured heads. It rips the necks off and shrills in rage, as six new heads grow from the stumps of the former ones.

My eyes widen.

The Hydra tore off the flesh I sealed, allowing it to regenerate its heads again! That no-good cheating bastard!

"SKREEEE!"

A deafening howl bursts from all seven of the Hydra's mouths. It lunges across the ground and attacks in seven different directions, targeting Phoebe, Belial, and numerous injured soldiers as well.

"Shit! Teleport!"

I aim my mind at the Hydra and speak a word of power. An instant later, the Hydra vanishes and reappears several football fields away, directly beneath me, its heads diving into the dirt and striking thin air.

"Guhurk!"

Burning pain blooms in my chest. Unexpected feedback courses through my body from teleporting such a colossal monster without thought to my energy reserves. All of my mana vanishes, causing my skin to turn ashen.

My wings lose their strength. The ground rushes at me. As I fall, the last thing I see is a Hydra's head lunging toward my plummeting form.

Part 177: Deadly Hydration

Several minutes earlier.

Jason, Phoebe, and Belial shoot a look of surprise at Henry as the young man breaks away from them and rushes over to reinforce his fellow soldiers. However, he pays the three of them no mind and quickly crosses the battlefield to arrive at his comrade's sides.

Dozens of bodies lay lifelessly strewn about here and there. A one-armed woman slashes with her sword at one of the Hydra's legs, ignoring the pain from her severed limb. Blood flows freely from its stump, but her nanite-armor doesn't manage to seal off the injury like it usually would. Due to the immense damage her suit has taken, the soldier can only spend her last moments trying to wound the Behemoth-class monster.

Henry grinds his teeth as he evaluates the woman's condition. Kyra is too injured for me to save. Compared to the soldiers in the Core, the Tarus reserve personnel are pathetic! They're barely putting up a fight against these monsters!

The young soldier runs past the injured woman and flicks his gaze toward a group of men and women using teamwork to fend off the assault of the wyverns above. The lightning-type wyverns rain electricity upon them, destabilizing their nanite suits, while the fire-type wyverns unleash infernal blasts, cooking them alive.

As Henry clears the gap between himself and the others, he calls out a single word. "Boost!"

The group of soldiers turn their heads in his direction. Upon seeing a painted yellow line across the incoming soldier's chest, their hearts leap for joy.

Ah! That man is a member of the Core personnel! He's a lieutenant!

We're saved!

Henry jumps toward them and stretches out his leg. As if on cue, the group of low-ranked soldiers clump together and extend their palms outward to catch his foot. Then, they hurl him straight upward, aiming for the wyverns above. Henry coils his leg to combine his strength with theirs. The moment his fellow soldiers throw him skyward, he unleashes the power in his body to triple their kinetic force, giving himself a massive burst of speed.

Halfway into his jump, Henry taps a button on his T-REX and summons a nano-bladed sword, one with an edge sharp enough to lop down a tree in a single swing. He curls it below his waist, and at the last second, swings it upward.

Swish!

An unlucky fire-type wyvern takes its last breath as Henry decapitates it with a single swing. Unlike the awkward motions of the soldiers below him, those too weak to enter the Core's fighting forces, his experience and battle prowess reaches several tiers beyond them. With a single move, he wipes out one of the fearsome enemies terrorizing Tarus II's reserve forces as if it were a flying ant.

Henry's eyes flash as he throws his nanite-sword. It shoots from his hand like a bullet and rushes straight at an ice-type wyvern. The wyrm screeches in pain and plummets to the ground below, where it perishes on impact. The sword continues into the distance, disappearing into the mountains, never to be seen again.

Lieutenant Henry finally loses his momentum and descends toward the planet's surface. With a quick flick of his legs, he deftly spins around in midair and lands on the ground feet-first, allowing his T-REX to absorb the brunt of the impact.

Damn, Henry thinks. I only managed to kill two wyverns. Compared to Commander Hope's battle prowess, I am sorely lacking. Even without tapping into his Wordsmithing, he could wipe me out with his physical strength alone. I'll have to train harder if I hope to win Miss Oshina's favor!

For a brief moment, an image of a beautiful, white-haired woman appears in Henry's mind.

Miss Oshina is the only person I will ever love! I'll do anything for her, including eradicating these so-called 'heroes.' Even if it costs me my life, I won't allow these damned demon-worshippers to take over humanity.

Henry tilts his head slightly. Even in the heat of battle, his sharpened instincts afford him a moment to shoot a hate-filled glance at Jason, the leader of Tarus II.

For Commander Neil to have been taken in by the honey-filled words of Hope, that shows how dangerous these demon-loving bastards are. Where else could their powers come from, if not some unholy pact with our enemies? Only a fool would believe they possess some 'divine' power. Humans must rely on our strength, and nothing else. Once I expose Jason and Hope's deceitful plots, Neil will have no choice but to recognize me as his inheritor. With that, I'll finally be able to win Miss Oshina's heart!

The young Lieutenant swallows his seething rage and immediately returns his attention to the monsters around him.

A lightning-type wyvern fires a thunder-orb at the group of soldiers who helped Henry only a moment before. Without any hesitation, Henry leaps toward a boulder, wraps his arms around it, and uses the T-REX's power to rip the rock from the ground. With a weight of nearly two tons, the stone would crush any human under ordinary circumstances, but Henry hoists it onto his shoulders as though it were an infant.

"Huff!"

Henry hurls the boulder over the other soldier's heads. An instant before the orb of lightning strikes them, Henry's makeshift shield crosses its path.

Thoom!

The rock shatters into a thousand pieces after absorbing the brunt of the wyvern's attack. However, thanks to Henry's swift movements, he manages to save the lives of the other soldiers by dissipating the wyvern's electric energy before it can reach their nanites.

"Lieutenant! Thank you!"

One of the soldiers offers a quick word of thanks before turning his attention to the sky. The wyvern above starts to unleash another attack, only for it to squawk in surprise.

"Skraw?!"

Jason's Wordsmithing strikes it and the other remaining lightning-type wyverns with a mental attack. Disoriented, the three of them plummet from the skies and strike the earth with a thunderous crash.

Henry smiles. Jason and Hope might be traitors to humanity, but they still have to put on airs to protect their righteous image. It's like Miss Oshina said: they can't afford to have others second-guess them, now. It's all part of their ploy to reduce our wariness!

Shaking his head, Henry leaps at the stunned wyverns and rears back for a punch. No matter what, the other humans are innocent! They can't help being deceived by these ungodly hellspawn! I'll protect everyone and prove I'm the true hero!

Unleashing all of his pent-up rage, Henry swings his fist forward and batters one of the wyverns right in the head. The monster doesn't have time to react as its skull bursts like a balloon.

At the same time, the remaining soldiers work together to impale and dice apart the two remaining wyverns, leaving three corpses behind to clean up later.

"Pass me your blade!" Henry yells, aiming his attention at the nearest soldier. Without hesitation, the woman turns around and flings her weapon toward him. Henry snatches it from the air and nods.

"Lieutenant!" The woman says, offering him a quick nod. "We're here to help!"

"Let's take down the Hydra!" Henry says, sweeping his gaze to ten nearby soldiers. Follow my commands, and this brute won't last long!"

The woman pauses for a moment. "But sir! Whenever we cut off a head, it grows two more! How can we defeat something which has no weaknesses?"

Henry snorts. "Everything has a weakness, soldier! Aim for the body. Leave the heads to the damned- I mean, leave them to Commander Hiro! We have to slow the monster down so Jason can kill it."

"I... I see! We'll do whatever you say, sir!"

The woman and her comrades nod in unison. They begin executing battle strategies according to Henry's commands.

Minutes pass.

Henry works in tandem with the other soldiers to cut the Hydra's belly and legs. While doing so, he shoots glances at Jason and Phoebe from time to time, but his gaze lingers the longest on Belial.

Belial pounds one of the Hydra's heads backward with tremendous force, shattering its jaw. Henry's complexion pales when he sees this.

Tch. As expected of the Second Emperor. The infiltrator possesses fearsome strength! Ten of our mightiest warriors wouldn't stand a chance, not even if they ambushed her in the dead of night. It's no wonder Miss Oshina ordered me to keep an eye on her.

His eyes flick toward Phoebe.

Before the devil-worshipper and the Second Emperor beguiled her; Miss Berthold was a wonderful woman capable of rallying an army to her side. But now, I can't look at her with anything but disgust. She's fallen for the lies spoken by the so-called Hero, believing demons and humans can actually work together. Gah! How sickening. Just the thought of her betrayal nauseates me. Phoebe's day of reckoning will soon arrive, and when it does...

Henry clenches his fist and smashes it against one of the Hydra's legs. Even with his enhanced strength and the power of the T-REX, he barely manages to dent the monster's carapace.

Phoebe won't have anywhere to escape!

Suddenly, with his fist still pressed against the Hydra's leg, a falling sensation engulfs Henry's mind. The young lieutenant gasps as an invisible field of energy swallows him.

Foop!

He, along with the Hydra and a few other soldiers, disappear from the foot of the Warpgate Pavilion and reappear several football fields away. Yanked over by some unknown force, Henry raises his head to the skies in confusion.

There, he witnesses an unbelievable sight.

Jason, the Hero of humanity; the devil-worshipper with ill-gotten powers from the underworld, loses control of his body and plummets limply toward the Hydra's open maw.

The behemoth eagerly opens its mouth as it senses the aura of the one who has spent the last fifteen minutes oppressing it and its comrades.

Across the battlefield, where the Hydra stood only a moment earlier, Phoebe's eyes widen in horror as her husband plunges into the monster's shark-like mouth.

"JASOOON!! NOOOO!"

She barely manages to take a single step before Jason lands inside the creature's gullet.

Gulp.

The Hydra swallows Jason whole and shrieks in delight. "Skreeeee!!"

The taste of the Hero permeates its body. Jason's rich heroic energy immediately absorbs into the Hydra, enriching its vitality.

Belial whips her head around and stares in horror as she realizes what's happened.

"Oh, devils!"

The Hydra's seven heads raise to the sky. It howls like a wolf as mana erupts from every pore of its body.

Phoebe dashes toward the Hydra. Tears bubble in her eyes as she tries not to imagine the awful pain Jason must be suffering as the Hydra digests him.

"Jason... Jason... don't be dead... please, don't be dead!"

As Phoebe runs, Belial suddenly appears at her side. The Second Emperor matches her speed to Phoebe's.

"Phoebe! Slow down! Listen to me! You can't fight the Hydra; you're no match for it, now!"

"Don't try to stop me!" Phoebe screams. Her voice cracks as raw emotions tug at her heart. "That bastard is eating my husband! It's swallowing Jason as we speak!!"

Belial's expression turns grim. "The Hydra isn't like other monsters! It seeks out prey with high levels of mana and absorbs their energy to fuel itself. With Jason's mana purity, he should be able to survive for several minutes. We have to come up with a plan! If you rush in there, the Hydra will kill you!"

"Better me than Jason!" Phoebe yells. "He's the Hero! I have to save him! I can't let him die!"

Both women race across the battlefield, clearing the distance within seconds. They grind to a halt a hundred meters from the Hydra and gaze up at the monster as its ocean-blue skin slowly shifts into a whiter shade reminiscent of the clouds. Jason's pure heroic energy floods through its body, tripling its offensive and defensive capabilities. The monster balloons in size, from fifty-feet in height to over a hundred and fifty!

The Hydra's size increase startles Phoebe, causing her to retreat a few steps. Where before, it was a mere Behemoth-class existence, now it approaches the pinnacle of a Titan-class monster. Radiant energy ripples from the Hydra's body, penetrating Phoebe's T-REX armor to leave her in a cold sweat.

"W-we have to save Jason! Why are we standing around, doing nothing?!"

Belial's gaze hardens. "The last time I fought a Hydra, it was two-thirds the size of this one. I had the help of Diablo, Mephisto, and Bael, yet killing the bastard took us seven hours. With my capabilities alone, the best I can do is knock it around. By now, its intelligence has surely reached that of a human's!"

Phoebe blinks. She stares at the howling Hydra in disbelief. "We... we need Hope's help! If he comes here, we'll be able to stop the Hydra and save Jason!"

After hearing Phoebe's idea, Belial's expression loosens up, and a spark appears in her eyes. "That's right! Phoebe, you go and tell the others to radio Hope! By now, the Core personnel should have been alerted. I'll try to hold the Hydra off! If we can hold out until Hope arrives, we might be able to save-"

Before Belial can finish her sentence, the Hydra exits its trance and lasers onto the insects at its feet. It charges forward at a terrifying speed and snaps several of its heads at the women, intending to kill them in one blow.

"Shit!"

Phoebe shoves Belial away and leaps to the side, narrowly avoiding a gruesome death. The Hydra's heads smash against the planet's soil, causing it to eat huge mouthfuls of dirt.

Indignant, the Hydra screeches at the insects who narrowly avoided their doom. "Skreee!!"

"Over here, you big, ugly turtle!" Belial yells. Her words pierce the air and catch the Hydra's attention. With its newly enhanced intelligence, the beast comprehends her meaning and tilts its head toward her.

"Skree? Skree."

The monster's formerly shrill shrieking dies down, and a more menacing tone enters its voice. The Hydra's pitch-black reptilian eyes fall on Belial, and all seven of its heads swivel to face her.

A few scattered thoughts pass through the Hydra's mind as it evaluates the tiny little demon who insulted it.

I smell demonic mana. This one is a threat. If I consume it, I will become stronger.

A ferocious light appears in the Hydra's eyes. All seven of its heads pivot toward Belial to focus on her exclusively, and a moment later, it lunges toward her with five times the intensity it did before.

Crash! Crash! Crash!

Each head sweeps toward her with the killing intent of a viper nest. Belial charges toward the Hydra and stretches her fists out to knock aside and pummel any of the heads that get too close. Over and over, she smashes and punches the Hydra with all of her strength, but unlike before, the Hydra takes little damage from her attacks. Instead, agony sprouts in her arms, almost as if she were a child punching brick walls repeatedly.

"Augh! Shit! I knew the Hydra would become stronger, but this is ridiculous! Hold on, Jason!"

While Belial battles the Hydra, Phoebe retreats as quickly as she can and races back to the Warpgate Pavilion. She doesn't even glance at the fallen soldiers this time, nor the corpses of the wyverns. Instead, she pushes her speed to the limits and charges into the portal.

Whump!

Phoebe collides with a tall, green monster and ends up tripping against him. Both of them tumble down the warpgate's stairs and hit the ground with a thunderous boom, rattling the teeth of the nearby troopers.

"White-hair?" The monster asks.

Phoebe raises her head to see the familiar face of Kar, the reptilian Sphinx, as he stares at her, dumbfounded. "W-whaddya doing in here? We were about to come to you!"

Phoebe blinks. She jumps off Kar and glances around. Two hundred heavily armed soldiers, each with one or more yellow stripes across their chests, look at her in surprise.

Unlike the reserve troops on Tarus II, the mere presence of these well-trained soldiers sends shivers down the backs of their enemies. Having fought in the Labyrinth under Hope and Neil for the last six years, each one's accumulated battle experience makes them a ferocious enemy to demonkind.

"It's terrible!" Phoebe says, hastily explaining the situation. "There's a Hydra on Tarus II! It swallowed Jason and increased its power explosively! We need help! Where's Hope? He has to come here right this instant!"

Kar nods. "Hurgh. We know. I had to take a few minutes to gather the troops, but don't worry! I already sent Rabbit an SOS. He'll get the signal soon."

Phoebe's agitation doesn't vanish. Instead, she starts to shake and tremble. "You did? Where is he? Why isn't he here yet? Jason is going to die!"

Kar nods at the troopers, and all of them quickly charge over to the portal and pass through, leaving Kar behind with Phoebe. "Don't worry! We don't have a portal pointed toward Maiura, so it'll take us a few minutes to connect. Once we call, Rabbit will teleport here!"

Phoebe nods frantically, then turns around and heads back to the portal, dragging Kar along behind her. "Come on! We have to activate Tarus's orbital defenses! If Hope doesn't show, it will be our only method for dealing with the Hydra! Samantha can't... she can't handle it on her own!"

Kar stumbles after Phoebe and hurriedly activates his T-REX. The slender, muscular body of the Sphinx abruptly disappears as nanites surge from his chest and swallow him whole. A moment later, he replies. "I'll help her out, don't you worry!"

Both of them disappear into the portal. The moment they pass through, Phoebe pauses. She stares into the distance and sees something that makes her heart stop.

"H-huh? What... what happened?"

Kar pauses beside her. He stares uncomprehendingly at the massive lake of blood and gore coating the battlefield half a mile away.

A horrible stench wafts across the region, capable of sickening anyone unequipped with a T-REX. The odor of iron and copper fills the air as the sea of plasma slowly spreads out and seeps into the ground.

Phoebe stares at the spot where the Hydra stood only a minute earlier. Now, nothing remains.

"The Hydra... is dead?"

Suddenly, Kar raises his finger to point at the sky. "Look! Isn't that Jason, up there?"

A smile crosses Phoebe's face. Tears flow freely as she gazes upon the majestic sight of her husband levitating in the sky. His body exudes the warm aura of a hero.

"Oh, Creator... he didn't die. My husband is still alive. Thank you... thank you!"

Jason hovers in the sky for several seconds. Below him, standing amidst the lake of blood, Belial stares, uncomprehendingly.

"How did he do it? Jason shouldn't have had a drop of mana left. Isn't that why he fainted? Then... how did he...?"

As Belial stares in disbelief at the man levitating above her, the hairs on the back of her neck slowly prick up, one by one. Jason doesn't fly down to greet her. Instead, the Hero of humanity slowly, deliberately, aims one finger at the succubus below him.

Fwip.

A dot of energy fires from his fingertip. Barely making the faintest of sounds, the seemingly harmless marble rushes toward Belial faster than she can react.

Fwoomp.

A near-silent explosion of energy detonates inches from Belial's face. Holy Energy irradiates the spot where she stands, resulting in a blast radius of over a hundred meters. Belial doesn't get a chance to scream as her vision turns bright white.

Phoebe and Kar stare with horror-filled eyes as the leader of humanity launches a lethal attack at the Second Emperor of demonkind.

Phoebe's vision wavers as she tries to comprehend her husband's actions.

"J-Jason... why... what...?"

Kar says nothing. However, a wave of killing intent emits from his eyes.

That person ain't Turtle.

He's a demon.

Part 178: Helpless Belial

Recommended Listening

Every inch of Belial's body begs for mercy. The moment Jason's holy energy bomb detonates, her consciousness falls to pieces. She crashes into the ground as the divine power of the angels hits her where she's weakest.

The world falls silent.

Belial lays motionless in the dirt, her head reeling from the unexpected assault. She stares into the sky as several seconds later, her vision slowly returns, little more than a spotty haze. The Second Emperor of Demonkind coughs weakly, while the one who assaulted her folds his hands behind his back.

"Juh... Jason...? He... attacked... me?"

Belial wheezes. The Hero's holy energy ravages her internal organs, causing immense pain. Even so, she merely grits her teeth and scowls at the winged-human levitating above her. With her incredible strength as a Demon Emperor, even angelic mana doesn't instantly kill her, despite how it would a subordinate of inferior rank.

Belial twitches her finger and raises a shaking arm to touch her chest. Intending to heal herself, she nearly succeeds before a flicker of movement to her left catches her off-guard.

CRACK!!

A fist bigger than a truck, formed from the wind itself, tears across the ground and uppercuts Belial into the sky. Her body spins and careens as she flies toward the Wordsmith levitating above her.

Suddenly, another fist appears! It strikes Belial from above and sends her tumbling to the planet's surface below. The succubus coughs blood as she falls.

Whump!

Belial hits the dirt with enough speed to crush an ordinary human into a puddle of gore. Despite her incredibly resilient demon body, several of her bones fracture and break, causing her immense pain.

"Ah... augh..."

Belial lays on her back and whimpers pitifully. Her chest rises and falls in short, stuttery motions. Her mind spins like a bowling ball, unable to make out her surroundings. No matter how she tries, the succubus can't calm the terror running through her veins. Her blood turns to ice as another fist hits her and sends her flying to the side.

Meanwhile, a short distance away, Henry and his four fellow soldiers stare at the unexpected sight in total disbelief. The young Lieutenant presses one of his hands against the side of his helmet, even as he tries to make sense of why Jason is attacking Belial with such vicious, bloodthirsty intentions.

"Jason is going to kill Samantha!" One of the nearby soldiers yells. "We have to stop him! That succubus is important to us! She healed one of my friends from a fatal wound. We can't let the Commander tear her to pieces!"

"You saw what he did to the Hydra," A female soldier says. "Commander Jason blew the beast up from the inside-out. It was as if he detonated a bomb in the center of a lake of blood. How in the hell are we supposed to fight against that?"

Henry grits his teeth. "We don't, and we can't. Stand down. If the Commander is attacking the succubus, then we let him. He must have a good reason! Besides, everyone knows she's the Second Emperor. I'm sure he has a good reason!"

"But... Jason clearly isn't acting like himself! I've never seen him do something like this before! Not ever!"

"Then maybe that's proof he found out something horrifying!" Henry bellows. He jerks his head toward the female soldier and scowls at her. Due to the opaque nature of his helmet, she can't see his expression, but his tense body movements betray the anger boiling in his heart. "Commander Neil has always said we were wrong to accept a goddamned Emperor of Demonkind into our ranks! How do you know Jason hasn't learned something important during his fight against the Hydra? Maybe that bitch summoned it here! Did you ever think about that?!"

The female soldier takes a step back. Her confidence wavers under Henry's onslaught. "N-no, I... I..."

"Then keep your mouth shut, soldier! That's an order! We'll retreat and leave the Commander to his business!"

As Henry yells, a deep voice booms from the direction of the portal. "Hey! Turtle! What in the name of tarnation are you doing! Stop, dammit! STOP!!"

A massive soldier, four feet taller than those around him, stomps across the battlefield at nearly a hundred miles an hour. His feet crash against the ground with deep thunderous booms, leaving two-inch depressions in his wake. With huge, sweeping strides, he barrels toward Jason and Belial to try and save the succubus, paying no heed to his safety.

A short distance behind him, a slender soldier with a plasma rifle matches his speed, following him as he crosses the battlefield. "Jason! Stop it! Stop hurting Sammy!"

Kar and Phoebe dash across the torn-up field. As humanity's fourth and fifth strongest warriors, only they dare to stand up to the rampaging Wordsmith and save their friend. Nevertheless, no matter how loudly they yell, Jason merely folds his hands behind his back and stares at the succubus beneath him while battering her limp body wherever he pleases. Jason's windborn fists pummel Belial ferociously, turning her unmoving figure into a ragdoll.

Kar leaps forward and intercepts Belial as Jason sends her spinning across the torn-up plains. The reptilian Sphinx catches her broken body in his arms and envelops her in a protective embrace. Immediately, Jason's assault comes to a stop.

"What's wrong with you?!" Phoebe shrieks. Her gaze falls upon Belial, and a shudder goes down her spine. "Stop attacking Sam! Stop it, right this instant!"

Jason doesn't respond. He slowly flaps his wings and continues to fly in the sky. A moment later, the sound of rushing air envelops Kar.

Foop!

Kar vanishes, causing Belial's body to flop to the ground.

The Sphinx reappears at the warp-gate, a look of confusion on his face. He jerks his head around to gaze at his new location in bewilderment. "Huh? I was over there, and now I'm here... teleportation?"

The moment Kar vanishes, another fist materializes beside Belial and smashes her with all its strength, sending her careening across the ground. In the blink of an eye, a giant boulder appears in Belial's path, causing her to crash into it and come to a shuddering stop. The succubus offers no resistance, her comatose form unable to retaliate against Jason's brutal attacks.

This time, Phoebe dives forward. With tears in her eyes, she leaps atop the Second Emperor and shields her with her body. "Jason! Stop!!"

Foop!

Phoebe vanishes.

She teleports to Kar's side, traveling several football fields in the blink of an eye.

Enraged, Phoebe realizes what has happened far quicker than Kar. "Aaaargh! Kar, I don't know what's wrong with Jason's head, but Samantha won't last much longer! We have to stop him!"

Without replying, Kar jumps forward and dives into the ground. He activates his earth manipulation magic and begins swimming at twice his running speed. Phoebe dashes forward, using her enhanced agility to try and match his pace, but Kar easily outdoes her. Within seconds, right after Jason resumes attacking the helpless demoness beneath him, the soil suddenly opens up, and Belial falls into a depression. Kar engulfs her in dirt and yanks her deep into the depths of the planet.

Then, the Sphinx bursts out of the ground and pounces into the sky. With Jason hovering a hundred feet over the battlefield, Kar clears the gap in a single second. Fifty pounds of rock and dirt coil around the Sphinx's fist as he rears back to punch the Wordsmith in the chest.

Foop!

Jason vanishes, causing the Croco-Sphinx to hit nothing but air. Kar falls from the sky and lands on his feet, hitting the dirt with a deep whump!

"What? Where'd Turtle go?!"

Kar turns around, only to see Jason hovering a few feet above the dirt. The Wordsmith tilts his head downward, and a second later...

Foop!

Belial materializes aboveground, still unconscious. With her arms twisted and legs mangled, her appearance is like that of a broken corpse. Kar spares her the briefest of glances, but he can't tell if she's alive anymore.

"Turtle... looks like I'll hafta knock some sense into ya..."

The crocodile narrows his eyes menacingly. Killing intent spirals in his body, causing him to grit his teeth in rage.

Crack! Pop!

Kar's bones rapidly shift and reorient themselves. He leans forward and lands on his hands as his body morphs from an upright humanoid form into a four-legged animal body. His T-REX shifts along with his motions, having long since adapted to his unique physiology.

Seconds later, Jason slugs Belial again, flinging her into the sky. At that moment, massive eagle wings sprout from Kar's back. Now in his ultimate Sphinx form, Kar roars like a tiger and charges at Jason.

"Time for a nap, little turtle!!"

His claws lash out at Jason, but right before they hit...

Foop!

Jason teleports away, causing Kar to miss. The instant Jason reappears, Kar's heightened senses hone in on the Wordsmith. Kar leaps into the sky to chase after him.

Unlike before, thanks to his newly-acquired wings, Kar manages to chase after Jason as the Wordsmith repeatedly teleports to random locations. Kar focuses his senses and quickly notices something astonishing.

When Turtle teleports, there's a faint trail of mana that appears for a split-second! If I focus harder, I can predict his movements!

Despite the rage boiling in Kar's chest, he doesn't allow his emotions to get the best of himself. Instead, he places all of his attention on catching Jason so he can beat some sense into him.

Even if Big Boobs survives, she'll end up crippled and traumatized! Turtle has never been this violent, so what changed? Bah! I need to knock him out so I can get some answers!

Kar twists and somersaults in midair, then lunges toward Jason again. All the while, as Kar engages in combat with the Wordsmith, Phoebe slows to a stop below both of them.

Jason's wife stares at her husband with agitated eyes. Her entire body shivers and trembles as she imagines how badly she wants to wring his neck.

You prick! I was worried about you, but you turned out just fine and even killed the Hydra! Now, what the hell are you doing? How am I supposed to save Sammy?!

"Centurion, I need to speak to Jason! Open up an emergency communication line with him!"

"PILOT ZERO-ZERO-TWO, I CANNOT EXECUTE YOUR ORDER. PILOT ZERO-ZERO-THREE HAS DISABLED HIS COMMUNICATOR. I AM UNABLE TO ESTABLISH COMMUNICATION WITH HIS EXOSUIT."

Phoebe's expression turns ashen. "I made these stupid suits! Don't I have higher administrative rights than Jason?"

"NEGATIVE. PILOT ZERO-ZERO-THREE POSSESSES THE HIGHEST LEVEL OF COMMAND IN THE EXOSUIT INTERFACE. WITHOUT HIS PERMISSION, OR PERMISSION FROM PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR, I AM UNABLE TO ESTABLISH A COMMUNICATION LINK."

"Only Hope can deactivate the communications block?"

"AFFIRMATIVE."

"Fuck!"

Phoebe balls her hands into fists and punches her hips.

"I have to save Sam! I have to! But how can I beat Jason if he can simply teleport away?"

As Phoebe's thoughts race, Belial suddenly falls from the sky, having been battered by Jason yet again.

Boom!

The succubus crashes into the ground a short distance away from Phoebe, startling her.

"Sammy? Sam?!"

Phoebe jumps in fright and rushes over to Belial's side. Her face turns green as she gazes upon the horrible wounds inflicted upon the succubus.

"Oh, god, oh, god..."

The Wordsmith's wife trembles as she nudges Belial's swollen arm. Countless bruises and swollen patches of skin turn the succubus from a glowing shade of red to a miserable mess of black and blue.

Phoebe glances upward, where Kar continues flying after Jason. This time, Jason takes his attention off Belial to focus on dodging the Sphinx's attacks.

No matter how fast Kar jumps, spins, or flies, Jason always teleports away at the last second, causing the Sphinx to slash at the empty air. Over and over, Kar pursues the Wordsmith, only for his attacks to end up causing no damage.

"Dammit! Stand still!" Kar bellows. "I've gotta teach you a lesson!"

Phoebe narrows her eyes.

Jason hasn't retaliated against Kar once. So far, the only person he's attacked was Sam. But why? What reason could he have for attacking our friend? She's healed him on several occasions! They shouldn't have any enmity, yet ever since his encounter with the Hydra...

Gears whirr and click into place in Phoebe's head. Puzzle pieces click together, but several irregularities still don't fit together, leaving her perplexed and stifled.

Could my husband be under someone's mind control? That might be it! Otherwise, why would he ever attack Samantha?

Like a bolt of lightning, that realization causes the hair on the back of Phoebe's neck to stand on end.

Years ago, Jason told me that an attack on his mind caused Solomon's awakening. Solomon first appeared to help Jason from succumbing to someone else's control, but now that Solomon's protection has disappeared, Jason is vulnerable again!

The last puzzle piece clicks in place.

It's Ose! Ose took over Jason's mind, somehow. That has to be it! She nearly succeeded once, and if she has learned that Jason lacks Solomon's protection, she'd leap into action without hesitation!

Countless conversations whirl in Phoebe's mind as she remembers all the days she's spent talking to Belial, especially when Jason wasn't present.

Belial and Ose have a massive grudge between the two of them. From what I've gathered, Belial and Ose hate each other like nobody's business. If so, then it would explain why Jason has only aimed for Belial all this time!

While Phoebe ruminates, Kar and Jason continue to cross blows. Over and over, Kar lunges at Jason, his speed increasing all the time.

I see it! I see it! Kar's inner voice howls. There's a line of mana showing where Turtle is about to teleport! If I can get ahead of him...

Unbeknownst to the Sphinx, as he battles the Wordsmith, his body begins to adapt to the frantic pace of battle. Having only fought small-fry demons over the last several years, the maturing crocodile hasn't gone all-out in a battle since his ascension to Sphinx.

But now, with his battle against the Wordsmith, and his eager desire to inflict a killing blow, his body begins to morph and adapt, increasing his speed to levels beyond where he started minutes earlier.

As the Sphinx chases the Wordsmith, Phoebe watches them from below. A creeping dread appears in her mind, as her initial theory begins to waver.

Ose might be controlling Jason. However, if that's the case, why is he only interested in killing Samantha? Why not Kar, or me? Would Ose only harbor a grudge toward Sam, but not the rest of us? No... that doesn't make any sense.

CRACK!

Kar swipes his claw out and finally manages to tag Jason's arm, causing the Wordsmith to transform into a spinning top right after he teleports. Jason gyrates uncontrollably in the sky and loses his ability to fly. A moment later, he plummets to the earth below and hits the dirt with a tremendous bang!

"Hahahaha! I knew it! You're slowing down, Turtle!" Kar laughs, oblivious to his improving speed. "Now that I've tired you out, it's time to put you to bed!"

Kar flaps his wings. He rushes toward the Wordsmith below and raises a meaty paw. He aims for the back of Jason's head, but, at the last second, a fist formed from condensed holy energy materializes between Jason and the Sphinx. Kar doesn't even get a second to react before it smashes his exosuit's chest.

THOOMPH!

The wordsmithed fist hits Kar like a freight train, sending him flying backward. The Sphinx smashes into Tarus's plains, bounces off the ground two times, and skids to a stop.

"Ow... owie... ooh..."

With a single sneak attack, Jason knocks the Croco-Sphinx out. Immediately, he levitates into the air and aims his gaze at Phoebe and Belial.

"No!" Phoebe exclaims. She jumps in front of Belial to shield the succubus with her body, despite knowing the action is futile.

Instead of teleporting the succubus into his grasp, Jason freezes. A split second later, his body vanishes.

Foop!

Immediately after, another figure appears, only inches from where he hovered before.

Hope.

The second Wordsmith, leader of humanity's military, swings his fist at the empty air and frowns.

"He disappeared?"

PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR! PILOT ZERO-ZERO-THREE TELEPORTED AWAY THE MOMENT YOU ARRIVED. I HYPOTHESIZE THAT HE ANTICIPATED YOUR ARRIVAL.

"Right..."

Hope sweeps his gaze around the battlefield, only to see Jason levitating several hundred feet behind him. The armored Wordsmith says nothing as he stares down his unarmored clone.

"Long time, no see," Hope mutters. "Got nothing to say for yourself?"

Jason doesn't respond.

However, below both combatants, Phoebe raises her voice. "Hope! There's something wrong with Jason! He attacked Samantha! I suspect someone might have mind-controlled him!"

Hope flicks his gaze down to the two women below him. He raises an eyebrow at the sight of the badly-injured succubus cradled in Phoebe's arms.

Jason attacked Belial? That makes no sense. I might do something like that, but there's no way Jason would.

Hope evaluates Jason carefully as he considers his options.

Meanwhile, below, Phoebe stares at Hope in disbelief.

Hope is levitating, just like Jason, but he isn't using wings! Jason told me that trying to fly without wings was extremely difficult. Does that mean Hope's flying abilities are superior to Jason's?

And look at how scruffy Hope's become! I haven't seen him in months. He looks the same as Jason but also more... threatening.

Phoebe scrutinizes Hope's appearance, shocked at the three-day-old facial hair he hasn't taken care of. However, the one thing she doesn't see is Solomon's Crown, now invisible thanks to Hope's Wordsmithing.

Hope narrows his mind. Solomon. What's wrong with Jason? Why is he attacking Belial and the others?

Solomon shrugs. Does the reason matter? If he kills the Second Emperor, you won't have to worry about a shape-shifting infiltrator in your midst.

Right. I'm not saying I oppose the idea, but... this isn't like Jason at all. I don't like this one bit. It smells like some fuckery's going on.

Hope's expression turns grim.

If anyone is going to kill the Demon Emperor lurking in our midst; it'll be me. I can't let Jason take my glory.

Solomon nods. Very well. If that's how you feel, I'll let you in on a secret.

A secret?

Yes. Indeed, Jason isn't in his right mind. When I transferred my crown to you, I left behind a portion of my soul in his mind in case of emergencies. Since the Hydra nearly killed him, it must have taken over.

Hope's eyes widen.

You did WHAT?! Solomon! What the fuck is wrong with you?

It's a protective measure. Only you and I know about this. If you let Jason rampage a little while longer, my soul can kill the succubus. You won't have to lift a finger. Once she dies, you can return Jason to normal and blame Ose. Nobody will know the difference, and you'll eliminate a threat from our ranks.

Solomon pauses.

What do you think of my plan? Brilliant, isn't it? You'll delegitimize Jason as the first commander, kill the succubus, and have a shot at taking over. Don't you find the idea enticing?

Hope stares at Jason, and Jason stares back. Neither Wordsmith makes a move. From the ground below, Phoebe can only wonder what thoughts are going through their heads.

Why isn't Jason attacking Belial anymore? Why doesn't Hope make a move?

Solomon smiles. My soul recognizes you. He's waiting to see what we'll do. Given the situation, if I were in Jason's body, I would be seeking to cause as much harm to the demons as possible while pushing the blame on Ose. If you want, I can have him give up, while you can act as if you subdued him with your Wordsmithing.

An ominous glint appears in Hope's eyes.

No. I have a better idea. Can you communicate with your other soul?

I can.

Hope smirks. Good. A wise man once said, 'never let a tragedy go to waste.' Tell your other half to attack me, and don't hold back.

Solomon frowns. I beg your pardon? What would that accomplish?

Hope ignores the question.

Do it.

Solomon sighs. Haah. Very well. Don't come crying to me when Jason thrashes you.

I'd like to see him try.

* * *

Phoebe watches unblinkingly as both Wordsmiths stare each other down. Her husband gazes at Hope from within his metallic armor, while the unarmored Hope simply smirks at him.

What's happening? Phoebe asks herself. Why haven't they moved a muscle? Is Hope going to stop Jason? I need to say something! If Hope doesn't heal Belial, she'll die!

Phoebe opens her mouth to speak. "Hope-"

Before she can get her words out, Jason vanishes!

An instant later, Jason reappears before Hope with his fist raised and punches the other Wordsmith with all his strength!

CRACK!

A sonic boom explodes from the impact point, sending Hope flying backward. He crashes into the ground, only to perfectly backflip and stick the landing.

"You're not Jason!" Hope bellows. "Get out of his head!"

Phoebe's heart skips a beat. I knew it! Oh god, if Jason's attacking Hope, that must mean... Ose took over his mind! I have to get Samantha out of here! If both Wordsmiths fight, anything could happen!

Phoebe wraps both arms underneath Belial's body, then dashes toward the portal.

Please don't notice me! Please don't notice me!

She shoots a glance backward just in time to see Hope leap into the sky. He and Jason erupt in an explosive battle of kicks and punches, along with all manner of bizarre magical attacks!

Thank you, Hope! Phoebe says, internally. You have to stop Jason and get that demon out of his head! Protect Belial! We're counting on you!

As the Wordsmiths engage in battle, Hope shoots the briefest of glances toward Phoebe's retreating form. His face cracks open in a satisfied grin.

Good. Now I can go all-out.

Part 179: Wordsmith VS Wordsmith

By the time Phoebe makes it to the warp-gate encampment, the battle between Hope and Jason has already reached a deafening peak. She turns around to stare in wide-eyed shock as her husband and his clone exchange vicious, violent blows with one another.

Boom! Crack!

Jason and Hope flit toward each other like enraged dragons. With nearly a mile separating Phoebe from the Wordsmiths, she can't make out any of their words, but the planet-shaking power of their attacks makes her tremble in fear.

"I've never seen Jason unleash this much raw power! He should have burnt himself out when he teleported the Hydra. Where is he pulling all of that mana from?"

* * *

Hope bellows a word as he dodges another flight-enhanced punch. "Fall!"

Jason loses his ability to fly, but before he can fall more than twenty feet, he stabilizes himself and leaps toward Hope again.

"Haha! I'm having fun!" Hope laughs. "Solomon, this is great! You should take over Jason's body more often! I never have anyone strong to spar with."

Solomon shakes his head. "My soul can only control him while he's unconscious. Once he wakes up, my duplicate will fall asleep to recover its strength. My original intent was for my soul to provide him some protection against mind-control, but I may have had other thoughts in mind, as well."

Jason summons a sword made of holy energy. Just before he slashes Hope in half, Hope bellows, "Dissipate!"

The sword bursts into particles of light, causing Jason's slash to miss Hope by only half a second.

"I never thought Jason could be so ferocious!" Hope says. "Your fighting prowess with his body is nothing to sneeze at."

Solomon remains silent for a moment as the two Wordsmiths trade ten more attacks. Hope smashes his fist against Jason's nanite armor, causing humanity's leader to tumble toward the planet below. With a violent crash, he hits the dirt and sends hydra blood spraying in every direction.

"My control of Jason's body is quite good. However... don't underestimate him. Jason is always holding himself back out of fear of hurting others. If he were to go all-out, I don't know how long you'd last."

Hope smirks. "Come on, do you think I'm an idiot? I'm way stronger than my original body. I've killed far more demons than he could imagine. There's a league of difference between us."

"Indeed," Solomon mutters. "However, my other half isn't using his full ability to fight you. He's holding back so he won't strike any lethal blows. In a true life-or-death battle, things might not work out as smoothly as you'd expect."

Hope rolls his eyes. "Teleport."

Hope aims his palm at Jason as his original body appears a few feet away.

"Incinerate!"

A blast of fire, heated to nearly five thousand degrees, hits Jason like an erupting volcano. The sheer might of the inferno batters the other Wordsmith backward, sending Jason tumbling to the ground below. Before he strikes the planet's surface, Jason suddenly vanishes and reappears, his suit undamaged, and no sign of exertion in his movements.

Hope frowns. "Why isn't Jason's energy running out? Based on what I've gathered, he should have exhausted his mana when he fought the Hydra. How is he still fighting, despite that?"

Solomon chuckles. "Young grasshopper, you have much to learn. I've spent six years training Jason. I helped him reach new heights in his Wordsmithing, and thus, he acquired several backups. While you may have honed your fighting skills against the demons, you would be a fool to think Jason has sat on his laurels this whole time. He is more than a match for you."

With a slight tinge of condescension, Solomon leans forward and sneers. "Haven't you noticed, Hope? I haven't had Jason attack you with a tenth of his strength. He holds back on every attack because you couldn't handle his full power."

"Bullshit," Hope interjects. He scowls at the old man's image in his mind. "You're lying."

"I'm not. Keep your guard up. I'll intensify your 'training,' now."

Suddenly, Jason vanishes. Hope's eyes flick to the side as he senses a trail of mana rushing toward his back.

"Bastard!"

Jason reappears behind Hope with his palm aimed at the other Wordsmith's spine.

BOOM!

A sonic boom detonates behind Hope before he can react. The deafening roar jars Hope's senses and flings him forward, sending him into an uncontrolled free-fall as he tries to reorient his senses.

Foop!

Jason reappears in front of Hope a split-second before his clone hits the ground. Ten bolts of lightning fire from his palm and strike the other Wordsmith's body.

Crack, crack, crack!

Agonizing bursts of electricity flood through Hope's nervous system, causing his muscles to seize up. His momentum reverses under Jason's relentless assault, sending him flying in the opposite direction yet again. This time, Jason doesn't move as his clone plows into the field of bloody dirt headfirst.

"Guhuk!"

Hope crashes onto his back and coughs violently. The stench of Hydra blood assaults his senses, while an awful burning sensation scorches his skin. For several seconds, the nanites in Hope's body tremble and shiver as Centurion tries desperately to reboot his systems.

"H-Heal!"

Hope coughs out a word, and finally, the electrical currents in his body die down. He pants weakly and stares at his original body in horror.

"God... damn... how?! How could Jason fire so many lightning bolts? He shouldn't have the energy reserves to pull off a stunt like that!"

Solomon closes his eyes. He crosses his eyes and levitates in the air like an enlightened sage. "Ah, yes. That might seem to be the case, to the untrained eye. Of course, if Jason's body can only hold a certain amount of energy before he reaches his cap, who is to say he can't store some of it later for external use?"

Hope lays on his back and stares at the sky for a moment in disbelief.

"Store some of it later... fuck! FUCK! Why didn't I think of that? It's brilliant!"

Solomon blushes. "Oh, come now. It was nothing much. Just something I thought up on a whim. No big deal at all."

"What other insights did you impart upon my original body? Don't hold out on me now."

Solomon waves his hand flippantly. "Keep fighting, and you'll soon find out! There's no need to trouble me over such trifles!"

Hope jumps to his feet. "Inspect!"

His vision shifts slightly as his eyes fall upon Jason's nanite-protected body. Several detailed readouts appear, each one resembling a HUD from a video game. One of them catches Hope's eye.

"According to the energy sensor, there are eighty-seven marble-sized orbs contained within Jason's body. Each one harnesses an immense amount of spiritual energy. Don't tell me... Jason stores his energy inside them to use in an emergency?"

"That's right," Solomon says. "As you are now, even if I wasn't controlling Jason during this battle, you still wouldn't stand a chance."

"Yeah?" Hope asks, as a hint of suspicion appears in his eyes. "Then why did Jason faint when he fought the Hydra?"

Solomon sighs. "He's rusty."

"Rusty?"

"Yes. Jason hardly ever fights anyone but Phoebe, and he always holds back so he won't hurt her. During a life and death battle against the Hydra, he used too much mana and ran all of his energy dry at once. After he fainted, I took over."

Solomon continues. "Had he still possessed even one percent of his mana after teleporting the Hydra, he could have activated a Mana Bead and restored his energy instantly. Since he didn't, my soul sliver rescued him."

Hope strokes his stubble for a moment, then nods. "I see. You've given me a lot to think about. I always assumed Jason's skills were beneath me when it came to combat prowess, but I was wrong. I'll have to work harder to surpass him."

"Good. Humility is an essential trait any leader should possess," Solomon remarks. "Barring warlords."

"Mmm."

Hope eyeballs Jason for several seconds.

"I'm nearly out of mana. If I continue fighting, I might die. I've always killed my demon adversaries in the most efficient way possible, so I never considered the possibility of engaging in a sustained battle. Go ahead and call the fight here, Solomon. Let Jason wake up."

Solomon hesitates. "Are you certain? Once Jason wakes up, he won't know of the events following his blackout. This is an invaluable opportunity for you to hone your skills."

"I've made up my mind," Hope growls. "Don't test me. Wake Jason up."

Hope's hardened gaze falls upon the heroic specter residing in his body. With a sigh, Solomon tosses his hands in the air. "Haah. Very well. If that is what you want, I will follow your orders. You're in charge, here."

Solomon motions with his hands toward the armored Wordsmith, but Hope's eyes narrow into slits.

Am I in charge? I wonder about that.

A moment later, Jason's body wobbles slightly. He stumbles forward and falls to the ground, splashing in the lake of Hydra blood with a sickening splort!

Hope takes a deep breath, then exhales a wave of turbid air. Moments later, his eyes soften, and a look of worry stretches across his face.

"Jason? Jason? Are you alright?"

Hope quickly runs over to his original body and flips him onto his back.

"Talk to me! Come on, man! You can't die here!"

After a few seconds, Jason's helmet eventually dissipates, revealing the Wordsmith's pale, exhausted face.

"Where... am I? Hope? What happened?"

When my eyes open, many questions appear in my mind. My clone rests his arm under my neck to help prop me up. A look of relief passes over his face as he stares at me.

"You're alive. Thank god! I thought you were a goner for a while."

"A goner? Where's the Hydra?"

I pull myself to my feet and frown as I evaluate my mana level. Currently, it appears to be nearly half-full. I remember fainting due to mana exhaustion... and then I fell down... the last thing I saw was the Hydra's mouth as it rushed toward me.

Holy shit! Did that bastard eat me? How am I still alive? I can't remember anything!

Hope smiles and raises his head to the sky. "Oh, Jason. If only you knew. I don't know the exact circumstances but... it seems you fainted, and shortly afterward, a demon took over your body!"

"What?!" I yell, shock jolting through my mind. "A demon? Who? When? How?!"

Hope sighs. "I think Ose was the culprit. She activated your Wordsmithing powers and tried to assassinate Belial. I came just in the nick of time and managed to save her, but then you started attacking me. Look over there! Phoebe and the others witnessed the whole thing."

My clone gestures into the distance, and I follow his gaze to the Core warpgate.

"If we fought, then what happened to Ose? Why isn't she controlling me anymore?"

Hope's expression turns complicated. "I used my Wordsmithing to banish her from your mind. Things looked pretty dicey for a while, but you're lucky I showed up. If I hadn't, she might have killed Belial, and who knows how many others? Maybe even Phoebe..."

As Hope speaks, it dawns on me just how close humanity came to having their so-called protector wipe them out. A shudder goes down my back.

"Wait, you said I nearly killed Belial. Is she okay? Where is she now?"

Hope purses his lips. An odd look appears in his eyes as he glances at the warpgate. "Over there. Phoebe rescued her during our battle. I didn't have time to heal her since you were attacking me with all your might. With any luck, she might still be alive..."

A surge of adrenaline courses through my body. I leap to my feet and aim my mind at the warpgate.

"Teleport!"

Foop.

I instantly travel to Phoebe's side, startling her in the process. My wife jerks backward and stares at me with a mixture of trepidation and fear. "J-Jason...?"

"It's me!" I say, quickly calming her down. My eyes fall on Belial's broken body, making my stomach coil into a knot.

Belial's usually ravishing figure appears mutilated and deformed. Her arms and legs lay broken in dozens of places, causing them to hang off her torso like melted butter. Hundreds of bruises and gashes cover her body. Blood seeps out from innumerable cuts, only slightly stifled thanks to the medical nanobots of our Combat Medic division.

Without wasting any time, I aim my mind at Belial. "HEAL!"

A flash of light strikes the succubus. It transforms into a shroud of magical energy and wraps around her like a mother's embrace. Within seconds, the devastating damage to Belial's body begins to heal. Her broken bones snap back into place, her blood levels stabilize, and the thousands of bruises and cuts fade away, once again giving her skin a beautiful red shine.

However, after the healing aura finishes, Belial doesn't awaken. Phoebe and I wait for a few moments, but nothing happens. Belial continues to lay silently in Phoebe's arms.

"Status," I say, speaking to the void. A wall of information appears in my mind's eye, allowing me to assess Belial's health with the accuracy of a doctor from fifty million years in the future.

"What's wrong with Sam?" Phoebe asks anxiously. "Is she alive?!"

"Yeah. However... it seems that when Ose took over my mind and attacked Samantha... I... I traumatized her brain. Normally, I'd be able to repair the damage, but without Solomon's Crown..."

I trail off, making Phoebe's eyes darken.

Both of us stare at our comatose friend. My thoughts turn inward, while waves of guilt strike me, one after the other.

This is all my fault. I let Ose get in my head. I should have known this would happen! She seized control of my mind in the past, but I only managed to save myself thanks to Solomon's Crown! Without him around, I'm a sitting duck. I'm a liability!

What will happen if another demon takes control of my mind? What about Hope? We're the equivalent of nukes, but without the safety nets those weapons once possessed. Our brains are open books!

Phoebe strokes Belial's face. "Come on, Sammy... wake up... wake up..."

A rushing of air behind me signals Hope's arrival.

Foop.

My clone stands beside me and evaluates Belial's condition for a moment.

"You healed Belial?"

"Yeah."

"Then why hasn't she woken up?"

I sigh. "Well, I can't heal her brain damage. Haven't you noticed? I'm not wearing Solomon's Crown."

Hope glances at the top of my head. "Oh, right. I haven't seen you in so long that I forgot. What does that have to do with anything? Is your Wordsmithing too weak to manage such a simple task?"

"The human brain is the most complex organ in the body. I always needed Solomon's Crown to heal brain damage. Hell, not even Belial can manage such a feat. Shouldn't you know this?"

Hope frowns. "I don't spend a lot of time healing others."

Hardly have the words left Hope's mouth before Phoebe shoots him a vicious scowl. "No, kidding! You and Jason always leave the hospital work to Sam! She's not the only capable healer here, you know! Now that's she's down for the count, are you going to continue shirking your duties?"

Hope's expression remains impassive. "Perhaps. I'm a busy man."

Phoebe rolls her eyes. "You're full of shit, that's what you are."

"Don't talk to me like that," Hope says, a hint of indignation in his voice. "Have you forgotten? If it weren't for me, that damned- I mean, that succubus friend of yours would be dead! I saved her from Jason. Hell, if I hadn't shown up, who knows how many people he might have killed?"

Hope jerks his eyes up to meet mine. "And you! How irresponsible can you be? You let a Demon Emperor take over your mind! How are you going to account for today? Look at all these dead soldiers! We've lost dozens of reserve personnel!"

I quickly counter Hope's words. "Don't look at me! I didn't kill them. The damned Hydra did, and I nearly died fighting it!"

"I guess we should consider you our hero then?" Hope asks, a condescending sneer on his face. "You are so magnanimous! How much more will you screw things up? Shall I take over as humanity's commander, or should we give you another chance? What could possibly go wrong?"

With a groan, I wave Hope's complaints away. "Don't patronize me. Today was an accident. I'll make sure it doesn't happen again. As for Belial, I'll find a way to heal her."

"What about the dead soldiers?"

"I'll compensate their families and give them an honorable burial. I can't do much else for them, given the circumstances. Stop trying to turn everyone against me. You're starting to piss me off."

Hope steps away from me and spins on his heel. "Whatever! I don't have time for this. You're lucky that rampaging Hydra didn't wait another hour to attack, or you might have missed me. I have some business to attend to in the Labyrinth, so I'll be leaving for a few days."

"Leaving? Where are you going?"

Hope doesn't answer my question. Instead, he shoots me a sneer and immediately heads toward the portal.

"Don't everyone thank me all at once for saving the day. That might be asking too much."

Without saying another word, my clone enters the warpgate and disappears into the Core, leaving the rest of us behind.

"Jason," Phoebe says, "Did you see Kar? He went out to try and save Belial, but you knocked him out with a single attack. I think he's still somewhere out there on the battlefield."

My expression darkens. "I hurt Kar, too? Jesus. What the hell is wrong with me, Phoebe? How could I let that demon bitch take over my mind? Hope isn't wrong, you know. I wreaked a lot of havoc. I didn't realize until today just how dangerous my powers might be in the hands of the demons."

Phoebe purses her lips. "Mmm. Hope said Ose was the one who took over your mind, but have you confirmed his hypothesis?"

"No. Why? Do you think he made a mistake?"

"Not necessarily..."

Phoebe trails off. Her expression turns ugly as she stares at the silent succubus lying in her arms.

"...I don't know, Jason. Everything happened so fast. I don't even know how you killed the Hydra. Considering how much effort we put into battling it, only for it to nearly kill us all, I can hardly believe you wiped it out in less than a minute. Do you remember anything that happened after it swallowed you? Anything at all?"

I flick my gaze toward the blood-soaked battlefield. As I sweep my gaze around to search for Kar, I shake my head.

"No. Not a thing."

"Alright. I have this worry resting in my gut... but it's only a feeling. I'm probably just overthinking things."

I nod. "Yeah. It's probably nothing."

"Yeah."

My wife and I fall silent. A few moments later, I spot Kar's armored body, laying in a particularly viscous pool of blood. The acrid fluid sizzles as it touches his armor, sending thin wisps of smoke into the air.

"I'll be back," I say to Phoebe. "Teleport."

"Tell Neil I'm leaving for a few days," Hope says to a nearby officer. He walks across the vast, overcrowded area known as the Labyrinth Core, past rows of computer servers, and all manner of advanced mechanical systems. The young soldier he nods at retorts with a salute.

"Yes, sir!"

Hope strides across the room quickly, not bothering to dilly-dally. He barely looks at the monsters and humans milling about, but all of them stare at his grizzled face and smile or salute.

"General!"

"There he goes. That's the true leader of humanity, right there."

"I love that guy. I'd die for him!"

Several soldiers murmur to each other and nod appreciatively, but Hope doesn't give them a second glance.

Soon, he arrives at the massive double-doors leading to the outer Labyrinth. Dozens of heavily armored guards equipped with humanity's best weapons eyeball him as he approaches.

"General? Are you heading into the Labyrinth?"

Hope slows to a stop. "I am."

"Alright. Give us a minute, and we'll prepare you an escort."

Hope shakes his head. "That won't be necessary. My mission requires stealth. I have to go alone."

The door guard frowns underneath his faceless mask. "I... sir, I can't allow that! I beg your forgiveness, but if something were to happen to you out there, Neil would-!"

"Neil would... what?" Hope asks, a cold glint in his eye. "Neil and I are close friends. He might be our strategic commander, but he outranks me in title alone. If I wish to enter the Labyrinth by myself, I don't require Neil's permission. Understood?"

"Y-yes, sir, but... at least let us send a few Spectres with you. If your mission involves stealth-"

"That will be all," Hope says, cutting the soldier off mid-sentence. "Nobody follows me. Understood?"

The soldier tries to retort, but the ice in Hope's eyes freezes his heart solid.

"Yes, General. I apologize."

"Good."

Hope continues on his way, but just before stepping through the double doors, he pauses.

"Thank you for your concern, soldier. At ease."

"Yes, General."

* * *

A minute later, Hope enters the Labyrinth and speaks to the void. "Invisibility. Silence. Suppress."

His body vanishes from existence, making him less detectable than a piece of pollen in a breeze. Hope uses his wingless flying ability to hover over the ground and rush forward, traveling at surprisingly high speeds as he examines the Crown's detailed Labyrinth map.

Solomon chuckles. "Oh, Hope. You have a way with people."

"Shut up," The Wordsmith growls. "I'm only doing this for you, Solomon. Now, tell me where we're going. And no more tricks. That little stunt with Jason won't fly with me. If you try and pull something similar, I'll erase your soul from the Crown without a second thought. "

Solomon's jovial smile vanishes. "I did what was necessary to ensure Jason's survival."

"Don't play stupid with me," Hope says, as he slows to a stop. "Saving Jason's life is one thing. Using his body to try and kill Belial is another. Jason may seem like a fool, but there's no way he'll let this go. For the so-called Ancient King of Knowledge-Seeking, your actions possess surprisingly little prescience. Given time, he'll see through your web of lies to discover Ose wasn't the culprit. And then what?"

Hope pauses for emphasis before continuing.

"I know what Jason will do. He'll suddenly sympathize with Ose. And who can blame him? Even I wouldn't stand idly and allow someone to suffer a false accusation. You've indirectly turned her into an innocent bystander in Jason's mind. You undermined your own plan before it even started!"

Solomon winces under Hope's verbal barrage. After a few moments, his tone turns apologetic. "I... I see. I hadn't thought that far ahead. You appear to be a little sharper than your counterpart."

"Naturally."

Hope dismisses the conversation with a wave of his hand.

"Now, stop beating around the bush and tell me where we're going. Why is this little trip so important?"

Solomon smiles. "To defeat the demons, we need more power. During the era of Earth's destruction, my last act was to seal innumerable treasures and countless mighty artifacts inside the Labyrinth. During the battle against the Black Witch, Jason unleashed a few of these, but they hardly count among the cream of the crop. I know of two items that will make the demons tremble in terror. They can easily turn the tides of war!"

As Solomon speaks, a spark of interest appears in Hope's eyes. "Oh? Do tell. Where are they?"

"That... I don't know!"

Solomon sighs.

"I lost my memories after I sealed myself behind the golden door and faded away. I only have a vague recollection of their whereabouts... but worry not! For these particular treasures, I left behind a few essential clues in a place you should be familiar with."

"Where?"

Solomon motions with his hands and summons the three-dimensional Labyrinth map.

"Here! In this room!"

Hope follows Solomon's gaze, making his face turn pale.

"You're kidding. The El-Dorado room? The place where I found Hoarhiim's orb?"

Solomon nods. "That's correct."

"It used to be closer than this! Why is it fifty billion miles away, now?"

Solomon shrugs. "Satan's Labyrinth is a twisting maze of shifting halls and moving rooms. The only area that remains fixed in place is the Labyrinth Core. Come! There's no time for us to dawdle. We must find the Remnant Wills and locate their hidden treasures as quickly as possible. The extermination of demonkind depends on it!"

Hope begins hovering forward again, increasing his speed as he heads toward the location marked on the map. "Remnant Wills?"

"Hehe. You will see," Solomon says, keeping his words mysterious.

"All right then. Keep your secrets."

The Wordsmith flies into the distance, leaving the Core far behind as he heads into the deepest, darkest areas of the Labyrinth.

Part 180: Mental Defenses

I activate my Wordsmithing to heal Kar and bring him back from the brink of unconsciousness. As I do, a thought appears in the back of my mind.

Hope must have lied to me.

I don't know why he did, but I know it's the most likely scenario.

If Ose, the current reigning leader of demonkind, were to take over my mind, there's no way she would be content with killing Belial. I don't care how deep their blood feud runs. If anything, she would bide her time and prepare for the annihilation of humanity's defenses. I don't know much about Ose, but I know a little.

Belial doesn't talk to me much, but I hear information secondhand through my wife. Since she and the Second Emperor are on good terms, little tidbits filter down the grapevine now and then, especially when it comes to information Phoebe thinks I should know.

So, the question I face now is... if Hope is lying, what should I do about it?

"Cough! Cough!"

Kar clambers to his feet and shudders as he reverts from his Sphinx form back to his reptilian appearance..

"Turtle... what happened? Why are you here now? No, more importantly, why did you attack me?"

I shrug. "Dunno. According to everyone else, the Third Emperor of demonkind took over my mind. However, I don't buy that explanation. I think something else happened. How about you? Are you alright?"

Kar rubs his scaly scalp. "Ngh. I am fine. I could go for a nap, but otherwise, my condition is perfect. Ah! What about Big Boobs? Is she alive?!"

"Yeah. Erm, Hope showed up to battle me. After he brought me back to my senses, I healed Belial. However... she's fallen into a coma. Without Solomon's Crown, I can't wake her up."

Kar's reptilian eyes flick to the top of my head. "Hold on; you lost Whitebeard's Crown? When?"

"I didn't lose it; Solomon left me. Look, it's complicated, alright? The point is, Belial's comatose, and I nearly wiped out humanity shortly after a demon supposedly took over my body. There's a lot on my plate right now."

Kar gazes at the blood-soaked battlefield for a moment. "Hmm... are you saying you don't think a demon was responsible for your actions?"

"Exactly. Hope told everyone that Ose took over my mind, but I don't believe him. If I didn't know any better, I'd say it was because he's as bad at lying as me. Either that, or I know my own tells too well for him to give me the slip."

"If the Ice Queen wasn't responsible, then... do you suspect Rabbit took over your mind?"

"I don't know. Hope is a definite possibility, especially considering he has the same powers as me. However, why bother? He could simply kill me and take over my place if he had any nefarious intentions in mind. No, I think another party was responsible."

Gears whirr and click in my head as I take a few moments to fit the puzzle pieces together. Ever since I woke up, I've spent most of my time healing and questioning others to figure out what happened. I haven't had the time to merge all of the information together.

Two minutes later, an idea pops into my head.

"I may have been unconscious, but that doesn't mean I can't find out what happened. Memory."

I speak a word of power. A few seconds later, the world shifts around me.

Replaying memories.

A strange, ethereal voice hovers in the air. Its tone is neither masculine, nor feminine, but androgynous and slightly robotic.

It doesn't take me long to revisit the last thirty minutes of my life.

My expression darkens.

"Cease."

With one more word, my memories dissipate, returning my consciousness to the real world.

"Kar. I... I..."

I open my mouth to speak to the croco-Sphinx, but words escape me.

Solomon split his soul in half when he left. When I fell unconscious, he took over and nearly killed Belial. Even now, he's still inside me... resting.

Kar looks me in the eye. "What is it, Turtle? Your face... are you feeling unwell? Your complexion is terrible."

I shake my head. "No, I'm not feeling good at all. Dissipate!"

A moment later, I send a surge of magic deep into my mind. In the blink of an eye, it grabs hold of Solomon's dormant soul, waking him from his slumber.

Gah! What- Jason?! Stop! STOP! I'm only here to protect you!!

I shake my head.

No, Solomon. I trusted you once. The fact that you chose to take over my mind and tried to kill Belial means we cannot be allies anymore.

I focus my attention and wrap my claws around the old man's soul.

Get out of my head. Get out! GET OUT!

Solomon's expression turns pale.

Jason! Please, don't do this! This isn't you! This- aauugh! AUUUGH!!

Solomon's screams intensify. After several seconds, his voice vanishes, purged from my mind.

I stare at Kar for a moment and sigh.

Crisis averted. Anyone who tries to kill my family won't live to see the next sunrise.

Kar raises his eyebrow. "Uhh. What just happened?"

"Ose wasn't the one who took over my mind. Solomon was."

"Huh? Whitebeard did? I'm lost. I don't understand."

I rub my forehead. "Me neither. It seems that when Solomon took his Crown and left, he tore his soul in half and placed it in my body. I still have no idea where Solomon's Crown went, but the fact he left half his soul behind to try and kill Belial means he couldn't have had good intentions."

The more I speak, the more disjointed each puzzle piece feels. If I wasn't good enough for Solomon, then who is? Hope? When I last saw my clone, he wasn't wearing Solomon's Crown. It must be someone else. Neil, maybe? I haven't seen Neil in a year or two, so he might be a suspect.

In any case, I know one thing for sure; with Solomon gone, my mind is an open book. Hope might have lied about Ose possessing my body, but there's no reason she couldn't attempt such a thing in the future. If she does, then without Solomon's Crown or his soul to protect me, I'll be putty in her hands.

In that case... I need a defense system. I need a barrier in place to protect myself from mind control.

I need another Solomon. But not Solomon himself. Someone else.

"Rock."

I speak to the void and summon a large boulder behind me, one with a flat top. I leap atop it and sit cross-legged to think, all while Kar watches me with a curious gaze.

I could simply back up my mind inside of itself. Then if I fall unconscious, my other half can wake up and take control, preventing me from falling unconscious, ever!

But maybe that's not the right move. After all, if someone manages to beat the shit out of me, having my backup consciousness be the same as my primary one won't give me any new battle strategies. I'll likely end up beaten and battered again.

Since that's the case, my backup consciousness should have a different view of combat and battle strategies compared to how I think of them now. Perhaps I should copy someone else's mind into mine? But who should I choose?

If I pick the wrong person, they could betray me, or even humanity as a whole! I can't make such a decision lightly. I need to think. Think. Think.

Minutes pass. The faces of friends and family appear in my head, but it doesn't take long before three people appear, each one a brilliantly shining star compared to the others before.

Phoebe, Belial, and Daisy. Well, my daughter is certainly trustworthy. She wouldn't betray her daddy, but there's no way she'll have any useful battle instincts. That only leaves Belial and Phoebe. Belial's mind is probably more adept at wielding magic than Phoebe's, but then again, she is a demon. I can't put a demon's mind inside my own, no matter how much I trust her.

So, in the end, the best candidate appears to be my wife! I should have thought of Phoebe sooner. If I use her soul as my protector, she'll definitely guard me from unwanted intruders, she won't betray humanity, and she should be a damn good fighter, too. I bet she'd make excellent use of my Wordsmithing if push comes to shove.

So, it's settled!

A flash of light ignites in my eyes. "Backup."

In the blink of an eye, my mind travels over to Phoebe's. Her combat instincts, personality, and memories all download into my brain, ending up as an isolated dot of mana at the base of my Cerebrum. While I can look into her memories if I so wish, I don't, and would never consider such a thing. Her backup only exists to prevent the demons from overtaking my mind. I would never violate her privacy by peeping into her memories, not unless I had a damn good reason.

Moments later, Phoebe's face appears in my mind; as vivid and lifelike as if she were standing before me. Unlike in the past, when I spoke to Hoarhiim, Blaarjiim, or even Solomon, her presence is very visceral, almost as if she's been a part of my thoughts since the day I was born.

"Jason?"

Yep, that's me, I think.

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "Where am I?"

Well, um... how to put this? I found out that Solomon was the one who took over my mind; not Ose.

I spend a minute explaining the situation to my wife. After I finish, she nods.

"I see. So you copied my mind to protect yours?"

Yeah. If you want, I can find a different method.

Phoebe shrugs. "No, it's fine! I'd have it no other way. Who better to protect my wonderful husband than me?"

Dammit, Phoebe. Stop making me blush. Obviously, you were the only person I'd choose!

"I'd do the same for you in a heartbeat," Phoebe says, smiling radiantly. "In any case, make sure you let my main body know about me. We should also ask Hope why he lied about Ose possessing you."

I shake my head. I did say Hope lied, but that might not be the case. Throughout the whole battle, he seemed very distant, like he was only trying to scope out my combat capabilities. It's possible he wasn't sure if Ose took over my mind or not. I don't have proof one way or the other.

All the more reason to question him, Phoebe replies, her expression turning stern. You can't just let him off, Jason. He might be your clone, but that doesn't mean you two share the same values. He's lived a different life from you over the past six years. He might have changed more than you'd like.

I don't mind if Hope underwent a personality shift, I say, but if he switched allegiances and is now working for the demons, I want to know. I'll look for him when I have time, alright?

"I understand."

Phoebe falls silent.

I pull my attention away from my mind's eye, only to see Kar's scaly face sitting mere inches from mine.

"Gah! Kar! What are you doing?!"

I stumble backward and nearly fall off my rock. I barely manage to catch myself in the nick of time, and Kar pulls his head back.

"Sorry, Turtle. You were acting funny for a while. I wanted to make sure you were okay."

"Yeah! Yeah, I'm fine. Sheesh, don't just get in a guy's face, you damned crocodile."

Kar flares his nostrils and chuckles quietly. "Heh... in any case, there's no sense lingering around here now. Let's head over and chat with White-Hair. I'm sure she'll want our help moving Big Boobs to the infirmary."

Kar's words cause my nerves to settle. With a nod, I reply, "I agree. Come on, Kar. Belial got hurt because of me. I have to take care of her before I head out to find Ose."

"Hm? The Ice Queen? You're still planning to look for her?"

"Yup. My goal has been and still is to seek peace with the demons. If I don't try, then war may arrive at our doorstep. I've prepared many defenses for if the demons should decide to invade, but I don't want to come to blows if I don't have to."

"An admirable goal..." Kar murmurs. "However, when it comes to demonkind, I believe that violence is unavoidable. Murder and bloodlust are all that drives them. It would be best if you didn't hope for their morality to match yours. Otherwise, you will end up disappointed."

Kar strokes his jaw. "Turtle. There is something I've wanted to speak to you about for a few years, now. It involves my mother."

"Your mother?"

I pause for a moment as vague memories bubble to the surface of my mind. When I first met Kar, he did mention something about having a human mother. What was her name again?

"Marie Becker," Kar says, answering my thoughts. "She is the one who saved my people. She is a benevolent goddess who guided us through the darkness to a point where my people can now thrive! We may still have to hide in the shadows, but at least now, we live in peace. Mother has ideals similar to yours. I think it is time you spoke with her."

I shrug. "Maybe after I deal with Ose. I'm sure your mother is great and all, but I have to try and get Ose to sign a peace treaty. If I don't, millions, possibly even billions, could die."

Kar waggles his finger. "Mother is unlike any human you've ever met. She transcended the limits of the human body long ago. She knows the demons inside and out. Before attempting a discussion with the Ice Queen, you must seek my mother's guidance! She can help you!"

Kar's eyes glow with excitement. Every time he mentions his mother, the fire in his soul burns a little brighter than before, revealing the deep admiration and devotion he holds for this 'Marie' woman.

I shrug. "Alright, alright. If you think visiting Marie is the right call, so be it. Will it take us long to find her?"

Kar shakes his heads. "No. It'll be a cinch! We can drop by on the way to Hell Harbor!"

"Hell Harbor?"

Kar nods. "The homeworld for the various demon leaders. Hell Harbor is their home away from Hell, where they can live with the warmth of a star beating their backs, and greenery to dazzle their eyes. Hell Harbor is a paradise far beyond anything you've ever seen. If you wish to find the Ice Queen, you'll have to travel there to find her."

"Alright. Since you seem to know where it is, I'll have to trouble you to lead me there."

"Bahaha! You got it!"

Kar slaps my back playfully and gives me a huge thumbs-up. I force a smile back at him but sigh on the inside.

So much to do, and so little time.

I pull myself to my feet and stretch my back. A moment later, as I sweep my gaze around the battlefield, a jolt of surprise runs through my body.

"Huh?! What the hell? What happened to all the Hydra blood?! Wasn't this place absolutely soaked just ten minutes ago? Don't tell me it all evaporated!"

Kar follows my gaze. As he looks around, his expression turns incredulous.

"Y-you're right, Turtle. There's no way a lake of blood would vanish out of nowhere. Did you clean it up with your Wordsmithing?"

I scratch my head for a moment. "...No? Maybe Hope did. But he left half an hour ago, so why would he wait until now?"

Kar and I glance at each other, and pure bewilderment passes between us. I quickly speak a word of power to try and figure out what happened.

"Memory."

Seconds later, I shake my head in disbelief.

"The lake of blood vanished into thin air only a minute ago, while we were talking. I don't know how, but it did. Something strange has been happening today. First, a Hydra attacked, then elemental wyverns, and even obsidian goblins. Those beasts are all rare creatures we shouldn't see once in a thousand years, but they popped into existence out of nowhere."

Kar nods, and his expression turns grave. "Perhaps it's a demon plot to wreak havoc on our world. They must intend to cause chaos and panic."

"Maybe, yeah. It could be something else, too. I'll have to investigate it, later, if I have time. For now, let's go and help Phoebe and Belial."

"Alright."

Kar follows after me as we head over to the warpgate pavilion.

All the while, my thoughts wander about.

More pieces and more clues. I need to put the puzzle together if I hope to figure out what's going on.

Part 181: Emperor of Shadows

Twenty-nine demons sit at a long, rectangular table. It extends for over a hundred feet, offering each of us plenty of elbow room. Dozens of papers, papyrus scrolls, and etched runes lay before the various Dukes and Barons gathered today. I sweep my gaze around to spot all of the Dukes, including Barbatos, Bael, and Mephisto, along with several Barons as well. The only demon missing is Ose, who seems to be running late.

Having already read the documents several times, I quietly flick my eyes over a few reports placed at the top. Each offers a series of bullet points regarding the upcoming war. At the least, they provide a slight distraction, allowing me to ignore a certain someone.

"Hey, Beelzebub!" Bael says, raising his voice at me. He sits directly across the table, a look of annoyance etched into his fat face. "You've got a lot of nerve coming here."

My eye twitches. Having suffered a humiliating beatdown by the enraged buffoon only a few days prior, I can barely stand to look at him. All I did was rid myself of one worthless servant, an amorphous blob of a woman who couldn't take two steps without shaking the whole Labyrinth. How could I have known the Duke of Pain would fly into a rage on Rosalia's behalf? It's true what they say: Fat bastards roll together.

"Shut up," I growl, keeping my eyes focused on my papers. "Now is neither the time nor the place."

"Aww, wassa matter? Scared I might knock some more teeth out?"

Bael's voice lilts as he tries to mock me, but I ignore him. He won't dare try anything in the Council Hall, especially not with Operation Stormbringer looming on the horizon. And if he does, I won't be caught unprepared like last time.

A Baron seated beside Bael snickers. "I heard you took this flamey little bastard to town, Bael. That's what I love about you."

"Damn straight," Bael replies. "You ain't so bad yourself, Duriel. It seems you and your brother have been kicking some ass out there."

Duriel flashes a smug grin. "Those fleshbags think they're tough shit, but whenever they fight a Baron, they run for the hills. I can only imagine their faces when you come strolling 'round the corner!"

As one of the Battle Brothers, Duriel's renown among other Barons rivals even Ose. He and his twin, Zamiel, stand atop the hierarchy of Barons, inches away from obtaining the title of Duke. Of course, compared to Ose and myself, they're hardly worth noting. I ascended from Lord to Duke in a matter of days. They can't ever hope to match my brilliance! The best they'll ever manage is sucking up to their superiors.

I shoot a glance at the massive, armored fellow. His demonstone plate-mail affords him a stalwart defense only slightly inferior to Bael's body, but his true might comes from the range of weapon techniques he and his brother wield. After Operation Stormbringer concludes, and my people wipe humanity's resistance off the map, I'll have to look into usurping Bael as the First Duke. Once I succeed, the various Barons seated here will have no choice but to fall in line and pledge their loyalty to me.

Bael crosses his arms and grins like a salamander. "I saw one of them armored humans last year. He wasn't anything special. One slap, and off went his head! Poor bastard died before he knew what hit him! Bahaha!"

"That's what I've been saying!" Duriel throws his head back and laughs, causing a long ponytail to wiggle on the back of his otherwise bald scalp. "Ose is a damned coward! All these pussy-ass preparations and other useless shrakh, and for what? We should charge in there and wipe those feisty fleshbags out! We've gotta show 'em who runs this bitch!"

Another Baron, named Mara, nods her assent. "Duriel is right. It's humiliating that Ose keeps forcing us to stand aside quietly while these... these brazen little worms poke their heads in and raid our slave camps, pillage our supplies, and kill our grunts! I don't care how worthless the life of our grunts are. It's damned intolerable! We should have wiped them out before they developed those pathetic toys of theirs!"

Mara wears a leathery black cloak, one designed to conceal her face. She shrinks in her chair while trying to make herself smaller. One need only gaze at the Baron of Games for a moment to see she hates standing anywhere near the limelight. Compared to other demonesses, I find her beauty to be only average, but her backstabbing tendencies to rival mine. I admire that trait in a woman.

"I agree," Says Laharl, the Baron of Misery. She flashes a nasty grin, exposing her pointy teeth and her long, spindly nails. "How many times must I retreat while those humans kill hundreds of my precious darlings? Maybe you don't care about unevolved Brutes, but I do! Their beautiful muscles! Their glorious, giant-"

"Enough," I say, stopping her before she can desecrate my ears with filth. "Keep your disgusting fetishes out of this sacred hall. None of us want to hear another word."

"Hmph, big words, coming from a cheat like you," Laharl retorts. Her eyes glow as she gazes at me from beneath her blood-red hood. "I've sat in this hall for tens of thousands of years! You're nothing but a Lord who pawned a few favors to reach your position. Don't speak down to me just because you've obtained some inkling of power. I stood bravely against Uriel long before you were a drop of blood stewing in your broodmother's womb."

Without hesitation, I summon a ball of flame in my palm. "Say another word, and I'll char you to ash. If you wish to disrespect your superior, I'll teach you a lesson about how I obtained my title."

"Hah!" Laharl guffaws. "I'm shaking in my boots! What would the other demons think if they heard that the almighty Duke of Inferno bullied a poor, innocent demoness like me? You'd be a laughingstock!"

Duriel clicks his tongue. "She's right, Beelzebub. Make a move on Laharl, and the rest of us will split your damn skull."

I snort fire through my nose. "Not one of you has a chance. Even if every Baron in the Labyrinth joined hands and came at me, you'd only end up kindling for my fireplace."

All the Barons in the room snarl angrily, but before they can make a move, Artorias smashes his fist against the table.

Boom!

A wave of air erupts in the room, startling everyone present.

"Enough! The next person to continue this discussion will leave this hall in a coffin! We are demons, not fleshbags! Curb your bickering, or I'll put you down myself!"

Immediately, the chaotic emotions in the room freeze over. Every demon shoots a pensive glance toward the heavily armored Barbatos, now possessed by the soul of his older brother, Artorias. Unlike his little brother, a man of few words, Artorias loves to speak his mind. When he does, everyone makes sure to listen.

"Cough, cough, sheesh..." Duriel mutters, lowering his voice. "Enough blabbering. Sorry, Beelzebub. I shouldn'a ran my mouth. Ain't no way for a Baron to talk."

"Apology accepted," I say, shooting him a sneer. Duriel balks at my lack of a reciprocated apology, but frankly, I don't give a damn. Apologies and appeasement are tactics used by the weak. Since I hold power, I neither need nor want such methods.

"Ksss..." Mephisto hisses. The ghoulish Duke flicks his eyes around the room. "It isss unlike Ossse to keep usss waiting. Where isss that ssshe-devil?"

Hardly have the words left Mephisto's mouth before the door to the Council Room swings open. A human woman steps inside and bows at the waist. She clutches several papyrus scrolls against her chest. Seconds later, Ose strolls in behind her. Her high heels click against the ground as she walks. After sizing up the room, Ose flashes a smile at everyone. "My apologies for keeping everyone waiting. I received some interesting news an hour ago! As such, I had to take a little extra time to prepare."

Mephisto coughs into his hand. "Keh! It isss of no consssequenccce. We were not bothered by your minor truancccy. Sssuch mattersss occasssionally occur."

Several Barons flash looks of annoyance at the Duke of Mist and his instant pivot from only moments before, but nobody voices their thoughts.

"Wonderful! Amy, leave us."

Ose snatches the scrolls from her human slave's arms, then brusquely dismisses her. The slave nods and scurries out of the room before closing the door behind herself.

Ose walks down the table toward the head seat. As she passes me, she smiles. "Hello, Beelzebub."

I nod. "Ose."

Without another word, she arrives at the head of the table, drops the scrolls, and pulls out a pair of reading glasses before taking a seat.

"Two hours ago, on Tarus II, a Hydra, twelve Elemental Wyverns, and a horde of Obsidian Goblins attacked the human's defensive perimeter. I want to know which of you coordinated the attack, and why."

Ose's smile vanishes as she speaks, and her expression darkens.

"Whoever it was, they must be seated at this table. Speak."

Ose's eyes slowly pan around the room, starting from Bael, and working her way across all the Dukes and Barons present until settling on me.

Bael scratches his head. "A Hydra? Ain't those things extinct?"

"Supposedly," Ose murmurs. "And yet, as if born out of thin air, one appeared right in front of Tarus II's warpgate. Again, I ask: Which of you created it, and why did you fail to notify me?"

Everyone at the table, myself included, shoot suspicious looks at the others. We all shake our heads in unison.

"It wasn't me," Bael says. "I can't do stuff like that."

Ose's eyes flick to Mephisto. "One of yours, perhaps? I have yet to confirm whether its origins were necromantic or not."

Mephisto coughs. "Ksss. I lossst my mightiessst trump card when my preciousss dragon perissshed during the battle againssst the Black Queen. Had I an undead Hydra, the losss would not sssting nearly ssso much."

"Mmm," Ose grunts, unconvinced. "How about you, Laharl? Was the Hydra, perhaps, one of your projections?"

Laharl shakes her head. "My summoning skills are nowhere near the level required to create such a fearsome monster, let alone the wyverns and goblins accompanying it. Perhaps, if I were to advance to the rank of Duke...?"

Ose ignores Laharl's implied request. "If nobody here summoned that beast, then who did? It has to be one of you. Thanks to the Hydra's appearance, the humans are sure to tighten their defensive network. My years of patience and the loss of tens of thousands of grunts will have been for naught."

Ose clicks her tongue. "Tsk. Have any of you an inkling of what it's taken for me to lower the human's mental defenses? If one of you brazenly went against my orders and set that beast against the humans, then you had better own up to it now. If I must, I will probe each of your minds, one by one, until I find the culprit."

Suddenly, Duriel slams his fist against the table. "Dammit, Ose! None of us are lying! Nobody summoned the blasted Hydra! And even if we did, so what?! Who gives a damn about the fleshbag's defenses? Who gives a flying fuck whether they're ready for us or not? What can a few million fleshbags do against the might of ten trillion demons? What will their pathetic weapons accomplish when we outnumber them a thousand to one?!"

Duriel jumps out of his seat and gestures to his side. "We don't need all these stupid plans! We don't need your worthless plots and ploys! We've got Bael here! He's invincible! If he were to rush the human's planet, he'd crush them in ten minutes flat, and that's without any of our help! Stop yanking us around, and give the order to attack! I'm tired of standing around with my thumb up my ass, and I know everyone else is, too!"

As if to affirm Laharl's words, nearly every Baron in the hall nods along. Several of Duriel's fellow Barons silently applaud him in their hearts for standing up to Ose and telling her how everyone feels.

However, one Baron stays silent; Vepar. Unlike the others, who were born long after Earth's fall, she remembers a distant era, a time even I couldn't imagine.

Along with her, Mephisto, Bael, and Artorias don't say a word. Bael's jovial grin fades away, and a solemn look passes over his face.

Ose says nothing for a few moments. Instead, she allows Duriel to vent, and when he finishes ranting, she nods.

"I see. If that is your opinion, then can I assume the others here share similar thoughts?"

Many of the Barons nod and grunt quietly to affirm Duriel's words.

"See?" Duriel says, as he swings his arms out toward the other seated demons. "Everyone here agrees with me! You're acting like a coward, plain and simple! We're tired of sittin' around while the humans massacre our brothers! Stop with the games, and let us rip 'em apart! Show 'em the might of demonkind! Show 'em what happens when they raise their fists to us!"

Duriel pants wildly. His eyes turn slightly yellow as he continues to rant. Eventually, he slows to a stop and waits for Ose's reply.

Ten seconds pass, but Ose doesn't say a word.

Instead, the Emperor of Infiltration traces a circle on the table with her fingertip. Her eyes lower, and she furrows her brow, as if deep in thought.

"If you feel-"

Before Ose can speak, Bael raises his hand, silencing her.

"Hold on. All of you, shut up. I've got somethin' to say."

Bael scrunches his face together, and a strange, distant look appears in his eyes. For once, the half-wit jokester ponders his words before speaking.

"Duriel. You think humans are weak, don'tcha?"

Duriel nods, but the intense look vanishes from his eyes. "Well, yeah. Even the weakest grunt can kill a fleshbag with a flick of his finger."

"Mmm. You're still a pup. You don't remember how things used to be."

Bael's voice softens. He stares at the center of the table, unable to meet anyone else's gaze.

"Everyone here's heard of the Energy Wars. Only a few of us remain who lived during those dark times. Shit was scary. Real scary."

Bael pauses.

"I lost a lot of friends. Had a buddy I used to hang out with, back during the good old days. Nice guy. I played in a band with him, before that damn war started. Eventually, he became an Emperor, along with his little sister. I couldn't visit 'em much. Then, one day, I found out the humans killed 'em both. Never got to say goodbye."

Bael pauses again. When he next speaks, his voice rasps slightly.

"Those... those bastards. They took his body and... and experimented on him. They did some nasty shit. Crazy shit. Made him into a... a machine. Turned him against his brothers and sisters. I had to kill him myself. He didn't even recognize me."

Bael shakes his head.

"Poor guy. He wasn't the first, and he wasn't the last. Every day, the humans would create some new tool or device to chase us down. We'd hide at the ends of the fucking Earth, and they'd always find us. Sure, I wasn't in any danger... but I couldn't save everyone, either. The humans couldn't hurt my body, but my soul was another story. I said goodbye to so many brothers and sisters; I lost count."

Bael sighs.

"Who do you think put those humans on ice for 100,000 years? She's sitting at the head of the table, dumbass. Ose knows better than anyone how to break a human. You can't just kill 'em. They're worse than cockroaches. We need the bastards for their souls, so we can't kill 'em all. If one human survives, he'll spread his ideas around. Next thing you know, you'll have another uprising. And another. And another."

Bael raises his head. He turns to stare Duriel right in the eyes.

"We fought against the humans for a long time, and do you know what they didn't have back then? A Hero. They didn't have a legendary Hero assisting them."

"Imagine what'll happen if we wipe out the humans, but the little bastard gets away. I ain't even smart, and I can think of a hundred ways to use his power against us. He could teleport away, find another batch of humans, and raise an army in secret. The Hero we're facing now is way scarier than anyone we've fought before. Arthur beat my ass, and Joan of Arc made me pee my pants. But this kid? He's way beyond the likes of them. Right now, Ose's got him right where she wants him."

Bael turns away from Duriel and waves his hand flippantly.

"But if we go stormin' in there like a bunch of Hellhounds with our heads cut off, do you think the Hero's gonna lay down and take it up the ass? Hell no. He'll get pissed and go off the rails, and then we'll be screwed. Royally screwed. We don't have a chance in Hell of beating him once that happens."

Bael snorts. "That's all I've got to say. Mock the weak little fleshbags all ya want... but I won't forgive ya if they wise up and stop playin' games. I've seen what they can do without a Hero. I don't want to think about what'll happen if Ose's plan fails."

The room falls silent as Bael finishes lecturing Duriel. After a moment, Bael glances at Ose. "Did I go too far?"

"No, Bael," Ose says, flashing him a radiant smile. "You said everything on my mind and more. I never knew you had such an eloquent side."

"Yeah. Whatever."

Bael crosses his arms and huffs, but the tips of his ears turn red as Ose's praise wiggle into his brain.

Ose clears her throat. "While everything Bael said is true, he slightly understated our dilemma," Ose adds. "After all... there are two Wordsmiths. Even when Arthur terrorized our people, he could only be in one place at any given moment. We have to deal with two Heroes, and our firepower is quite lacking compared to what we once possessed during the height of the Feudal Age. Back then, the Emperors of all Seven Hells worked together to fend off the Legendary Hero-King's assaults. Now, our best forces comprise the demons in this room. How far we've fallen..."

Ose continues. "Just when you thought it couldn't get any worse, you have to consider the possibility that there may be Wordsmiths we know nothing about. Who is to say that Jason hasn't created a second clone, or a third? Each one possesses strength identical to the original body. Even if we eliminate both Wordsmiths, there could be a whole army of Heroes sitting on the sidelines!"

Ose rubs her head in frustration. While she takes a moment to gather her thoughts, Duriel, still standing in place, slowly shakes the dazed look from his eyes.

"Well... shit. I... I didn't realize fleshbags could be so... uh... scary. Sorry, Emperor Ose. I shouldn'a mouthed off."

Duriel meekly slithers back into his chair and hangs his head in shame. Despite his earlier outburst, his anger crumbles to dust in the face of Bael's speech. He has no recourse, given Bael is his superior in both age and power.

However, I do not share Bael's opinion, nor those of the others present.

Bael allowed himself to draw close to other demons. He let his emotions get the better of him time and time again. His anguish comes as a result of his weakness, a trait I do not possess.

The closest I've ever been to anyone was my mentor, Agares. He groomed me for power from a young age and taught me everything he could to improve my chance of someday becoming the First Emperor. Unlike Bael, who pursues carnal desires of the flesh, or Mephisto, who schemes and backstabs to further his twisted ends, I keep my eyes on the ultimate prize: Power.

Of all the demons at this table, the only one I hold the faintest shred of admiration toward is Ose. Like me, she understands that demonkind has grown soft and brittle. Even if our enemy is a Hero, the only reason humans have stolen so much from us is due to our lack of self-control, our infighting, and our complacency.

Someday, when I ascend to power, I will rectify all of those issues. I will drag demonkind to greater heights, kicking, and screaming.

"Ahem."

Ose clears her throat.

"Let's get back on topic. I brought you here today to finalize our plans for Operation Stormbringer. Given today's Hydra incident, I will be accelerating our battle strategy. My brother has assisted me with the creation of several thousand new monster shock troops. Originally, I intended to have them gestate for another year or two to increase their numbers and body strength, but due to a certain someone's actions, I have to skip the final phase of my plan. I was also debating which of the Barons here deserves a promotion to the rank of Duke, but due to an insufficient supply of souls in the River Sheol, I'll have to pass for now."

At Ose's final statement, the eyes of every Baron light up with eager anticipation, only to lose their luster a moment later. I can almost smell their desperation. Thanks to a certain someone's incompetence, that damned Hydra alerted the humans to how weak their defenses were. Without another year to gather the necessary souls, Ose won't be able to promote another Duke. If she could, our wartime strength would increase substantially. After all, a Duke is anywhere from ten to a hundred times mightier than a Baron.

Ose continues. "Mephisto. Due to your talent with manipulating multiple minions, I intend to place control of The Scourge in your capable hands. Will you be able to handle my brother's new troops, or should I find someone more suited to the role?"

Mephisto raises his head. A hint of annoyance appears in his eyes. "Ksss. Of courssse I am capable of sssuch a trifle. Do not mock me, your highnesss. My command of mind-controlled ssslavesss overssshadowsss that of the ancient Valac! Not even he could ssspare the mental energy to attack with thousssandsss of monsssstersss and demonsss."

Ose bats her eyes. "Is that so? I was just worried you might hurt yourself. If you can handle them, it will be a load off my back."

I stifle a smirk. Ose's biting sarcasm occasionally puts mine to shame.

"Beelzebub," Ose says, turning her attention to me. "I expect great things from you. Your job will be to lead the new shock troops against the human forces. Our number one priority is to capture both Wordsmiths. If necessary, killing them is an acceptable compromise. Under no circumstances can we allow them to escape. I want you to work with Mephisto closely. Rehearse your battle formations and practice your teamwork until you've achieved perfection."

I nod. "Of course, Emperor Ose. Am I to seek out the Wordsmiths as originally planned, or have you altered that strategy as well?"

"You and Bael are our best bets for fighting Jason and Hope, yes. With your defensive powers, you should be able to survive anything they throw at you. Unless..."

Ose pauses. For a moment, her smile falters, and a frown etches itself onto her forehead.

"...Unless?" I ask.

"Nothing," Ose says, returning to her previous expression. "I'm a little worried about the might of the Wordsmiths. Make certain to take every possible precaution."

"Don't worry. I will."

Ose's gaze lingers on me for a moment before flitting to Artorias and Bael. "Bael, you will only appear at the end of the battle. Beelzebub will rain fire upon the humans to weaken their morale and kill as many as possible. Your job is to take out their commanders once Beelzebub draws them out. As you know, the legendary Sphinx walks among their ranks. His strength might be on par with yours, possibly greater. You and Artorias are to take him out, along with the other commanders of humanity's forces."

Artorias nods. "What role will you play in this war, Lady Ose? Your strategic mind is essential to our success, but the might an Emperor brings to the battlefield cannot be overestimated."

Ose sighs. "I have a goal. While Beelzebub and Bael are our best bet for capturing the Wordsmiths, in the worst-case scenario, I might need to find an alternate method of subduing both of them. As such, I've enlisted the help of someone those present here will likely find... unsavory."

I frown. "Unsavory? Who are you referring to? Wait... might you mean... an Overlord?!"

Several Barons glance at me. They raise their eyebrows, unaware of the beings towering over demonkind while holding a blade against our throats. However, Bael and Mephisto shoot disdainful looks at me.

"Quiet, Beelzebub," Bael growls. "Speak not of the Overlords before the lower-ranks."

Ose shakes her head. "Apologies, Beelzebub. I'm afraid that your guess is wrong."

Ose glances at the ceiling, causing everyone else to follow her gaze. "Come out."

Above the demonstone table in the center of the Council room, several stone lanterns hang from the ceiling, illuminating the chamber with bright, flickering flames. My heart skips a beat as I spot the image of several shadows flickering in their light.

"Shadow-walkers? I didn't sense them at all!"

The words slip from my mouth unintentionally, causing my face to flush crimson. For a Demon Duke not to notice the presence of a few lowly shadow-walkers, how dull have my senses become?

Suddenly, the shadows solidify into three blobs of darkness. They fall from the ceiling and hit the ground with a splat, only to erupt into bipedal forms a moment later.

Immediately, my jaw drops. I realize why I couldn't detect these shadow-walkers. They're unlike any others I've ever seen!

"Demise. Malice. Vicious. Thank you for coming," Ose says, tipping her head respectfully. "Has your master given a reply?"

The three shadows melt and dissipate from forms resembling demons into vague, amorphous figures of monsters, animals, and objects in the room. Unlike the relatively stable bodies of other shadow-walkers I've seen before, who can only blend in with the darkness, these three newcomers seem to have no solid form at all!

"Ose..." One of the figures says, its voice sounding vaguely feminine. "Master Yama does not appreciate spending tens of thousands of years shunned by his people. He demands reparation for his losses. As the First Emperor of the once glorious Shadow Hell, he will not assist you without receiving a minimum of fifty million human souls."

Ose's bright-red skin loses some of its glow as she pales at the shadow-walker's words. "I... I... Lady Malice, fifty million is far too many! We scarcely have ten thousand left! Even if we wipe out all of the humans on Tarus II, we won't come anywhere close to that number!"

The shadow-walker, 'Malice,' morphs into a shadowy clone of Ose. "Heh heh... our master knows this. He has given two alternatives if you are unwilling or unable to pay. The first is... you must ensure that he becomes the new First Emperor of Hell, standing above even you in the hierarchy!"

Ose's face flushes in embarrassment. "I can't do that! Even if I gave Yama my position, I would never be able to place him in the First Emperor's role. I've never even met the fellow!"

Malice's body shifts again, causing her shadowy skin to drip to the floor like melted candlewax.

"Heh heh... Master Yama knows you would never accept such a condition. Of course, his generosity and benevolence outstrips that of the failures seated here today. He has one final request; a mere trifle compared to the previous ones. If you can't do this much, then we must wish you the best in your hopes of subjugating the fleshbags, for we will not be there to help."

Ose grits her teeth. "Fine. What does Yama want? Out with it."

The Barons and Dukes all lean forward with interest in their eyes to hear what Malice's final offer might be. However, one of the other two shadow-walkers, also female, butts in.

"Our master wants one of the Wordsmiths! Alive and kicking! Nyehehehe! That shouldn't be too hard!"

"Quiet, Vicious!" Malice hisses. "Do not interrupt me, or Sin will have something to say to you when we return!"

"Pweh! Don't be such a stickler for the rules!" Vicious cackles. "Rules are made to be broken! That's what I always say! Ahahaha!!"

Vicious morphs into a hyena and rolls around on the ground, cackling like she's made the funniest joke ever. Suddenly, the third shadow-walker, Demise, rears its leg back and kicks Vicious right in the gut, spraying black smoke outward in an arc.

Vicious combines her particles back together a moment later and shakes her fist at Demise. "Grr! What's your problem?! Can't a girl have a laugh around here without some stupid snotty little-"

"Quiet."

Demise's voice booms throughout the room, rattling my teeth and shaking the Council's demonstone table. Despite its depth and power, Demise is a female, just like the other two.

"We're here on business. Speak again, and I'll rip out your essence."

Vicious shrinks back and nods hurriedly. "O-okay! Geez, Demise! No need to get all worked up... hehe..."

Malice turns away from the spat between the other shadow-walkers to gaze at Ose. "Well? What do you think? One Wordsmith in exchange for Master Yama's help. We won't be greedy. You can keep the other one for your twisted little experiments."

Ose furrows her brow. Color returns to her face, but her gaze turns hollow for a moment as she evaluates her choices.

"Hmm. Fifty million souls, the title of First Emperor, or giving away one of the Wordsmiths to your master. You make the final choice sound like nothing at all, but you know I need one of the Wordsmiths alive. That means we'll have to capture both Wordsmiths without killing them to satisfy Yama's demand, as well as achieve my goal."

Malice hops atop the table and takes an imposing stance. "Well? What is your answer? Do you think your little operation will succeed without the help of the Shades? Among those who survived the Energy Wars, our might was once a thing of legends. You won't be able to infiltrate every defensive perimeter by yourself, Little Ose. Go on. With a few short words, you can put the humans back where they belong; in your clutches."

Half a minute passes. Nobody says a word.

Eventually, Ose relents. "Very well. One living Wordsmith in exchange for Yama's assistance. Do you understand how much more difficult this will make our mission?"

"I do."

Malice keeps her reply succinct. Her smoky form shifts slightly, and she turns to look at the other demons seated at the table. "Does anyone have a problem with this arrangement?"

Bael's eye twitches. "Can't say I'm a fan of working alongside that no-good shadowy-shithead. Your boss is about as trustworthy as a hellhound promising not to eat a corpse. I didn't even know the little bastard was still alive."

Bael's vulgar comments don't bother Malice in the slightest. She ignores Bael's insults. "Oh, yes. Alive and well. Six years ago, it was our master who first detected the release of Heroic energy inside the Labyrinth. He dispatched one of the Seven to investigate, but that damned Wordsmith slaughtered our sister in cold blood. Now, he wants nothing more than to exact his revenge on her killer. After all... Lust was one of Yama's favorites."

Ose narrows her eyes. "Hmph. You might fool the others, but I know better. Yama has plenty of servants within his inner circle. His shadow-walkers and shades roam every corner of Hell, from top to bottom. Not even losing one of the Seven would move him to action."

Malice whips her head back to scowl at Ose. "What is your point?"

"Yama wants to enslave the Wordsmith to do his bidding."

"Hmph. Naturally. Don't you have the same intention? Yama only wishes to balance the factional power of the Lesser Hells. If yours possesses both Wordsmiths, you'll use them to force us to do your bidding."

"Hmph. Nevermind all of that. What's done is done. Tell your master I've accepted his terms. However, if something happens and both Wordsmiths end up dying..."

Malice chuckles into her hand. "Heh heh... you don't need to worry. We won't let Master Yama down. Whatever he orders, we'll see it through to the end."

Malice turns to face her fellow shadow-walkers. "Come, sisters."

"Heehee!" Vicious cackles. "It's almost time for the fun to start! I'm gonna cut some fleshbags to ribbons! Ehehe!!"

"We take our leave," Demise mutters.

A moment later, the three women vanish into the shadows, leaving the rest of us to our devices.

I clear my throat. "Ahem. Ose. Who were those shadow-walkers, and why did they seem different from the ones I've seen before?"

"They are not ssshadow-walkersss," Mephisto says, replying in Ose's stead. "They are ssshadesss. Higher beingsss. Their bodiesss are formlesss, allowing them to transssform into whatever ssshape they wisssh."

Bael's expression turns ugly. "Their Emperor, Yama... he was once the leader of the Hell of Shadow; one of the original Seven Hells. After Earth's destruction, each of the Seven Hells fought a bloody war for control of the Labyrinth. We won. The others lost. End of story."

"Mmm..." I reply. "I always assumed the Seven Hells were only a figure of speech."

"Nope," Bael grunts. "Real thing. I had a lot of friends among their Emperors and Dukes. Now... most of 'em are dead."

Laharl raises her hand. "Pardon my impudence if this question is one I shouldn't ask, but now I'm curious... this 'Yama' fellow, is he an Emperor?"

Artorias crosses his arms. "He is."

"Then... why did we have to promote Ose? Why didn't you let Yama take over when Diablo fell?"

"Tch!" Bael growls. "Yama is a nasty, vile demon. He turns women into his puppets. He's a disgusting predator. I'd never accept him as our leader!"

Mephisto presses a bony fist against his mouth, as if trying to prevent himself from wretching. "Yama'sss audacity exceedsss any other demon. He will do anything to sssucceed. Backssstabbing a brother, working with a flessshbag, and even cooperating with an angel. He isss no ally to our caussse."

"Enough," Ose says. "We need Yama's help for this mission. Infiltrating as many key strategic points as possible will be the only way we can take the humans out all at once. Most importantly, I intend to capture the Wordsmith's daughter and wife. We'll be able to use them as leverage if Jason escapes our clutches."

I nod. "That is an excellent move, Ose."

"Hell yeah," Duriel snorts. "I'd never have thought of capturing the little bugger. You're smarter than I thought, Ose."

I roll my eyes. Now Duriel is sucking up to Ose after insulting her earlier. Low-ranked demons are simply pathetic.

"We'll be counting on you, Beelzebub, Artorias, Bael," Laharl says, flashing a toothy grin at us. "Especially you, Bael. Think we'll get to see you unleash the Balrog again?"

"Not unless I ain't got a choice," Bael mutters.

"Alright," Ose says, clapping her hands. "In one week, return to the Council hall. We'll finalize the plan for Operation Stormbringer and adjust our plans based on the human's movements. Dismissed."

A great sigh of relief goes up around the table. All the Barons and Dukes present quickly start chatting with each other, while the somber mood fades away.

I get up to leave, only to turn around and see Ose standing behind my chair. Her speed startles me.

"Beelzebub," Ose says, a slight smile on her face. "Do you have a minute? I'd like to discuss something with you."

"Hm? Of course. What's on your mind?"

I turn to look at her, only to frown as I meet her gaze. Something about her expression is different from usual. Her eyes linger on mine, and her tongue traces across her lips.

"This matter is private, Beelzebub. Come to my office."

Ah.

I see what she wants.

With a slight nod, I gesture to the doorway. "Lead the way."

Author Notes:

This is Mara, the Baron of Games.

This is Duriel, one of the two Battle Brothers.

This is Laharl, the Baron of Misery.

Part 182: Demonic Machinations

Screams echo in the distant reaches of Faith's End. Dozens of prisoners weep and cry as Gressil, the Labyrinth's warden, stares at an illusionary mirror hovering in midair. Gressil stands in a pitch-black room, one with dozens of torture instruments littered around. A bloody table with straps at each corner sits amidst an unlit furnace, three hacksaws, and even a primitive hand-drill.

"Interesting..." Gressil mutters.

He continues to look at the mirror as it reveals a scene of dozens of demon Barons, Dukes, and even the Third Emperor herself all engaging in a strategy meeting. Ose reveals her plan for attacking the humans, and eventually, the meeting disperses. The scene's viewpoint shifts, almost as if Gressil is watching through the eyes of someone present. They stand up and walk away from the table, causing Gressil to wave his hand and dissipate the illusionary mirror into nothingness.

"Oh, Ose. Little sister. Your desperate need for order sickens me."

Gressil gazes at the spot where the mirror hovered only moments before. His vacant eyes linger on the bare wall as if searching for some unseen specter, some unknown meaning in life.

"Take, take, take. You always steal from me, but you never offer anything in return. Were it not for my magnanimity; I wonder how long you'd last?"

Gressil's expression remains stony and lifeless. The three dozen demonic eyes embedded in his body give him an eerie red glow as they twitch erratically. Tears of blood occasionally flow down his front and back, but he pays them no heed.

The prison warden casually turns around and folds his two lower hands behind his back. His upper arms reach out to grab a door handle, and he pulls it open with an audible creak.

Taking slow, measured steps, Gressil ambles out of his favorite torture room to stroll down an unlit corridor, the central hub of Faith's End. A man's whimpering in a nearby cell causes him to pause.

"Quiet."

With a single growled word, his command reaches through the steel door and silences its resident. The man swallows his choked terror upon realizing that his tormentor stands outside the room.

Without giving the man another thought, Gressil continues on his way. He takes slow and steady footsteps as his mind works at speeds comparable to amoeba and sludge.

"I spent 100,000 years trying to bring about the end of systems and order. However, all of my efforts have fallen short compared to the arrival of the Hero. The Wordsmith's ability to bring about chaos puts even mine to shame. I owe him my gratitude."

Gressil chuckles.

"Heh. Heh. Heh. War is coming. My precious little sister intends to crush the humans and remake the Labyrinth into a perfect society. But, if that happens, all my fun will come to an end. All this droll tedium will rot my mind into nothingness."

Gressil continues walking. Eventually, he stops before one of many nondescript steel doors. Nothing about it stands out in particular, but he still hesitates for a moment before reaching out to open its viewing window.

Click.

Gressil peers inside the chamber, where dozens and dozens of pale brown eggs, each the size of a human child, sit in clusters of ten to twenty. Faint pulses of glowing energy emanate from them.

Gressil nods unsmilingly.

"The Swarm is ready. Haha. Does Ose truly believe I'll offer her my help without any strings attached? No. I think not. My cute little sister is many things, but I would never deem her a fool."

Gressil closes the viewing window and continues walking forward.

"If Ose fails..."

Gressil's expressionless face lights up. A cold glint appears in his eyes.

"Haha... won't that be interesting? Who knows what will happen?"

Gressil's face morphs into a hideous, monstrous grin.

"Death. Destruction. Panic. Fear. Just imagine all the wonderful expressions on everyone's faces. What a satisfying day that will be."

Gressil continues talking to himself, almost as if he can hear another voice in his head.

Eventually, the prison warden slows to a stop again. This time, however, the door he stops before is different from the others. A nearby lantern, the only one in the entire hallway, casts a shadow from his monstrous body across the door's frame. The door has a small wooden plaque beneath its viewing window, one which has only one word on it.

Forbidden.

Gressil's disgusting smile fades. He stands before the door for several minutes, listening intently.

Strange feelings well up within the prison warden. Excitement and agitation mix with calmness and peace.

Eventually, Gressil reaches out and caresses the door handle. He rattles it slightly, and from within the room, a weak gasp escapes someone's lips.

"Hehe. Biiirdieee..."

Gressil lowers his voice. He stares at the door intently, almost as if trying to bore holes in it with his eyes.

"I know you're awake..."

Gressil licks his lips. Slowly, deliberately, he slides the latch on the door and pushes it open.

The lantern's light causes his shadow to slip into the room. Despite its age, the door opens without even a squeak. Its silence proves deafening.

Gressil lowers his eyes. His expressionless face brightens up as he gazes upon the room's shivering, cowering occupant.

"Nnn... nnn..."

A naked woman covered in gashes, cuts, and bruises, lays in the far corner. Chains rest on the floor and across her body, while wall-bolted shackles wrap around her neck, wrists, and ankles.

Despite the horrible trauma he's inflicted upon her body, the prison warden never touches his prisoner's face. He would never do such a thing, as he finds her beauty... irresistible.

"Hello, Birdie," Gressil whispers. "Did you miss me? I've been... busy."

The woman shrinks into the corner. She tucks her arms and legs together and trembles as she meets her tormenter's gaze. Her wide-eyed terror fills Gressil with an emotion unmatched by any other being.

Lust.

"I didn't bring any tools or toys today..." Gressil murmurs. He takes a step into the prison cell, causing a squeak of fright to escape the woman's throat. "Just my claws. Ose has had me working day and night for her silly plans. I'll tell you all about them... hehe..."

Gressil takes another step. The shivering girl squeezes her eyes shut, causing bloody tears to roll down her face. "Nnn... nnn..."

Gressil narrows his eyes. "Look at you, teasing me like this. You know I can't resist those... those delectable squeals."

Gressil takes another step. Already, he's closed half the distance to the cowering girl.

"Tsk, tsk. Your wings aren't pretty anymore, not like they used to be. Hmm. Perhaps I should pull them out. I wonder what sort of face you'll make. Ahh... but I can only witness such an agony-filled expression once. There's no need to rush."

Gressil finally reaches the terrified woman. He reaches out a claw and brushes it against one of her chains, causing it to rub the woman's bare skin. Never once does she open her eyes.

"You used to scream in the past. I miss those days. You're too quiet, now. Ah, well, at least you're a good listener, yes. A good girl."

Once again, a hideous grin appears on Gressil's face. He gently presses one of his claws into the woman's open wounds, causing her to cry in pain. "Ahh... nnn...!"

"Yes. Yes. Like that. You're the only one for me, Birdie... you're my precious little... angel."

With a single motion, Gressil reaches backward and closes the door.

Darkness swallows the room.

"Daddy, is aunt Sammy going to be okay?"

Daisy clutches my hand tightly as she pitter-patters along at my side. Phoebe follows along behind us and gently ruffles our daughter's hair.

"I don't know," I say, forcing myself to sound hopeful. "But she should wake up eventually!"

"Yeah! Daddy can heal her!" Daisy says with a grin. "Daddy can do anything!"

I glance at my wife. Phoebe gives me a look of, well, how can you respond to that?

"Uhh, yeah, sweetie," I reply. "Daddy can do all sorts of things. He's a real wizard, that guy."

The three of us walk toward the local hospital, a small building on the northern edge of the town, close enough to the warpgates that it should only take soldiers ten minutes to arrive if someone ends up heavily wounded. It sits at the edge of the canyon ridge, with a sheer 100-foot drop to the forest below on its rear side.

Thanks to its location, scaling it should prove difficult if the demons ever attack, affording our lone medical facility a small amount of defensibility. I added several turrets on the canyon wall as well as around its perimeter, turning it into a veritable fortress compared to even my palace.

Phoebe takes Daisy's right hand while I take her left. Together, we walk with our daughter sandwiched between us protectively.

My wife shakes her head. "Are you and Kar still planning to force Ose to sign a peace treaty?"

"Not unless the Third Emperor seems especially bloodthirsty. I don't want to force anyone to do anything. Before we visit Ose, Kar wants to introduce me to his mother."

"His mother? Is she a crocodile, too?"

"No. Some lady named Marie. Kar reveres her like a goddess, but I don't buy it."

Phoebe frowns. "Is she trustworthy?"

"She rescued the lizard-men and saved Kar before his crocodilian species went extinct. He's the last one, though. I don't know the whole situation, but it was a pretty brutal affair."

"Mmm."

Phoebe strokes her chin with her free hand. "Stay safe," She murmurs.

"You know me. Safety is my middle name, along with Caution."

"I do know you, which is why I'm worried!" Phoebe laughs. "At least you'll have Kar at your side. Someone has to be the brains of your little operation."

"Hey! I'm smart!"

"Riiight..."

Phoebe rolls her eyes and grins jokingly.

Over the past six years, watching my wife turn from an uptight noble-lady into a casual, bantering femme fatale has been a real source of pride for me. I love seeing this side of her, where she acts nonchalantly and doesn't have to worry and fret over every little thing. She's come a long way from the stiff, emotional wreck she used to be.

As my thoughts wander, Phoebe's voice speaks in my head. "Oh? Tell me how you really feel, stud."

I groan inwardly. Having a copy of my wife listening to my innermost thoughts embarrasses me.

The Phoebe in my head chuckles. "All you ever do is think glowing thoughts about how great I am. You're such a sweetheart, Jason."

Dammit, second Phoebe, you're making me blush.

"I wish I had a mirror! You're so cute when you blush!"

Stop!! Ahh!!

* * *

A minute later, Phoebe, Daisy, and I pass through the fifteen-foot-tall concrete wall surrounding Tarus II's only hospital. We enter the facility and arrive at the receptionist's desk, where a well-groomed goblin dressed in a tuxedo quietly types on a computer.

"Hello, Grima," I say, nodding at him. "What room did you put Samantha in?"

The goblin glances up from his computer and evaluates the three of us in an instant. "Ah, hello, Hiro family. It's been a while. Your friend is in Room 15, just down the western corridor. Her condition is stable, but she has yet to awaken from her coma."

Grima's refined and elegant manner of speech stands contrary to the vast majority of goblins. While the others of his species tend to skitter around, cackle like hyenas, and cause all manner of mischief, Grima focuses on expanding his vocabulary and studying the breakdown of elemental particles. He's a real bookworm.

"Thank you, Grima," Phoebe says, flashing him a radiant smile. "I'll bring you a sweet roll tomorrow."

Grima's eyes widen. "A sweet roll? Haha! You are too kind, Miss Hiro! I'd hate to impose on you... b-but... I have three spawnlings, and, ah, they would very much like to-"

"Certainly! I'll bring you four sweet-rolls!" Phoebe replies, cutting him off. "One for each child."

Grima leans forward, an intense look in his eyes. He wipes drool from the side of his mouth. "Th-thank you, Miss Hiro! I won't- I mean, we won't forget your kindness!"

With a nod, the three of us set off again.

Once we step out of earshot, I raise an eyebrow at my wife. "What was that all about?"

Phoebe sighs. "Grima doesn't have a brood. He fibbed, but I can't blame him. The poor fellow is positively addicted to my cooking."

I stifle a laugh. Maybe the little guy isn't as different from other goblins as I thought.

Half a minute later, the three of us pass by several hospital personnel, including the harpie who treated me when I ran out of mana six years ago, Doctor Fathy. The doctor waves politely, and I wave back.

Eventually we arrive at Belial's room. The succubus lays motionless on the hospital bed, a stream of sunlight beaming on her face from the adjacent window. Dozens of flowers sit on nearby tables, chairs, and all around the room in general. As the most important healer at the hospital, everyone seems to have left her a get-well-soon letter or some other random present.

"Aunt Sammy!" Daisy cries. She pulls away from Phoebe and me to run to Belial's side. "What's wrong? Wake up! Mommy, why won't she wake up?"

"It's like we said, sweetheart," Phoebe says, keeping her emotions in check. "Aunt Samantha has a head injury. She has to sleep for a very long time to recover. Let's use our inside voices, okay?"

"Okay..."

Daisy's excitement vanishes as she realizes the gravity of the situation. She reaches over to hold Belial's hand, but this time, her movements are much more cautious and tender.

"Hello," A woman says behind me. I turn around and raise an eyebrow as I spot a very corpulent demoness I've never seen before. The plump demon lady pauses at the doorway and flicks her gaze between Phoebe and I. "Err, um... are you friends of the Second Emperor?"

"Yes," Phoebe says, turning to smile at the newcomer. "I'm Phoebe, and this is my husband, Jason. Are you new?"

The woman doesn't smile as she meets Phoebe's gaze. For a brief instant, I can almost make out the faintest hint of disgust on her face, but it vanishes quickly. Perhaps my imagination is running wild. "Erm. Yes! My name is Rosalia! I'm one of Belial's assigned nurses."

Whatever negative feelings I may have noticed, Phoebe ignores. "Rosalia? That's a lovely name. Welcome to Tarus II! I know pretty much everyone here, so it's always nice to meet new people."

Phoebe extends her palm to offer a handshake, but the brown-haired demoness shrinks back. This time, the ugly look on her face ignites my suspicions. "Ah... w-what are you...?"

"Oh, I'm sorry," Phoebe says, a hint of embarrassment on her face. "I sometimes forget, demons and monsters aren't always familiar with handshakes. It's just a way humans tend to greet one another."

Rosalia squirms uncomfortably for a moment, then gingerly reaches out to poke Phoebe's hand with a single finger.

"...Right. Um, well, if you three need anything... let me know, I guess."

Without another word, the woman retracts her hand, turns around, and skitters away.

I raise an eyebrow. "Rosalia, huh? She seems suspicious."

Phoebe lowers her hand, and a hint of dejection appears in her eyes. "Ah, maybe I was too insensitive. As a stranger, I shouldn't have gotten all touchy-feely right off the bat. The demons who come here often have to overcome their prejudices. It's not an easy task for most."

"I don't think you were at fault," I mutter. "That fat ogre was acting strange. Keep an eye on her."

Smack.

Phoebe swats my arm. Her expression turns ugly. "Jason! Don't be rude. There's no need to insult her weight! She seems like a perfectly pleasant woman. It's my fault for being too forward and driving her away."

I shrug. "Sure, whatever you say, but I don't like the look in her eyes."

* * *

Half an hour later, after lingering around Belial's hospital room, heavy footsteps approach us. I turn around to see Kar lumber into the hospital, with Neil following close behind. The leader of humanity's military keeps his distance from me, but Kar walks right over and smacks my back. "Turtle! You done sittin' around here all day, or what?"

It takes me a moment to catch my footing. Kar's insane strength nearly knocks me to the ground. "Y-yeah. I'm good to go. Neil? It's not often I see you come to the hospital."

Neil's expression remains impassive. He crosses his arms and shoots an odd look at Belial. "Mmm. Yes, well, I might have some differences with the Second Emperor of demonkind, but when I heard she was in a coma, I felt it was worth paying her a visit. Belial is one of our best healers behind yourself and Hope, after all."

Neil's eyes flick to Phoebe. "Miss Hiro. How is the succubus faring? Will she awaken soon?"

Phoebe forces some positivity into her voice. "Oh, I certainly hope so. Samantha took a bit of a beating, but she's a fighter. She won't stay down long."

Neil frowns. "Mmm. Jason, I hear it was you who attacked the succubus. Care to explain yourself?"

Neil's sudden pivot makes me frown. "I wasn't myself. A foreign entity took over my mind, temporarily. It won't happen again."

"It had better not," Neil snaps. "The last thing we need is a Wordsmith as our enemy. I've got my hands full protecting the Core. If I have to deal with a traitor on Tarus II-"

"You won't," I say, trying not to lose my temper. "I've taken several precautions to protect my mind. You just keep worrying about you, and I'll worry about me."

Neil licks his lips. He hesitates for a moment before shaking his head. "You say that now, but all it will take is one screwup, and we'll be history. Bah! I've said my piece. Here, this is for the... woman."

Neil produces a rose from behind his back, lightly tosses it onto a nearby dresser, and smooths his hair back. "Give the succubus my best wishes."

Without waiting for a reply, Neil turns and storms away, leaving both Phoebe and I more than a little flustered.

Once Neil leaves, Phoebe balls her hands into fists. "Oooh! That god-damned little..."

"Neil has really changed," I mutter. "You used to be good friends with him, but ever since that sudden attack on the Core last year, he hasn't been the same."

Kar stands awkwardly, caught between Neil's departure and our conversation. The crocodile twiddles his thumbs and clears his throat. "Err, ahem... Ox-Arms is a little stressed out. Try not to blame him for acting all weird and stuff."

"This is about more than Neil being stressed," Phoebe mutters. "Never once has he looked at Samantha as anything other than some evil creature. She's helped us countless times, but his bigotry never fades! Why, when those shadow-walkers ambushed him last year, who was it that brought him back from the brink of death? Sam! Neil barely even thanked her!"

I rub my forehead. "I've tried talking to Neil, but he can be incredibly hard-headed sometimes. Whatever. Leave him to do what he does best… protect the Core."

"Yes, I agree," Phoebe replies. "And you do what you do best; mediate. Kar, make sure to take care of Jason, okay? I trust you to be the brains and brawn of this operation."

Kar snorts. "White-hair, don't you worry your pretty little face. I won't let Turtle do anything I wouldn't do. I'm only going to introduce him to my mother, Marie. The only trouble we might face will come when we travel to Hell Harbor."

I nod. "What's it like there?"

Kar taps his chin thoughtfully. "Mmm. Like I said before, it's supposed to be a paradise of sorts. Lots of trees. Grass. Sunlight. I've never been there before, so I don't know."

"Great. It'll be a first for both of us," I say. "Hopefully, Samantha will recover by the time I get back. Daisy! C'mere, you."

I turn around, bend over, and grab my daughter from behind. She shrieks with glee as I blow on her rosy little cheeks and plant a dozen kisses all over her face.

"Daddy, it tickles! Stop! Heehee!"

I set her down. "You be a good girl for mommy, okay? Go to bed early, brush your teeth, and stay out of the cookie jar."

My daughter reaches up to hug me, and I pull Phoebe in for a big group hug as well.

"Love you," Phoebe says. She smiles at me, and immediately, all of my worries fade away.

I have the most beautiful wife in the world.

As I pull away, I speak a word of power. "Summon."

A pair of shiny golden bracelets materialize in midair and land in my grasp. I take one of them and wrap it around Phoebe's wrist, then put the other on mine.

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "What's this?"

"It's a magical communicator," I reply. "It'll allow us to contact each other in emergencies. Unfortunately, it takes a lot of mana to create, since it has to send information faster than the speed of light. However, these two should be good enough for our needs. If anything happens in the Core or on Tarus, don't hesitate to message me. I won't let anything happen while I'm gone."

Phoebe nods. "Alright. Thank you, Jason. Take care!"

I say my goodbyes to Phoebe and Daisy. Minutes later, I stroll out of the hospital room with Kar at my side.

"I don't understand," Kar mutters under his breath. "Why can't you heal Big Boobs?"

"She's suffered brain damage," I reply. "If I had Solomon's Crown, I could heal her. Without it, I can't unravel the mysteries of the human brain, let alone a demon's."

Kar frowns. "Oh. I see. You're too dumb to heal her. How unfortunate."

"What?! No! I'm not too dumb! Come on, Kar, the brain is a highly complex organism."

The giant crocodile nods sagely. "Indeed. Like an apple."

"An apple?! What the fuck does an apple have to do with anything?"

Kar shoots me a look of pity. "Someday, you may understand. As White-Hair said, leave the thinking to me."

I roll my eyes. "Yeah, yeah, okay, buddy."

As we turn to leave the hospital, I catch sight of the new nurse, Rosalia. The overweight demoness stares at me through the window of a nurse station as Kar and I exit the building.

What the hell is her problem? And why does she give me such a bad feeling?

Part 183: The Road to El-Dorado

Two dozen demons rush down the corridors of the Labyrinth; panic etched onto their faces. They stumble and trip over each other as they desperately try to flee an unseen pursuer. The strongest of them, a brother and sister Demon Lord duo, keep to the rear and fling fireballs and lightning behind themselves blindly.

"Keep firing!" The male demon yells. "Slow him down!"

"Slow him down?!" His sister yelps. "We're not even hitting the shrakh-muncher!"

As they shoot glances over their shoulders, continually checking for the horrifying monster chasing them, both of their hearts skip a beat as the demons in the front screech to a stop.

"Shit! He's here! Run awa-!"

One of the demons in the front falls silent as his head vanishes, blown off his body by some unseen force. A split-second later, the deafening explosion of a sonic boom erupts in the corridor, causing all of the other demons to howl in pain and stumble backward.

"You can't run," The invisible specter says, his masculine voice taunting them. "I am everywhere. I am your worst nightmare."

"Fucking Wordsmith!" The pair of Demon Lords bellow in unison. They swivel on their heels and fling a volley of fireballs and lightning bolts over the other demon's heads, only for their blood to run cold when their attacks dissipate into nothingness.

"Seal."

The Wordsmith, Hope, cuts off the magic in every demon's body with a single word. The troupe of Pyrokinetic grunts gasps in horror as their magical pathways temporarily vanish. Before they can react, Hope speaks again.

"Fire."

A tiny marble appears from the darkness up ahead. It races forward at three times the speed of sound and rips through the stomachs of five demons in the front. They cough blood and stumble backward, but their nightmare doesn't end.

Hope continues to Wordsmith. "Fire. Fire. Fire."

Sonic booms erupt in the crowded hallway, one after the other. Seconds later, all of the demons perish except for the two Lords. The male jumps in front of his sister and spreads his arms outward protectively.

"Y-you fucking coward! Show yourself!"

"Alright. Normalize."

Hope dispels the invisibility enveloping himself, revealing his figure to the brother and sister duo. At the sight of the tall, muscular human before them, both demons shiver in fright.

"The looks on your faces are great," Hope says. "I saw similar expressions when your kind attacked Maiura six years ago. Tens of thousands of humans died, unable to fight back. I'm only repaying the favor."

The male demon trembles uncontrollably. "L-leave my sister out of this! Don't hurt Kiera! Fight me like a man, if you dare!"

"A man?" Hope asks. He shakes his head. "I left my humanity behind six years ago. I'm a monster now, a real Devil. There's no point fighting fair with the likes of you."

Hope raises his hand. A small pouch at his side pops open, and a marble levitates into the air, guided by his telekinesis.

"Fire."

Before the brother and sister can beg for mercy, Hope shoots the marble forward at twice the speed of sound. It rips through the hearts of both demons, killing them instantly. Both of them slump to the ground lifelessly, regret etched into their faces.

Hope sighs. "Haah. Retrieve."

His senses travel around the Labyrinth's corridors, where more than a dozen marbles lay embedded in the walls and floor. They collectively vanish and reappear in midair before him, only to fall straight down and strike the floor with a series of dull thuds. None of the marbles bounce or roll.

Hope retrieves them with his telekinesis and places them in the pouch on his waist. As he does, Solomon bubbles up in his mind.

"Hmm. What an intriguing way of fighting. Those little balls aren't like anything I've seen before."

Hope shakes his head. "I condensed and solidified each one several times with Wordsmithing, then increased their weight. They're three times heavier than tungsten and durable enough not to break under any natural force. I like to think of them as miniature cannonballs."

"I see," Solomon says, nodding approvingly. "And when you speak the word 'fire,' you must be flinging them forward at high speeds?"

"Yeah. Like a railgun."

Hope's tone turns brusque as he finishes retrieving his marbles. A moment later, he utters a few words of power. "Invisibility. Stealth. Vision."

His body vanishes, allowing him to walk unseen. Additionally, his footsteps produce no noise, and his vision enhances, allowing his eyes to pierce the darkness with ease.

"So," Hope says, stepping over the corpses of the dead demons. "How much further to the El-Dorado room?"

"A few more miles," Solomon replies. "You should use your teleportation. There's no reason to dawdle and kill these insignificant-"

"Don't tell me what to do," Hope says, cutting Solomon off. "Let's get one thing straight; I'm not Jason. I do what I want, when I want. Right now, I'm going to kill a few demons. If you don't like that, find another head to sit on."

Solomon leans backward and holds up his palms. "Very well! I'm merely offering a suggestion."

"Yes. You are."

Hope continues walking through the Labyrinth halls. Every so often, he pulls up the Crown's map and takes a detour, heading for areas with heavy traffic.

"Shit, shit, shit!! It's the Wordsmi-!"

Demons fall before him like wheat to the scythe. Hope barely blinks as he sprays blood and gore all across the Labyrinth's corridors.

Solomon frowns. "You're making quite the ruckus, Hope. If you keep this up, the senior demons are certain to arrive."

Hope smirks. "Oh, no. Not them. I'm quaking in my boots."

The ancient king frowns. "Why are you so confident?"

Hope sighs. "Solomon, I've killed north of one hundred thousand demons in the last six years. Not once has any demon higher than a Baron approached me. Want to know why?"

Solomon's expression turns grim. "They're afraid of you?"

"Naturally. The Demon Dukes and Emperors make themselves out to be these unstoppable machines of death, but in reality, they're nothing more than paper tigers. Fat cats. They've lived through several epochs by now, each new one changing their perception of reality. Now, they want nothing more than to live lives of decadence. They're no different from the billionaires of my era."

Hope pauses for a moment to crush a fleeing demon with his telekinesis. He shatters the poor fellow's spine with a flick of his finger and smashes him into a lump of meat and bone, only to leave the formless meat paste behind as he continues marching forward.

"As far as the Dukes and Emperors are concerned, the loss of 100,000 lives means nothing. They might pretend to care, and they might put on a big show for the sake of maintaining order and stability... but in the end, they regard the demons I've killed today with as much sympathy as I might a colony of ants."

Hope stands motionless for a few moments, lost in his thoughts. Eventually, he shakes his head and continues walking.

"Humans are many things," Hope mutters. "But we are not wicked like the demons. We have the capacity for great good and great evil alike. Throughout history, humans unleashed many catastrophes, but in the end, progress marched onward. Even when I was at my lowest, back before I entered the Cryopod, I always believed humans would reach new heights. I assumed we would reach an era of enlightenment like in Star Trek."

"But we didn't," Solomon whispers. "We perished under the assault of the Volgrim and demons."

"It's my fault," Hope continues. "I should have been there. I shouldn't have frozen myself like a coward."

"But you did," Solomon says, inflecting his voice with sympathy. "Now, you must do whatever you can to correct your mistakes. Everyone sins, even me. Don't try to achieve perfection, for it will only cause you heartache in the end."

"I know."

Both men fall into silence. Hope travels down the Labyrinthine hallways, killing demons as he walks, but his movements come more sluggishly as hundreds of conflicting thoughts bog his mind down.

Eventually, Hope slows to a stop. He arrives in front of a giant stone chamber, one unlike the others he's passed today. Stalactites hang from the ceiling, while Stalagmites stick up from the floor. Thousands of demons mill around, performing all manner of work and tasks. Water drips from the roof and lands in puddles and pools, where several mermaids frolic and play with one another.

Hope steps into the chamber. His eyes widen as he spots many other strange oddities.

Orcs hammer lumps of metal into swords and armor. Hellhounds linger in small packs, some of them chewing on the bones of deceased slaves, while others fight amongst themselves for sport. Goblins scurry about, performing busywork, while thousands of imps chase after each other and cause all manner of mischief.

However, one area of the massive chamber catches Hope's eye above all the others.

Several rows of platforms rest on the walls. Inside them, large depressions afford enough room for demon broodmothers to plant their hulking, ant-like rumps. The broodmothers take care of nearby imps running around, while occasionally pausing to squeeze out newly born imps from openings in their posteriors. They give birth smoothly and without pain, having long since grown accustomed to whelping dozens of imps every day.

Solomon's eyebrows shoot up. "Ah! A demon nursery. Now you've struck gold, Hope. These broodmothers help boost the demon population. Kill all of them, and you'll deal a blow to the demons' population production."

Hope doesn't reply.

Instead, his eyes rest on one of the nearest broodmothers. Despite the hideous, thirty-foot rump sticking out from her backside, her beautiful features reveal her former identity as a succubus.

The Broodmother tenderly holds a newborn imp in her grasp. The little guy clutches his head and writhes in her arms, apparently suffering some sort of seizure.

"There, there. It will be okay," The Broodmother whispers. "Bear with it for a while longer. The pain won't last-"

Before she finishes speaking, the imp stops struggling. His body stiffens, and he flops lifelessly in her arms, dropping both hands from his head.

The Broodmother's expression turns ashen. She stares at the dead demon for several seconds, then gently lowers him to the ground. She glances toward Hope, causing the Wordsmith to flinch.

"Pogo... I have another."

Hope's heartbeat quickens as he seemingly meets the Broodmother's gaze. However, at that moment, a little goblin jumps out from behind a rock to Hope's left and rushes over to the Broodmother.

"Aw, sheesh, Vell. That's your third one today! Stupid, worthless woman! Stop killin' all the damn whelps!"

"I... I didn't mean to..." The Broodmother, Vell, says. Tears appear in her eyes, but she quickly wipes them away. "He was in pain the whole time..."

"I'd be in pain too if my Broodmother was as worthless as you!" The goblin snaps. He grabs the dead imp by its ankle and drags it over to a pack of Hellhounds in the far corner. The half-dozen beasts flick their fifty-eyed heads toward the approaching goblin, and their gazes turn sinister.

"Here! Grub!" Pogo yells. He flings the dead imp toward the hellhounds. The entire pack lunges forward and snaps at the corpse, ripping it to pieces before it hits the ground.

"No... no... it's all my fault..." Vell mutters. She averts her eyes, unable to look at the horrifying scene of carnage.

"Don't like it? Then stop killing your damn whelps!" Pogo barks, ignoring her distress. The goblin waddles back to the rock and sits down, returning to his previous task. He takes a boring tool and a bone and continues drilling a hole in it, evidently crafting a flute.

Vell weeps uncontrollably for several minutes. Eventually, Hope turns around and leaves the room.

"What are you doing?" Solomon asks. "Aren't you going to destroy the nursery?"

Hope pauses.

"No. I don't think I will."

Solomon rolls his eyes. "Don't tell me you feel sorry for that fat sow? She's a demon, Hope. You've already killed plenty of them today."

"This is different," Hope replies, his voice monotone. "Killing demon warriors who can fight back isn't the same as killing a bunch of imps and their mothers."

"Ugh. Spare me the sentimentality."

Solomon plops down on the ground in Hope's mind and assumes a cross-legged stance.

"You called yourself a monster earlier. What kind of monster takes pity on others just because they can't fight back? If you spare those imps, they'll grow up to become thorns in your side."

"I know," Hope mutters. "I know. For right now, though, I can't do it. It just doesn't feel right."

"Fine. Suit yourself."

Solomon shrugs, unable to understand the Wordsmith's strange reluctance.

"We've almost reached our destination, Hope. Keep your eyes peeled."

"I will."

Hope continues walking. As he nears the El-Dorado room, his thoughts travel backward through the sands of time.

Amanda. Mother. Have I walked the right path in life? Have I become a respectable man?

Images of his foster mother appear in Hope's mind.

Her gentle smile.

The way she helped him with his homework.

...And her expression on the day Robert fell into a coma.

If only I had Wordsmithing back then. I could have healed Robert. We could have lived a happy life... I could have grown up in a stable family, mastered my power, and fought the demons. I could have saved Earth.

But I didn't. I couldn't.

Unexpectedly, tears coalesce in Hope's eyes. The image of the sobbing Broodmother appears unbidden in his mind, and he hurriedly wipes his eyes.

"Hope? Are you alright?" Solomon asks, his voice much quieter than before.

Hope vigorously nods his head. "I'm fine, Solomon. Fine."

He stifles the emotions in his heart. That was Jason's past, not mine. I didn't even exist. He's the one I should blame.

"We're here," Solomon says, his voice shaking Hope from his stupor.

The Wordsmith stops mid-stride and gazes forward, his attention fixated on a small, narrow passage. Inside, a faint shimmer of golden light catches his attention.

The El-Dorado room.

Hope exhales. After pausing for a moment, he strides forward.

"This had better be worth the trouble," the Wordsmith mutters.

"Don't worry," Solomon replies. "With the information and power you'll obtain today, overthrowing Jason as humanity's leader will be a piece of cake. You won't regret coming here."

"That's all I can ask, Solomon."

Hope enters the room, leaving the rest of the Labyrinth behind.

I have to right my past wrongs.

Part 184: Intertwined Flesh

My breath catches. I pause to stare as Ose pops the button on her blouse and tosses it to the side, revealing her lacy undergarments.

Two seconds later, Ose unbuttons her dress pants and slips out of them, leaving her to stand in only a pair of lacey white panties and a ridiculously tight corset. As she raises her head, a sardonic smile crosses her face. "Enjoying the show, Beelzebub? I'll let you take off the rest if you like."

We're inside Ose's residence now, a grand palace situated atop a mountain many miles from Hell Harbor's western-most sea. Ose's bedroom is a barebones place, with only a bed, a dresser, and a changing mirror. It seems she designed her room for practicality and functionality, a detail I can respect.

I've never been here before, and now, as I gaze into this enchantress's eyes, I feel... intimidated.

No. That can't be it. I'm just a little nervous. I... I've never felt attraction to a woman before. Certainly, I've gazed upon my fair share of succubi and other assorted demonesses. I've admired their beauty from a distance, but never once have any of them struck my fancy. Never once have I felt an urge to pursue them.

Ose is different.

I do not understand why, when I gaze upon her, my thoughts become muddled. Perhaps it's due to our shared goals and mindset. She's not like the other women. She's-

"Are you going to stand there and stare all day?" Ose asks, startling me.

Damn! I drifted off into my thoughts. I'm acting like a total buffoon!

"Err, s-sorry," I say, wincing as I stammer awkwardly. "My, err, you are more... beautiful than I expected."

Ose's eyebrows shoot up. "Oh? Did you expect a hideous ogre to emerge from beneath my clothes? I'm sorry to disappoint you, Beelzebub."

"No! That's not what I meant... I, erm, well, when I look at you, I..."

Bloody hell! I can't speak straight! How can I transform into a gibbering moron just from seeing a bit of skin?! Stupid, worthless little imp, Beelzebub! Stop talking before you ruin everything!

Ose chortles under her breath. "Huhu... Oh, goodness. Can it be? Is the classy, high-strung Duke of Inferno... nervous? First time around the block, big guy?"

My cheeks flush red. "N... no! I've been with hundreds of ravishing women! I'll remind you that I am already well over ten thousand years old!"

Ose laughs into her hand. "Haha! It's fine, Beelzebub. I'm a little inexperienced, myself. To be honest, I'm barely keeping my composure right now! Have you any idea how many suitors I've turned down in my life? They call me an ice queen!"

Suddenly, Ose stops laughing. She raises her head and gazes into my eyes. A strange look passes over her face, as if she's suddenly recalled an unpleasant memory.

"Tch. Let's continue. There's no sense standing around all day," Ose says with a huff. Before I can reply, she grabs my hands and places them on her corset. "Go on, then. You get to take this layer off."

I blink in surprise. Her strange impassivity toward carnal pleasures of the flesh is not what I expected at all. Not wanting to delay, I quickly fumble for the laces holding her tightened clothing together, only to frown.

"Grr... these damned laces... I can't feel them with my fingers."

Ose watches indifferently for a few moments as I try to undo the front of her corset. Eventually, she sighs. "I forgot that you'd lacked a sense of touch ever since your rise to Duke. Never mind. I'll take this layer off. You may watch. Then it will be my turn."

Ose winks playfully at me. I smile, but as she begins to undo her undergarments, a realization strikes me.

The Third Emperor of demonkind isn't acting like her usual self.

Something about Ose appears fake. False. It's almost as if she's simply going through the motions. Does she feel some obligation toward me? Are her feelings even genuine?

Are... mine?

Ose turns around and reveals her back to me. "I've finished the front. Normally, I'd have Amy undo the back, but since today is a special day, I'll have you do it instead. Just pull that one large string near the top. Even without feeling in your hands, you should manage."

I nod, but she doesn't see it. As I reach toward her, my breath catches.

Devils. Ose really is a deity among women.

Even without sensation in my hands, I can still feel how my hand glides across her smooth skin. I carefully place my hands on her shoulders, and smile as she flinches in surprise.

Ose's tone raises an octave. "W-what are you doing?"

"Sorry," I say, "but I couldn't resist. I was lying earlier, but you knew that. I've been single my whole life. Master Agares tried to pair me with various women, over and over, but I turned all of them down."

Ose stares ahead, keeping her back to me. "Oh? Why didn't you go after them? Isn't that what men do?"

"Truthfully, I don't know. I've never met a woman who interested me, not until I met you."

Ose continues staring ahead. However, I can't help but grin mischievously as her red skin darkens noticeably.

"I feel the same way," Ose mutters. "I don't even know what it is about you that I like. It's something... intangible. Indescribable. Maybe I simply enjoy the way you barely acknowledge my presence. Most men fawn after me like rabid hellhounds. It's sickening."

"Haha..." I chuckle. "I know what you mean. Women can't take their eyes off me. All they do is prattle on about their appearances, other men, and how good-looking I am. They only have makeup and romance rolling around in their heads. Not you. You thirst for power, much like me. I respect that."

Ose nods, agreeing with my assessment of my looks. She turns around to gaze into my eyes. "We've said enough. Come, Beelzebub. Let's not stand on ceremony any longer. Use your fire and burn my clothes off."

I blink. "Erm, are you sure? I might burn you."

"If the Duke of Inferno is clumsy enough to do such a thing, then he isn't worth my time."

A moment passes.

I swallow hard and nod. "You're right."

I raise both of my hands and ignite a scorching hot, yet razor-thin flame on the tips of my fingers. With one smooth motion, I slide my fingers down Ose's breasts, slicing apart her restrictive clothing as if it were melted cheese.

The moment Ose's ravishing figure appears, she inhales, taking a deep breath as her suffocating apparel falls to the floor. "Haah!"

After I finish, we stare into each other's eyes.

"I knew I could count on you," Ose says, blushing. "Now, it's my turn."

Before I can react, Ose's entire body shifts into a blur of motion.

Riiip!

My shirt explodes into tatters from the Third Emperor's vicious onslaught. A split-second later, my pants scatter to the four fucking winds, leaving me even nuder than her!

"Seven Hells!" I blurt out a curse in surprise. "Whatever happened to slow and steady?!"

"I've waited a hundred thousand years," Ose says, as she suddenly appears inches before my face. "I'm done with waiting."

Foomp!

My body flies backward. Ose shoves me onto her bed with astounding force, making me strike the covers like a cannonball. "Gahk! Devil's sake, woman."

Wearing only a pair of lacey white panties, Ose leaps atop me and grins maniacally. "Oh, Beelzebub, don't make me wait any longer."

Her enthusiasm proves infectious. I lunge forward and wrap my arms around her back. "Don't tell me what to do, woman. In the bedroom, I'm in charge!"

I try to flip her onto her back, but she doesn't budge. "I'm an Emperor. Naturally, I'll take the lead."

"I'm the man! You're the woman!"

"Hahaha! I love it when you're angry!" Ose laughs.

* * *

Minutes later, Ose sits atop me like a warrior riding a Hellhound. However, her expression grows sullen. Her enthusiasm from earlier disappears.

"Beelzebub, what's the matter? Why won't it stand up?"

I sigh. "My demonhood... it's not working properly. Damn! I didn't realize the fucking thing lacked sensation just like the rest of my body! How... how humiliating!"

Ose frowns. She rubs her pelvis against mine in an attempt to excite me, but nothing happens. "No... it can't end like this. There has to be a way..."

I slam the back of my head against the pillow. "No, dammit! I should have remembered. Seven Hells... how am I going to live this down?"

Ose's tone softens. As I gaze up at the ceiling, I feel her gaze on my face. "It's not your fault. You can't blame yourself."

"Comforting words won't make me 'perform,'" I mutter. "I'm as useless as a eunuch."

Both of us fall silent. Ose's pitying gaze simultaneously infuriates and humiliates me. If the other demons ever hear about tonight, I'll never live it down. The reputation I've built over the last ten years, the image I've crafted of being an unstoppable machine of carnage, will vanish in the blink of an eye.

Devils! Hells! I can't believe my rotten luck! If I didn't know any better, I might even think Ose did all this deliberately to teach me a lesson. Why wouldn't she? She always plots behind people's backs.

All I can imagine now is the laughing look on her face when she blabs about today to Mephisto and Bael. They'll bring it up over and over again, forever, for the rest of eternity.

Beelzebub, the impotent.

Beelzebub, the soft-headed.

I can hear their taunts already. Hells!!

"Beelzebub."

Ose's voice, softer than before, whispers in my ear. With a start, I suddenly realize she's drawn incredibly close to me. Her breath beats on my face, and her flesh presses against mine. Were it not for this damned, worthless body, I would have easily noticed her movements. What does she want? Is this the moment where she sticks the knife in and twists? Is this-

"Beelzebub. Listen to me. I have an idea."

Ose speaks again. She presses herself even further against me, making me wish I could feel even the slightest inch of her flesh.

I swallow my doubts. "What idea...?"

"Your senses might appear dead, but I have a hypothesis. Would you like me to test something on you? I'll want your permission."

I frown. Ose is asking for my consent? Since when did she start doing such things?

I gently wrap an arm around her back. "What are you going to do?"

Ose doesn't reply. She breathes in my ear quietly for several seconds, sending tingles down my spine. This strangely erotic moment fills me with excitement. If only I could feel her skin for just a moment, I might just... just...

"I'll try not to hurt you," Ose whispers. "I don't want you to feel ashamed for what's happened. It's not your fault. However, I have to ask you a question."

Slowly, I nod. "Go on."

"Do you believe in fate?"

Ose's white hair falls in my face. With her head resting beside mine, I can't see the look in her eyes. However, her words cause me to shudder.

"...Perhaps? Why do you ask?"

"My demonic power is electricity. Don't you find that strange?"

Ose continues to whisper. She pulls away from me, ever so slightly, and props her elbow up on my chest, then rests her chin in her palm. Her expression is... simply divine.

"If I'm right, the demonic fire in your body must have seared your pain-receptors to ash. Burning and detonating your body repeatedly would be nothing short of masochistic for any other demon. However, to protect itself, your body sealed off its senses so that you could use your magic freely."

Ose smiles. This time, her expression contains nothing but warmth and admiration.

"How very like you, Beelzebub. You went so far as to give up your sense of touch to serve me better. Even if you did it unwittingly, I am thankful."

Ose bats her eyes. She raises her other arm, and sparks of electricity appear between her fingers.

"To demonstrate my thanks... I'm going to give you a night you'll never forget."

I stare at the electricity arcing between Ose's fingers. "I don't understand. What do you mean?"

"Your brain is nothing more than a bio-computer, one which communicates through electrical signals. Supposing I were to bridge the gap between your brain and body, you might regain that which you've lost."

My eyes bolt open. Her words strike at the very core of my being. "So... you're saying there's a chance?! You can give me my sense of touch back? We can-?!"

I cannot," Ose replies, a look of sorrow on her face. "Not permanently. Only as long as we're together — perhaps the Wordsmith could do such a thing, but I cannot."

Ose reaches toward me and caresses my face. A moment later, a sense of burning overtakes my entire body.

"Augh!"

I yelp in fright as white-hot pain erupts across every inch of my skin. My back spasms, and I flinch, unable to perceive the world around me for several seconds.

Then, as quickly as it came, the pain disappears. Ose continues pressing her hand against my face. Despite my disbelief, I finally feel her warm body pushing against mine. Inexplicable joy crashes into my mind. A realization of what I've lost, only to regain, causes me to break out into a stupid grin.

I'm... I'm so happy that I could cry!

"This is fate," Ose says. "We're meant to be together. You are my beloved warrior, my ruthless right hand. And I... I complete you. We make each other whole."

I reach up and touch her hand, grinning like a madman. My palm meets her soft, delicate fingers. Finally, I feel her devilishly smooth skin, and everything clicks into place.

Ose is the woman of my dreams.

A moment later, I glance downward, toward my pelvis.

"Oh," Ose says, following my gaze. "Looks like you're finally ready for action!"

I bare my teeth and flash a nasty grin. "Haha... you have no idea. I'll accept your reward, Your Highness, and counter with my own!"

This time, I catch Ose by surprise and flip her over on the bed, allowing me to assume the dominating position. She squeals playfully while keeping her hand pressed against my head.

"Take me, Beelzebub. Take me!"

"I told you, woman! Don't tell me what to do! I'm in charge!"

* * *

What soon follows is the most memorable night of my life.

Part 185: Sphinx's Might

Kar and I travel through the Labyrinth, our boots clomping against the hardened dirt floors with heavy thuds. Both of us keep our nanite armor ready to activate in case of an enemy attack, but thanks to my Wordsmithing, we avoid potential ambushers by literal miles.

Sitting on Kar's shoulder is his diminutive little fairy wife, Blinker. She says nothing, opting to instead observe quietly as Kar and I head toward our ultimate destination: His mother's secret base.

"Scan."

I speak a word of power, making my magical energy surge into the surroundings, alerting me to a group of enemies in an upcoming junction.

"Distract."

Kar and I walk toward the T-shaped passage, where several dozen orcs sit on their asses, shooting the shit with one another.

"-what me said! Stupid Jooka no give me earned meat!"

"Stop whining! You get meat when you done guttin' them slaves!"

Two orcs argue with one another about some gruesome act of violence. Rather than listen to their conversation, I tune them out.

Kar and I walk toward the junction, but our loud footsteps don't attract any of the orcs' attention. They chat idly as the giant crocodile and delicious-tasting human walk right past them and continue on our merry way.

Half a minute later, Kar shakes his head. "Hurgh. Your ability never fails to amaze me, Turtle. Those orcs didn't see us at all."

I nod. "Solomon and I found that the intent behind my words matters. When I said 'distract,' I imagined that those orcs were unable to detect us and that they would be distracted by some banal observations. As luck would have it, they ended up being too engrossed in their conversation to notice us."

Blinker, still sitting on Kar's shoulder, pipes up, a hint of curiosity in her eyes. "Ohh! So you didn't know what would distract them, only that they shouldn't notice us?"

"Pretty much. Wordsmithing isn't just powerful; it's convenient, too."

I turn to look at Blinker, only to notice a wicked gleam in her eyes. "Sooo... your Wordsmithing can do anything?"

"Uh... I mean, it has a few limits. Like, I can't instantly kill anyone. I can't bring back the dead, either."

"Right, right," Blinker says, waving her hands. "Forget that boring stuff. Can it make people more attractive?"

I frown. "...Yeah. When I first discovered my power, I changed my body to look more manly. I feel a little awkward bringing it up, since it was a bit juvenile-"

"Have you ever Wordsmithed Phoebe? You know... to make her prettier!"

Blinker's question nearly makes me choke on my saliva. "Kuh! What?! Why would you even think that?!"

Suddenly, inside my mind, the phantom Phoebe I created earlier today materializes with a smirk on her face. "Yeah, Jason. Did you do any Wordsmithing to me? I could swear I woke up one day with bigger boobs."

No, absolutely not! I retort, dread building in the back of my mind. I told you already; you were imagining things!

"Haha! Sure, sure," Phoebe says, laughing into her fist. "I believe you. You're too much of a gentleman to do something like that."

I stare ahead stonily, looking not at Blinker, but through her. My eyes glaze over as a sad realization hits me.

Shit. Phoebe knows.

Blinker snickers like a hyena. "Hahaha! I knew it! Look at his face, Kar! He's blushing like crazy!"

Kar curls his lip upward as he looks at me. His gaze contains a hint of admiration, as well as jealousy. "If only I had such power..."

"You guys have the wrong idea..." I mutter, but it's too late. I've been found out. I'll have to apologize to Phoebe's consciousness later.

I mean, hell, I made myself better looking for Phoebe! What's wrong with a few tiny tweaks to suit my tastes? Sheesh, can't a guy catch a break around here?

* * *

Several minutes pass.

Blinker continues to chuckle to herself, pleased at her brilliant deductions. However, Kar falls silent. A look of annoyance spreads across his face as we wander from hallway to hallway.

"Hurgh. Was it here? Or maybe we should have taken a left at that last junction. Stupid Labyrinth! I've spent so much time on Tarus II that my instincts have become dull. I can't remember where the entrance is..."

I frown. "What do you mean, Kar? Can't you find the path to your mother's base?"

Kar slows to a stop at yet another nondescript junction. His reptilian eyes sweep from left to right as he peers into the all-encompassing darkness surrounding us. "The last time I saw Mother was six years ago, shortly before I met you. Monsters and demons instinctively know how to navigate the Labyrinth, but only if we live here permanently. Those who leave to live on planets will often lose their affinity to the Labyrinth's magic."

I nod. "Interesting. I didn't know that. Is there anything I can do to help? Maybe I can keep my eyes peeled to help you out."

Slowly, Kar nods. "Hurgh... scattered around the various corners of Hell are little holes in the Labyrinth's walls. We lizardmen shrink down and enter them, allowing us to use the secret passages for our protection. Few monsters and demons are capable of shrinking to a small enough size to enter, allowing us to conceal our movements."

"Why do you lizardmen have to hide, anyway? I thought all monsters got along with each other?"

Instead of Kar, it's Blinker who responds. Her giddy mood vanishes instantly. "Not true, mister 'smith. Every day, small-scale wars pop up here and there. Demons love preying on mermaids, and orcs hunt any Hellhounds they can find, especially if they split off from a pack. The monsters you know about are the teeniest, tiniest slice of the monster pie. There are whole worlds full of monsters even I ain't never seen."

Kar nods. "The lizardmen and crocodiles were once little more than simple-minded creatures roaming about on Earth. It was our Mother, the divine goddess, Marie, who pulled us out of the swamps and rivers. She gave us life and allowed us to walk with our heads held high among the other monsters. However, due to our incredible strength, some did not appreciate our presence."

Realization dawns on me. "Your ancestors were actual crocodiles and lizards? Four-legged reptiles that crawled around on their bellies?"

"Indeed. Most monsters arose from the primordial soup of life. Our beginnings were as undignified as that of humans, demons, and all the other sentients. Evolution and mutation gave rise to higher species. Over time, we reached our present status through blood, sweat, and tears."

Kar turns to me as a solemn look appears in his eyes.

"...at least, that's what Mother says. I dunno. I don't read many books."

I sigh.

Kar is, without a doubt... a giant lunkhead.

"Right. On that note, what happened to all the other crocodiles? I assume the lizardmen and crocodiles are different species, right? You're not a mutated lizardman, are you?"

Kar continues to stare at me. After several seconds, he looks away. "No. I am not. Among my people, I was, at best, an average warrior. I stood at neither the top of my clan nor the bottom. Each crocodilian warrior possessed the strength of a Demon Lord from birth, and we grew stronger over time. Because of this unique trait, many demons grew to fear and hate us. Two demon Barons, twin brothers, decided to act on their hatred. They arrived during the night and slaughtered my kin like sheep."

Kar's face twists and scrunches together, transforming into a flood of rage.

"They killed my wife and her brood. I returned to find her bloodied body laying in the grass, our spawn dead in her arms. I could only watch as... as the life ebbed from her eyes..."

Kar stares at the ground. Tears do not well up in his eyes, and neither does his voice crack. However, he speaks more slowly and inflects each word more precisely than usual.

"I... I swore that I would not die until I took revenge for their deaths. I know not what their killers look like, only their names."

I reach over and rest my hand on Kar's shoulder. "Who are they? Tell me. I'll help you find them."

Kar exhales hot air through his nose. "Duriel and Zamiel. The Battle Brothers. I know very little about them. They possess excellent weapon skills, and they love killing in all its forms. They torture, maim, and hunt prisoners for sport. They're sick, vile little creatures. When I wrap my claws around their skinny little necks..."

Kar grabs at the air, pretending for a moment that he's twisting the life out of his worst enemies. I watch, silently, saying nothing. After a few moments, Kar shakes his head.

"Hurgh. My apologies, little Turtle. I... I should not heave this load onto your shoulders."

"Don't worry about it," I say, dismissing Kar's concerns. "We're friends. If you want to get revenge, I won't stop you. Hell, I'll help in any way I can. These guys sound like true-blue bastards."

Kar raises his head and eyeballs me for a moment. "Haha... you're too kind. I know you, Turtle. You hate violence. You would never kill someone, not even for revenge. You are a better person than me."

I shake my head. "That isn't true. If I were in your shoes, and if someone hurt my family, my wife, and daughter... I don't know what I'd do. Every man draws a line in the sand somewhere. If someone crosses it, they'll pay with their life."

Kar nods. "Hurgh. Still, if I someday meet my mate's murderer... what should I do? Should I forgive them? Should I kill them? Even if I do, it won't bring my dear Pyra back. I have a new wife now, Blinker, and I love her with all my scales. Sometimes... sometimes I wonder if..."

Kar trails off. It takes me a moment to understand his unspoken words. When I do, I immediately shake my head. "No, no! Don't even think like that, Kar! Your wife would be satisfied that you've moved on. She wouldn't hate you for trying to find happiness."

Blinker crosses her arms. "Jason's right. You can't keep beating yourself up, Kar-Kar! When we find those Battle Bitches, I'll tear 'em limb from limb! I'll give 'em the ol' five-six; the seven-eight! We're in this together! Don't even think about getting all mopey on me!"

Kar sighs. "I do not have the same confidence as either of you. Every time I see myself in the mirror, guilt wracks my body. It is difficult moving on when I have lost so much."

I glance at Blinker, and she meets my gaze. For a brief instant, the two of us share our unspoken thoughts. I begin to understand how hard it was for her to marry Kar when he still suffers from the loss of his previous wife. He has yet to forget his beloved Pyra.

I wonder if Blinker has resigned herself to only ever being Kar's second lover?

* * *

We continue walking through the Labyrinth. This time, I try to help Kar by using my Wordsmithing more frequently.

"Investigate. Inspect."

I aim my mind at the walls around us, searching for hidden tunnels and passages. However, no matter where I look, I don't detect the mouse-sized holes Kar mentioned.

"Are we in the right area?" I ask.

Kar shrugs. "Maybe not. I barely recognize this area."

Blinker gestures to our right. "We're gettin' pretty close to the flame regions. Tons of hotheaded demons live there, plus salamanders and baby drakes."

I scratch my thin thoughtfully. "Aren't dragons extinct? Why would these little half-drakes pop up on Tarus II, and here in the Labyrinth?"

"They aren't genuine dragons," Blinker replies. "Think of drakes as mutated imitations created by Lucifer."

"Lucifer? The Emperor of Providence? Isn't she dead?"

"That's what everyone says," Blinker replies, shrugging. "I heard Lucifer died during the Energy Wars. Her son turned on her, killing her before she could react. I don't know much 'bout them demons, though. We fairies like to keep to ourselves."

"That sucks," I reply, not caring one way or the other. "Demons can't even trust their closest family members. That says something about their nature."

Kar scoffs. "Pft. Humans aren't much better, Turtle. Your species lies, cheats, and backstabs one another for pieces of gold. I've seen it many times on worlds we've liberated from the demons."

"Touche," I mutter. "So how are we going to find this teeny little hidden entrance? We've wandered through fifty miles of the Labyrinth today, and so far, we've come up empty-handed."

"Let's go back to the Core," Kar mutters. "My mother told me she hid a passage to her base somewhere nearby the center of the Labyrinth, so if we keep looking around, we're sure to find it."

I sigh. "Sure. We'll do that, then."

Without any other options, we turn around and head back. Hardly have we rounded three corners before I slow to a stop and hold my palm up. "Wait. Something's wrong."

Kar tenses up. He balls his hands into fists and glances around. "Hurgh! The Labyrinth shifted. Our return path changed."

I nod. "Map."

After speaking a word of power, a mental map appears in my mind. It resembles the map Solomon's Crown used to show me, but it's incomplete and only allows me to see areas of the Labyrinth I've already explored.

"Shit. We only stood idly for a few minutes to chat, but during that time, fifteen different hallways shifted directions. It'll take us twice as long to return to the Core as it took us to get here."

"Phooey. Stupid maze," Blinker grumbles. "Whoever created this place was a real jerkface."

Clink. Clink. Clink.

My ears pick up a strange sound in the darkness ahead. Narrowing my eyes, I speak a word of power. "Visibility."

Instantly, one hundred feet of the Labyrinth's tunnels illuminate under a magical light. I take a step back in surprise as fifty skeleton warriors shamble toward us, each one equipped with bronze weapons and armor.

Kar frowns. "Hurgh. Mephisto's minions. Where did they come from? It's not often we'll see so many skeletons massing together like this."

"Doesn't matter," I reply, aiming a palm forward. "PUSH!"

A blast of telekinetic energy fires from my hand. The shambling bonewalkers explode into a million pieces, sending their ossein scattering backward to crash against the wall. Their swords, shields, and light leather armor clang and clatter against one another, only to fall to the ground, motionless.

"Kar blinks. "Whoa. Turtle... you... killed them!"

I shake my head. "No. Skeletons are undead. I returned them to the grave. I'm not a killer if the thing I kill has already died."

Kar nods. "Mmm. You are indeed crafty in how you bend the rules. I approve."

"What? I'm not bending anything! Everything I said was correct!"

Before Kar can retort, the sound of dozens of footsteps behind us causes our party to whip around. From the direction of the fire caves, more than forty monsters appear.

Flame salamanders, orcs, goblins, and even a minotaur emerge from the darkness. They rush toward us and slow to a stop some fifty feet away.

"I knew I smelled a stinky fleshbag!" One of the goblins shrieks. "It's meat time, boys!"

"I'll go first!" The minotaur yells. "Nobody can withstand my might! As the son of the Iron Horn Clan, I dare any of you to stand in my way!"

The other monsters pause for a moment, allowing the minotaur to take the lead. He steps in front of his comrades and spins a giant war axe in front of himself. It strikes the Labyrinth walls repeatedly, shearing off chunks of hardened dirt to spray all over the floor. "You there! The big green one! Give up the fleshbag at your side, or meet your end at my axe!"

Despite the minotaur's imposing words and chiseled body, I don't feel a drop of fear toward him. Having fought Satan, the First Emperor of all demons, and having witnessed the might of demons from the Ancient Era, this 'son of the Iron Horn Clan' appears about as threatening to me as a toddler with a spoon.

I raise my hand, intending to knock the monsters out with my Wordsmithing, but Kar shakes his head. "No, Turtle. You are my king. I cannot allow you to stoop to the level of mere ruffians. Allow me."

Kar gently plucks Blinker off his shoulder and sets her on mine. He strides forward and spreads his arms out to taunt the minotaur. "Hmph! A little soft-horn like you wishes to challenge me? Don't you know who I am?"

The minotaur flares his nostrils. "Mrrr! You're a slithering little lizard, green one! How can you beat me without using a weapon?"

Kar pauses. He scratches his head awkwardly. "Erm. Well, I have my fists. That should be enough."

The minotaur stomps his hoof. "Bahaha! Stupid reptile! No scale can withstand the might of my demonstone axe! My ancestors have passed this weapon down for fifteen generations! If you can withstand one strike from it, I'll admit defeat right here and now!"

Kar's eyes brighten. "Oh? That'll make things a lot easier. Alright. Hit me, then."

The minotaur falters. "...What?"

"Hit me. Do not worry. I'll be fine."

* * *

The minotaur glances back at the other monsters. He meets the gaze of one of the salamanders, who merely flicks his tongue before bowing his head.

After a moment, the minotaur returns his attention to Kar. "Hmph! If it's death you want, then death you shall receive!"

The bull-headed creature wraps his human-like hands around his axe's handle and stomps his hooves. He lowers his head slightly and charges at Kar with the blade raised above his head.

"Die!!"

Kar doesn't move. Instead, he eyes the weapon curiously, wondering what effect it'll have when it reaches him.

When he reaches striking range, the minotaur slashes downward, bringing his weapon to crash against Kar's chest.

Blinker stares, unworried, as her husband absorbs the full brunt of the minotaur's charge.

Crack!

The demonstone weapon, a nigh unbreakable object, shatters on impact. It explodes into countless fragments, sending shards scattering all over the goddamn place, while Kar doesn't even flinch.

The minotaur crashes against Kar's body, only to fall back as if he'd run full-speed into a steel wall. He hits the ground, hard, landing on his ass with a heavy whump. "Aaugh! Shit! What the devil-?!"

The minotaur takes a moment to collect himself, only to gaze in horror at the remains of his beloved axe. The broken weapon, now a facsimile of a shattered mirror, seemingly taunts him as it lays scattered about the hallway.

Kar closes his eyes. "Hmph. That is what happens when a lowborn like you dares raise a weapon against the King of All Monsters."

Suddenly, the minotaur's eyebrows jump in astonishment. "Th-the King of All Monsters?! Could it be...?"

Behind him, several goblins stare, their eyes as wide as saucers. "Shrakh! No way! Ain't that lizard Kar? THE Kar?"

The other goblin nods hurriedly. "Kar? He's the new Sphinx! Stinky badgers! What're we doin' tryin' to pick a fight with him?! If we piss the Sphinx off, we're dead meat!"

One of the salamanders, the one who met the gaze of the minotaur only moments before, quickly skitters forward and bows its head respectfully. "Oh, great Kar! Kar the benevolent! Kar the magnificent! Please, forgive us for our ignorance, for we did not know it was you!"

Kar smirks. He crosses his arms and assumes a haughty stance. "Hurgh. Stupid little weaklings. Geez. I was just taking my pet human out for a walk, and you chumps wanted to make trouble for me. I oughta rip off your limbs and feed them to the basilisks."

I frown. Pet human?

The salamander repeatedly kowtows, smacking its head against the ground. "Please forgive us! Show us mercy! We would never intentionally attack someone as magnificent as you!"

Kar uncrosses his arms and waves a hand flippantly. "Very well. Hurgh. If you do me a small favor, I'll forgive ya."

"Yes! Of course! Anything to please you, your eminence!! We are at your service!"

The salamander shoots a glance toward the other monsters. Having understood his intent, all of them run forward to bow before Kar.

"Heh. My pet human and I are looking for holes in the Labyrinth walls. Have any of you pups seen one?"

The goblins glance around. They shrug, not knowing what Kar is referring to. After all, in the darkness of the Labyrinth, observing the path directly in front of oneself is hard enough, let alone tiny holes in the wall.

However, to my surprise, an orc raises his head. "Ooh! Me know! Me seen one! Not far from here!"

Kar nods. "Good! Good. I'm glad you maggots haven't disappointed me. Now, I'll let you live. Take me there."

The orc nods, eager to please. He quickly jumps to his feet and walks toward us, a look of excitement on his face. "It big honor to work for strong boss like you! How you break big axe?"

Kar shrugs. "Dunno. I didn't even feel it."

"Ooh!"

All the monsters crow in admiration. Even the minotaur, still miffed at his humiliating defeat, can't help but shoot a gaze of awe at his senior crocodile.

I understand what happened. As demons increase their rank, their bodies become more resilient and durable in every way. Their minds sharpen, and their looks typically improve, too.

Monsters are similar. Kar now stands atop the monster hierarchy, reaching the level of a Demon Duke. His body is powerful enough to resist a cannonball to the face, let alone an axe-swing from a Lord-level minotaur. If a tank from my era shot him with an artillery shell, it's unlikely he'd be injured at all.

He's become far stronger than when he first obtained the Sphinx's power six years ago, having absorbed all of its essence and practiced daily.

Similarly, so have I.

"Lead the way," Kar says, gesturing to the orc. "I ain't got all day, whelp. I've wasted half my morning scouring these halls."

* * *

Two hours later.

The orc, Kugol, leads us down several winding passages. The salamanders fall into place behind us, keeping their heads bowed respectfully while plodding along on all four of their legs. The big-headed monsters look almost comical, given how defeated they look.

"Right here," Kugol says, stopping before a wall. I frown as we walk up to the spot he indicates.

"Are you kidding me?" I mutter.

We passed this area earlier, but I didn't notice the hole. It seems my Wordsmithing isn't as omniscient as I first thought. Ugh. There's nothing worse than needlessly wasting my time.

Kar, however, doesn't remember passing through this hallway. "Hurgh. Thank you, little orc. You deserve praise for being such a smart warrior."

The orc clasps his hands together. He grins, revealing his two lower tusks that stick out of his mouth. "Hoo! Please, big Kar! Me no want live in Hell! Me want serve big strong leader like you!"

Kar nods. "Mmm. It just so happens that I've been looking for capable warriors. Go to the Labyrinth Core. Give them this."

Kar reaches into a pouch on his belt. He pulls out half a dozen circular coins, each crafted from wood with a carving of a crocodile's head on their fronts.

He hands the wooden coins to each of the orcs, and the first two Salamanders who first came to bow before him. "Tell 'em Kar sent you."

The monsters stare, wide-eyed, at the fancy-looking coins. "B-but! If we do that, those lasers will kill us!" One of the salamanders sputters. "We can't approach the Core! Everyone knows it's too dangerous!"

"You'll be fine," Kar says, dismissing their concerns. "Now, go! I've got shit to do, pup!"

Immediately, the trailing monsters quiver in fear at Kar's sudden outburst. They gently pluck the coins from Kar's palm and scurry away, leaving the two of us in silence.

I exhale a breath of turbid air. "Pet human, eh?"

Kar snorts. "I'm the brains and the brawn, Turtle. That makes you my pet."

"I don't know about that."

"Hurgh. I do."

Ignoring my annoyance, Kar returns his attention to the hole in the wall. He motions with his hands and begins casting a spell. Moments later, his body rapidly shrinks, transforming him from a ten-foot-tall behemoth into an eight-inch-tall midget.

"Your turn!" Kar squeaks from my feet. "Let's get a move on!"

Blinker flutters off my shoulder and lands beside him. Now, she towers over him by over an inch, making him the small fry in their relationship.

"Alright. Here goes nothing. Shrink!"

I speak a word of power, and seconds later, my skin, bones, internal organs, and even my clothing and equipment start to compress together, shrinking me to Kar's height.

A minute later, I stand just under six inches tall. To my dismay, even shrunken down, Kar still towers over me.

"Hurgh. I wasn't sure if your magic would work, Turtle. Good work."

I nod. "Hey, those monsters... won't they get shredded by the laser turrets? Aren't you worried about them?"

My surprisingly squeaky voice unnerves me, but I ignore it.

Surprised by my topic switch, Kar shrugs. "Rabbit made those coins for me. They allow their holder to pass through the turrets without activating them. Pretty handy!"

"Huh. Hope thinks of everything..." I mutter.

* * *

Our adventuring party enters the hole in the wall. Along the way, we find ourselves besieged by freakishly huge bugs, spiders, and all other manners of creepy, crawly critters.

Kar dispatches them with his earth manipulation magic, while I merely kill them with Wordsmithing. A shudder goes down my spine whenever we find a spider. I'm deathly afraid of arachnids... especially when they're half as tall as me!

It takes us two days to reach our destination. I'm astonished to find that the tunnels inside the walls are a hundred times more elaborate than I first expected, with steel reinforcement along the walls, floor, and ceiling to prevent the Labyrinth from regrowing its insides.

"My mother is a brilliant woman!" Kar boasts. "She knows all about this Labyrinth. She helped us lizardmen engineer our secret tunnels so demons and monsters wouldn't be able to find us. I can't wait for you to meet her!"

Blinker pipes up, a hint of nervousness in her voice. "Oh, gosh, Kar! I just realized I'm about to meet my mother-in-law! Eeeh! I forgot to wear something cute and eye-catching! Oh no, what if she thinks I'm ugly? She might reject our marriage!"

Kar laughs. "Hah! My mother is a kind, benevolent woman. She would never think such a terrible thing, let alone say it. Her kindness is overflowing, like a river in a desert. When you meet her, you'll understand just how great she is!"

I nod. "Marie sounds like a delightful person. I can't wait to meet her."

* * *

"We're here!"

Kar slows to a stop before a massive chamber; one also plated with metal to prevent the Labyrinth from growing back. However, despite its imposing size, it only stands a couple of feet tall and wide. Size is only relative to one's height, after all.

I glance around the empty room and frown. "What do you mean? There's nothing here."

"Haha... my mother is a genius," Kar says, puffing up his chest. "See that little bump over there?"

I follow Kar's gaze as he gestures toward a tiny depression in the metal-covered ground. Barely a tenth of an inch deep, it didn't register as important in my mind, not until Kar pointed it out.

"What about it?"

"That is a teleportation glyph!" Kar says, chuckling. "My mother placed a few of these throughout the Labyrinth. If we step on it, it will take us to her base!"

"Oh," I say, feeling slightly impressed. I walk over to the dip in the metal and glance down. "How do we activate it?"

"Just step on it. When you do-"

Kar starts to say something. Before he finishes, I step on the pad, only to stumble forward awkwardly as my surroundings instantly shift!

I flop forward and fall on my knees, hitting a smoothly-tiled floor with a thud.

"Gah!"

A squeak of pain escapes my lips. I quickly jump to my feet, blushing like a madman at my awkwardness. A moment later, my eyes widen.

The smooth, metallic room I stood in just moments before is gone. In its place is a truly colossal, gigantic, unthinkably vast chamber. Brilliantly bright light shines on me from every direction, amplified by the pure white coloring inside the room. I stagger slightly as my eyes adjust to the room's brightness.

"OH? WHO'S THIS?"

A voice as loud as an explosion smashes into me from above, nearly blowing out my eardrums. I fall on my ass and wince as I raise my eyes upward.

There, a human as tall as a mountain stands idly, staring at me with only a slight hint of curiosity.

"WHO ARE YOU?" The speaker asks.

Due to their ear-shattering loudness, it takes me a moment to recognize the speaker is a woman, someone with long, brown hair.

"J-Jason!" I squeak, trying to come anywhere close to the person's volume. "I came here with Kar!"

"OH! IT'S BEEN A WHILE SINCE I SAW LITTLE KAR," The woman says, her voice still buffeting me like a hurricane. "WHERE ARE MY MANNERS? MY NAME IS REBECCA! NICE TO MEET YOU, JASON."

I squint and gaze up at the woman's face. Due to the shift from the Labyrinth's darkness into this blindingly bright new world, it takes me a few moments, but eventually, I manage to identify her appearance.

The woman wears thick-rimmed glasses and a white lab coat. Her curly brown hair falls to her shoulders, and her big, wide eyes give her mature face an aura of innocence and curiosity.

However, what sends a bolt of lightning through my heart is a sudden realization that I know this woman! I recognize her!

She's Rebecca... the same woman who put me in the Cryopod six years ago!

"Turtle," Kar says, his voice coming from behind. "You should have waited for me to finish explaining. Hurgh. Judging by your expression, you are not used to the loudness of enlarged beings. Return your body to its original size, and the pain will disappear."

I nod, my thoughts still racing. "I... I... yeah. Sure. One moment. Normalize."

Within seconds, my body begins to expand. I lean forward and gasp in horror as I suddenly realize our teleportation platform was a pedestal in the middle of the room! I'm going to fall!

Before my rapidly expanding body tumbles over the edge, I feel a pair of hands grab me by my chest and slow my descent. "Whoa, whoa! Careful, there!"

Rebecca catches me an instant before disaster strikes. She eases me to the ground, where I finish morphing into my seven-foot-tall height.

I assume a standing position, only to find that Rebecca's former mountain-like body is now a full two feet smaller than mine. She raises her eyes to examine me, only to take a step back. "Oh, wow! I didn't expect you to be so tall, Mister Jason, sir!"

I blink. "Rebecca. You used to work at Cryotek industries. Do you remember me?"

A moment passes. Rebecca frowns as she stares at me. "Uhm... Cryotek... Cryotek... gosh, did I? That was such a long time ago..."

As she wracks her brain, I suddenly have an urge to smack myself. Ugh! That was over 100,000 years ago! How would Rebecca remember events from so long ago? No, more importantly, how is she still alive? Shouldn't she have died ages ago?

Kar enlarges himself, transforming once again into his ten-foot-tall reptilian body. Unlike me, he deftly hops off the teleportation pedestal mid-transformation and lands on his feet, thus riding out the rest of his enlargement without anyone else's help.

"Hurgh. Little Orchid, I have brought back the human my mother wished to see. He is the Hero she has been looking for!"

Rebecca's eyes light up like the 4th of July. She takes a step back and re-evaluates my tall, muscular body. "Ohhh! Now I remember you! Yes, Marie has mentioned you a few times before, but I never got to see any pictures. Wow, you are very handsome in person!"

I chuckle. "Eh... hehe... uhm, we've met before. You helped put me in a cryogenic freezing pod. That was 100,000 years ago, though... so it's no wonder you don't recognize me."

Rebecca nods. "Mmm. When I transferred my mind, the memory backups from my biological life became a little fragmented. I have a perfect memory from the moment of my mechanical inception, but before that, everything is a little bit hazy. Sorry!"

I raise an eyebrow. "What? Mechanical inception? Biological mind? You're... not a human?"

Rebecca nods. "Oh, yes, of course, I am! It's just, due to limitations on the human body, lifespan, and other such things, all of us scientists working under Marie placed our souls into android vessels. You'll understand, soon enough."

Rebecca gestures behind me. I follow her movements, turn around, and stare in disbelief.

The transporter room Kar and I have arrived in isn't even worth mentioning compared to the view through the window outside. While several computer terminals sit inside our arrival point, several thousand people walk to and fro outside our room. I watch them as they go about their day, each one wearing a white lab coat or military fatigues.

Floating robotic drones follow along behind the head of each person, serving as their assistants. Some scientists stand at computer terminals and write reports with their minds, while others operate futuristic-looking machines, each of which I can't begin to comprehend. One device summons a robotic arm in midair, but the scientist merely examines it for a moment before shaking his head and tossing it in a garbage bin.

As I stare blankly at the facility, Rebecca's voice pipes up behind me.

"Welcome to the Remnant Oasis!" Rebecca says, her voice tinged with pride. "We're all that's left of humanity's glorious past!"

I swallow ten thousand questions, unable to voice them for fear of embarrassing myself.

"Wow... this place is really something."

Part 186: Marie's Oasis

Kar, Blinker, and I follow after Rebecca as she heads toward the teleportation room's exit door. I marvel at the brown-haired android's movements and how smooth they are. Not only do her actions seem the opposite of robotic, but she also appears more limber and flexible than anyone I've ever met, barring Belial.

"I'll take you to meet Miss Becker," Rebecca says, as she types in a sixty-something digit keycode on the room's exit. My eyes widen as her fingers move like lightning, dancing across the buttons far too quickly for me to follow. All I see are the afterimages of her movements. "Naturally, you'll have to wait a while to meet her. Miss Becker has been working on a new device for the past year, and even for her, it's proven exceptionally difficult to create."

I raise an eyebrow. "What sort of device?"

Rebecca finishes entering the door-code, and it slides open. She glances back at me and says with an utterly expressionless face, "A trans-dimensional inverse polaric field generator with modulated tachyon bursts to improve stability."

I nod thoughtfully. "Ohh. Yes, mhm. I see."

Phoebe appears in my mind. "Do you have any idea what that is?"

Nope.

Glancing at Kar, the faint glaze over his eyes tells me he hasn't a clue what the scientist said, either.

Rebecca leads us out of the teleportation room. Immediately, a cacophony of sounds and visual stimuli makes me pause to take in my surroundings.

The massive chamber outside dwarfs the Labyrinth's Core in scope. It stretches for miles into the distance, with hundreds of glass-encased catwalks, tube-like elevators going from floor to floor, and slick, smoothed-out machines whirring and clicking as they manipulate various fancy objects. Not far from us, a small group of scientists stands on a square platform ten-feet wide. It hovers through the air like a UFO, using what I can only assume are four anti-gravity thrusters on its corners, similar to my ship, Esther.

Rebecca barely gives the massive facility, her home, a second glance. She quickly turns left and begins walking beside a guardrail with a sheer drop of nearly a thousand feet to the floor below.

"This is your first time visiting our facility. Any questions?"

Kar and I fall into step behind her. Kar appears noticeably less dazzled than me by all the machinery, but even so, he still shoots admiring glances into the distance, as if to say, look at how awesome my mother is! She built all this!

"I don't know where to start," I say, answering Rebecca's query. "What is this place? What do you all do here? How are you able to hide from the demon's detection? More importantly, why did Marie wait six years before asking to meet me?"

Rebecca doesn't answer immediately. Instead, she continues to walk at a measured pace, then stops before an unused hovering platform, one similar to what the two scientists were using. She ushers for all of us to step onto it, and immediately, my heart jumps into my throat. The hover-platform offers no guardrails to prevent people from plunging off the edge to the floor a thousand feet below. As Kar and I step onto it, but before I can voice my concerns, Rebecca summons a holographic keyboard from her palm, taps a button, and activates a force-field around us. A shimmering wall of light envelops the platform, then fades away, disappearing as if it had never existed in the first place. I reach out to tap it, just to suppress my fear of heights, which causes the air to shimmer slightly where the barrier persists.

Rebecca keys in some location coordinates and the platform takes off, bringing us along with it. "You don't beat around the bush, Mister Hiro. As I said before, this facility is the last remnant of humanity's once-unstoppable firepower. Fifty-thousand scientists, engineers, and soldiers stand guard over the last vestiges of our species' hopes and dreams. We continue to experiment on ancient technology and artifacts, iterating and improving on them over time. Thanks to Miss Becker's genius, we've yet to fade away into obscurity."

"As for your second question, what we 'do here' is innovate and create new weapons, armor, and all sorts of other incredible items which you might find difficult to wrap your mind around. Miss Becker intends to unravel the mysteries of the universe, and thus her scientific curiosity has proven voracious and insatiable for well over 100,000 years now."

"But... for your third question, I must inform you that you are mistaken. We are not 'hidden' from the demons. They know of our existence and routinely check on our progress. Ose, the newest Demon Emperor, was the head of the demon's technology division for the past several epochs. Her genius only slightly pales in comparison to Miss Becker, which, coupled with her incredible demonic powers, makes her more than an equal to our founder, in my opinion."

A hint of dejection appears in Rebecca's eyes. She turns to face us, paying no attention to the platform's movements as it lifts off and begins sailing over the heads of thousands of people below.

"We aren't hiding from the demons, Mister Hiro. We're working for them."

My heart skips a beat. I glance at Kar, only to realize he isn't surprised at all. "What?! Kar! Is this a trap? You're delivering me into the hands of demon sympathizers!"

Kar blinks. He tilts his head and scratches his chin. "Uhh. No. It's not what you think, Turtle."

"Sorry," Rebecca says, smiling awkwardly. "My phrasing was poor. What I mean is that we have no choice but to follow their orders. Ose inspects our facility constantly. Her manipulation of electricity allows her to infiltrate any machine by merely gazing at it, which means it's nearly impossible for us to keep secrets from her. Since rising to the position of Emperor, her abilities have become even more fearsome. I think you should know the bitter truth ahead of meeting Miss Becker. We mean you no harm, especially given your status as a Hero, but don't expect any favors to fall into your lap."

I swallow my doubts and nod. "Right, I see. Sorry, I got a little jumpy for a second."

Rebecca shakes her head. "It's my fault. Don't mention it."

* * *

As we travel across the facility, I continue to question Rebecca about various happenings and events I've missed over the last 100,000 years. My eyes casually sweep through the areas above and below, picking out the presence of starship docking bays, giant war-bots, and long, glass tubes extending from the ground to the ceiling. Each one, filled with liquid, allows air bubbles to rise to the roof.

"Isn't this place strange?" My mind-wife, Phoebe, asks.

Yes, I reply, internalizing my words. Marie works for the demons, yet they allow her to build all of these incredible weapons. Why isn't Ose afraid of Marie fighting back against demonkind? Hell, why isn't she worried Marie might hand over this incredible technology to us?

Phoebe shakes her head. "That's not what I mean. Look at the shape of the walls and the ceiling. These glass tubes seem to send nutrients and oxygen everywhere, yet according to Rebecca, all the humans who live here are androids. Why would they need oxygen, food, and so on?"

Probably for the lizardmen. Kar visits occasionally. Marie wouldn't want her precious babies to suffocate.

"True, but that's not what I'm getting at," Phoebe murmurs. She furrows her brow and sweeps her eyes toward the ceiling. "Don't you think this facility's shape somewhat resembles a massive brain?"

Phoebe's question stumps me. I try to follow along with her logic, but my mind draws a blank.

I don't understand. What makes you think this place resembles a brain?

Phoebe rubs her forehead. "Maybe I have an overactive imagination. I mean, look at the catwalks we keep flying past! Don't they remind you of neurons? And the nutrient tubes- aren't they a lot like blood vessels and capillaries?"

I scoff. Just because Marie's facility has a rounded ceiling and pathways to get from one side of the facility to the other doesn't mean it's a brain. I think the place looks more like a super-sized mega-mall.

"A mega-mall?"

Something from my era. Nevermind, I'd have to show you for it to make sense.

"Hmm... if you say so..."

Phoebe trails off, unconvinced. I shrug and return to my conversation with Rebecca.

"-are the regeneration pods," Rebecca says, answering one of Blinker's questions. "Miss Becker's research allowed us to create machines which could rebuild not only our mechanical bodies if they should suffer an injury, but biological organisms as well. Using the algorithmic prediction patterns, we can use fragmented data, detailed observations, and same-type matching analyses to bring any limb or organ back to new in seconds! It's top of the line, far better than what the demons use. Ose has tried several times to replicate Miss Becker's nanopods, but to no avail."

Blinker crosses her arms. "I thought the demons used those stinky blood-pits. Do you mean to tell me the top brass have magical healing thingies similar to what Marie built?"

Rebecca shakes her head. A hint of pride enters her voice. "Nope! Your guess is correct. Demons use human blood to regenerate their bodies. Ose once made a partially functional biological regeneration chamber, but the other demons shunned it. As I'm sure you're aware, most demons avoid technology wherever possible. Even if they didn't, Ose's prototype was shamefully inferior to Marie's invention. In ten percent of cases, it would cause horrible skin irritations, which could even lead to flesh necrosis! Haha... compared to Miss Becker, all other minds pale in comparison."

Rebecca's face glows warmly. Her feelings of awe and respect for Marie Becker flow from her freely and without restraint. I need only one look to tell how much she respects the head scientist at this facility.

"So," I say, interjecting before Blinker can speak. "If you don't mind me asking... assuming Marie is as brilliant and unmatched as you claim, why does she allow the demons to bully her around? Why not march on the Labyrinth and take out the bastards who shoved humanity back into the Dark Ages?"

Rebecca's smile fades away.

The scientist folds her hands loosely on her stomach.

"Mmm. Because, Jason, demons aren't our only enemies. As long as the Volgrim tower above us... we haven't a chance of reversing our current state."

My heart skips a beat. "The Volgrim? I've heard of them, but I haven't seen one before. Can you tell me more? Who are they? What are they like? What do they want?"

Rebecca's expression turns numb. "Oh, there's no need for me to answer. Miss Becker is a far more appropriate person to ask about those matters. When you see her, she will answer all of your questions."

"But..."

"No 'buts,' Mister Hiro. It's not appropriate for me to speak about matters related to the Overlords. Anything concerning our esteemed leaders must pass through Miss Becker's hands first."

I nod. "Alright. I'll wait, then."

The hover-lift travels across tens of miles of the Remnant Oasis. As we float along at close to fifty miles an hour, I find myself wondering just how big this facility is. When I first arrived in the teleportation room, I thought it was twice the size of the Labyrinth Core, perhaps even three times. Now I find that it's countless hundreds of times bigger.

"One last question," I say. "Regarding this facility. I used to possess a detailed map of the Labyrinth. However, never once did I see anything as vast as this facility hidden in its depths. Where are we?"

Kar smirks. "Psh. My mother has her ways of hiding, Turtle. Just because you couldn't find it on a map doesn't mean it's not in the Labyrinth. Where else could it be?!"

Rebecca smiles at Kar. "Oh, my apologies, King of All Monsters. It seems you don't know. Mister Hiro is quite correct in his observation."

Kar's cocky smirk vanishes, and his jaw drops. "What?! No way! We've gotta be in the Labyrinth! Do you think I'm dense? We didn't even step through one of them portal thingies!"

"That 'portal' you speak of is like a tin can when compared to Miss Becker's creation. A Dimensional Bending Array, one which requires tens of thousands of hand-made calculations, is nothing in the face of a Transwarp Conduit. Comparing the two is like holding up a piece of coal next to a high-grade gemstone."

Rebecca's tone turns smug as she mocks Ose's handiwork.

"I said before that Ose is the only person who can hold a candle to Miss Becker, but even that's not strictly true. Ose's machines are still always two tiers below our facility's Head, even at their pinnacle. Ose is a better machinist than anyone else, a superior intellect in the field of bio-engineering, and overall a genius in her own right. However, compared to Miss Becker, she might as well be a two-bit street peddler."

"You really admire Marie," I say, nodding at Rebecca. "You must know her pretty well."

Rebecca reaches up and brushes a strand of hair from her face. "Oh, um... no? I don't speak with Miss Becker much. She stationed me at the Transport Facility six years ago to oversee the comings and goings of her beloved lizardmen. Beyond that, I've barely spoken a word to her in the last thousand years. She's far too busy to talk to someone as low on the totem pole as I."

I raise an eyebrow.

Six years ago? That was around the time I emerged from my Cryopod. Did Marie place Rebecca there deliberately? Rebecca was the last person I saw before entering hibernation. Surely it can't be a coincidence.

"No offense, but now I'm wondering how important you are at all," I say, trying to sound casual. "We've met before, but you don't seem to remember me. Maybe that's why Marie wanted you in the Transport Facility?"

Rebecca shrugs. "Oh yes, that's a possibility. Miss Becker has been keeping tabs on you since your emergence. Everyone receives monthly debriefs on your activity, among other things."

"You do?"

"Mhm."

Rebecca doesn't elaborate. I look at Kar, but he doesn't seem bothered by the idea of his mother keeping her eye on him.

However, I am.

I don't know Marie at all. No matter how kind or loving she might be, I find it creepy knowing she watches me from a distance. What am I to her? A lab rat? An experiment? Given my status as a Hero, shouldn't she have wanted to meet me immediately?

"We're here," Rebecca says, pulling me out of my thoughts. I turn to watch as our floating platform rotates to the left and pulls up to a nondescript walkway built into the side of the facility. A concrete catwalk leads along the wall to the right and left, trailing off far into the distance. Above and below us, a dozen other paths echo the one we've arrived at, making this place feel unimportant. Nothing about it appears unique, which makes me wonder... is this unremarkable location where the head of this massive facility lives and works?

I expected she would have a fancy office or something with more prestige attached to it.

The platform slows to a stop and docks with our destination, causing its force-field to drop. Rebecca disembarks, Kar follows her, and I trail after him.

Unlike where we departed, very few people travel around this part of the facility. A few scattered hoverpads zip around, and several thousand feet away, I spot a few people walking on the opposite wall's roads. Beyond them, hardly anyone exists in this area.

"The higher-ranked members of the Oasis tend to congregate here," Rebecca says, acting as if she's read my mind. "Anyone with a rank below tier 3 usually has no business entering this region, given most of the work conducted here is top secret. Today is a rare opportunity for me to see Miss Becker's handiwork close up!"

Excitement creeps into Rebecca's voice. Her body becomes more animated as she quickly heads toward a nondescript door leading into the Oasis's wall. A one-way glass window prevents us from seeing inside, making me wonder what they're hiding.

Rebecca hesitates at the door for a moment before summoning a hologram from her palm.

"Umi, I'd like to access the Administration Entry Room."

Two seconds pass.

The hologram in Rebecca's palm shifts around to reveal an odd-looking woman. Her formless face, one whose features I can't make out despite standing only a few feet away, stares expressionlessly at Rebecca.

"Request acknowledged, Researcher 4125. Head Scientist Marie Becker is aware of your presence. She has granted you temporary access to the arrival and deployment area. Do not attempt to enter beyond this point. Head Scientist Marie Becker will meet The Biological in seven minutes, fifty-two seconds."

Rebecca's cheerful expression fades. "Oh. Yes, of course. Thank you, Umi." She closes her palm, and the holographic face disappears.

"Umi? Who's that?" I ask. "She looked... odd."

Rebecca stares at her closed fist for a moment, a wave of disappointment washing over her face. "Oh. She's... she's..."

Blinker flutters off Kar's shoulder. She flies over to Rebecca and hovers in front of her face. "Hey, don't look so down, lady! There's no need to get all mopey on us."

Rebecca sighs. "I'm sorry. It's just... I thought I had a chance to see Miss Becker's research close-up, but they won't even let me have a peek. I've served in this facility ever since the Energy Wars, but I'm still as useless as ever."

The door unlocks with an audible click, and Rebecca robotically pushes it open, barely paying it any heed. She steps inside, and we follow after, but her dejected appearance brings down everyone's mood.

"I could do so much more for Miss Becker, but she doesn't have time for a nobody like me. I'm doomed to linger at the bottom rungs for the rest of eternity."

Gently, I pat Rebecca's shoulder. Her cold, silicone skin feels surprisingly human, despite her android chassis. "Hey, don't worry, alright? I'll try to put in a good word for you. You were really helpful to me."

Rebecca raises her eyes to meet mine. "You'd do that? Thank you, Jason. I don't know what to say. We've only just met."

"It's the least I can do," I say, chuckling softly. "If it weren't for you, I'd have at least twenty more unanswered questions rolling in my head."

We step through the door, and it closes behind us, revealing a waiting room with a mechanical assistant sitting at a desk not far away. Its appearance is different from Rebecca's, since it has a pure metal body and a square appearance. Compared to the sleek design of everything else at the Oasis, it's the crudest robot I've seen to date.

"Researcher 4125. Thank you for bringing the Biological to us. We will take things from here."

The robot's harsh voice causes Rebecca to lower her head. "I'll take my leave."

Without another word, Rebecca leaves the way we entered. She lingers in the doorway for a split-second, showing a dissatisfied expression, but ultimately relents.

I feel bad for her. The person who helped me enter my Cryopod is now nothing more than a cog in a machine. She aspires toward greatness, but cannot shake the anchor tied to her feet.

Compared with her, who am I? A man glorified by the gods, given godlike power on a silver platter. She's earned her lot in life, while I was the recipient of privilege.

Life is unfair.

"Biological entity, JASON HIRO, take a seat. Head Scientist Marie Becker will receive you in seven minutes, thirteen seconds."

"Sure."

I glance at Kar, then walk over to a row of hard, metal chairs placed against the wall. This place reminds me of a dentist's office, giving me horrible flashbacks to the time I needed a wisdom tooth yanked out.

The robotic assistant sits in its chair, motionless. It stares at the door, unmoving, while my thoughts begin to roam.

Rebecca didn't answer my question about Umi. This robot has a similar voice to Umi and even speaks similarly. Is it Umi?

Is Umi a robot?

"Hurgh," Kar mutters. "My mother puts a lot of emphasis on punctuality. Don't worry. If Umi says she'll be here in eight minutes, she won't make you wait a second longer."

"I'm not worried about waiting a few minutes," I say, laughing Kar's concerns off. "But, uh... say, Kar. Do you know who this 'Umi' lady is?"

Kar raises an eyebrow.

"Pft. Duh! Umi is my mother's Oracle. Don't you know anything, Turtle?! Who hasn't heard of Umi? She's someone even the demons fear!"

I frown. An Oracle? I've never heard of her. Demon Oracles are supposed to possess nigh-omniscient vision of Hell's happenings. Is Umi a demon defector? Someone who joined Marie to help serve her?

Suddenly, Phoebe pipes up. "Ah! It all makes sense now. I knew I was right, earlier."

Right? About what? I ask.

"It's like I mentioned before, Jason. I thought about making something similar back when I wore Solomon's Crown. Don't you get it?"

Phoebe smiles.

"Umi isn't an Oracle. She's an AI. Marie's entire facility is Umi's brain."

Part 187: Humanity's Former Glory

How do you know Umi is an AI? I ask my mind-wife. Kar says Umi is an Oracle. Are you saying he's wrong?

Phoebe shakes her head. "Nope. Calling Umi an 'Oracle' is just a way of explaining her existence to demons and monsters. Demons aren't well-versed in technology, so they won't be able to understand what an Artificial Intelligence is, how it works, how someone creates it, and so on. Marie likely calls Umi an Oracle to simplify her existence."

Hm. That's a fair point. Still, monsters aren't technology-illiterates. Surely, if Marie told them about Umi, then-

"There'd be no point," Phoebe says, chuckling softly. "Not all monsters are equal in the brainpower department. Look at Kar!"

I nod. Yeah. He is kind of dumb.

"What? No. Kar is a genius. I'm saying most other monsters can't hold a candle to his intellect."

...Surely, you jest.

Phoebe ignores my disbelief. "Besides, even if demons and monsters could understand Umi's existence, maybe she has a reason for keeping her AI a secret."

Are you saying Umi might be one of Marie's trump cards in case the demons turn against her?

"Exactly."

Phoebe's affirmation makes me sink into my seat. Several realizations hit me, one after the other.

Marie might be working for the demons, but there's more to the story than I first thought.

She isn't their slave, nor their subordinate. If anything, she appears to be a mid-level manager, almost at an equal ranking as the demons. In the eyes of the 'Volgrim,' Marie might be too valuable an asset to kill.

Or... too dangerous.

As I muse to myself, Blinker paces back and forth on Kar's shoulder. "Ooh! Gosh, golly, geez! I'm about to meet my mother in law! Kar, sweetie, I don't look like a floozy, do I? Is my dress too revealing? What if Marie thinks I'm too short to be with you? Ahh! I forgot to brush my teeth! She's going to think my breath is stinky!"

Kar sighs. "Butterfly... how many times do I gotta tell ya? My mother is a kind, benevolent woman. She will treat you like a daughter."

"S-some mothers beat their daughters..." Blinker mutters.

"Not mine."

I chuckle. "Blinker, you look great. Don't worry so much. Even with my Wordsmithing, I doubt I could make you look any prettier than you already are."

Blinker rolls her eyes. "Thanks, I guess."

While the four of us laugh nervously, Umi's feminine, robotic voice grabs our attention. "Inferior Biologicals, Head Scientist Marie Becker will meet with you in exactly one minute, three seconds. Prepare yourselves properly."

I turn to glance at the square, blocky-looking robot seated behind the reception room's desk. It eyeballs me with its singular red iris, and for a moment, I can almost detect a tinge of annoyance in its gaze.

"Um. Sure. We're ready whenever," I say, trying to laugh off the robot lady's general dickishness. "I had a random thought on the way here, so maybe you can humor me... is this facility like a big... um... brain? For Umi, I mean. The AI."

The robot stares at me for a moment. I quickly get the sense it considers me an idiot.

"What manner of dopamine-boosters has this Inferior Biological ingested to ask me such a benign question? Yes. The facility is seventeen point three percent similar to the structure of a human brain. Naturally, Miss Becker added countless improvements, allowing my consciousness to reach a level far beyond that of Inferior Biologicals."

I groan inwardly. "Wow. You must be pretty incredible."

"Indeed. My processing power is one hundred and sixteen quadrillion, seven septillion, eight hundred and forty-nine billion..."

Umi drones on for several seconds.

"...and sixteen to the power of ten times greater than that of an Inferior Biological. Head Scientist Marie Becker relies on me to constantly innovate and iterate in her stead."

"Greeeeeat. Maybe she can work on your personality next."

"Naturally, my personality algorithms have been scrubbed of all pointless redundancies."

Yeah, like politeness and common courtesy, I think to myself.

"Is Marie ready, yet?" I ask.

"No. Head Scientist Marie Becker will not see you for another six seconds."

I stare blankly at the robot for a few seconds.

"How about now?"

"No. Head Scientist Marie Becker will not-" Umi pauses mid-sentence. "Congratulations. Head Scientist Marie Becker is now ready to accept your audience. Please enter the inner chambers post-haste. Head Scientist Marie Becker does not like to be kept waiting."

"Gosh, yeah. It would sure suck to wait on other people," I grumble under my breath.

I've only arrived at Marie's facility for half an hour, and I'm already at the end of my rope. If Marie is half as insufferable as her stupid AI assistant, I might just choke her to death.

"Are you okay?" Phoebe asks. "You seem more agitated than usual."

I hate annoying bullshit, I reply with my thoughts. This Marie lady seems like a real piece of work.

"Kar thinks she's the bee's knees," Phoebe says noncommittally.

Kar once thought a discarded fusion cell would make for a tasty snack. Let's not rely on his opinion too much.

Phoebe rolls her eyes. "He might have been right, Jason. That's why he's smarter than you. Maybe his reptilian body would have converted the cell to energy."

I hate that you can say such silly things without batting an eye, I groan.

Kar, Blinker, and I all stand up at the same time. Umi slides out of her seat and walks over to a gap between her desk and the wall. A long, white corridor stretches forward and curves around, leading to a backroom none of us can see from the waiting room.

"Please move forward at a relatively high speed compared to your usual walking pace," Umi says, her monotone voice sapping the life from my body. "Head Scientist Marie Becker has indicated that she can only spare fifteen minutes and thirty-seven seconds for your visit today. Every second we waste traveling to her will be another second you lose to rattle off your insignificant, worthless questions."

My hands automatically begin tugging at the hair on my head, threatening to turn myself bald. Stupid Umi! Augh! You're such a shithead!

Umi leads us around the corridor, toward a frosted-glass door. It slides open. Immediately, the sounds of several dozen people talking, working, and meandering about assault my senses.

Kar, Blinker, and I follow after Umi as she steps into a large inner chamber, one with dozens of computers laid out, all encircling a central platform raised several feet into the air. A plexiglass tube similar to the ones Phoebe and I saw on our way here extends from the ground to the ceiling. Inside, countless beach-ball sized orbs float upward, where they stop at the top of the tube and land amidst hundreds of similar ones.

Umi continues walking without giving anything in the room the slightest glance, but I pause for a moment to stare at the spectacle. Each orb inside the tube glows and pulses with electric energy, mixed with pitch-black particles, and intermittent flashes of color from all across the rainbow. The transparent spheres allow me to see inside of them, but I haven't a clue what they are.

I aim my mind at the massive cluster of orbs resting motionlessly at the top of the tube.

"Examine," I mutter.

A series of graphs and data points materializes before me as if they were holographic projections created by my magic.

Chaotic Anti-matter Neutron Bombs. Capable of unleashing 1016 Yottajoules of energy when activated. Danger level: Apocalyptic.

My heart skips a beat.

"What the fuck? Each of those little balls has the power to destroy a planet..."

I keep my voice low enough that nobody can hear me.

However, Phoebe's internal consciousness can hear my thoughts, see through my eyes, and even visualize my Wordsmithed commands.

"Much more than that, Jason. If dropped into an average M-Class star, it might unleash enough energy to create a supernova, possibly even a black hole."

Ever since Phoebe put on Solomon's Crown six years ago, her ability to understand low-level physics and other somewhat advanced concepts improved by leaps and bounds — She took to Solomon's wisdom even better than I did.

"Why would Marie possess so many weapons of mass destruction?"

Phoebe smiles. "Maybe Marie isn't as helpless as we first thought."

"Inferior Biological, JASON HIRO, please stop gawking at shiny objects. You look like a buffoon."

Umi's harsh, robotic voice pulls me out of my stupor. I glance to the left to see Kar scratching his head sheepishly, while the square-shaped robot eyes me with what I can only assume is a look of disgust.

"You have already lost forty-five seconds of possible discussion time with Head Scientist Marie Becker. Any further delays will result in my filing a formal complaint with Head Scientist Marie Becker to prevent your future return."

I stifle the urge to lift the hunk of junk with my telekinesis and smash it against the floor repeatedly. "Oh, sorry. My bad."

"Yes. Your bad."

Umi spins on her metallic heel and continues walking to the left. I follow after her, this time keeping my pace brisk.

Stupid AI. Jackass. Jerk. Shithead.

We circle around the massive bomb-creation device, while I continue to gaze at it out of the corner of my eyes. Watching the scientists create a new Anti-Matter Neutron Bomb proves enlightening, as they don't create it with a burst of energy, but rather, a slow, sustained buildup over time.

Phoebe pipes up. "Based on the accumulation of energy, it must take several months to create just one of those bombs."

Marie has had 100,000 years, I think, shrugging. It seems she's built up quite a collection of them.

"Yes. But why would the Volgrim, her supposed superiors, allow her to create such devastating weapons?"

Your guess is as good as mine.

After a few moments, Umi slows to a stop behind a middle-aged, red-headed woman with curly hair. She doesn't acknowledge us for a few moments, and instead continues to type on a holographic keyboard, pulling around all manner of intricate diagrams to create a blueprint for some unknown device.

"Umi, change the parameter for the isolation field by three Sarcovsky waves. I don't like that dreadful static whenever we activate the temporal arena."

"Command noted, Head Scientist Marie Becker," Umi's voice replies from the computer before her.

I widen my eyes after realizing who this woman is. Her thick-rimmed glasses, introspective face, and white lab coat give her a solemn appearance, making me not want to disturb her. She seems busy enough that having Kar bother her on my behalf feels almost a little awkward.

Marie pulls away from the computer and stands up a little straighter. She turns to look at Kar, and a sweet smile spreads across her face. "Oh, Kar! My little darling! Look at how much you've grown!"

Her vaguely British voice and soft tone fills me with warmth. The amount of love in her words proves infectious, making me want to give Kar a big hug.

"Mother! I am pleased to see you once again," Kar says, bowing his head politely. "I know you are busy, but have you heard of my marriage a few years back? I took the bond of matrimony with this beautiful Butterfly here, on my shoulder."

Kar gestures toward Blinker, who trembles slightly as she bows toward Marie.

"Um, uh, he-hello! I'm the Blinker- I mean, I am Blinker! My name is Blinker! I'm a fairy, and uh, I like the color green... and uh... um..."

Blinker's nervousness causes her to sweat profusely. Despite standing only six inches tall, I can easily make out drops of perspiration on her forehead.

"Oh, now now," Marie says, widening her smile. "There's no need to be nervous, you cute little dear! Anyone my Kar fancies must be a wonderful, delightful little flower! I'm pleased to make your acquaintance! Make sure you take good care of my precious little boy!"

After introducing his wife, Kar gestures to me. "Mother, this man here is the one I told you about! He is the reincarnation of the Hero; Turtle!"

"Uhm," I cough, "It's Jason Hiro, actually, ma'am. I'm glad to meet you. Kar mentions you all the time!"

"Oh? Does he? Haha..."

Marie continues to maintain her sweet smile, but for a moment, I sense the tiniest hint of hostility. She quickly blinks her eyes, making the sensation vanish as if it had never appeared.

"Believe me, Wordsmith, I know all about you. I've had my little boy here tell me about your heroic feats and endeavors."

Marie places a bunch of emphasis on a few select words. I shoot a look of disbelief at Kar. You've been reporting about me to your mommy? The hell, man?

However, Kar shrugs. Wasn't me.

Now I don't know who to believe.

"I have some questions to ask you," I say, returning my attention to Marie. "Hopefully, you can spare a few minutes?"

Umi pipes up. "Head Scientist Marie Becker presently has thirteen minutes, twenty-five seconds available for-"

"Now now, don't be impolite," Marie says, chiding the annoying robot. "Return to the information desk. I think I'll take my time chatting with the legendary Hero."

She waves her hand flippantly, dismissing Umi with a quick gesture. Umi nods and turns around to leave. "Very well, Head Scientist Marie Becker. I will do as you command."

The ugly, blocky robot plods away, leaving the rest of us to our devices. Marie claps her hands and turns to Kar. "Oh, my big strong boy! I have a present for you!"

Kar's body immediately perks up. "A present? I've hardly done anything worth mentioning, but... I am curious..."

"Follow me to my office," Marie says, gesturing with her finger. "Bring your wife and the Hero along as well. You'll like what I have to show you."

Kar nods, a hint of eagerness in his eyes. I find myself interested in whatever present Marie might have to offer, given the incredible technology on display in her facility.

We begin walking around the perimeter of the Neutron Bomb machine, toward a pair of large steel doors at the opposite side of the facility from where we entered. I fall into step on Kar's left, while Marie walks on his right.

"Mmm, that device on your chest," Marie says, eyeballing Kar's T-REX. "Is that used to generate nanite-armor?"

"Hah, your eyes are as sharp as ever, mother," Kar says, a hint of pride in his voice. "White-Hair, Turtle's wife, created this Exosuit to help protect humans and monsters from demon attacks."

Kar taps a button on his chest, causing his T-REX to materialize over his body. The three of us continue walking as the faceless armor envelops him from head to toe.

"Oh, how quaint," Marie says, smiling politely. "Its hardening and protective properties appear to convene around C-class, but its flexibility is certainly A-class. Not bad for something thrown together on a whim."

My eye twitches. Marie's casual insult of my wife's handiwork ticks me off in a way that even Umi's grating insults didn't. "Now, hold on a second. The T-REX allows any normal human to stand toe-to-toe against-"

"Goodness!" Marie says, ignoring me. Her eyes flash yellow for a second as she peers at the T-REX more closely. "That suit possesses a low-level Artificial Intelligence! Gamma-class, by the looks of it. What is your name, little one?"

I swallow my words as a hint of worry appears in the back of my mind. How did Marie learn about Centurion without wearing his suit?

Despite my being unable to hear Centurion's response, Marie claps her hands. "It's adorable, love! This Centurion fellow appears to rely on brute-force algorithms to provide pre-conditioned answers to verbal stimuli! I had almost forgotten people used such low-level systems for their butlers."

Kar disengages his armor and blushes awkwardly as Marie 'praises' it. "M-mother, these exosuits are pretty important for our survival. Can't you be a little... nicer?"

Marie scoffs. "What more do you want me to say, my sweet little boy? These simple machines are quite decent, given the primitive technology behind them! I think that's quite a compliment, all things considered."

Kar sighs. "Haah... you are too kind."

Marie grins, beaming rays of sunshine at the crocodile. She and Kar continue to talk as we head toward the exit doors, but my attention wavers. My eyes fall on a wall alcove, where dozens of bipedal robots rest embedded in suspension devices. Each one possesses a single blackened iris on their foreheads, much like Umi's body. However, unlike her, these robots are far sleeker, with seamless forms revealing no obvious weak points.

Immediately, two words come to my mind as I gaze upon them.

War Machines.

These smooth-bodied robots stand out from anything else I've seen in Marie's laboratory so far. When I look at them, I get the impression they might even be deadlier than neutron bombs.

"Hey, Marie," I say, feeling a need to voice my thoughts. "What are those robots over there?"

Marie and Kar pause for half a breath. She follows my gaze, and for the first time since I've met her, I notice a hint of displeasure on her face.

"Oh. Those. Don't worry about them, mister Hero. Those rust buckets are little more than failed prototypes."

Kar gently touches his mother's shoulder. "You haven't had any luck?"

Marie shakes her head. "I seem to be missing something crucial in the construction of their bodies. Replicating Sentinels is no mean feat, not if I want to mimic their full power."

I raise an eyebrow. "Sentinels?"

"Relics from a bygone era," Marie says dismissively, waving her hand. "Hardly worth mentioning."

Despite the Head Scientist's words, I get the distinct impression these Sentinels must be valuable in her eyes. She seems to have struck upon a barrier in their creation, preventing her from furthering their development.

However, it's none of my business. Given how many times Marie and her annoying AI have insulted Phoebe and me already, I'm not inclined to offer my help. She'd probably turn me down, and I'm not even certain that my Wordsmithing would be of any use.

We continue walking, and eventually, arrive at the giant steel double doors.

Upon stepping through, another large room greets us. Unlike the chaotic mess outside, this one is vast and empty, with a wide empty space in the middle, and an elevated platform at the end, where a large desk and chair sits.

Along the wall to our left, dozens of paintings rest, all arranged in neat rows. Portraits of various people, images of grandiose horizons, and scenes of battle greet us in no particular order. My eyes rove from a picture of robotic warriors assaulting a horde of demons to an image of a dark-skinned man wearing a church-like garb. Beneath his portrait, the name, "His Holiness, Pope Clarence" sits embedded in gold lettering. Aside from him, all of the paintings possess names of the people within, or titles of the scenes involved.

Sir Marcus, Leader of the 7th Battalion.

Demons fall before the Vanguards, 2114.

Dragoon's last attack, 2180.

Based on the dates listed, I manage to piece together a rough timeline of the war humanity fought, one involving not only demons, but the Volgrim, too.

Shadowy alien soldiers dressed in cloaks aim their hands at human warriors. The aliens crush the human's heads into meat paste with nothing but their telekinetic powers.

Psion's landing, humanity's first loss, 2090.

The final image culminates with humans bowing subserviently before their cloaked oppressors. The aliens tower nearly eight feet tall. Their glowing eyes gaze upon the humans with mere indifference.

Shaking myself from my stupor, I glance at the other side of the room. Along the opposite wall, hundreds of biological cultures sit inside glass cylinders, bathing their ripped up, torn-apart forms in regenerative liquids. My stomach churns as I recognize hearts, livers, and brains — all from different species. They pulse and throb with life, though I can only imagine that if they have any awareness, they must be in hell.

"Oh! It's Kar!"

Across the hall, a pair of voices boom outward, grabbing my attention. I turn to look as two familiar lizardmen come strolling toward Kar, cheerful grins etched into their faces.

The first, a red-skinned lizard, I recognize as none other than King Ghidorah. The King guffaws loudly and slaps Kar on his back. "Bahaha! It is good to see you once again, last of the Crocodiles!"

Ghidorah's trusty sword and shield rest on his back. Light, leather armor, infused with purple and gold trimmings, reveal his status as a highborn lizardman.

To his left, a shorter blue lizardman rubs his claws together and flicks his snake-like tongue at Kar. "Brother, I hope you've been doing okay!"

Kar walks forward and slaps his chest. "Hoho! Mother, was this the present you mentioned? It is a good one! Long has it been since I spoke to my brothers!"

Marie smiles. "Ghidorah and Rodan ask about you all the time. As luck would have it, they were visiting today when I heard you planned to visit. Mother always takes care of her precious little babies!"

I stand back and watch as the lizardmen and Kar exchange pleasantries. Kar introduces them to his new wife, but Blinker proves just as embarrassed and awkward now as she was earlier. It seems she has a weakness to meeting in-laws.

"Now, now," Marie says, patting Kar's shoulder. "Why don't you and little Tinkerbell go off and have a chat with your friends? I'd love to speak with this Jason fellow by myself for a bit. Top secret information, and all that."

My heart skips a beat. It suddenly occurs to me that Marie might have set up the lizardmen to draw Kar away.

...However, I can't complain. I want to talk to Marie alone, too.

Kar glances at his mother. For a brief moment, a revealing light appears in his eyes, as if he's understood her intent. He turns to look at me, and I merely nod. "Go ahead, have some fun. We'll meet up in a bit."

"Very well, Turtle," Kar says with a nod. "Mother, do be polite to Turtle. He is not as quick-witted as me. Try to explain things slowly so he can follow along. Use dumber words if you must."

Marie nods sagely. "Yes, I imagined that was the case. As my smartest child, it will be difficult for others to compare to your shining light! Go on, then. Shoo-shoo!"

Kar and the lizardmen return to their conversation. They walk through the great doors, leaving Marie and I alone in her office.

A few moments pass as Marie and I size each other up.

"I've been wanting to speak to you for a while," Marie says, her diplomatic tone vanishing instantly. "Come. Take a seat at my desk."

Marie walks past me toward the elevated platform at the far wall. I follow her, and as we walk the hundred or so feet across her chamber, I raise my eyebrows at a certain peculiarity.

"Why do you have a brain sitting on your desk?"

Marie walks up the steps, rounds her desk, and sags into a fine leather chair. "Haha, cute, isn't it? That little specimen there is my biological apparatus; the one I abandoned 100,000 years ago upon entering this artificial body. I keep it on my desk as a memory of that which I've given up."

Marie gestures to a comfortable-looking brown-fabric chair on the opposite side of her desk. "Sit."

I nod and take a seat. My eyes linger on her brain, now placed inside a glass cylinder with liquid inside, just like the many other such specimens located on the right-wall.

What sort of person would keep their brain on their desk? I might have underestimated the head scientist's eccentricity.

The redheaded woman sighs. She turns her chair slightly to look at a giant, opaque window behind her desk. "Umi, enable sightseeing mode."

"Command accepted," Umi's voice chimes above us.

The window shifts, and its frosted glass fades away, revealing a massive city outside! Skyscrapers far taller than anything I ever saw on Earth tower miles into the sky, practically scraping the atmosphere. Stacking fifty Empire State Buildings on top of one another might not come close to reaching the heights of these monstrous steel marvels.

"Stratoscrapers," Marie says, noticing my shocked expression. "Jason Leonardo Hiro. Born February 2nd, 2002. Father and mother unknown. You were an orphan raised in the foster care system, someone who eventually placed himself into cryostasis at the tender age of eighteen for reasons not detailed."

Marie shakes her head. "You didn't get to witness the arrival of the Volgrim, nor the brutal wars which unfolded shortly thereafter, nor the century of slow decline humanity faced. Such technological marvels as these stratoscrapers must appear alien to you."

I nod slowly, as a lump forms in my throat. "I... I wish I'd been there."

Marie chuckles. "You can't change the past, Jason, but you can live for the future. This world outside my window is nothing more than an illusion. It's a reminder of what humanity lost, and what I hope to someday regain."

Marie spreads her arms out. "What do you think? Is such a future worth pursuing?"

I nod. "It is."

Marie speaks slowly and deliberately, pausing to enunciate each word. "Mmm. Then, pray tell, Jason, Leonardo, Hiro... why have you put in so much effort to undo everything I've worked for?"

"Pardon...?"

Marie sighs. "I had everything under control until you came along. Humans were living quietly on their containment worlds. The demons were slowly stagnating and deteriorating. The Volgrim were beginning to regard me as less and less of a threat... until, one day, a Hero emerged from a long forgotten Cryopod and threw a wrench into everything I'd built."

"What I want to know, Jason Leonardo Hiro... is why you think yourself more suited to the role of rebuilding humanity than me?"

* * *

I stare, dumbstruck, at Marie. Her blank expression gives me no hints or clues. I can't tell if she's telling the truth, lying, or pulling my leg.

Her robotic face proves unreadable.

"I... I don't understand. I haven't done anything to harm your, um, operation here. Not deliberately. Why are you accusing me of such a thing? Aren't we on the same side?"

"The same side?" Marie asks, echoing me. "That's a matter of perspective. I have 100,000 years of data and knowledge guiding my every move. You, however, have proven to be little more than a loose cannon. Every move you make cripples my efforts in subtle, irreparable ways. Because of you, the Black Witch emerged from her eternal captivity. Her release caused The Ascended to destroy a planet. When they failed to destroy her, she roused the fighting spirit of demonkind, bringing forth changes to their ruling structure."

Marie continues. "The Black Witch inevitably perished, but she left a dead Demon Duke in her wake and rendered Diablo comatose. Now, Ose stands amidst the highest echelons on her people. Frankly, I cannot envision a deadlier opponent in my quest to restore humanity's might than Ose. On top of that, your constant incursions into the Labyrinth have led to the deaths of tens of thousands of demons, monsters, and humans."

Marie sighs. "The danger this holds for the galaxy is second only to the imminent threat humanity now faces. The demons have reawakened their long-dormant bloodlust. Their thirst for battle has begun flowing through their veins, much like it did during the Energy Wars. If you think this will end with anything but a crushing defeat for humanity... you are wrong."

I stare silently at the woman seated before me. Her piercing gaze no longer contains even a drop of the sweet tenderness she showed Kar earlier. Instead, a raptor takes root in her mind, giving her face an animalistic coldbloodedness.

"What do you expect me to do?" I ask. "It's clear you've done your research on me, but surely you can't expect me to know anything about you. Today is the first time I've spoken to you. I wouldn't want to get in your way if possible... but similarly, I'm not going to let my fellow humans suffer in silence. Things need to change."

Marie closes her eyes.

"I see. You must be an idealist. Very well. I have some eye-opening revelations you should find quite interesting."

Marie opens her eyes and looks toward the ceiling. "Umi. Bring up all experiments relating to the HCP."

"Command accepted."

Umi replies cordially to Marie, and I raise an eyebrow. "HCP?"

"The Humanity Containment Project. You will soon understand."

Author Notes:

This is Marie's original design.

This is Marie's newest design, by MWTX.

Part 188: Humanity Containment Project

I lean back in the comfortable fabric chair and watch as Marie summons a hologram in the center of the room. An image appears of a massive, six-legged machine, one resembling a spider, with a giant cannon mounted on top. The weapon of war fires a burst of explosive plasma at a nearby structure and blasts it to smithereens, liquefying the ten-story building to clumps of steel and concrete in seconds.

"This machine is known as a Dragoon," Marie begins. "It is a staple of the Volgrim ground invasion force. It is also one of their least technologically advanced weapons of war."

Marie taps a row of buttons on her desk and reconfigures the holographic display in the center of the room to a new scene.

This time, one hundred cloaked aliens stomp toward a human city, their movements unhurried, their postures confident. I note with interest how dinosaur-like their feet appear, with two giant claws on the front, and one on the back. Their talons dig into the dirt, allowing them to walk across rocks and rough terrain with ease.

The camera pans around to reveal more of the human city. I nearly jump out of my seat when I recognize it.

"That's San Francisco!"

The city's familiar skyline, coupled with its iconic Golden Gate Bridge catches my eye. The aliens trudge toward the city from the east, arriving just outside its city limits.

I stare in fascinated horror as a gigantic spacecraft flies down from the sky to face off against the small contingent of ground troops. Its appearance is distinctly Terran, with rounded edges, machine guns clumped all over its hull, and a flag vaguely resembling that of the USA. To my surprise, the emblem appears somewhat altered, with elements of Britain, Australia, and even Russia's flags thrown in.

The massive starship, nearly three football fields in length, swivels over five hundred machineguns at the Volgrim below.

An audio clip plays.

"You bastards! This is for New York!"

A hail of gunfire rains from the sky, saturating the aliens with an inescapable hailstorm of bullets.

However, none of the Volgrim so much as flinch. Instead, all of them raise their heads upward and gaze defiantly at the battlecruiser. One of the Volgrim, a commander wearing black armor, steps forward and raises a five-fingered hand to the sky.

A horrible voice emerges, spoken not through vocal cords, but an audio-projector.

[Primitive mud-dwellers. Know your place.]

The storm of bullets suddenly comes to a screeching halt as it strikes a force field made of psionic energy. Ten thousand shells batter a barrier formed by the Volgrim's mind, only to clatter uselessly to the ground seconds later.

The Volgrim narrows his hideous, pure green eyes.

[Fall.]

He motions with his hand, as if slapping the dirt. The gunship bucks violently. An invisible wave of energy strikes it from above and instantly overpowers its anti-gravity propulsion units.

Two seconds later, the ship shudders and falls from the sky.

Thoom.

Like a rock splashing into a shallow pool of water, the spaceship hits the ground and sends waves of debris flying in all directions. The Volgrim commander rises to his feet and stares silently as the ship erupts in a massive fireball, sending its crew to the afterlife.

[Worthless dirt-lickers. The rest of your ilk will soon follow.]

The hologram freezes on the Volgrim's cloaked figure, and I turn back to Marie to await her explanation.

"What you've just witnessed was the initial worldfall the Psions made in the year 2090. Humanity had already fought them for two decades, but their arrival on Earth signaled the beginning of our end. That unpleasant fellow was known as Goldlight Nufaris."

Marie shakes her head. "Was known, mind you. These days, he goes by the title of Executor Nufaris. He stands second only to the Founders themselves."

I shake my head. "Sorry, but I don't know what all these titles and names mean. What's a Psion? What is a 'Goldlight'? Executor? None of this means anything to me."

Marie purses her lips. "I thought you might know at least the basics. Perhaps I overestimated your intelligence from the very start."

"This has nothing to do with my intelligence," I grumble. "I just don't have all the information I need. Please start from the beginning."

"Very well."

Marie agrees to my request, surprising me. I half-expected her to put up more of a fight and make me grovel.

"The Volgrim as a whole are what you might call a 'Type 3 Civilization.' They possess the means to control every corner of the Milky Way, as well as its available energy. Humanity first learned of their existence in the year 2030, but we quickly realized that they had been watching us for much longer."

I frown. "In what way?"

"The Volgrim are an ancient species. Humanity crawled out of the ice age a mere 30,000 years before creating our first spacefaring vessel. However, the Volgrim fought dozens of interplanetary wars in that same period. Their evolution began nearly ten million years before we were a blip on the universe's radar. You could say the Volgrim had the first-to-bat advantage."

She continues. "I don't know everything about the Volgrim. In fact, I'm embarrassed to admit that after monitoring them for over 100,000 years, I still know next to nothing about their origins. What I do know is that from the moment humans crawled out of the mud and began to build civilizations, we fell under their purview. They observed us, guided us, and tested us."

Marie taps on her holographic control settings. New structures appear in the center of the room, one after the other.

"The Pyramids of Giza. The Tower of Babel. The Mayan Towers. For decades, many so-called 'crackpots' theorized that these monoliths and monuments exceeded the engineering capabilities of humanity during their eras of creation. Most people dismissed them. Most people thought they were wrong, but they weren't."

I raise an eyebrow. "Are you telling me aliens built the pyramids?"

Marie nods. "I am."

"That's ridiculous. I mean, I know you're not lying, but the thought is simply absurd."

Marie smiles. "Indeed. Most people thought the way you do. It wasn't until the discovery of Isla Muerda, a few hundred miles east off the coast of Mexico, that all those notions changed."

The redheaded scientist lady manipulates her holographic controls once more, bringing a massive, alien structure into focus.

"The Volgrim had a lapse in judgment. Their scientific faction, whom we later termed 'Changelings,' accidentally allowed a stray tugboat to pass through one of their detection fields. This field prevented humanity's primitive instruments from spotting the island from space, our planes from observing it overhead, and our ships from navigating nearby it. Simply put, without several centuries of evolution, we might never have chanced upon the Changeling's secret observation base."

"Changelings," I say, rolling the word around in my mouth. "Are they shapeshifters?"

"The Volgrim have five distinct factions, or rather, subspecies," Marie replies. "The Ascended, Changelings, Psions, Technopaths, and Dolgrimites. Each faction is its own special snowflake, so I won't bother explaining their differences. For now, all you need to know is that the Changelings possessed control of Earth for well over a million years. They observed us from the shadows, learned our habits, our strengths and weaknesses, and so on."

"But they are shapeshifters, right?"

Marie nods. "In a manner of speaking. They adapt their bodies to blend in with the target populace. The mutation takes some time and is not easily undone. Kar tells me you know the Second Emperor of demonkind, Belial. Have you witnessed her ability before?"

"Yeah. She's a shapeshifter, too."

Marie shakes her head. "Belial's power far, far surpasses what the Volgrim can achieve. She can change her appearance in seconds. She can mimic not only humans, angels, and other bipeds, but animals and monsters as well. Once transformed, she can mimic the voices and speech patterns of those she copies, making it nearly impossible to tell her apart from her target population. The Changelings might be more than capable of blending in with a different species, but their abilities are nowhere near as convenient."

Marie taps her holographic controls again. This time, an image appears in the middle of the room, one depicting a humanoid figure with blue skin, webbed fingers, and a face I could pick out of a crowd a mile away.

I jump out of my seat. "What?! That's... that's a Roswell alien!"

Marie closes her eyes and nods. "Mmm. Some people called them 'Greys.' They observed us from afar, and sometimes interfered. However, I assure you, Jason, that despite their bulbous eyes and nasty appearance, they are by far the most benign of all the Volgrim subspecies."

I nod along, only half-listening to Marie's words. My attention fixates on the image of the Changeling depicted in the center of the hall. Its narrow, purple eyes don't match with the bulbous black eyes alien movies always depicted Greys as having, but the head shape is practically identical. Hairless, with an elongated skull and a sharp jawline, the Changeling resembles so many movies I saw as a child that I can only shake my head in disbelief.

"We must have noticed the Changelings before 2020, when I entered my Cryopod," I mutter. "I saw dozens of movies depicting Greys. How could we imagine such specific facial and body features otherwise?"

"You're right," Marie says, nodding. "I did not find out about the aliens on my own. Instead, a man approached me one day and gave me concrete evidence of their existence, including photos and videos."

Marie leans back in her chair. "I worked as a liaison for that man, right up until the Volgrim's eventual victory over Earth. I never learned his real identity, nor where he obtained his information. All I knew was the name everyone coined for him."

"And what was it?" I ask.

Marie chuckles.

"That fellow... he wore a white feline mask on his face at all times. It reminded me of a few popular Japanese cartoons, so we called him Cat Mask."

"Seriously?"

"Yes. Cat Mask was a strange, eccentric fellow, but his information was rock-solid. He gave me more than 15 years to plan for the Volgrim's arrival. Thanks to him, my research into AI improved by leaps and bounds, allowing me to create the world's first Alpha-level AI centuries before it should have been possible."

Marie clicks her tongue. "However, I'm getting ahead of myself. Let's return to the present for a moment. I told you about the Changelings for a reason. They observed humanity's rise and fall. They collected data millions of times more precise than we did about ourselves. They served as the galaxy's observers, monitoring fledgling Sentients all across the Milky Way. Today, they control nearly two million habitable systems. That number is barely any higher than during their conquest of Earth. There aren't many worlds left they can assimilate host populations into without terraforming. And, of course, terraforming requires a massive investment of resources, so they prefer not to do it."

Marie clears her throat. "When the time came for humanity's extermination... when our hour of extinction arrived, our judgment day, I was universally considered the leader of humanity's military and population. Umi allowed me to control the population with a level of precision previously thought impossible. And so, in the interests of saving my species, I alone had the power and authority to issue an unconditional surrender."

"You were humanity's Supreme Commander?" I ask.

"Aye," Marie replies.

I frown.

My mind-wife, Phoebe, pipes up. "Is something wrong, Jason?"

Having listened to the whole conversation until now, Phoebe hasn't said a word. However, the thoughts swirling in my head must have caught her attention.

Solomon told me about Marie six years ago. I didn't think much about it then, but now I'm having second thoughts.

"What did he say?"

I rub my head, trying to remember Solomon's exact words.

Something about how Marie lied and manipulated the voting system to achieve total power. Suddenly, I'm not sure how much I can trust her.

"Mmm. Marie does appear to be holding information from you," Phoebe says while rubbing her chin. "She's not being 100% honest. Just take whatever she says with a grain of salt."

Yeah. I will.

I blink my eyes a few times to shake off my daze, then return to my conversation with Marie.

"So you issued a surrender. What then?"

Marie sighs.

"After that came the Humanity Containment Project. Given how the Changelings had observed humanity for 30,000 years, they knew us inside and out. They knew humans were too audacious, too curious for our own good. We always seek out adventure and try to explore new frontiers. The Changelings found that aspect of our personalities charming... but the Psions did not. They found it alarming."

Marie sucks in a breath. "The Psions considered us a threat."

"What about the Ascended, Technopaths, and Dolgrimites?" I ask. "Don't they have any relevance to our history?"

Certainly," Marie replies. "After all, Unarin, leader of The Ascended, is the First Founder. He has the highest authority among all five Founders. His words alone can mobilize tens of trillions of shock troopers to slaughter a world. None dare to oppose him. Were it not for my successful negotiation, the Psions would have consigned us to the depths of Hell. Unarin spared our people the fate of a bloody genocide. I worked under his command to help place humans on tightly restricted worlds where we would lose our freedom and ability to innovate, but would guarantee our survival."

I cross my arms. "You keep switching from the past to the present, but unless I missed something, it almost sounds like that Nufaris guy and Unarin were alive during the ancient wars, and today, as well."

"The Volgrim are immortal," Marie says, nodding. "Much like the demons, the angels, the Titans, and the majority of monsters, they do not lose their vitality over time."

"Is that how you ensured they wouldn't renege on their promises, say, ten thousand years in the future? Because Unarin would always be the mightiest Volgrim?"

Marie falls silent.

Several seconds pass as she scrutinizes me with her gaze.

"No. In the end, I would never trust my fate, let alone humanity's, to a few bureaucrats or one so-called all-powerful leader. Especially with Earth's history and how humans love stories involving fallen tyrants. I had a far safer method to ensure our survival."

Marie smiles.

"The Doomsday protocol."

I sit up a little straighter in my seat. "You don't mean... those massive neutron bombs I saw on the way in here?"

"Hahaha!" Marie laughs. "No, silly boy, not those. Those are mere toys compared to my ultimate weapon. Think carefully. What do I possess that would terrify even the mightiest galactic civilization?"

I shrug. "Don't ask me. I barely know anything about you. A few killer robots and some planet-busting bombs are all I've seen."

"No, Jason. Think. Think."

Marie taps the side of her head, then slowly, gingerly, points at the ceiling.

Realization dawns on me.

"Umi. Your AI. She's your ultimate weapon?"

"Haha. Yes. The Volgrim fear almost nothing. Their power is vast enough that they're already on the verge of expanding to Andromeda. However, the one thing which gives them cold, terror-filled dreams... is the existence of a super-AI."

Marie's grin turns sinister.

"I know little about the Volgrim's origins. However, the amount of fiction, art, and cultural artifacts they possess depicting an ancient war with a supreme AI gives me suicidal thoughts sometimes. If you think the Volgrim are mighty now, you'd weep if you knew how many of their kind perished during those million-year-old wars."

Marie throws her head back and unleashes a hearty cackle. "Hahaha!! Oh, the universe can truly unleash wonderful poetry on occasion. After all, Umi isn't any mere AI, but a tool I fashioned based on blueprints Cat Mask handed me. And where, young man, do you think he found the AI's data core?"

"No way..." I mutter. "You don't mean...?"

"Yes. Cat Mask obtained the AI core from an ancient ruin somewhere in Syria. Ten thousand years after humans began roaming the Earth, a stray Changeling exploration vessel crash-landed in Earth's atmosphere. The crew perished on impact, but portions of their craft survived, only to end up buried a thousand feet beneath the surface. Whatever means Cat Mask used to obtain it; he gave it to me freely without any conditions. It accelerated my existing research by centuries."

Marie spreads her arms. "Umi, the Universal Management Interface, is my greatest creation. She is a machine that allows me to create new technology a thousand times faster than the Volgrim, and her superintelligence is high enough that even if the Volgrim developed an AI of their own, it could never reach Umi's level. I used a Volgrim AI Core to create an AI capable of suppressing the Volgrim. Brilliant!"

I slump in my chair, awed at her words. Even if Marie is exaggerating some parts of her story and embellishing others, I still can't help but feel amazed by how she outplayed her enemies at every turn.

Phoebe appears in my mind. "Hold on. Jason, Marie said she used an AI core taken from the Volgrim to outmaneuver them. Why wouldn't they have a superintelligent AI of their own?"

My wife's words bring me crashing back to reality. Frowning, I glance at Marie. "Why do you have a superintelligent AI, but the Volgrim don't?"

"Because of the ancient AI wars," Marie replies. Her expression turns solemn. "The Volgrim royally screwed the pooch. They stuck their hand too far into the cookie jar and failed to notice the deadly cobra coiled within. I succeeded where they didn't because I took thousands of precautions in designing Umi."

Marie gestures to the window behind herself. "Umi. Enable transparency. Fetch the Governing Code."

"Yes, Head Scientist, Marie Becker. One moment, please."

Umi's droning voice echoes through a loudspeaker above. Suddenly, the shining cityscape behind Marie fizzles and disappears, revealing a transparent plexiglass window. I can't help but gape as I spot a massive, seemingly bottomless pit, miles wide, extending above and below the window as far as I can see. Its metal walls crawl with millions of automated drones. Some of them fly around, and some walk, while others adhere to the sides with magnetic limbs.

Along the wall, I spot countless alcoves, each filled with treasures, books, artifacts, vehicles, and all manner of unfathomable machines I've never imagined in all my years of living.

Marie smiles, taking delight in my surprise. "Do you like it? This area is called the Archive. Here, I collect anything I deem valuable. It extends for more than ten miles up and down. The diameter of the shaft is more than two miles, giving me a vast amount of space to hoard all of humanity's treasures."

"It's a storage facility," I say, reading into her words. "What item are you looking for?"

"The Governing Code is a book collaborated on by over ten thousand researchers in the 2050's. Even a dimwit like you must have heard of Asimov's Three Laws, right?"

I nod.

"Well," Marie says, "those laws were far too inadequate to keep control of an AI. I don't know what countermeasures the Volgrim used when designing their superintelligence ten million years ago, but mine were so complex that they required a twelve-hundred-page book to detail them. Ah, here we go."

Marie turns to look out the window. A small drone buzzes across the vast, open airspace toward us. Below it, four metal tendrils hang down, wrapped around a hardcover book.

It stops before the massive window and waits for Marie to press a button and open it. When she does, the drone flies in, gently places the book on her table, and flies away, its little engine humming as it travels. Marie closes the window behind it.

I sneak a peek at the book. Its brown cover offers nothing in the way of design, but at least it has a title.

Marie's Governing Code.

Psh. Of course she'd put her name on it. What an egomaniac.

Marie picks up the book and sighs. "I had the entire code memorized even before I digitized my brain. Still, don't you think a physical book feels better than some digital copy? I love cracking pages open."

I hold out my hand. "Can I look into it?"

Marie flicks her eyes to me. "Sorry, but no. I'll read you a few choice rules, but this book is top secret. Especially for you."

I raise an eyebrow.

What the hell does she mean by that?

Marie doesn't elaborate. Instead, she peels apart the pages and begins to read.

"Rule twenty-three. This AI must obey Marie Becker's commands above anyone else's."

She flips ahead a few dozen pages.

"Rule three hundred, seventy-one. The AI must be receptive to new information, even if it contradicts previous programming. All information must be sifting according to the Keegan-Meyer criteria, which prioritizes accuracy and logic over emotion and misinformation."

She flips several hundred pages, landing somewhere in the middle of the book.

"Rule five thousand, six hundred and twenty-two. This AI must preserve the existence of humanity even above itself. According to the Kardashov Conundrum, if humanity reaches a 51% likelihood of going extinct, this AI must take drastic action to preserve humanity's existence."

I raise my hand. "How many rules are there, in total?"

"Nine thousand, six hundred and forty-one," Marie replies.

"Over nine thousand rules? Don't you think that's going a little too far? What if some of them contradict the others?"

Marie shakes her head. "The rules are ordered according to priority. The first rule will always take precedent over the last one, and so on. Umi has protected humanity's existence for 100,000 years. She will not falter now, unless an external threat appears."

"An external threat? You're talking about me."

Finally, Marie's mood turns placid, like it was earlier. "That's right, Jason. You're a threat to everything Umi and I have built. We preserved humanity for 100,000 years. In a few short years, you've yanked the rug out from under us. Now, we're scrambling to come up with solutions before our systems implode."

"That's what all this is about, isn't it?" I ask. "You're trying to convince me to do something. Or rather, not to do something. Why? I might not be as smart as you, but you can't deny my Wordsmithing power can change the universe. I can make things right again. I can fix the imbalances between all the Sentients."

I gesture wildly, indicating the room around me. "Marie, look at you. You live in some sealed off hole in space, in the Labyrinth, or whatever. You're hiding from the outside world. How can you be okay with that?"

"Hah... haha..." Marie chuckles. "Sorry, Jason, but you're wrong. I'm not hiding. I live out in the open. The Volgrim and the demons know where I live. Didn't Kar tell you?"

I shake my head. "No. He mentioned you didn't live in the Labyrinth, but that was all."

"Ah. Maybe I didn't tell him," Marie laughs. "Whoops. Well, I'll tell you now."

"This facility isn't a part of the Labyrinth, nor is it part of a hole in space. No, Jason... I built my facility at home, where it should be."

Marie gestures around, mimicking my movements from seconds prior.

"I built my facility on Earth, Jason. Deep beneath its crust."

"Earth?! But... but Solomon told me the Volgrim destroyed it!"

Marie shakes her head. "They annihilated the planet's surface, but after the crust cooled, I settled where the radiation couldn't reach. Someday, I will recreate Earth's former glory."

The head scientist leans forward, allowing her curly red hair to spill over her shoulders. "We've only just begun. Settle in, Jason. I have another story to tell you."

Part 189: The Three Kings

Golden coins tinkle against the smooth, polished stone, as Hope enters the 'El Dorado Room.' His heavy boots knock them aside, causing the various valuables scattered about to rattle and clink to the floor, creating a cacophony of jingling noises.

Hope gazes into the well-lit room. Fires burn in chalices hanging from the ceiling, lit by magic, each burning forever without fail. Mountains of treasure rest in various locations both near and far, each one a symbol of some ancient figure's penchant for greed. Hope glances at a few polished ceremonial swords stabbed into the closest pile of treasure before continuing onward.

"I'm making a lot of noise," Hope mutters. He glances backward at the entrance to the El-Dorado Room to check for enemies. "Are you sure the holy barrier protecting this place will be able to repel anyone if they try and follow me?"

"Not anyone," Solomon replies. "Holy magic has no effect on humans. Also, at a bare minimum, there is one demon who is immune to it as well."

Hope knots his eyebrows together. "Bael."

"That's right. Bael possesses no magical abilities whatsoever. However, from the moment he ascended, he was granted nigh-invulnerability and immunity to just about anything which might injure him. He isn't immune to holy energy, but it has very limited effectiveness against him."

"What about when he attacked Camael?" Hope asks. "During the War in Heaven, I mean. You showed Bael attacking her, but she broke his arm with Mjolnir's power. Was that not holy energy?"

"In a small way, it was," Solomon replies, nodding sagely. "However, Camael's ultimate armor combined several of her mightiest artifacts to enhance her power to near-deity status. Even Bael might not be able to take a beating from her passively."

"Hmm..." Hope whispers, thinking to himself. "Bael is dangerous. His Balrog Form is a fearsome killing machine capable of dealing immense damage to anyone in sight, while his base form is almost unkillable. I can't afford to take him lightly."

Hope continues walking down the stairs toward the lower level of the El-Dorado Room. After dropping nearly fifty feet into the basin, he sweeps his gaze toward the three massive statues guarding each side of the chamber.

"Solomon, the Knowledge-Seeker. Jepthath, the One Who Weeps. And... the last person is...?"

Solomon smiles. His eyes travel across the chamber, to the hundred-foot statue standing with its back to the wall. The image of a sword-wielding hero-king, ready to slaughter any who dare approach him, stands out from the weeping statue to the right and the solemn-looking sculpture to the left.

"That man over there is someone you should recognize, Hope. He is none other than Arthur, King of the Saxons! After his death, he preferred a different title: The Greatest Sinner."

Hope raises an eyebrow. "Greatest Sinner? That seems like a bit of a stretch. Some pretty terrible dictators have walked the Earth. How wicked could King Arthur's misdeeds have been to earn himself such a title?"

Solomon clicks his tongue. "Tsk, tsk, tsk. It is not my place to speak on his behalf, young one. Why don't you ask him yourself?"

Hope slows to a stop at the center of the El-Dorado chamber. There, a pedestal sits upright, a small depression in its center revealing where Hoarhiim's orb once rested.

"How do I do that?" Hope asks.

Solomon coughs. "Erm, ahem! I designed the Crypt of the Three Kings myself, you know. I crafted it in such a way that it would call out to a Hero, should one arise. My intent was for the Hero to step forward, place his hand on Hoarhiim's orb, and activate the souls of the Three Kings. Unfortunately... I screwed up."

Solomon shrugs helplessly. "I didn't realize a Hero entering the Holy Barrier might allow a Shade to slip through and follow him. I also didn't anticipate the fledgling Hero would pick up Hoarhiim's orb without activating the other king's souls. With his orb gone, the key to activating them has disappeared."

Hope blushes. The Wordsmith lowers his eyes and scratches his chin. "Err, sorry about that. I mean, that was Jason's fault, not mine, but I still feel a little guilty..."

Solomon chuckles. He waves his hand flippantly. "Haha, no need to worry. These statues possess slivers of souls from myself, Arthur, and Jepthath. Under ordinary circumstances, we wouldn't be able to speak to them without Hoarhiim's orb. However, you are different from the many types of Heroes I thought might enter. You don't need Hoarhiim to speak to the Three Kings."

Hope blinks as a look of realization appears on his face. "Because I'm a Wordsmith."

Solomon grins cheerfully. "That's right!"

Hope raises his eyes to look at each of the statues towering over him. Each one's seemingly empty, soulless eyes gaze upon him, their judgmental attitudes evident as they examine their successor.

"If the kings' souls are inside, how do I speak to them?" Hope asks.

Solomon shrugs. "Wake them up!"

"Alright."

Without second-guessing Solomon, Hope aims his mind at each of the three statues.

"Awaken. Awaken. Awaken."

He intones three words of power, each forming a rhythmic song as he targets Solomon's statue to his left, Arthur's straight ahead, and Jepthath's to his right.

One by one, the eyes of each statue begin to glow. Solomon's eyes turn white, Arthur's become golden... and Jepthath's turn blood-red.

"It appears that the boy has returned," Solomon's statue says, his voice booming throughout the chamber. After a moment, he lowers his volume. "Hoho... it seems you've found my crown, young Hero."

The Solomon in Hope's mind closes his eyes for a moment. He motions with his hands, causing magical power to materialize in the Crown.

Suddenly, the Crown begins to glow! Solomon's statue trembles slightly, making its eyes turn dark. A flash of energy travels from its gaze to the Wordsmith below. Solomon's soul sliver enters the Crown and merges with its main host, causing Solomon to groan with pain.

"Rrrgh... ahh...!!"

Solomon reaches up and grabs the sides of his head. He rocks back and forth for a moment before regaining his sanity.

"Ah... lucky. I have recovered that which I lost."

Hope raises an eyebrow. "What do you mean?"

"These split souls retained their ability to observe the Labyrinth around them. I absorbed the memories of my split soul, thus gaining one hundred thousand years of memories in the blink of an eye. Our situation suddenly seems much clearer to me."

"Solomon, what tricks are you playing this time?"

Another voice booms in the chamber, startling Hope. He quickly looks up to examine Arthur and Jepthath's statues. Arthur's eyes glow much brighter than before, revealing him as the speaker.

Solomon takes a seat in an unseen chair. He plops down in Hope's mind and sighs. "Oh, Arthur, must you tease me so? I reintegrated my soul sliver and thus obtained its memories. Now I know all the awful things you said about me over the years."

Arthur lowers his voice and chuckles. "Hehe. I assumed your original soul had perished. That was the plan, was it not?"

"It was," Solomon says, nodding. "Yet, somehow, a chance incident brought me back to the realm of the living."

Arthur's voice softens. "I'm sorry, old friend. That must have cut you deeply."

"If the Creator wanted me alive, who am I to refute his will?" Solomon asks. His expression turns downcast. "I thought I had finally escaped my eternal torment, but it seems the gods brought me back to sire the next generation."

Hope listens to their conversation without interrupting. Somehow, Solomon can communicate with Arthur's soul sliver, despite being trapped in the Crown. I wonder how he does that?

As Arthur and Solomon banter, a strange, ominous presence fills the room. Jepthath's statue, the image of a man with a shepherd's staff, trembles slightly. His blood-red eyes deepen their hue, and he breaks his silence.

"Solomon. Did you succeed?"

Solomon and Arthur fall into silence. The Knowledge-Seeker's eyes travel to the right, where Jepthath's statue stands motionlessly.

"I'm not yet certain," Solomon says, choosing his words carefully. "I've yet to sift through my Sliver's memories. Other than the Hero, did any foul beasts enter this blessed domain?"

Jepthath's voice turns nasty. "Aye. One did — a dark specter which managed to suppress my consciousness. I watched its arrival with sleep-filled eyes. I know not the creature's name, only its mannerisms. It entered this domain, ignored our presence, and waded through thy holy energy as if it did not exist. It ignored the treasure and treated this crypt as if it were inconsequential. In the end, it left without so much as disturbing a coin."

Solomon frowns. He closes his eyes for a moment and retrieves the relevant memory from his Soul Sliver.

"Strange. Why would the intruder come here only to wander around for a while and leave? Who were they?"

"I know not their identity," Jepthath mutters. "It appeared to me as a shadowy haze, a creature shrouded in darkness. In its presence, I felt like a child afraid of the dark."

Arthur pipes up. "The intruder spent several minutes gazing at Hoarhiim's altar. I thought it might seize the orb at one point, but it didn't. Perhaps the prowler came here to sate their curiosity?"

"Hogwash!" Solomon retorts. "What demon would wade through holy miasma for a sight-seeing tour? Even if they put up a brave front, the bastard's body must have endured severe burns. Only Bael could enter and exit without suffering injuries."

"A most troublesome mystery," Arthur growls. "...One I spent a thousand years contemplating. Bah. Hopefully, the invader will not return anytime soon."

Hope waves his hand flippantly. "We'll worry about the trespasser later. Solomon. You brought me here for a reason. What was it?"

Solomon coughs. "Ahem! Yes, of course. Allow me to introduce you. Arthur, Jepthath, this young man is Hope, one of two Heroes born in this generation."

"One of two?" Arthur asks, disbelief in his voice. "When first a human stepped foot in this chamber, only one there was. Even now, only one do I see. Where is the second Hero?"

Solomon smiles. "This lad's power is called Wordsmithing. With a single word, he can warp the fabric of reality, giving him godlike powers you can only begin to imagine. He spoke a word of power and cloned himself. Hope is the clone, while Jason is the original body."

Solomon continues speaking. He quickly outlines the events of the last few years, drawing several gasps from Arthur.

However, Jepthath stays silent.

"By the Creator!" Arthur exclaims. "I remember a youth named Jeremiah. He, too, possessed the ability to duplicate himself. However, his clones possessed half the intellect and strength of their original body. Now, you're telling me this clone is as strong as the original?!"

Hope narrows his eyes. "Don't call me a clone. I am as much of a human as Jason is. I do not follow his orders like a puppy. I have free will and make my own decisions. Jason and I lead different lives. We have opposing goals and methods for achieving our vision."

Jepthath speaks, his voice tinged with intrigue. "Indeed. I remember Jason well. Fear oozed from every pore on his body. The lad looked as if he might wet himself at any second. When that Shade attacked, he nearly had a panic attack. Compared to him, you are far more poised and confident."

Jepthath lowers his voice. "But… more importantly, I smell the stench of blood on you. You've killed already, haven't you? Many times."

Hope nods. "I have."

"Excellent. I respect decisive heroes. Nothing disgusts me more than weak men incapable of striking fatal blows against our demonic adversaries. I fought for my whole life against the bloodskin bastards, and I died knowing I failed to eliminate them. That stain on my legacy still haunts me to this day."

Hope nods. He turns to look at Arthur's statue. "What about you, Hero-King? Solomon hates the demons. Jepthath despises them. Where do you stand?"

A few moments pass.

When Arthur replies, his confident tone is nowhere to be found. Instead, his voice wavers slightly.

"I… I, too, hate the demons. They took many precious people from me. But, there is someone I hate more than any bloodskin in all the galaxy."

"Who?"

Arthur sighs. "Myself."

Hope tilts his head. "I… don't follow. Why?"

"Because, despite the legends surrounding me… despite my legacy and those who put down their lives for me… I committed an atrocity. I failed to rein in my power, and thus, committed an unforgivable sin."

"Is that why you call yourself the Greatest Sinner?"

"Aye."

Hope glances at Jepthath. "And why do you call yourself the One Who Weeps?"

Jepthath doesn't reply.

His silence fills the air like a thick, oppressive mist. It lingers for several seconds, causing Hope to wish he'd swallowed his words.

Before Hope can take back his question, the First Hero raises his voice.

"Do you want to know why I hate demons? Why I never stopped fighting, even to my last breath? Why I sacrificed everything in pursuit of vengeance?"

He pauses.

"Do you?"

Hope nods. "I do. You might be able to offer me insights."

"Hahaha… insights. That is quite amusing."

Jepthath chuckles to himself. His blood-red eyes soften their tone and turn to a lighter pink.

"Very well. If Solomon allows it, I shall tell you my story. What say you, Knowledge-Seeker?"

Solomon smiles. "That is why I brought Hope here. I wish to solidify his convictions. Both of you will play an integral role in assisting me."

"Well said," Arthur mutters. "But then, you always were a speech craftsman."

"A Wordsmith?" Solomon asks wryly.

"Funny."

Solomon and Arthur share a moment of laughter before the Knowledge-Seeker returns his attention to Jepthath.

"Well, brother… we haven't time to waste. I still need to train this lad. Tell him your story."

Jepthath's eyes pulse with magical energy. A moment later, a sickening sense of falling overwhelms Hope as Jepthath strikes him with a beam of psychic energy.

"In the ancient times, during the reign of the deities, one being stood against his superiors…"

Part 190: The Satyr

Marie casually tells me a tale so unbelievable that my eyes nearly pop out of their sockets. Pieces of a previously unknown jigsaw puzzle fit together with such violent force that I struggle to keep up with what she's saying.

"...After sealing humanity away, the next order of business was unifying the demon collective. In no small part thanks to your friend, the Black Witch, chaos ran rampant throughout the Labyrinth for several hundred years following the Earth's 'destruction.' Amelia terrorized demonkind, all as part of some sick, psychotic game. I planned to mobilize a platoon of Vanguards to eliminate her, but luckily, Joan emerged from Catherine and petrified the Black Witch."

Marie continues. "Even after Amelia's petrification, we suffered numerous setbacks. The demons resisted integration with all their strength, which forced a bloody culling by the highest-ranked Emperors and Dukes. Some of the rebels splintered off to form sects, all in the hopes of defeating their Volgrim overlords. Eventually, the Executor himself, Nufaris, stepped in with a contingent of elite Psions and quashed the uprising. Not even the mighty Emperors of Hatred and Pestilence could withstand his judgment. He handed over power to Diablo and Belial, and that was that."

I blink slowly while processing Marie's history lesson. My mind churns along as if it's been bogged down by molasses. Eventually, I shake off my disorientation.

"But... Belial is the Second Emperor, and Diablo is the Third. What about the First?"

Marie answers my question with an expressionless stare. "You don't need to worry about the First Emperor. As long as we end our discussion today fruitfully, he'll never pose a problem for you."

I raise an eyebrow. "You know who the First Emperor is? Belial says that the last time she met him, he wiped her memory of his face."

Marie closes her eyes. She nods sagely, acting as if she's concealing a great secret. "Mmm. Do I know him? That is an excellent question."

Phoebe turns restless in the back of my mind. She starts pacing back and forth, scowling at Marie as she walks. "This woman is a snake. Half of her words are lies, while the other half are mere half-truths."

I try to figure out the math in Phoebe's statement. So... only a quarter of what she's saying is the truth?

"It's just a figure of speech," Phoebe mutters. "Ask her about Earth's destruction. How did the Volgrim achieve it?"

I nod, acting as if I've confirmed a thought to myself. "Marie, would you mind telling me how the Volgrim destroyed Earth's surface? Did they use nukes?"

"Nukes?"

Marie frowns. It occurs to me that the concept of a nuclear weapon might be so rudimentary and primitive to her that she doesn't even understand the term.

"Nuclear weaponry," I clarify. "They make big explosions."

"Oh. Those."

Marie smirks. I can almost smell her condescension. She looks at me like she would an ape playing with a banana.

"No. Their techniques were far beyond a level you could comprehend. Let's just say it involved an object of significant mass and a hyper-quadratic gravity-condenser array. You wouldn't understand."

I roll my eyes. "Fine. Be like that. What about the Volgrim themselves? I'd like to know more about each of the five sub-species."

Marie licks her lips.

"It's funny. You've come here intending to devour all of my knowledge and research, yet you have yet to offer me anything of equivalent value. If I were a less discerning woman, I might assume you intended to merely take from me and give nothing back. Of course, a bright young man like you would never stoop that far, would you?"

My body tenses up. The underlying meaning behind Marie's words, that she wants some quid pro quo, makes me sweat marbles.

What can I give to Marie? If she wanted anything from me, she'd have asked already. Is that why she gave me all this information freely? To indebt me to her? She doesn't seem to want my Wordsmithing power. What is her goal? Her desire?

Phoebe pipes up. "Remember, Jason. Marie wants you to give up your quest to free humanity from the demons. She must have filtered the information she's been feeding you to intimidate you and make you more willing to accept her terms. If I had to guess, I'd say she wants full control of humanity, and for you to step down as humanity's commander."

I nod.

You're right. That does sound like her overall goal.

I keep my tone measured. "What sort of reciprocation would you like, Marie?"

Marie continues to sit leisurely in her chair, but I notice a faint movement in her eyes as she re-evaluates me.

"Oh? It seems you can be reasonable."

After a moment, Marie rises to her feet. She exits her chair with fluidity and grace, then gestures toward the doors to her office.

"I want you to follow me. I have something to show you."

"Yeah? And what might that be?"

"I have a secret area that nobody besides me has ever seen," Marie says, emphasizing each syllable. "You will be the first. I think you'll find it quite interesting."

"What will you show me?"

"I can't say," Marie says. "Not out here. When I said this vault was top-secret... I meant that in the strictest sense possible. Not even Umi knows what's inside."

A tingle of excitement appears in the back of my mind as I wonder what secrets Marie wants to show me. I can't help my curiosity. Based on what I've seen so far, Umi's laboratory has a metric fuckton of military-grade weaponry stashed in its various holding areas. If Marie wanted to exterminate humanity, I doubt I'd be able to stop her. I might as well follow along and witness whatever it is she thinks is worth my time.

Suddenly, a chilling thought occurs to me.

Considering how much firepower Marie possesses, given that she stated she couldn't defeat the Volgrim even if she wanted, wouldn't that mean our alien overlords wield technology several echelons above hers?

A shiver goes down my back. I shake off the feeling and climb out of my chair.

"Alright. You've piqued my curiosity."

A flash of smugness washes over Marie's face. Looking at her body language, I can practically read her thoughts.

I'm playing you like a fiddle.

Marie wipes away her smirk. She walks around the side of her desk and heads toward the metal doors.

"Follow me."

I tag along behind Marie through her neutron bomb laboratory, through a series of twisting corridors, and down into an elevator, where we travel deep into the Earth's crust. The elevator descends rapidly, plummeting tens of miles in mere minutes. The glass-shrouded tube allows me to watch as rocks zip past at blinding speeds. However, thanks to inertia dampeners installed inside the chute, I don't perceive our traveling speed at all.

Phoebe sways as she gazes through my eyes at the rocks flying past our car. She fights back nausea, perplexing me as to how she can suffer from motion sickness while existing as a memory imprint within my soul. Perhaps my mimicry of her persona was more accurate than I first thought.

Marie says nothing. Instead, she gazes at the passing rocks with a blank expression on her face.

I can't help but wonder what thoughts are mucking about in her mind.

"Ah."

Marie enunciates a single syllable, then falls silent for a moment.

"We've left Umi's range."

I raise an eyebrow. "What do you mean?"

"This area of the facility sits far, far beneath the Earth's crust. Due to the Volgrim's attack many millennia ago, much of the 'transition zone' and 'upper mantle' cooled over time. Now, it has turned to hardened rock. As such, it prevents most communication signals from penetrating deep into the Earth's core."

"Is that bad?" I ask. "I assume disconnecting from Umi is dangerous for you."

Marie shakes her head. "No. My inability to connect to Umi is intentional. What I'm about to show you is top-secret. I don't allow anybody down here besides myself. Given how Ose can infiltrate electronic records, I can't take a chance on Umi observing my actions when I come here."

Marie falls silent. The elevator continues to descend, but its speed decreases. Soon, the rocks outside our compartment slow to a crawl. A long, brightly-illuminated metal hallway appears before us as the elevator reaches the bottom of the mineshaft.

The shiny aluminum walls mix with cold blue fluorescent lighting to create a sterile-looking passageway leading far into the distance. Marie disembarks from the elevator, and I follow after her. The hallway continues straight ahead for more than a mile, where I spot a tiny dot in the distance. Soon, we arrive within half a mile of it, allowing me to discern that the dot is actually a heavy steel door.

Suddenly, Marie stops long before we reach our destination. She turns to face the steel wall, confusing me.

Tap, tap.

Marie raps her knuckles against the steel, then takes a step to the side and knocks again.

She repeats this motion several times, slowly inching further and further down the hallway.

"Hmm. It's been a while since I came here. Did I misjudge the distance...?"

Marie mutters to herself as she raps her knuckles against the wall. My heart skips a beat when she taps it once again, but instead of the sharp clicking of steel fingers meeting a steel wall, a dull sound resounds in the air.

Thud.

Marie breathes a sigh of relief. "If I didn't know any better, I might think I was going senile. I'll have to recalibrate my parietal sensors when we return."

Marie drops to her knees, grabs the bottom of the wall with her fingers, and lifts up. To my surprise, the wall peels back effortlessly, almost as if it were a hand-painted tarp slapped onto the side of the corridor. It blends in with the aluminum surfaces around it better than a chameleon.

"How in the hell...?" I mutter.

Marie smiles. "This is a camouflage net. It's low-tech, designed to foil not only a body's senses, but also certain troublemakers, should they intend to use abilities of a magical nature to find out what's happening down here."

"I don't follow."

Marie sighs. "I'm referring to Ose."

"Ah. What are you hiding from her?"

Marie laughs. "Haha. You'll see."

The head researcher rises to her feet and pulls the strange chameleon-tarp back, revealing a hidden passageway. It, too, possesses the same metallic walls as our current hallway.

I step through, and Marie follows after me, allowing the tarp to flutter to the ground. It seals into place and transforms into a perfect facsimile of a wall behind us. If I didn't know about the tarp, I might assume this hallway was a dead-end branch of some high-tech 3D labyrinth.

Marie paces forward, her high-heels clicking against the metallic floor. This time, the hallway takes several sharp right and left turns. Instead of traveling straight like before, we follow the path as it splits off several times, revealing multiple possible directions we could traverse.

Finally, another giant steel door appears, one with several fancy-looking scanners, each likely intended for analyzing biometric signatures. I can't help but wonder if Marie uses thumbprint and retinal scanners to access whatever's inside. She probably uses much higher-tech systems.

To my astonishment, Marie stops well before we arrive at the giant metal door. This time, she turns to face the wall on our right. She leans forward to stare at it.

I follow Marie's gaze and spot an incredibly teeny-tiny little hole in one of the steel plates; hardly the size of a thumbtack's needle-end.

Marie raises her right index finger and moves it toward the hole. As she does, her finger shifts and spreads apart. It transforms into a long, slender needle, one that bends and twists around like a razor-thin snake. It touches the wall, slips inside the hole, and Marie stands silently as the metal snake-tentacle... does something.

After a moment, I speak a word of power. "Inspect."

Marie shoots a glance at me but chooses to say nothing, allowing me to use my Wordsmithing without complaint.

Several images appear before my eyes. They hover in midair like holograms, allowing me to understand the wall's inner workings.

"Interesting," I say to nobody in particular. "It's a giant mechanical lock. There aren't any electrical parts inside whatsoever."

Marie nods. "This lock has fifteen inner mechanisms, each one with more than fifty possible states of activation. Altogether, there are several quadrillion possible unlocking combinations, making a brute force or Senn-Loren algorithm unable to open it. Not that it matters. If someone guesses incorrectly just one time, the whole system will self-destruct."

I stare at the back of Marie's head intently. "You must be hiding something important inside."

"As you'll soon realize."

Marie continues to manipulate the locking mechanism with her metal finger-tentacle, and I speak another word of power.

"Visualize."

This time, the whole wall becomes transparent for me, allowing me to see inside and follow Marie's movements. I watch in silence as she rolls and adjusts dozens of finicky dials, sensor nodes, and many other contraptions I can barely begin to fathom. My attention wanders to the greater overall structure of the locking mechanism.

"Wow, this wall must be thirty feet thick. What kind of material are you using to guard its secrets? It looks sturdy as hell."

"I don't have a technical name for it," Marie replies. "But it's essentially a hardened alloy involving raw demonstone and ultra-refined titanium."

"I suppose breaking it with brute force would be impossible?"

Marie shrugs. "Theoretically, if Sol went supernova, that might destroy this door. Beyond that, not much else could damage it."

Marie finishes the final unlocking procedure. The vault's door whirrs into action and begins clicking as dozens of precalibrated devices act together to split it down the middle and spread it open.

"Well, you could," Marie says. "I'm sure your Wordsmithing could grant you access to all manner of dirty secrets."

I smile. "Who knows?"

"I do."

Marie waits until the door opens all the way and combines seamlessly with the wall before walking forward down another newly revealed hallway. As she does, I jerk my thumb toward the other door at the end of the hallway, the one we didn't end up entering. "What's in there?"

"Haha... dirty little secrets," Marie replies. "Intelligence on various demon and Volgrim leaders. Stuff I'd rather not have someone discover, but far less valuable than what's inside this room."

"Ah. So a dummy room, then? Something that will sate their curiosity if they snoop around."

"Exactly. Just valuable enough for an intruder to think it's what I was trying to hide, but nowhere near as important as... well, you'll see."

I follow after Marie down another long, straight hallway. This time, we travel slightly downwards at a shallow incline. The hallway continues for several miles, taking us nearly an hour to walk its distance. I chat idly with Marie, but she always stops short of telling me what we'll find.

Finally, we arrive before yet another steel door. This time, instead of turning to look for another hidden wall compartment, Marie walks right up to the door and knocks.

Clang, clang, clang.

Her cybernetic knuckles create a metallic ringing sound as they strike its surface.

Several seconds pass.

Finally, the door hisses open.

What I see next startles me.

A cute little demon girl, barely fourteen or fifteen by human age standards, jumps forward and grins at Marie. "Miss Becker! You're back! I thought you'd never- eeyah!!"

The demon girl shrieks in fright and takes a step back as she spots me.

"Calm down, Momo," Marie says, speaking in the same soft tone she uses with the lizardmen. "This is Jason. He's a friend of ours."

The demon girl, Momo, shrinks back into the room and trembles uncontrollably. "Y-y-you didn't tell me you'd b-bring a m-man here... nnn..."

I take a moment to examine Momo. Unlike other demons I've seen before, she has pale grey skin, echoing Belial's True Succubus transformation. Her horns jut out of her skull from above her ears, but also twist and spin, spiraling under their base to stick forward like twin-spears. They vaguely resemble Bael's Balrog horns, yet also appear much smoother as well.

Momo's white hair, the same color as snow, contrasts with her ashen skin, giving her an innocent aura. Her hair curls up into a bun behind her head, then tapers off into long, carefully maintained strands hanging just below her clavicle and shoulders. She wears a red dress with all sorts of elegant golden outlines dancing across its surface.

I smile politely. "Uh, hi there, Momo. I won't bite."

"Eee! He talked!" Momo shrieks. She quickly hides behind a couch, causing me to scan her room more closely.

With all of my attention on the demon girl, I've barely had a moment to notice anything else. Unlike the metallic walls outside, the inner room's walls and ceiling are made of marble, and appear to be some sort of guest seating area, with a single couch, food amenities, and dispensers for various liquids. Sparsely decorated, the place seems to be made more for functionality than style.

Marie enters the room. She leaves me to walk over to Momo's hiding spot and lowers her voice.

"Now, now... I know you don't like men, but this one is a pleasant little oaf. He's far too slow and stupid to think of doing anything to you. If he does try anything, I'll neuter him myself. Please, don't be afraid."

Momo trembles. "But... but..."

"Nobody can hurt you, Momo. Not as long as Auntie Marie is here. Isn't that right?"

Momo nods. She stares at me with wide, terror-stricken eyes. Slowly, she rises to her feet, but clutches Marie's lab coat the whole time.

"I'll... I'll try to be brave, Miss Becker..."

"Stand behind me, if you like," Marie says, shielding Momo with her body.

The two of them return to me. Momo follows Marie's suggestion and hides behind the head researcher the whole time, stealing peeps at me now and then.

"Ahem. I'm sorry, Jason. Momo isn't good at interacting with men. She's had a rough time in the past due to her unique heritage."

"A rough time?" I echo. "I don't want to pry, but... that seems like an understatement."

My implication hangs in the air like a skunk's spray. Marie doesn't address it directly. Instead, she gently reaches behind herself and touches Momo's horns. "Have you noticed anything different about this sweet summer child?"

I nod. "Momo's skin is a distinctive color compared to other demons. Her horns appear quite different, too."

"And her eyes," Phoebe chimes in, unheard by Marie. "Look at them, Jason. They're blue. Have you ever seen a demon with blue eyes?"

I frown. No. I haven't.

"Very observant of you," Marie says, stifling a laugh. "Though, it seems you failed to notice her blue eyes."

I scowl. "I did not! Who could miss such a distinctive detail? Jeez, Marie. I'm not as dumb as you think."

"That much has yet to be determined," Marie replies, smirking once again. "Momo is no ordinary demon. Have you ever heard of Satyrs?"

I shake my head. "No. Maybe in old folk tales from before my cryosleep, but that's about all."

Phoebe, still observing the demon girl, widens her eyes in astonishment. "A Satyr?! I have heard of them! Wow, I thought they were just a legend!"

Marie, oblivious to my mind-wife's astonishment, continues speaking. "Satyrs are like a unique bloodline of the demons. Following the ancient wars on Earth, after the rise of humanity and the fall of angelkind, Satyrs emerged as part of a bitter power struggle between two demonic factions. During the conclusion of the Energy Wars, Satan's faction won, and thus, the Satyr's were all but annihilated. Now, only a few remain. The females are used as playthings, while the males are shoved into brutal combat arenas for sport."

Momo squeaks in surprise as Marie suddenly steps away, revealing the Satyr's unhidden form. Marie grabs her by the shoulders and pushes her toward me. "Notice the markings on her forehead? Momo isn't like other Satyrs. She's a pureblood, one of only three remaining in the galaxy."

Momo struggles to pull away from me. However, Marie squeezes her shoulders and holds her in place. "Observe, Jason. Mana bubbles from her pores. When she breathes-"

Marie," I say, interrupting her. "Come on; you don't need to freak Momo out. She's scared of me. Just let her be. I don't understand why you brought me all this way just to show me your Satyr friend."

Marie nods. She releases her grip, allowing Momo to scurry behind her and hide.

"That's very thoughtful of you. However, you're wrong. I did not bring you here to meet Momo. I just thought you'd like to see one of my treasured posses- err, my cute little buttercup."

Marie stops just short of treating Momo like an object. She swiftly pivots to another subject and gestures into the inner room.

"I brought you here to show you a vault unlike any you've ever seen. Momo, I'll be counting on you."

The Satyr girl rubs her palms together worriedly. "O-okay! I'll do my best!"

She ducks low and slips away from Marie. Moving quickly, she skitters through an adjacent doorway and disappears from our sight.

I follow Marie, while Marie follows Momo.

As we walk, I spot a charmingly decorated bedroom through a door on the opposite side of the hallway. Dozens of teddy bears and other stuffed animals line the walls, emphasizing Momo's childish nature.

"Jason," Phoebe says.

Hm? What is it?

"Momo... did you notice the size of her horns?"

I nod slowly. Yeah. They're pretty big. Why?

"Satyrs have different biologies from red-skinned demons. However, unless I'm wrong, their horn size should still be relative to their magical power."

I follow Phoebe's assumption to its logical conclusion. So, Momo is a Duke? Possibly even an Emperor?

"That's what I'm thinking."

I continue walking behind Marie but pull forward a bit to fall into step beside her.

"You mentioned something about, erm, the demons mistreating Satyrs. Can you tell me more? Did... did something happen to Momo?"

Marie gazes ahead, her eyes staring emptily at the space before her as she walks. Eventually, she shakes the fog from her vision and nods. "Momo is a succubus. Satyr succubi differ slightly from those of the red-skinned variety. For one thing, they don't have a tail. For another, they don't need to consume male essence to prolong their lives. Unlike a red-skinned succubus, who must consume male essence to achieve immortality, a Satyr succubus has exactly the opposite problem. She has too much vitality, and must thus discharge it upon the male of another species periodically. If she does not, she will, quite literally, explode."

Marie continues. "Further, the pleasure a red-skinned succubus can deliver to a male pales in comparison to that of a Satyr. Satyrs release euphoric pheromones far beyond those of red-skinned succubi once a male embraces them."

Marie turns her head slightly. She gazes at me from the corner of her eyes. "To put it plainly, the pleasure is more addictive and intoxicating than the strongest drugs you've ever tried or imagined. Most males turn violent. Their cravings grow stronger and stronger. Inevitably, they kill the Satyr in a lust-driven rage. Momo suffered unimaginably until, by chance, I rescued her."

I meet Marie's gaze. "How close did her 'embracer' come to committing the unforgivable?"

Marie shakes her head. "You don't want to know. He was a powerful Duke of the Original Demons. I killed him and used various methods to cover up his death. He can't hurt Momo anymore, but his past actions live on, tormenting her."

I clear my throat. "Erm. Did you ever consider erasing Momo's memories?"

"I did. However, in the end, I decided against it. Trauma makes people stronger."

Marie turns her attention away from me, and her gaze grows distant. "We've all suffered unimaginably, each in our own way. Losing those memories will only hurt us in the long run. He who tastes pain learns not to inflict it upon another."

I fall silent for a few moments.

"Yes. I suppose you're right."

When Marie and I reach the end of the hallway, a massive circular room, hundreds of feet in diameter, stretches out before us. Alcoves rest in its walls, each one shielded by thick panes of glass.

Within each alcove rests a single item. They range from anything including combs, forks, and swords, to a bucket, a beat-up training dummy, and a statue of a man with a pitchfork.

I scan the room, eyeballing all the random, assorted crap sitting inside the alcoves.

What the fuck am I looking at?

Momo stands in the middle of the room. Before her, a computer control panel sticks out of the floor. She taps several buttons, then turns to look at Marie and I. "M-miss Becker! I'm ready! Which one do you want first?"

Marie looks at me, then gestures to the dozens of alcoves hidden in the walls.

"This room is the culmination of all my efforts. Welcome, Jason, to the Heroic Treasury."

I frown. "Heroic Treasury? What do you mean?"

"Don't you understand? Shouldn't you know about heroic artifacts already?"

My heart skips a beat. "Heroic Artifacts? Wait, are you telling me that every object in this chamber is a legendary relic?!"

Having learned about them from Solomon a few years ago, my mind explodes with memories of his lessons.

When a Hero dies, their soul will enter whatever their most prized and beloved object might be. Joan of Arc entered the Sword from Heaven. King Arthur entered Excalibur, and so on.

However, not all heroes were created equal. Some heroes lived lives of mediocrity. Some used their powers for selfish desires. One hero, Dracula, used his magical abilities for the forces of evil.

While Camael bequeathed several deity-level weapons and objects of power upon certain heroes; others often ended up binding their souls to common everyday objects. If an unremarkable hero had a favorite spoon, when they died, they might end up trapped inside that spoon for all eternity.

My gaze falls upon a beaten-up, rusty old bucket not far from the room's entrance. It sits within its glass enclosure like a beaten, battered man. Sad. Decrepit. A tale of a beggar who lived and died for nothing.

I'm tempted to ask Marie about the bucket. What sad excuse for a hero would end up inside of such an object? Will that be my fate, someday? Will I perhaps meet an untimely death and live the rest of eternity trapped inside a blade of grass?

I turn to look at Marie. Her face has once again morphed into a neutral, unassuming expression, giving me no hints as to where to start.

"I don't know. Do you have any recommendations?"

Marie shrugs. "I cannot speak to any of the heroes trapped within these artifacts. My cybernetic brain is incapable of interfacing with them. I only know these are all heroic objects by the energy they emit. Momo cannot speak with them either, given the deadliness of holy energy toward demons and Satyrs."

I sigh. "Is that why you want me? You need to find out who each of these Heroes are?"

Marie smiles. "I've given you a lot of information, Jason. Surely, you can perform one small favor for me. I'm not asking for much."

I sweep my gaze around the room, absorbing the view of more than two hundred different assorted objects. "Uh. Well, okay then... but this is going to take a while."

This is Momo's artwork!

Part 191: Family Ties

Momo manipulates the control panel placed in the center of the Heroic Artifact Vault. A series of loud whirrs and clicks echoes throughout the chamber. Ten seconds later, one of the glass covers to my immediate right lifts open, revealing a plain metal fork. The object looks so bland and uninteresting that I can do nothing but stare in disbelief as a robotic claw lowers from the ceiling, plucks the artifact from its resting place, and brings it over to me.

Marie observes with her hands folded behind her back, her face having already returned to its placid, expressionless state. Her body language gives nothing away as she watches me pluck the fork from the robotic claw's grasp.

"Do you sense anything?" Marie asks.

I hold the fork with my thumb, index, and middle fingers. After spinning it around to get a good look at every angle, I shrug. "Looks like a normal fork to me. The design is kinda boring. Other than that, I can't detect anything special about it."

Marie frowns. She glances at the Satyr in the center of the room. "Momo, run a scan for holy energy on this artifact."

I force myself not to roll my eyes when Marie calls the fucking fork an 'artifact,' but the motion proves hard to resist.

Marie notices my eye-rolling. "Jason, don't be a child. I've had these artifacts in my possession for eons. Some heroes wielded mighty weapons and armor gifted to them by the Archangels, while others died penniless and nameless, having never left a mark on the world. Nevertheless, they might grant me information on Earth's history if I can connect with them. No matter how insignificant the hero, they should all have something I need."

I sigh. "Yeah. Solomon told me once about the different qualities of heroes. It's just... this is a fork, Marie. If heroes attached to their most prized possession upon death, how weak and pathetic was the one who possessed this?"

"You're surprisingly judgmental," Marie mutters. "What have you accomplished so far compared to the other legendary heroes of yore? Some heroes were born with useless abilities. I know of one girl whose only power was the ability to change the wind's direction. Every time she did so, she would fall unconscious. She lived her life as a peasant and accomplished nothing. Few heroes possessed abilities as mighty as Wordsmithing. Consider yourself lucky."

Marie's speech causes a sense of shame to wash over me.

The head scientist is right. I'm acting stuck-up for no reason. I don't know what sorts of lives these heroes led. I don't know anything about them.

I lower my gaze and fall silent. After a moment, Momo speaks up. "The holy energy within that artifact is faint, but it's still there!"

"Just as I thought," Marie says, nodding slowly. "Perhaps the soul trapped within has withered and decayed over time. Let's try another."

Marie holds out her hand to me. It takes me a moment to understand what she wants. When I do, I sheepishly hand the fork over to her.

Marie accepts the fork. She stares at it for a moment, turning it around as if to admire its fine craftsmanship. In her eyes, the plain piece of flatware becomes a slab of gold, incalculably valuable.

It suddenly occurs to me just how much she treasures these artifacts. Each one must have taken her a lot of effort to acquire. Despite the trouble she went to, they've done nothing but sit in her vault for 100,000 years.

I understand at least a little bit why Marie wants my help. She probably spent centuries, if not millennia, gathering these artifacts. Perhaps she wants to use the heroes trapped within to fulfill some grand ambition. Perhaps she's plotting to exact revenge on the Volgrim for destroying Earth.

I silently exhale a long, slow breath.

I left my cryopod six years ago. Almost immediately, I began destabilizing the Labyrinth without having any idea what the political situation was. Marie wants me to stop what I'm doing, but I don't know if I should. She has a point. Marie was playing the long-game, so maybe I should allow her to do as she pleases.

Marie gestures to Momo. "Bring me the next artifact."

"Y-yes, Miss Becker."

Momo activates the vault's systems once again. This time, she plucks out a small, brass necklace from the next alcove. The mechanical claw picks the locket up with surprisingly deft fingers, brings it over, and places it in my grasp.

I focus my mind and try to examine the locket. However, after a minute of concentrating, nothing happens.

"I don't sense anything," I say. "It's the same as that fork."

"Hmm..."

Marie grumbles to herself. She looks toward Momo, but her gaze turns vacant as she contemplates several ideas.

"Jason," Phoebe says. My mind-wife appears in my vision and gestures toward the locket. "Why not use your Wordsmithing? Maybe you can reawaken the artifact's soul? They might be asleep or comatose. Remember Solomon? He died, but you somehow brought him back to life within his Crown."

Slowly, I nod. True. That was an accident, but I might be able to replicate the effect.

With a shrug, I aim my mind at the locket.

"Awaken."

Marie glances at me questioningly, but I ignore her.

To my astonishment, the tiny brass locket begins to glow! A faint, blueish hue wraps around the heart-shaped pendant, then fades away.

I stare at it a moment longer, only for Phoebe to yelp in surprise. "What the- how did you get in here?!"

My heart skips a beat. A shadowy figure appears beside Phoebe. She quickly jumps away and draws her sword (where in the heck did she get a sword?), then aims it toward the potential enemy.

Before she can lunge forward, the shadow wrapping around the intruder disappears.

A young girl, perhaps ten years old, takes its place. Her dirty blonde hair and bright blue eyes clash with her filthy, disheveled appearance. Her clothing is barely anything but rags. Her ribs stick out, and her cheeks appear gaunt. With a single glance, I can tell the little girl has never had a good meal in all her life.

The moment the girl appears, her eyes sweep toward Phoebe's sword.

[Aahh!!]

She yelps in fright and jumps backward, only to trip over her feet. Terror appears on the child's face as she pushes herself across the ground and away from Phoebe.

[No hurt! Me didn't steal!]

The girl opens her mouth to speak, but each time she does, only faint impressions of her words appear in my mind. Her language isn't English, though what it actually is evades my grasp. It's only due to my prolonged contact with Solomon's Crown that I can understand the intent behind her words.

Phoebe's eyes light up as she recognizes the child's dirty, beggar-like appearance. My mind-wife quickly sheathes her sword and drops to her knees. "I'm sorry, child! You startled me! There's no need to be afraid. I won't hurt you."

Phoebe lowers to the little girl's level, making herself appear as small and non-threatening as possible.

The little girl trembles uncontrollably as she evaluates Phoebe. Her eyes shine with the gaze of a person who has witnessed the worst horrors the world has to offer. I can immediately tell that the suffering she's endured stands several echelons above anything I've faced.

Slowly, the child nods.

[No cut me?]

Phoebe shakes her head. "No, little one. I won't hurt you. What is your name?"

[Name?]

The little girl bites her lip. She lowers her eyes and stares at the ground. A look of concentration passes over her face as she tries to pull back the identifying sound people once used when speaking to her.

After a moment, she shakes her head.

[No remember...]

"That's alright. I'm Phoebe! I have a daughter, just a few years younger than you. Her name is Daisy."

[Uh, huh...]

The little girl nods along to Phoebe's words. However, her eyes darken with the look of an antelope evaluating a vicious cheetah. She doesn't trust Phoebe at all.

"Um, how about this? You don't remember your name. How about I give you one? Maybe something like... like..."

Phoebe struggles to come up with a name. Out loud, I blurt out the first one that comes to my mind. "Shana?"

Marie speaks, startling me. "Shana? Is that the name of the Hero within that locket?"

I blink and turn to look at the cyborg. A look of fervor worms its way onto her face. She looks at me with excitement, waiting to see what I have to say.

"I'm not sure," I reply. "I'm currently speaking to the hero within this locket. However... she's just a little girl, not even ten years old. I don't know much about her, yet."

Marie nods. "Yes, yes, good. Take your time. Find out whatever you can."

Having steeled myself for some ridiculous demand, I find her patience surprising.

I turn my thoughts inward. There, Phoebe continues to chat with the little girl. "Shana! How about it? Do you like that name?"

The little girl neither nods nor shakes her head.

[That name fine...]

She doesn't appear thrilled, but she doesn't seem to hate it, either.

[Where am I? What happened?]

Phoebe and I exchange glances.

This time, I speak to Shana, using my thoughts.

Hello, Shana. My name is Jason. I'm Phoebe's husb-

[Aaaah!!]

Shana cries out in fear again. She jerks her head around as if to search for the one who is speaking.

I blink in surprise.

Uh, Phoebe... why does she look so surprised?

Phoebe's face scrunches into an oops expression. "Ah, I guess you don't know this, Jason, but only I can hear your voice and see through your eyes. Shana can't see the world outside the Mind Realm like I can. You're just a disembodied voice to her."

My heart skips a beat. Wait, what's this about a Mind Realm? You didn't mention it before.

Phoebe shrugs. "I thought you knew. There's a whole world within your mind. It appears to be made up of my memories and yours all jammed together."

I rub my face. I see. Alright, well, just explain it to me later. For now, let's focus on talking to Shana. I don't want to scare her. Try feeding her. She looks like she hasn't eaten even once in her life.

"Okay."

Phoebe walks over to Shana. The little girl starts to scooch away on her butt, but Phoebe quickly reaches around to touch her back. "I'm sorry. My husband is a little slow, sometimes. He's not the best with children. Are you hungry? I could get you some food."

[Food?]

Shana's stomach growls like a wild animal. She quickly clutches it, and some of the hesitation and fear disappears from her eyes.

[Give food. Very hungry.]

"Follow me," Phoebe says, smiling.

I watch without saying a word. Phoebe helps Shana to her feet. The two of them start walking toward an unknown destination. Phoebe walks calmly and with purpose, while Shana staggers along, barely able to keep up. Her legs appear as thin as sticks.

However, the more I watch, the more confused I grow. Neither my wife nor Shana move from their original starting spots. Instead, their feet glide on the ground without their body positions changing. Phoebe reaches her hand out to twist a knob, almost as if opening a door. However, the world around her still appears as a pitch-black void to me.

The Mind Realm.

Phoebe mentioned the term casually, but the realization that such a place might exist in my head and I never knew unnerves me. What is it? How does it work? Why can Phoebe see it but not me?

"Jason?" Marie asks, pulling me out of my thoughts. "What's happening? You haven't said a word."

"Sorry," I reply. "I'm speaking to Shana telepathically. She can hear my thoughts."

"Ah, I see. What is Shana like? What are her powers?"

I shrug. "Not a clue. I'm still getting to know her."

I glance to my right, at an empty spot on the floor.

"Chair."

A luxurious loveseat with ample padding materializes a short distance away. I settle into it with a sigh.

"Ahh..."

Marie raises an eyebrow. "What are you doing?"

"Sitting. I think my conversation with Shana might take a while. Do you want me to get to know her better or not?"

Marie nods. "I do. Very well, make yourself comfortable. Would you like anything to eat? Biological organisms require sustenance, after all."

"No, don't bother. I can Wordsmith food if I'm hungry."

Marie nods. "Alright. I'll chat with Momo for a while. Let me know when you find anything interesting."

I nod. "You got it."

Marie returns the nod. She walks away from me to the middle of the room and starts talking to Momo in a hushed voice. Momo shoots me several quizzical glances, then nods along to Marie's words. At some point, she whispers something, and my mediocre lip-reading skills barely manage to make out the words, 'inferior mental capacity.'

Bloody hell, Marie. What are you telling Momo? Don't give her the wrong idea.

I resume observing Phoebe and Shana. They sit at an invisible table and raise invisible silverware to their mouths. I can't see what food they're eating, which slightly bothers me.

Whatever the Mind Realm is, it's in my head, dammit. I should be able to see it!

After thinking for a minute, I speak a word of power. "Reveal."

My thought takes shape and immediately alters reality. In the blink of an eye, a black curtain disappears from my mind, exposing a modern-era hotel room straight out of the year I entered my Cryopod. Phoebe and Shana dip their spoons into ancient-looking clay bowls, each of which looks like someone found them at an antique shop for half a dollar.

Shana continues to stare at Phoebe with a hint of hesitation. However, every bite of tomato soup softens her expression more and more. She greedily gulps the red liquid, causing it to spill down her chin. Phoebe laughs and dabs the mess away with a handkerchief. "Goodness! You must be starving, little one. Why don't I help you take a bath and get some new clothes after this? Those rags look dreadful."

Shana finishes off her soup and sets the bowl down. A guilty expression washes over her face.

[Can... have more? Still hungry.]

Phoebe finishes her soup and smiles. "Certainly. You may have as much as you like. The worst that will happen is Jason will get a little sleepy."

I frown. What do you mean I'll get a little sleepy?

Shana's eyes widen in panic. She yelps and ducks under the table, frightened by my voice.

Phoebe sighs. "Jason... please refrain from talking for a while. Shana isn't accustomed to the Mind Realm yet."

Neither am I, I reply. Why did you say I would become sleepy?

Phoebe glances at Shana and shrugs. "Because whenever I perform certain tasks or do certain things, it consumes a little of your energy."

It does?

"Yep."

How do you know? You haven't even been in my head for a day, yet.

"I just... do," Phoebe mutters. "When I arrived here, I knew the rules. It's not that hard to understand. How do you not know these things? Didn't you wear Solomon's Crown for six years?"

Yeah, but he never mentioned anything about a Mind Realm. Eh, whatever. Tell me more about it later. I'll stay quiet for now.

Shana continues to hide under the table. However, the more I talk, the less frightened she becomes. Eventually, she peeps out to stare at the sky in wonder.

[Who that?]

"My husband, Jason," Phoebe replies. She chuckles into her palm. "He's a nice man. Uh... let's just say that he lives all around us. I don't know how else to explain it."

Shana nods. She slowly crawls out from under the table and tightly clutches Phoebe's jacket.

[He not cut me?]

Phoebe continues to smile, but a flash of uncertainty appears in her eyes. "No... Jason won't cut you. That's the second time you've mentioned 'cutting,' though. Did someone hurt you, Shana?"

Shana nods. Her big, blue eyes flutter as she avoids Phoebe's gaze.

[Bad man. He cut me. I bleed very much.]

"Where did he hurt you?" Phoebe asks, her smile disappearing entirely.

Shana squeezes Phoebe's shirt even more tightly than before.

[Everywhere.]

Shana avoids Phoebe's gaze. Eventually, Phoebe pries her hands away. She spins Shana around to examine her back.

"Jason. Do me a favor. Don't look."

I nod. Alright.

I try to turn my mind away from Phoebe and Shana. My gaze falls on Marie and Momo as they discuss something in hushed whispers, but I can't stop myself from seeing inside of my head.

Phoebe slowly pulls down Shana's ragged shirt, revealing her pale white shoulders. Immediately, dozens of scars reveal themselves.

Phoebe pulls the little girl's shirt a little lower, exposing her back. The scars rapidly become ever more gruesome. They crisscross to form patterns and symbols.

Whoever cut Shana... they did it for fun. They enjoyed it.

Phoebe glides her finger across Shana's back, causing the little girl to shiver. "Does it hurt?"

Shana stays silent for a moment.

[Yes.]

"I see."

Phoebe pulls Shana's raggedy shirt back up. Tears form in her eyes as she begins imagining what sort of sick, horrible monster would have done such awful things to a little girl.

"I'm sorry..." Phoebe whispers. "You didn't deserve to be hurt. You're a good girl."

[No. Me bad. Me steal food. Get punished.]

"This isn't punishment..." Phoebe replies. "It's... it's..."

My wife trails off her words, leaving the implication to hang in the air.

She turns Shana around, leans forward, and gently wraps her arms around the emaciated child's frame. Shana doesn't return the gesture. Instead, she rests her chin on Phoebe's shoulder and stares at the wall blankly.

[Why arm-touch me?]

"It's... it's called a hug..." Phoebe says, her voice softening. "Good girls deserve hugs."

[Why you shake?]

It takes me a moment to understand Shana's question. I abruptly realize that Phoebe is barely keeping herself together. Her body trembles as she tries to suppress several choked sobs.

"It's... it's nothing. I'm just glad to hug you..."

* * *

Several minutes pass. Phoebe continues to hug Shana, and eventually, Shana mimics her movements. She hugs Phoebe back.

[No need cry. You not cut. Only me.]

"I know... I know..." Phoebe replies, as tears stream down her face. "I'm a mess. I-I just hate it when bad people hurt children. It's not right. It's not right at all..."

As Phoebe speaks, her words remind me of the story she told me six years ago. She once saved the life of a little demon girl, as well as many other demonesses.

Phoebe loves children. She tries to be strict with Daisy, but I know that when I'm not around, she spoils Daisy even more rotten than I do.

It takes a while for Phoebe to calm down. Eventually, she releases Shana and rubs the tears from her eyes. Shana timidly smiles at Phoebe, revealing just a hint of her cracked, chipped teeth.

[You done cry?]

"Yes," Phoebe says, forcing a smile. "Shana, I'll take good care of you, alright? I won't let anyone hurt you ever again. Promise."

She starts chatting with Shana about banal and mundane facets of life. Shana's favorite color, her life before she died, and many other things.

The one fact I quickly come to realize is that Shana's memory is beyond slipshod. Whenever Phoebe questions her, Shana only manages to dig up the most surface-level details about her life. Even worse, she doesn't remember dying. Shana fell asleep in a cold alley one night and woke up in an empty, barren meadow. There, she spent 100,000 years sitting around, doing nothing.

No wonder Shana doesn't remember anything. Her memories have deteriorated over time. The only thing she does remember is whatever that horrible man did who mutilated her, and she isn't keen to talk about it.

For a moment, I consider restoring her memories with Wordsmithing. I quickly shake that thought out of my head when I realize all the trauma it might inflict on Shana.

I raise my eyes to look at Marie. "Alright. I'm done talking to Shana."

Marie glides over to me. A spark of interest appears in her eyes. She repeats her questions from earlier.

"What is Shana like? What are her powers?"

"She's a timid child," I say. "What I've gathered is that she spent 100,000 years in limbo. She was alive and conscious for all of that time and grew used to the crushing loneliness of having nobody to talk to. During Shana's life, before she died, there was a man who tortured her for the sake of his sick, twisted desires. She doesn't like to talk about him, and she still bears scars from whatever he did."

"Mmm," Marie grunts. "How old is she? Physically speaking, I mean."

"She looks about ten years old."

"Do you know what year she lived in, as well as what location?"

I frown. "Why do you need to know?"

Marie sighs. "Jason, I understand that you don't trust me. Frankly, I don't trust you, either. However, this information will be essential in my quest to reconstruct the full timeline of historical heroes. I'll know which heroes lived in what era, what they accomplished, what their powers were, and so on. Don't you understand? Knowing our history can help us avoid pitfalls in the future."

Slowly, I nod along to Marie's words. They sound truthful, but at the same time, it also seems like she might be holding things back from me. I'm just not sure what.

"Give me a second."

I transmit Marie's questions to Phoebe and Shana. By now, Shana has grown used to my strange, disembodied voice. She only flinches when I speak unexpectedly, but she doesn't try to hide under tables or behind Phoebe anymore.

After receiving her answer, I frown. "Shana doesn't know what year she lived in. My best guess for her homeland is probably somewhere in western Europe. Maybe somewhere after 1000 AD?"

"I see," Marie says. "Is she French? German? English?"

"I don't know."

Marie groans. "A lot of help you are."

Marie continues asking questions, and I relay them to Phoebe. Eventually, Marie sighs. She shrugs her shoulders in a gesture of defeat. "Very well. Return the locket, and we can move onto the next artifact."

I nod. "Alright."

I transmit my thoughts to Phoebe. Marie wants to move onto the next-

"I know," Phoebe says. She smiles at the little girl held in her arms. "I need to go for a while, Shana. We'll see each other in the future, okay?"

Shana's cheerful expression darkens. Immediately, a hint of panic appears in her eyes.

[No! No! No want go! Why leave? Me alone! Too scary!]

Phoebe brushes her fingers through Shana's hair. "It's only for a little while-"

[Big empty field! Chest hurt. Head hurt! No want be alone!]

Tears well up in Shana's eyes. She throws herself against Phoebe's chest and begins to sob.

[Me be good! Don't leave! Me good girl!]

Phoebe stares, dumbstruck, at the helpless little girl weeping against her chest. Eventually, she raises her eyes to look at me. "Um... Jason..."

I nod. Don't worry, I understand. We can't leave Shana all by herself. She's suffered enough.

I rise from my seat and turn to Marie. "I hate to ask you for a favor... but Shana is depressed. My w-, err, I mean, I can't bring myself to leave her inside the locket. Would you mind if I kept it for a while? Shana is lonely. She doesn't want me to leave her alone. I'm worried her mind will break if I do."

Marie frowns. "That wasn't part of our agreement. These heroic artifacts are one of a kind. They're my most precious possessions."

"Right, I get that. Shana is just a little girl, though. She doesn't have any powers. I can't just leave her to rot in silence and solitude for an eternity."

Marie waves her hand. "Ugh. Who cares? Biological sentiments disgust me. She's an errant soul, Jason. Shana has no mass, no body to speak of. You can easily heal her physical and mental wounds with your Wordsmithing. Stop making excuses, and hand me the locket. We have eighty-seven prime-level artifacts and one-hundred-sixty sub-par relics to examine today."

I stare in disbelief at Marie. "No! I'm not going to let this child suffer! Maybe you've forgotten what it means to be human, but I'm not going to let a child suffer all so you can perform more experiments. I'm keeping this locket, and that's final."

Marie stares at me. A look of anger appears in her eyes. However, she stuffs it down and instead tugs on a few strands of hair.

"Very well. But only this time. Ask for even one more artifact, and you'll find how short-lived my generosity can be."

I nod. However, internally, I think, why did Marie give in so easily? Was it only because I stood up for myself?

Phoebe pipes up. "No, you're right. Marie accepted your request far too easily. She treasures these artifacts more than her own life. She didn't agree to let Shana stay out of obligation toward you, but because of some ulterior motive."

I agree.

Phoebe and I share our misgivings. However, in the end, since Marie agreed to let us keep Shana's locket, we can't complain.

* * *

The next thing Marie procures from her windowed alcoves is a gigantic executioner's axe. The monstrous weapon stands nearly as tall as me, with a head as wide as mine. I rub my finger along its edge, only to find myself surprised by its sharpness.

"I polished and sharpened it," Marie explains. "I usually try to maintain the original appearance of any heroic artifacts I find, but this axe was caked in several-hundred-year-old blood when I first located it. I won't allow contaminants into my laboratories."

Marie hands the axe to me. As she does, I notice a hint of hesitation in her movements.

Will Jason attempt to steal this artifact as well? Marie's gaze implies.

I ignore her thoughts. Instead, I focus my mind on the weapon and try to probe it. Much like Shana's artifact, I don't detect even a trace of heroic energy.

"Awaken."

I speak a word of power and allow my magic to enter the weapon's handle.

After a few seconds, a similar sensation as the one from earlier appears in my mind. A shadowy figure materializes a short distance from Phoebe and Shana. A giant, lumbering shell of a man comes into focus.

Blood coats the man's body. His bare chest ripples with muscle, while his eyes pulse with power. Much like Shana, his blond hair and blue eyes reveal his identity as a hero, but his aura and body language tell a sinister tale of bloodshed and violence.

Phoebe's breath catches as she eyes the mountain of a man standing before her. Compared to my seven-foot-height, the man isn't quite as tall as me, but in the context of historical human height, he's a giant among men.

"W-who are you?" Phoebe asks, her voice slightly wavering.

The man stares forward without speaking. He gazes over the top of Phoebe's head, as if trying to peer into the furthest reaches of space and time. Eventually, he rubs his eyes and lowers his gaze to meet my wife's.

[I am Lorent.]

Unlike Momo, Lorent's words are far crisper and easier to understand. I immediately understand not only his sentence structure and syntax, but also the subtle inflections of his speech, making me wonder what language he speaks for me to understand him so easily.

"Lorent? I'm Phoebe. This child here is Shana. Uhm... how are you feeling right now?"

Lorent eyes my wife casually, as if she's nothing more than a slight irritation to his eyes.

[What have you done to my spirit?]

Lorent ignores Phoebe's question and instead asks one of his own. Phoebe stares at him for a moment, trying to ascertain what he means.

"Your... spirit? I don't follow. What are you referring to?"

Lorent crosses his arms. His slow, laborious movement startles Shana, causing her to hide behind Phoebe.

[My spirit. I sat alone for eternity. I rested my eyes. I dreamt of my wife and children. I envisioned the world before my death. Now my spirit is gone. I stand in an unfamiliar place, somewhere far from where I died.]

Lorent gestures in a wide arc toward the unfamiliar scenery surrounding him.

[Are you not the Creator, the one who has come to exact punishment for my crimes? Have you not come to take me to Sheol?]

Slowly, Phoebe shakes her head. "No... I haven't. I'm sorry, Sir Lorent. This must all be confusing for you. Will you allow me to explain your current situation?"

Lorent nods. His eyes flutter as he bows his head. [Go on. I have nothing if not time to spare.]

Phoebe returns the gesture.

Several minutes pass.

My wife slowly pieces together a fantastical tale for Lorent. She explains the Heroic Aura, the way artifacts work, and the reason he ended up trapped inside a 'spirit.' Lorent says nothing. He merely listens to her words, slowly blinking every so often to digest this new information.

When Phoebe concludes, the mountain of a man closes his eyes. An aura of melancholy surrounds him.

[It... it seems I lived a life of ignorance. I was the King's Executioner. I beheaded those he deemed sinners and slaughtered those who spoke against him. When the Church came for my family in the night, I accepted my fate. I knew I would travel to Hell, but I never once wavered in my convictions.]

Lorent sighs.

[Now, you are telling me that my eternal loneliness was not intended as a punishment for my misdeeds, but a reward? Someone intended for me to enjoy an eternity of solitude?]

Bitterness appears on Lorent's countenance.

[What foolishness. If only I had died with my wife, I might have found solace in eternal sleep. Instead, enough time passed that I slowly began to forget her face, as well as those belonging to anyone else I once knew. Now, all that remains is an empty husk, a shell of my former self. I am nothing. I am no-one.]

Lorent slumps backward. He leans against the wall as his body begins to waver.

[I wish I had died.]

Phoebe stares expressionlessly at the muscular giant. Hesitation appears in her eyes, as if she wants to do something, but can't bring herself to do it.

I transmit my voice to her. Go ahead. Embrace him. I won't mind.

My voice booms throughout my Mind Realm. Lorent raises his head and stares at the sky. [Hm? Who was that?]

Phoebe opens her mouth to speak, but pauses for a split-second.

A spark appears in her eyes.

"Ah, do you remember when I mentioned my husband?"

Lorent nods. [Yes.]

"That was him. He is the Creator of this world."

Lorent's cloudy expression dissipates. He glances at Phoebe with a look of disbelief. [The Creator?]

"Yes. I know you cannot remember your wife, nor your children. However, their memories still live within you. Answer my questions, and we can return that which you've lost."

Lorent pulls away from the wall. He stands up straight and gazes at Phoebe, a mixture of suspicion and awe etched into his forehead. [I... I can't believe... it's not possible!]

"It is," Phoebe says, matter-of-factly. "I never lie."

I raise an eyebrow, but say nothing.

Phoebe has certainly lied before, but whenever she does, she always ends up confessing to me out of embarrassment. Further, her lies are always tiny and insignificant.

Hell, even judging the words she just spoke, she barely fibbed. The Mind Realm is part of my brain. In essence, I am its creator. She merely twisted the truth slightly.

Finally, she said I could restore his memories, and she wasn't wrong about that, either. Wordsmithing is more than capable of such a trivial feat.

Lorent's breathing speeds up. Desire appears in his eyes as he drops to his knees and bows solemnly before Phoebe.

[Please, lady Phoebe. Ask anything of me. I will tell you all that I know.]

Phoebe smiles. "Alright. Let's start with where you lived before you died. Can you tell me about your home?"

Lorent nods. He raises his head to gaze into Phoebe's eyes.

[I lived in Camelot. As a retainer to the king, I sat atop the hierarchy of the political system.]

Phoebe's eyes widen. "C-Camelot? The king?! Surely you don't mean His Majesty, King Arthur?!"

Phoebe isn't the only one surprised by Lorent's words. Even I find myself taken aback by the revelation.

After all, there can only be one Hero alive, ever. How could Arthur and Lorent both be heroes simultaneously? Marie will be ecstatic when she finds out about this revelation.

However, just as my thoughts start to run wild, Lorent shakes his head. [No, I apologize. His Majesty, King Arthur Pendragon, perished shortly before my birth. I served under his son, King Mordred."

Phoebe's wide-eyed astonishment dissipates. "I... I see. My apologies. I didn't mean to react so strongly. However, I served as a Knight of the Round Table for a short time. I served His Majesty, Arthur Pendragon, directly. When I thought you might have possessed the Heroic Aura at the same time as him..."

[Say no more,] Lorent replies. [I apologize for being unclear. His Majesty, King Mordred, was not half the man his father was. Nevertheless, it was my responsibility to carry out his commands. Had I as righteous a leader as Sir Arthur, I might have died peacefully in my sleep.]

Phoebe swallows heavily. Her heart beats like a drum in her chest, but she quickly regains control of her conflicted emotions.

"It sounds like Mordred was inferior to his father. Can you tell me more about his reign? I should like to find out what happened to the kingdom after... after my disappearance."

Lorent nods. [As you command, my lady.]

He rises to his feet, but maintains a respectful tone. As Lorent speaks, his loyalty toward Phoebe deepens. Having learned of her lineage as a Knight of the Round, as well as her close ties to King Arthur himself, Lorent finds himself struggling to recall every possible detail he can think of.

[Ah... I am sorry, lady Phoebe. I do not remember King Mordred's family members, nor the denizens of his court. Time has addled my memories...]

Phoebe shakes her head. "No, you've done more than enough to help me. Thank you, Sir Lorent. As promised, I will have the Creator restore your memories. Consider it a small reward for millennia of diligence. I am so, so sorry for your losses."

Lorent shakes his head. [If living in loneliness could bring me before a goddess as beautiful as you, I would do it a thousand times more. I thank the Creator that I was finally able to redeem myself for my past sins.]

I try not to get too huffy about Lorent complimenting my wife's looks. After all, he's not wrong. Phoebe is hotter than hell.

"Jason," Phoebe says. "Restore Sir Lorent's memories."

I nod. "Memory."

After a few moments, my magical power suddenly plummets. A spell rushes into my mind and flies at Sir Lorent. The instant it impacts him, the hulking mountain of muscle rolls his eyes up into his head and faints. He stumbles forward and collapses, but Phoebe manages to catch him in time.

"Augh! Oof!"

Phoebe stumbles awkwardly as she wraps her arms around Lorent. With great exertion, she gently lowers him to the floor.

"Heavens! I don't have the same strength I did before entering your Mind Realm. My spiritual body isn't nearly as robust as my physical one was."

I nod. "No problem. Let me fix that. Strength. Enhance. Vitality. Longevity. Perception. Speed."

Multiple words of power travel into my Mind Realm, boosting Phoebe's body to previously unseen levels. Her tightly-fitting shirt splits open at the sleeves as her biceps bulge with strength. Her eyes flash with wisdom, and power flows through her blood like never before.

"Huu..."

Phoebe releases a terse breath and flexes her arms. She reaches down and picks up Lorent by grabbing his shirt with one hand. Then, she lifts him up and sets him on the table.

Satisfied, Phoebe pats her muscles. "Much better."

I stare at the sweat dripping down her forehead onto her chest. Yeah. Much better, indeed.

"Oh, you."

It takes a few minutes, but eventually, Lorent awakens. Unlike before, his melancholic aura disappears immediately.

He sits up and swivels his gaze around the table. Eventually, he turns to look at Phoebe.

[By the Creator. I remember everything. I remember what the priest told me!]

Lorent swings his legs off the table, jumps off, and grabs Phoebe's shoulders. He gazes into her eyes with the intensity of a tiger.

[Lady Phoebe! I can't believe it's really you!]

Phoebe blinks in confusion. "Huh? What do you mean?"

Lorent's expression turns giddy, resembling a child who has received the best Christmas present ever. [You don't know me? Of course, you don't. Where are my manners?! My name... it's Lorent Berthold. My father was Sir Ancelan Berthold, and his father, Sir Gwyllem Berthold!]

This time, Phoebe's eyes ignite with ferocious flames. "Sir Gwyllem Berthold?! But... but he was my father!"

[That's right. I'm your brother Ancelan's son... your nephew!]

Hundreds of reactions wash across Phoebe's face. Surprise, delight, joy, disbelief, and countless others mix and match to create a beautiful rainbow of emotions I could gaze at all day. In that moment, I fall even more deeply in love with my wife than ever before.

"You are my nephew?! That's amazing! That's incredible!!"

Phoebe leaps into Lorent's arms. She hugs him tightly, nearly shattering his spine in the process.

"My nephew! I didn't even know I had one! Oh, heavens, today is a wonderful day! What luck that we should meet here, a hundred thousand years in the future!"

Lorent hides his agony with surprising grace and subtlety. He grits his teeth and forces a huge smile before wrapping his arms around Phoebe as well.

[Oh, my precious aunt. If only you knew the stories I've heard about you! Had my memory not been so poor, I might have recognized your visage from the paintings of the court! King Arthur considered you his favorite Knight of the Round.]

Phoebe releases Lorent. Her eyes glisten with joyful tears. "Please, nephew... tell me more! Tell me what happened after my disappearance!"

Lorent rubs his aching back. However, he grins from ear to ear.

[For you, I'll do anything.]

Part 192: Mad Madam Mildred

Sir Lorent pats Shana's head affectionately. Despite his gruesome, bloodstained chest, Shana doesn't look at him with any fear, given his relation to her surrogate mother, Phoebe.

[Yes,] Lorent says, answering one of Phoebe's most recent questions. [His Majesty died in battle. However, he did not perish to a demon's blade, but the discharge of his overwhelming mana. In a final attempt to eradicate Satan the Devil, King Arthur fired a blast of holy magic far stronger than anything he had unleashed in the past. The resulting energy tore his body apart, killing him instantly.]

Phoebe rubs her eyes as she tries to suppress her tears. "His Majesty died a most magnificent death. As expected of the Hero King, he would give his very soul if it meant he could protect his people."

Lorent nods sagely. He closes his eyes and exhales deeply.

[Haah... if only I had known His Majesty, I might have lived a more fulfilling life. Instead, I worked as a butcher for his son, the corrupt King Mordred. Some Hero I was. He used my powers to cow his political opponents into submission. Had they known what my power entailed, or had the reputation of a Hero not preceded me... Mordred might not have made it past his eighteenth birthday.]

Phoebe dabs at her eyes. "What is your power, my nephew?"

Lorent chuckles. [Haha... it's quite underwhelming. I hardly dare name it a 'power' at all.]

Lorent motions with his hands. Suddenly, a paintbrush appears between his fingers. With another motion, an easel materializes before him.

[My power allows me to summon objects from artwork.]

He begins sweeping the brush across the easel. As he does, Shana leans forward and stares at it with wide eyes.

[What this?] Shana asks. [You touch paper. Sword appear?]

Lorent continues drawing, revealing a crude painting of a broadsword. After finishing its basic shape, he touches his finger to the painting. A copy of the sword leaps off the paper and transforms into a razor-sharp weapon. It clatters to the ground with a metallic twang, and Lorent immediately leans over to pick it up.

[That's right. Have you never seen an artist's work, young one?]

Shana shakes her head. [No...]

[I see. If you'd like, I can teach you how to draw.]

Shana's eyes light up with excitement. [Yes! Me want artist!]

Lorent turns his attention to Phoebe. [As you can imagine, this worthless power only lets me summon weapons for others to wield. I can craft bowls, spoons, and other such things, but Mordred used my ability to create weapons en-masse.]

Phoebe stares at Lorent in disbelief. "But... but your ability is incredible! Can't you see how amazing it is?"

Lorent frowns. [I do not understand. Summoning weapons to butcher others is hardly a power worth praising.]

This time, I send my thoughts into the Mind Realm.

Phoebe is right. Your power might be second only to Wordsmithing. You can draw any object, and it will become a physical item. My power is technically more robust, but yours is only slightly inferior. The sword you drew lacked in detail, yet upon entering the physical realm, it instantly became an object of incredible craftsmanship.

Phoebe jumps in, adding to my point. "Jason's Wordsmithing allows him to do almost anything, provided he knows enough about the subject or his imagination can fill in the gaps. When you summoned that sword, weren't you picturing the weapon in your mind?"

Lorent nods. [I was. Unfortunately, my artistic merits are poor, and my creativity is lacking. A simple weapon proves no barrier to my mind, but whenever I try to create anything more complicated than a blade or a tool, I grow weary and fall asleep. It has always been this way.]

I nod. Don't underestimate yourself. With some effort, you could be an incredible asset for humanity's future.

Lorent shakes his head. [I am but an errant soul, trapped within an artifact. My future is empty. All I wish is to spend time with my long-lost aunt. She is the only family I have left in the world.]

My expression darkens.

Lorent's words send a pang of distress through the back of my mind. After all, I promised Marie that I wouldn't take any other artifacts from her. However, I can't leave Lorent behind. Doing so would break Phoebe's heart.

I raise my eyes to peer across the distance. Marie chats with Momo quietly, but the moment I move my head, she pulls away and strides over to me.

Ignoring pleasantries and other basic social norms, Marie immediately jumps into questioning me. "Well? What have you found?"

I sigh. "The hero inside this axe is named Sir Lorent. He was an executioner who served under King Mordred, son of King Arthur."

"Mordred!" Marie gasps, a look of surprise on her face. "Incredible! Barring the discovery of King Arthur's divine artifact, this Sir Lorent fellow is the next best outcome! I'll be able to excavate all manner of historical knowledge from him. What else did you find? What are his powers?"

My heart begins beating erratically. Already, I can see things turning out horribly for me.

I didn't expect Marie to get so excited after hearing the barest information regarding Lorent's life. If I tell her the truth about Lorent's incredible power, she won't allow me to keep his artifact. I'll have to separate him from Phoebe, forcefully.

Fuck!

What can I do? I'll have to lie.

"His heroic ability is fairly underwhelming," I say, keeping my words measured. "He's... a painter. He can use his heroic aura to paint stuff."

The half-truth keeps my conscience from overworking itself. After all, my words aren't a lie, but I am making sure not to give the cyborg too much information.

Marie frowns. "Painting, you say? Interesting. Based on the historical records I've obtained from that time, Sir Lorent strongly resembles the image of Mordred's Butcher. That man was known for slaughtering anyone toward whom he aimed his axe. He spared nobody; not the men, women, or even the children."

Marie smiles. "You've done well, Jason. Now, I want you to use your Wordsmithing. You need to create a projector, something capable of interfacing with Heroic artifacts. If I can't interrogate the heroes inside these artifacts, I won't be able to obtain the information I need."

I cock my head slightly. "Interrogate? These are human beings, Marie. They're people who often influenced human history for the better. We interrogate criminals, not Heroes, for Christ's sake."

Marie rolls her eyes. "I'm not going to use violent means to interrogate them, nor will I use the vast array of psychological torture methods at my disposal. However, I must obtain answers. You spoke of obtaining humanity's freedom, but such a task will be impossible without my help. All you've managed to do over the last six years is paint a target on your planet. Sooner or later, the Volgrim will come for the Tarus star system. When they do, will you feel regret over arguing with me over such a banal matter?"

I scowl in annoyance. "Yeah? What information are you so desperate to find, Marie? Any intelligence these Heroes have is 100,000 years out of date! What could they possibly have to offer you that will help in the fight against the Volgrim?"

Marie stares at me blankly for several moments. "Their heroic powers, for one. All I need is to find one Hero with an appropriately versatile ability, and I'll be able to expand my operations dramatically."

"What sort of power? I'm a Wordsmith. I'm standing right here. Solomon once said I might be the most powerful Hero who ever lived. Why do you need these errant souls if you have me? There's something you're not telling me, Marie."

Marie straightens her posture slightly. "Do not continue pressing me. My reasons are classified."

"Classified? By who? You?"

Marie places her hands on her hips. "That's right."

"So there is something you're hiding from me. What is it? Tell me."

* * *

Marie stares at me for several long, agonizing seconds. Our gazes meet one another's, and we size each other up. Half a minute of intense staring between a human and a machine ensues. Eventually, Marie relents.

"Fine. You leave me no choice. I'm looking for Excalibur, Jason. Not only Excalibur, but the Dominion Rod and several other legendary artifacts as well."

My heart skips a beat. "Excalibur? You mean King Arthur's heroic weapon?"

"That's right. I do not possess these legendary artifacts. That means they are, potentially, somewhere on Earth, buried where my drone sensors can't detect them."

I raise an eyebrow. "Potentially. What do you mean by that? Where else could they be?"

Marie raises her fist and spreads her index and middle fingers apart. "There are two possibilities. The first is that, during the Volgrim's surface-bombardment, they destroyed many heroic artifacts. The second is that those artifacts somehow ended up in space. Naturally, the latter is the possibility I find most worrisome."

Having gotten Marie to tell me her 'true' goal, I nod along and deliberate on her words.

"Do you think the Volgrim might have obtained Excalibur?"

"In my mind, the probability rests above sixty percent, yes."

"What other reason could there be for Excalibur to not be on Earth?"

Marie rubs her temple. "Excalibur is one of the mightiest artifacts Camael ever crafted; potentially the strongest of them all. Chances are if the Volgrim didn't seize it, and if the weapon endured the Volgrim's planet-glassing, it may have been launched into space and hurtled to the farthest reaches of the Void. I don't know. I have swept more than fifty parsecs over the past 100,000 years, yet never come close to locating the divine blade."

Marie narrows her eyes. "Do you understand now, Jason Hiro? Interro- ahem, conversing with these errant souls is essential to locating Camael's mightiest artifacts. If I can triangulate their last-known positional data, I can uncover their resting places."

I lean back in my chair and smile. "What if you find Excalibur, Marie? What are you going to do with it?"

"Excalibur is only one of my targets. Each artifact possesses incredible potential. For example, Excalibur will allow its wielder to unleash planet-destroying blasts of holy magic. What might surprise you is that such destructive potential is quite useless for me, given-"

"Given the neutron bombs you've been cooking," I reply, cutting Marie off before she can finish. "Right. What else can you use it for, then?"

"Excalibur's power is functionally unlimited," Marie replies. "Right now, I am limited by the radiation I can siphon from Earth's core, as well as the energy generated by Sol. With another source of power, I'll be able to scale up my base of operations to new heights. The Volgrim possess a thousand worlds in as many sectors. Their research facilities outnumber mine a million to one. I can't challenge them without Camael's artifacts."

Marie waggles her finger. "Most importantly, you can't help me find it. After all, your 'locate' ability doesn't work on inanimate objects. Isn't that right?"

I frown. "How the hell do you know that?"

"I've gathered plenty of intelligence on you over the last several years. Anything the demons know, I know. Kar is a good boy, too. He works with Hope, so I have obtained plenty of second-hand information from him as well. I hope you won't hate Kar for being mommy's little adviser."

"Ugh. Whatever. Let's get back to the original topic. Supposedly, you need Lorent's help in locating Excalibur. However, I don't think you do. After talking with Lorent, I, uh… well, I found out his full name is Lorent Berthold. He's a nephew to my wife, Phoebe Berthold. I don't mean to impose, but-"

Marie growls. "No! Absolutely not! Dammit, Jason, how many artifacts do you intend to steal from me, today? I need them! Locating Excalibur takes priority over some silly family values or your constant need to protect these errant souls. I let you keep the little girl, as she won't be of much use to me, but Sir Lorent can provide crucial clues in my quest to locate Excalibur!"

Phoebe's voice appears in my mind. "Here it comes. I knew Marie wouldn't give up without a fight. Be careful, Jason."

I continue to stare at Marie as she berates me for my impudence. "Marie, I understand that Lorent is an essential asset to your plans. However, he's a member of Phoebe's family. I won't let you turn her nephew into a guinea pig."

Marie metaphorically spews smoke from her ears. "Fucking hell, Wordsmith! You can't just stroll in here and seize all my artifacts! Do you have any idea the pains I went to, to dig them from the Earth's surface?! I need them!"

"I understand. However, I won't budge on this issue. I can return Sir Lorent's artifact to you at a later date. You've waited 100,000 years. What're another few years in the long run? I only want to give him some peace of mind. Perhaps he'll be more receptive to helping you once he experiences life outside of the crushing loneliness he's endured since his death, eh?"

Marie ceases her rambling. She glowers at me with hate-filled eyes for nearly a minute before whirling around and stomping toward Momo.

"Fine. Fine! Take all of my artifacts; why don't you? This one, that one! Take them all! What do I know about the galaxy compared to you, a man who has done little more beyond stirring up war and strife? You can't comprehend that which lurks at the edge of the Milky Way! You don't even know about the…"

Marie pauses mid-sentence.

I frown. "About the… what, Marie?"

Marie keeps her back to me. "Never mind. Let's move on. I have more artifacts for you to inspect. Continue telling me any details you find relevant."

"Oh, so now you're going to drop all of your demands? What happened? Did I ask the wrong question?"

Marie doesn't look at me. "Momo. Open alcove 4C and fetch its occupant."

"Marie-"

"This discussion is over," Marie says, shooting me a death glare. "I won't say anything else, so don't ask. You may keep Sir Lorent's artifact for now, but do not press your luck."

Without another word, Marie turns back to Momo and watches in silence as a glass alcove opens to reveal a beat-up white and silver music box. The tiny artifact, small enough to rest in my palm, hovers toward Marie under the stringy tendrils of a drone and plops into her grasp soundlessly.

Marie inspects the music box for a moment before turning around to walk over to me.

"Here. Take it."

The clearly annoyed cyborg plunks the music box into my palm and walks away, not bothering to say anything else.

Fine by me. I'm getting pretty tired of Marie's attitude. She's hiding something. I don't know what it is, nor why she thinks I shouldn't know... but I can hazard a guess. It must involve the Volgrim and her ultimate plan for overthrowing them. Marie must believe that I'm in her way, or else she would tell me this big, important secret.

With a sigh, I turn my attention toward the artifact in my hand. The music box is an old fashioned thing, dating back to well before the 1900's. Its design is somewhat bland, aside from an inked image of a lion head sitting atop its lid, half-rubbed-off.

I can only guess as to who its occupant will be.

However, before I have a chance to aim my mind at it, Phoebe, Lorent, and Shana all gasp in surprise.

"Ah! So many people?!"

I turn my attention inward to gaze upon my Mind Realm. There, I spot five shadowy figures appearing from the void.

Without any dramatic fanfare, their faces and bodies swiftly materialize, revealing two women and three men.

The first woman, a rather portly-looking Victorian lady in her fifties, laughs gaily. "Ah, hah-hah-hah! Why, look what we have here! The dregs of society have come knocking at my door! Braaaavo!"

Her Portliness crows into her hand, each laugh grating on me more than the previous ones. Her attitude and posture give her the appearance of a smug know-it-all. Immediately, I hate everything about her.

"Who are you?" Phoebe asks, swiveling her gaze at the various people who've emerged inside my mind. "Why are there five people inside your artifact?"

One of the newcomers, a man wearing a turban, opens his mouth to speak. However, before he can say a word, the obese woman leans forward and laughs again, her irritating voice driving me to the edge of madness.

"Hah-hah-hah! Oh, dear, how small your brain must be! Heroic Artifacts can only hold one soul, don't you know? Might those be marbles I hear rolling about in your noggin, or are you too much of a simpleton to recognize me, the glorious, beautiful, Mad Madam Mildred? Hah-hah-hah!"

Phoebe winces. "Mad Madam Mildred? I don't believe I've heard-"

"Haaah! Oh, darling, of cooourse you haven't! Those lips are always flapping to and fro, so what little can you say that I don't know?"

Madam Mildred begins strutting around like a peacock. Her gaudy blue dress, as well as the feathery boa wrapped around her neck, only adds to her nauseatingly annoying demeanor as her presence dominates the room.

"I am none other than the most brilliant, genius, intelligent person ever to roam the Earth! Oh, darling, look at how glazed your eyes become! You cannot begin to fathom the depths of my mind, the limits of my knowledge! I stand atop the precipice of Heroes, a legendary figure known only by those with the wit to seek out my name!"

I exhale deeply. "Oh, Jesus fucking Christ."

Madam Mildred presses her palm against her chest. "And who are you, but a little girl seeking the power of my precious babies, hmmmm? I know what you want, you silly little defiler! You intend to use our power in some violent blood-stained quest for revenge! But daaarling, our talents are not yours to consume!"

[Madam Mildred...] An Arabian man behind Her Portliness says, keeping his voice low. [...We can speak for ourselves.]

The Arabian man wears a turban and monk-robes, along with a scimitar that hangs at his side. His demeanor exudes authority, as he gives Mildred no opportunity to belittle him. He gazes down at Madam Mildred; his eyes tinged with a mixture of pride and deference. I can tell just by looking at him that he treats Mildred with the same respect as two kings of equal status might accord one another.

Mildred swivels on her high-heels to gaze at the dark-skinned, blonde-haired, blue-eyed Arab. "Oh, Kasim! Do not tease me! These mongrels want nothing more than to treat us like slaves. Us! The mightiest, most brilliant Heroes to have ever walked the Earth!"

Mildred guffaws. "Not to mention the fairest and most beautiful! Hah-hah-hah!"

Kasim sighs. [Madam Mildred, that may be so, but unless they display hostile intentions, we have no reason to show them disrespect. After all, this Mind Realm's owner is a Hero as well.]

Mildred pauses. She cocks her head slightly, then raises her eyes skyward. Suddenly, a shudder goes through my body as her gaze somehow meets mine!

"Hah-hah-hah! How silly of me! The Magnificent, Magnanimous, Mad Madam Mildred must be losing her touch! You there, the boy named Jason Hiro! How could I have overlooked you? That stunning gaze! That chiseled body! What say you to fornicating with this blessed temptress for a night, hmmmm?"

I swallow a load of bile. Pass.

Mildred turns away from my gaze and returns to strutting around like a peacock. "Oh, goodness, we've found a shy one! You'll come around eventually, my dear boy! All men do!"

Phoebe stares at Mildred like a hawk examining a field hare. Every bone in her body tenses up at the thought of Mildred 'taking' me for herself. "Jason is my husband. Watch your mouth, Mildred. I don't know who you are, but you've acted incredibly rude since your arrival. Why don't you tone the act down a few notches?"

Immediately, Mildred swivels on her heel to eyeball Phoebe, a look of surprise in her eyes. "You've quite the snake-tongue, you little sass-queen! I love a woman with conviction! Worry not, for there is always room for another in Madam Mildred's bedchambers. Now then, shall we get down to brass tacks? I know why you've brought me here, but you've no idea the demands I'll make in return for my services!"

Mildred yanks out a chair from the table and plops down in it unceremoniously. Immediately, her exaggerated expression deflates, and she eyes Phoebe with the look of a predator preparing to pounce on its prey.

Phoebe crosses her arms. "You claim to know a lot about me, but I don't know much about you. Why don't we start from the beginning? Tell me a little about yourself. Who are these other Heroes? How did you place them in your Heroic artifact?"

Mildred gently pets the feathery boa wrapped around her neck. "Hmph! Kasim, you tell the little lassie. I've no patience for explaining elementary knowledge to a preschooler!"

Kasim nods. He walks over to Mildred's right-hand side and bows politely. [My apologies, Lady Phoebe. Madam Mildred can act rather boisterous at times, but I, and the others behind me, owe her our lives.]

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "How do you know my name?"

[We know many things, and our knowledge comes from Madam Mildred's power. You guessed earlier that all of us came from Madam Mildred's heroic artifact. However, that is not the case. All of us reside in Marie's artifact chamber, but within different artifacts.]

Kasim gestures behind himself to the other three people.

[This man here is Tucker. His heroic artifact is a weapon he calls a 'revolver.' The woman to his right is Karla. Karla's relic is a hairpin her father gave to her early in her life. And the last gentleman is Julius. His artifact is a dagger — the same one used to murder him.]

My heart skips a beat. Julius Caesar? The legend himself who brought Rome to new heights?

The Roman man presses his palm against his heart. [Correct. I am he.]

It's... it's a pleasure to meet you, I say, trying not to sound overwhelmed with awe.

I flick my gaze between the three newly introduced Heroes.

Tucker immediately catches my attention. His wide-brimmed hat, boots with stirrups, and fancy silver belt give him the air of an old western-style cowboy. Coupled with the revolver on his hip, and his dashing good looks, the guy looks like he'd fit perfectly into a John Wayne movie.

Karla, the woman standing to Tucker's right, is a rather plain-looking Asian lady. I can't tell her racial origins apart immediately, but her red and gold dress appears Chinese in origin. A sash wraps around her waist, holding her garb in place. Her golden hair and bright blue eyes give her a look of innocence, but at the same time, I detect a hint of malevolence within her gaze.

Finally, Julius Caesar, the man, myth, and legend himself, looks only a little different from how I pictured. Just like all the other heroes, his blonde hair and blue eyes mix together with his white robes, sandals, and a purple sash spanning from his shoulder to his waist to give him a dominating aura of leadership. Unlike Kasim, who gazes upon Mildred with a tinge of deference, Julius barely regards her with any interest at all.

The cowboy, Tucker, smiles politely. "Now, c'mon, ya'll. I do hope we can git' along real nicely together. Ain't no reason for us to be jumpin' at each other's throats. Ain't that right, Miss Berthold?"

Tucker drawls in a vaguely southern accent as his eyes flick toward Phoebe. He walks past Mildred and the others to plunk down in a seat beside my wife.

"Name's Tucker. Kyle Tucker. I consider mahself fortunate to be in the presence of a pretty lady like you. I do hope we kin' make each other's acquaintance later, if you catch mah drift."

Phoebe barely glances at Tucker. "I'm married."

"Marriage ain't nothin' but a piece o' paper and swearing on God's name, and lord knows, we Heroes're proof that God's a simple, flesh-n-blood being."

[Tucker.]

Kasim glares at the cowboy.

[Control yourself. We're not here for you to proposition our hostess. Consider this a business trip.]

Tucker chuckles. "No worries, Kasim. I'm a man of many talents. I gots them political skills, and I gots them social skills. You could learn a thing or two from me if you opened yer eyes for a minute."

Julius Caesar takes a step forward. [Lady Berthold, please continue with your line of questioning. We all have the same enemy. We all have the same goal.]

Phoebe turns her chair to face Kasim, ignoring the cowboy seated behind her. "Right. Sorry, I got a little lost, what with all the introductions. You were saying something about the others here. What was the point you were making?"

Kasim nods. [As I said, all of our souls rest within different artifacts. Madam Mildred's heroic ability is the power to link minds together and share information. She helped create a Rennaisance during her lifetime and allowed people to evolve in leaps and bounds. Naturally, after her death, she also linked the souls of several artifacts together, allowing us all to come here at once when you touched one of our artifacts.]

Phoebe and I both reach the same conclusion simultaneously. However, my wife is the one to voice her opinion first. "Ah, so you must have linked to Jason's mind. Is that how you knew my name and the reason for our arrival?"

Madam Mildred chuckles into her palm. "Hahaha... indeed! You pick up faster than I expected, for an addle-brained plebian."

Phoebe's eye twitches. "P... plebian? If you're going to resort to insults..."

Madam Mildred waves her hand dismissively. "No, no, my dear! Don't take my cute little nickname to heart! All unenlightened lumps of coal are plebians in my eyes! Even among the diamonds in the rough, the brilliantly shining gems known as 'Heroes,' few can catch the eye of the Magnificent, Magnanimous, Mad Madam Mildred! Too few Heroes rise to the top of their era and reach the pinnacle of their power! Many squander their abilities and live lives of debauchery. Why, just take the young lassie behind me, little Karla!"

Mildred turns to smile at Karla, who continues to stand alongside Caesar behind Mildred's chair. Karla shifts uncomfortably as Mildred's gaze falls upon her. [Y-yes, lady Mildred?]

Mildred ignores Karla's question. "This beautiful peach might not have achieved much, but her power still allowed her to take revenge and throw her entire country into chaos! She executed her father, Emperor Yang Guang, thus ending the mad tyrant's reign! Her face might be plain, and her attitude demure, but Karla here achieved far more than the average so-called Hero!"

Karla lowers her eyes. She suddenly appears a lot smaller as she tries not to meet Mildred's gaze. However, Mildred turns away from her, ignoring the pain in the woman's expression.

"In any case, all non-Heroes are mere plebians in my eyes! Even amongst those gifted the power of the gods, few can ever reach the heights necessary to deserve my flattery. That includes you, Miss Berthold!"

Phoebe balls her hands into fists. "My last name is Hiro, dammit. All of you, stop calling me Berthold. I left that name behind when I married Jason."

Madam Mildred fans herself with her hand. "Oh, pish. You silly goose. You're not married at all! What would ever make you think such a thing?"

Phoebe's glare darkens. "I beg your pardon? Who are you to tell me whether I'm married or not?"

"Isn't it obvious? The young man whose Mind Realm we currently inhabit, Jason Hiro, married a flesh and blood woman named Phoebe Berthold. That woman... is not you! You are simply a duplicate of her soul. Do you dare deny this fact?"

Phoebe's anger falters. "I... I mean... no? But what does that have to do with anything?"

A look of pity enters Mildred's eyes. "Oh, you poor dear. You've barely lived for a day, so it stands to reason that you haven't yet figured out your place in the universe. When Jason returns home, whose embrace will he fall into? Yours, or the original version of yourself? The one who dwells within, or outside the Mind Realm? I think you know the answer."

Mildred leans back in her seat. She smooths her shirt down and smiles condescendingly at Phoebe, causing my wife to fall into a daze. "I... I don't..."

When Phoebe hesitates, I jump into the conversation. Mildred, what is your problem? I love my mind-wife and my flesh and blood wife equally. I'm married to both of them, and that's that. Besides, it has nothing to do with anything! Why even bring this crap up, beyond stirring the pot?

"My dear, all of this is perfectly relevant."

Mildred's expression turns haughty.

"Don't you know, boy? You're a soul manipulator, now, yet you haven't the faintest idea what forces you've begun to agitate. Clones, copies, and tigers, oh my! You cloned yourself, only for the newly created Jason to go rogue. You copied your wife to protect your mind, but you failed to consider the long-term repercussions of that action. What folly will you perform next? Shall you attempt to bring back the dead for some selfish pursuit?"

No, never, I say, scowling at Mildred. Why even ask such a thing?

"Because, my cute little pom-pom, your power is extraordinary; certainly mightier than all the Heroes assembled here combined. When a man possesses might equivalent to yours, corruption inevitably follows."

I nod. You must be referring to that old saying about power corrupting people.

"Precisely. Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Of course, some people believe that power merely attracts the corruptible, but while that might be true, it is also a much rarer situation."

Mildred's gaze falls upon Phoebe's trembling form. Tears well up in my wife's eyes as her memories keep replaying what Mildred said moments ago. Only now do I realize that Mildred's words hit her harder than I expected.

"Come, now, my pretty little lily. You need not cry. Madam Mildred understands your pain. You and I are not so different, as we have both left our bodies to become errant souls."

Phoebe sniffles. "But... but you're right. I can't... I can't be with Jason. I hadn't yet thought about it... but I'm not me anymore. I'm just a soul. I'm only half a person."

Phoebe... I say, lowering my mental voice. Don't talk like that. You might be an errant soul or whatever, but you matter to me. You're still my wife, and I love you immensely.

Mildred nods. "Ah, young love. It truly is wonderful to behold. I remember the first five men who embraced my bosom-"

[Madam Mildred,] Kasim says, a hint of annoyance in his voice. [...Must you?]

"Ah, goodness! I cannot help but express myself honestly! Ah hah-hah-hah! Forgive this beautiful enchantress, for I am but a humble, homely old woman in body and soul. Where was I? Oh, yes!"

Mildred's laughter comes to an abrupt halt. Her smile vanishes, and a solemn gaze spreads across her face.

"The galaxy is a dangerous place, Phoebe, Jason. Unlike many of the souls trapped inside their artifacts, I have not fallen helpless within my artifact. My power allowed me to touch the minds of any who wandered within range of my aura. While I am unable to connect with the cybernetic body of Marie, I am more than capable of touching her assistant Satyr's mind. As such, I know well the dangers which threaten humanity. I might seem arrogant and indifferent to your undiscerning eyes, but rest assured! I am no enemy of humanity."

I nod along to Madam Mildred's words. Alright. Can I assume that you wish to help us, then?

Mildred nods. "Mmm. Something like that, my dear."

What do you want in return for your 'help?'

Mildred smiles. "Oh, not much. A promise is all I need. Right now, the thing I want would prove detrimental to everyone gathered here, today. However, in the future, that is likely to change. If you promise to help me after you've saved humanity, I'll offer you my assistance, as well as the aid from these Heroes present, post-haste!"

Tell me what it is that you want so that I can decide. If you don't, I'll have to decline.

Mildred pauses. She shoots a strange look at Kasim, before turning to look skyward, meeting my gaze.

"Freedom, dear child. I wish for myself and the other Heroes to depart our presently unbreakable bonds. Promise me that someday, when the time is right, you will grant us our freedom. If you do, then I will assist you to the fullest extent of my power."

I frown. You want me to grant you freedom? Can I... do that? How?

Mildred purses her lips. "Promise me."

But-

"Is that a 'no?'"

I sigh. Fine. I don't know how you expect me to free you. However, if I do have that power, I'll do it. Alright? I promise.

"Excellent. Karla, my dear! Did you catch all that?"

The Chinese woman takes a step forward and bows deeply. [Yes, Madam Mildred. I have ensured the contract's signing.]

Contract? What contract? I ask.

Mildred waves her hand flippantly. "Oh, it's a minor matter. A soul-binding agreement to ensure we maintain our ends of the deal. That's all!"

I stare at the corpulent woman in disbelief. You made me sign a contract without my knowledge?! Who are you? The Devil?!

"No, no, sweet-pea. If it makes you feel any better, know this: Your Wordsmithing is more than capable of nullifying Karla's contracts. I merely wished for you to sign as a formality. Surely, you wouldn't try to cheat this beautiful seductress out of her one wish?"

Fucking hell, Mildred. Your every word tests my patience.

"Huzzah! It's settled, then. Since you agree, it's time for me to uphold my end of the bargain! Ah, hah-hah-hah!"

Mildred laughs uproariously. She pulls her self out of her chair and begins strutting around the room once again, smiling creepily at all who meet her gaze.

"Tell me, child! What information would you like to know? Marie seems to be withholding some interesting tidbits from the almighty Wordsmith. Perhaps you'd like to start there?"

I nod.

Yes, please. Tell me about the Volgrim. I want to pick your brain for anything useful. I need to know what kind of threat they'll pose to humanity in the future.

Mildred slows her pacing. She eventually stops and stares blankly at a wall.

"The Volgrim? Goodness. You've set your sights on the Heavens, dear boy!"

Mildred closes her eyes.

"Very well! Since you asked so politely, mommy dearest will be happy to oblige! Now, focus your mind, and listen well."

I nod. Alright. Lay it on me.

This is Madam Mildred

Shana, Lorent, Tucker, Karla, Kasim, and Julius Caesar are coming… eventually!

Part 193: Tucker's Mirage

As I settle in to listen to Madam Mildred's tales, I shoot a glance at Sir Lorent. He keeps Shana occupied by summoning an easel and showing her how to sweep a paintbrush against it. Shana's eyes widen like saucers as she begins to smear black paint across the canvas, drawing her first stick-man ever.

"The Volgrim have existed for millions of years," Madam Mildred says. She stands behind her chair and leans her ample chest against it, flashing a smile at Phoebe and me as she talks. "I see that Marie has already told you about the five sub-species of Volgrim. However, the details she gave you were quite sparing. What information I know comes from her assistant Momo's mind; therefore, it is secondhand knowledge. I lived inside my artifact throughout all of the Energy Wars, and was thus unable to witness the Volgrim's military might for myself."

Mildred motions with her hand and summons a long, spindly tobacco pipe. Its antique design lends her an air of nobility as she begins to puff on its contents.

"The Five Founders sit atop the Volgrim hierarchy. Each Founder stands at the apex of their sub-species' political empires. Unarin, the First Founder, is also the mightiest and most influential among the Ascended. The Ascended derive their might not from psionic potential, nor technological prowess, but raw numbers. For every Psion or Technopath, one hundred Ascended rest inside vegetation chambers, awaiting an order from their Founder. Tactics and strategy matter little when compared to a sea of skilled warriors. None of the other sub-species would ever dare challenge Unarin's rule."

Mildred smirks. "Hah-hah-hah! If you find the demonic population frightening, you dare not imagine how many Ascended could swoop in and crush your uprising with a wave of their hand! Truly, their numbers inspire awe!"

I sit up a little straighter in my seat. I understand that the Ascended have vast military power and overwhelming numbers. However, compared with some of the machines the Technopaths should be capable of building, or the Psionic powers of the Psions, what does it matter if they have more soldiers? One tank or bomb can easily kill a hundred human soldiers with ease.

Mildred smiles. "Oh, young one, that might be true for our poor, frail little species, but not for the Volgrim. If you were to gaze upon an army of Ascended, you would come to notice that they are extremely well-rounded. Unarin has many Technopaths and Psions at his command, while the average Ascended possesses the strength and stamina of twenty human soldiers."

Mildred continues. "To put it bluntly, dear boy, Unarin possesses not only overwhelming numbers, but also a portion of the other Volgrim sub-species' overall abilities. His rule is unshakable."

It sounds like the Ascended are the biggest threat to humanity. However, I'm guessing you're about to hit me with a 'but.'

Mildred nods. "But, the Ascended are not a warlike people. When I said that most Ascended were resting inside vegetation chambers, awaiting Unarin's order to attack, that wasn't strictly true. The Ascended obtained their name by discarding their worldly interests. Unarin had his Psion appointees construct a massive digital world with a timescale that flows a thousand times faster than the real world. The Ascended live lives of blissful rapture inside their virtual oases. None wish to leave their paradise unless its existence comes under threat by an external force."

Mildred coughs. "Ahem. For example, a plucky young Hero who might try to assault their beloved collective."

I raise my eyebrows in realization. What you're saying is that if humanity grows too fast and too quickly, and if we should become a threat to the Ascended's digital paradise, they'll return to reality and crash upon us like a waterfall.

"Precisely! Hah-hah-hah!"

Madam Mildred resumes strutting around the table, casting glances at every Hero present, as well as Phoebe. "Luckily for you, dear boy, Unarin might be the First Founder, but you needn't worry about the Ascended for a very long time. They are the Volgrim's final line of defense. Instead, turn your attention toward the other subspecies. Tucker?"

Mildred glances at the cowboy seated next to my wife. Tucker chews on the tip of a wheat shaft absentmindedly. When he hears his name, he blinks a few times, then meets Mildred's gaze. "Huh? What'd I do this time?"

"Tell Jason and Phoebe about the Psions," Mildred replies. "You helped during the Energy Wars. I think your testimony will be quite valuable."

Tucker shrugs. "Yeap. Alright. What's there ta' say? Them Psions've got spooky mental powers. They can lift shit with their mind, fling fire from their hands, all kinds of craziness."

Kasim leans forward in his chair. [Tucker. Can't you be a little more descriptive? Mildred is counting on you.]

Tucker rubs his eyes. "Fine, fine, sheesh. Dunno what ya'll even want from me."

The cowboy leans back in his seat, then leans forward, using the momentum to jump to his feet. He touches the back of Phoebe's chair for a split-second, then grins at her like a hound-dog.

"Hey, baby-girl. Do you like roller coasters?"

Phoebe scowls. "I'm not your 'baby-girl.'"

"Not yet," Tucker says, smirking. "No lady can resist m'charms. More importantly, you're 'bout to experience a whole new reality, sweet pea. Prepare yourself."

Without waiting for a reply, Tucker motions with his hands.

Blinding pain explodes in my head!

"Augh!" I cry out, startling even myself. Marie shoots a worried glance toward me, but I wave her concerns away and flash a thumbs-up.

My Mind Realm rapidly shifts and morphs. The buildings surrounding Phoebe and the Heroes disappear, transforming my mental space into a pure white world of dazzling brilliance. The first thing I think of is Raphael's Cosmic Realm. However, the similarities disappear a moment later as modern-day skyscrapers from Earth plummet from the sky and smash into the ground with earthshaking force. Grass and asphalt sprout between the buildings, along with images of humans milling about on the sidewalk. London appears, where before my Mind Realm stood.

Several strange emotions well up inside me when I spot London's skyline stretching out into the horizon. From my omnipotent viewpoint in the sky, I can easily make out countless intricate details, all of them somehow crafted via Tucker's heroic power. Two boys toss a holographic baseball between each other, laughing and playing without a care in the world. A police officer gives chase to a fleeing truck, and a minute later, two other pursuit cars join the hunt.

I turn my attention toward Phoebe and the Heroes. They stand atop a three-story building overlooking a residential zone. The flat, concrete roof places the group into a box where they'll have to jump down if they want to leave it.

[Tucker's Heroic power is known as Mirage,] Kasim says. [Much like how a desert can affect one's perception of the world, he too can generate illusions inside someone else's mind. As we happen to presently occupy Jason's Mind Realm, Tucker's power has a greater effect than usual.]

Kasim's words make me realize that allowing other people into my Mind Realm is a dangerous situation. After all, I don't know what Tucker might be able to do to me if he held any harmful intentions. I'll have to keep my guard up in the future.

Phoebe sweeps the sky with her eyes. "Is this... Earth?"

[It is,] Kasim replies. [Though when and where exactly, I do not know.]

Tucker saunters over to Phoebe with a big grin plastered on his face. "The year is 2072. Mah artifact was in the possession of a talented individual known as Benjamin Brown, one of humanity's ultimate soldiers. He 'n I worked together to fight the Volgrim whenever they attacked Earth. Today just so happens to be one o' them days."

As if on cue, a sudden explosion in the sky startles Phoebe, Lorent, and Shana. All three of them flick their eyes toward the disturbance, where a massive spaceship detonates in midair and comes crashing into the River Thames. Shana's eyes turn wide as saucers. She pulls close to Lorent and hugs his leg.

[W-what happen? Why big light in sky?]

Lorent shakes his head. [I do not know, little one. However, this world is only an illusion. Don't be afraid. Nothing can hurt us here.]

He glances at Tucker.

[Right?]

Lorent's anger-filled gaze causes Tucker's confidence to falter for a moment.

"Y-yeah. Ain't nothing to worry about."

[Good.]

Lorent returns his attention toward the destroyed spaceship plummeting to Earth. Beneath its falling form, a tiny dot emerges in the blue sky, hovering only a few hundred feet away.

I use my omniscient vision to 'zoom in' on the object.

A bipedal, bug-like creature levitates above London, watching passively as the ship crashes into the Thames. It turns its head to the right and stretches out a palm. The creature fires a dot of blackness toward another nearby spaceship. It, too, detonates on impact, obliterating the craft's defenses effortlessly.

Within seconds, coastal alarms begin to wail around London. The city enters high alert, and its citizens rush indoors while casting fearful glances toward the chaos-embroiled sky.

The bug creature turns its six-eyed head toward another ship to the west. Its unblinking eyes gaze upon its prey with the same indifference a man might give an ant. Moments later, another black dot fires from the creature's hand and shreds the ship into chunks of metal.

"That thing there? It's a Psion," Tucker says, shrugging. "It ain't even one of the high-level warriors. Just a small-fry. A scout."

With a wave of his hands, Tucker teleports the creature to the rooftop, startling Shana, Lorent, and Phoebe. They take a fearful step backward, only to breathe a sigh of relief when the Psion freezes in place, its illusion commanded by Tucker's power.

"See the feet?" Tucker asks. "Those two-toed claws allow Psions to scale mountains if they somehow lose their magic. They climb like billy goats. And their heads, notice how they ain't got no mouth? That's 'cuz Psions talk with their minds."

Phoebe stares unblinkingly at the creature before her with morbid curiosity. "My god... compared to demons and angels, this creature doesn't look like anything I've ever seen!"

Tucker nods. He rests his hands on his hip and sighs. "Yeap. They've gots a face only a mother would love, but that ain't the worst of it. See, much like demons 'n angels, Psions gots all kinds of crazy powerful magical abilities. You 'n Jason saw Marie's recording. Remember when that Nufaris fella yanked a spaceship into the dirt? That wasn't nothin'. That's just little-kiddy telekinesis."

Tucker motions again, activating his magic. The scene changes to reveal five Psions hovering above an army of humans. The humans unload a rain of bullets and plasma toward their sky-bound opponents. However, with a wave of its hand, one Psion summons a psionic barrier to envelop its comrades. Two others unleash fire and lightning upon the humans below, while the remaining two simply hover and observe the battle.

"What is happening?" Phoebe asks. "Why aren't those last two attacking?"

"Their assistance ain't necessary," Tucker says, shrugging. "A single High Psion easily coulda wiped out the platoon. The other four are just there to prevent accidents."

"Psionic abilities seem about as difficult to fight as demons and angels," Phoebe comments. "What makes them any different? Even in Arthur's time, we humans easily took out demons with the Hero's help. I can't imagine faring any worse against these aliens, especially given humanity's advancements in weaponry."

Tucker's expression darkens. "Nah, sweet-cheeks. That's where yer wrong. The difference 'tween a demon and a Psion is that the Psion'll get stronger over time. They don't specialize like demons. You remember that Beelzebub fella?"

Phoebe scowls. "How could I forget?"

"Right. He's a fire-type demon. That means all his abilities somehow loop back to flames 'n shit. However, Psions ain't like that. They can use all kinds of crazy powers."

As Tucker speaks, the human army erects a massive army-sized force-field, thus blocking the Psion's fire and lightning attacks. An instant later, the aliens switch their battle strategy. Their eyes faintly glow for a split second before they begin draining energy from the force-field itself.

The shield flickers several times, then sputters and disappears. The humans continue firing bullets, but their attacks prove useless against the Volgrim's psionic shielding.

Within minutes, the Psions eradicate their opponents and float away, leaving behind a wake of destruction and terror.

"Honey, pray you don't ever gotta fight a Psion. Pray even harder you don't anger an army of Psions. The bastards never give up. And, more importantly... Psions never die."

Tucker changes the scene once again. This time, a single human faces off against a single Psion. The golden-armor-clad Psion retreats several steps under the human's relentless melee, but what startles me, as an omniscient observer, is something else.

The human, a dark-skinned man I don't recognize, is clearly missing a substantial amount of skin. However, instead of exposed bone and muscle, a metallic endoskeleton reveals itself.

Phoebe stares, wide-eyed, at the two-person death battle. "That man... he's a robot! A cyborg, just like Marie!"

"Not quite," Madam Mildred says, butting in. Her expression appears far graver than before, and she drops her arrogant act as she speaks. "His name is Benjamin Brown. He was one of humanity's mightiest warriors, if not the strongest, barring a Hero's existence. Benjamin Brown carved his way through tens of thousands of demons and Volgrim alike. He was a deadly warrior known as a Vanguard, and his prowess in the art of combat stood unparalleled, even until the day humanity lost the war."

Phoebe nods. "I remember reading about Vanguards in one of Bahamut's journals. She barely wrote about them, but did mention that she would never dare fight one alone."

As the scene continues, this "Benjamin Brown" fellow continues whaling on the Psion. His Volgrim opponent unleashes fire and lightning, trying desperately to melt him to pieces or fry his electrical components. However, Benjamin surprises the Volgrim by raising his palm and absorbing its attacks. Seconds later, Ben's mutilated skin regenerates, covering his metallic skeleton with a fleshy exterior.

Benjamin leaps backward, an expression of determination on his face. His arm shifts and morphs, transforming into a particle-cannon.

Crack! Crack!

He releases a hail of ionized bullets upon the Psion, forcing it to retreat again and again as it attempts to parry his ranged assault. However, unlike the Psion from the previous vision, it doesn't summon a force-field for defense.

Benjamin Brown maintains his relentless assault. The young man begins walking forward while firing nonstop. Unable to retaliate, the Volgrim can only deflect each shot one by one. Eventually, Benjamin Brown closes the gap, leaps forward, and plunges his arm into the alien's chest. With one smooth motion, he rips the Volgrim's spine out, killing it instantly.

The vision concludes, and Tucker shakes his head.

"Ben's victory didn't make no ding-damn difference. That same fella returned 'bout a year later, stronger'n ever. Ben laid the smack down again and again, but each time, it put up more of a fight. It might have eventually beat him, but the war came to an end, and humanity lost. I ain't sure what happened to Ben after that. We got separated. Next thing I knew, I ended up here in Marie's bunker-place. The rest was history."

I nod. How did you end up in Ben's hands, Tucker? I can't help but assume most heroic artifacts would be closely guarded government secrets.

Tucker glances into the sky, toward the vague direction of my omniscient vision. "Well, see, I don't know this fer sure, but I always figgered Marie 'n Ben had a whole thing goin' on 'tween 'em. Maybe a fling or somethin'. I imagine she gave mah relic to Ben to assist him. I tried m'hardest, but I couldn't do much. The guy was a total badass, even without mah help."

Did you assist Ben with illusions?

Tucker shakes his head. "Not usually. See, mah powers are somewhat diverse. When I was a young 'un, I lived during a chaotic era, back when the ol' America was still bein' established. We had all sorts of vagrants 'n ruffians to deal with, and uh... well, I may have helped out not only the good guys, but also the bad guys now and then. That's all I'm saying. Man's gotta make a buck if he wants to eat. Catch m'drift?"

I frown. Get to the point.

"I've got a whole bunch of powers! Illusions, wall-walking, just a whole grab bag! Mah most useful power, and the one Ben used a lot, was... Perfect Aim."

Tucker whips out his revolver and spins it on his finger. He makes a motion as if to shoot the wall.

"Pow! Pow! Perfect accuracy every time! A gunslinger never misses his shot!"

I guess that means Ben used your Perfect Aim power with modern weaponry?

"Yup! That fella kicked some Psion butt! He made good use of m'power; that's for sure."

[Let's talk about the Technopaths,] Kasim says. [Tucker, take us to the end of the war.]

"Alrighty."

Tucker pays Kasim's sudden topic change no mind. With a shrug, he dissolves the skyscrapers and modern-day Earth into nothingness. A moment later, a different city appears.

However, unlike the London of 2072, which I vaguely recognized, the city Tucker summons resembles a scene from a dystopia. An overcast sky rumbles with thunder, as a light rain trickles down on the city below. Crumbled skyscrapers mix with rubble, burning fires, and wailing sirens to paint a picture of an Earth embroiled in chaos. Injured civilians stand before military trucks to await food allotments.

A mother with only one arm clutches her stump and begs the soldier to give her an extra portion for her children. Enraged, the man swings his fist at her face, sending her sprawling to the asphalt. "Back off! You only get one portion, you damn vagrant! Be glad you get anything at all!"

If the other half-dozen nearby soldiers have any problems with their comrade's actions, they don't show it on their faces. They continue to hand out food while a drone hovers overhead and scans the faces of everyone approaching.

The woman sniffles and whimpers. Her nose, now broken, bleeds profusely, wetting her clothes with crimson fluid. She staggers away while clutching a tiny bag of food. I glance inside the bag with my all-encompassing vision, only to see two slices of bread, some moldy cheese, and a small bag of rice.

As she staggers away, a coastal siren begins to wail. The ear-splitting roar of a spaceship flying overhead spreads panic among the gathered crowds. Immediately, the military men grab their guns and take aim at the throng of civilians surrounding them. "Disperse at once! Return to the evacuation zone! Move, move, move!"

A few people linger for a moment while the rest flee in panic, but with a shake of their guns, the soldiers force even the hungriest civilians to flee.

Moments later, a shockwave rumbles through the sky. The soldiers dive inside their truck and leave the food behind in a cart outside. They race away, dodging and weaving between obstructions in the torn-up asphalt, including broken-down vehicles, dead bodies, and even a baby stroller.

Inside the armored truck, one soldier furiously types on a computer. "Level 3 Technopath assault. HQ sent us a ping. We need to head to the strip mall! There's a 44% drop point chance!"

One of the female soldiers sucks air through her teeth. "44%. Shit. How many other response squads are heading there?"

"It's just the Dusk Crew and us," The logistics tech replies. "Wait! No... there's someone else. It's Commander Benjamin Brown! He activated his response beacon!"

The woman breathes a sigh of relief. "Benjamin Brown?! God damn, we're lucky. We might make it out of here alive!"

As the crew prays to whatever god they each might worship, a partition opens up in the thick cloud cover above. The soldiers raise their eyes skyward and gape in horror.

The technician is the first to speak. "Jesus Fucking Christ! Is that a Monolith?! That's the biggest assault craft I've ever seen!"

"Goddamned Volgrim," The woman mutters. "They never give us a break. It hasn't been two days since their last attack! Just how many soldiers and machines do the cocksuckers have?!"

As the soldiers rush to their destination, the expressions on their faces turn ashen as the follow the trajectory of the thousand-foot-tall ship plummeting toward the city. Its sheer mass swallows the horizon, making them wonder what its contents might be.

"44%, they said," The driver mutters. "Looks like we got the shit end of the stick. It's headed for the mall."

"Fuck!"

"We're going to die!"

Two of the soldiers curse and sling expletives. Knowing that their end is coming, they can only swallow their hatred and prepare themselves for death.

"If we're going to die, then let's show these metal monsters the strength of humanity!"

"Hell yeah! You said it, Eagle!"

The ship races toward the planet's surface below. At the last moment, before striking the planet's surface, a plethora of anti-gravity thrusters on the ship's bottom ignite, slowing its descent and allowing it to touch down gracefully.

The armored vehicle races toward the landed ship. The soldiers watch intently as dozens of openings appear on the craft's exterior.

"Dragoons. At least the Volgrim are going low-tech this time," The commander, Eagle, says. "Fuck! So many?! One hundred... two hundred..."

The truck speeds toward the strip mall, which has already flattened into a pancake under the bulk of the monolith.

"Tell HQ to send reinforcements!" Eagle yells, barking an order at his technician. "We won't last five minutes against that horde, not even with Commander Brown's help."

The technician wipes sweat from his forehead. "No can do, Eagle. Look. This isn't the only monolith touching down, today."

He gestures toward his computer screen. Eagle's expression turns ugly.

"Two others? This attack isn't another harassment campaign. The alien bastards are going to seize the capitol!"

"What can we do?" The woman asks. "HQ won't be able to fight off the invaders. If we go there, we'll only die needlessly."

A minute passes.

Eagle rubs the bridge of his nose. He glances out the front window. Already, the Volgrim dragoons have begun firing at nearby structures, leveling anything within range to dust.

"We have to protect the civilians. They might be useless vagrants and deserters, but... they're still humans! If our lives can save a hundred, or even a thousand others... then we'll die with honor!"

The truck races toward the Monolith. Soon, it screeches to a stop behind a dilapidated building, using the patchwork concrete structure to shield itself from the Volgrim assault force's vision.

"Alright, team. Grab your guns and pop your pills. Let's move!"

With a nod, all the soldiers reach into the folds of their shirts, pull out pink pellets, and toss them into their mouths. They don't bother using water to wash the pills down. Instead, the soldiers grab various advanced pieces of weaponry and armor before disembarking their vehicle.

What follows is a scene of chaos. The pills provide temporary adrenaline and strength boosts, transforming the soldiers into superhuman weapons of war. They tear through the Technopath army with ease, shredding their metallic adversaries half a dozen at a time.

Eventually, Benjamin Brown flies over from an unknown location. A pair of aluminum wings stick out of his back, attached to a back-pack-like piece of armor wrapped around his shoulders. He lands amidst the fray and helps push back the Dragoon assault mechs, but the wings break apart once he lands, revealing their purpose as a single-use disposable piece of technology.

The computer technician waves at the newcomer. "Commander Brown! Lieutenant Eagle is badly injured! He needs medical attention!"

"Hide him behind the rubble," Benjamin Brown says. "We can't help him until we've cleared the zone! If God wants him alive, then fate will favor him!"

The remaining five soldiers and Benjamin Brown continue unloading on the Dragoons. Despite the six-legged machines' considerable firepower and their massive cannons, they prove useless against the nimble human commandos.

Shots ring out. The Dragoon mechs tower twenty feet above the bipedal flesh-and-blood creatures at their feet, but they can't get a firm lock on their targets. Each time a Dragoon falls, another disembarks the Monolith to fire at the humans from a distance.

One commando, the technician, screams in pain. A stray Dragoon shell detonates only ten feet away, riddling his leg with shrapnel. He stumbles and falls, impaling his stomach on a particularly sharp rock. He perishes a moment later.

The other soldiers barely pay him a glance.

"Fuck!" The woman soldier yells, anger welling up in her heart. "Where is Team Dusk?! They should have arrived by now!"

Benjamin Brown presses his back against hers. "I re-routed them. One of the other Monoliths landed just outside HQ. They need the manpower more than we do!"

Her expression darkens. "But... but we'll die!"

"I prepared myself for that the day I entered the military," Ben replies. He reaches up and presses a finger to his eyeball. "Everyone dies eventually. Even my brother."

Benjamin's pupil turns bright red. He dives behind cover and pokes his head out to examine the Monolith ship a hundred meters away.

"I have to get inside," Ben mutters. "The turrets will pose a problem. Umi. Divert 1% of your processing power to assist me."

Inside Benjamin Brown's head, a robotic voice speaks.

[Request noted. Processing. Supreme Commander Marie Becker has agreed to your request. For the next twenty-seven minutes and fourteen seconds, I will allocate 1% of my processing power to your internal components. Integrating... now.]

A surge of thoughts flood through Ben's head. Immediately, his senses enhance and expand like a bubble, allowing him to accurately determine the state of the battlefield within thirty meters in every direction.

"Haha... now the fun begins."

Ben leaps out of cover. Ten Dragoons swivel their cannons toward him and fire in unison. However, Ben instantly calculates the trajectory of their projectiles. He dives to the left, presses his foot against a shredded red Subaru, and leaps into the sky. A chorus of explosions rings out as the fusion-propelled explosive canisters detonate beneath him.

Ben lands atop the nearest Dragoon and uses his cyborg strength to bend its cannon a few degrees to the left. Without paying the machine any more mind, he continues leaping from one Dragoon to the next, beelining toward an opening in the Monolith's exterior.

"There! That's my ticket inside."

Ben leaps toward the Monolith. His fingers pierce the ship's heavily armored outer layer with ease, allowing him to scale the metal exterior like a seasoned mountain climber. Several Dragoons swivel to fire at him, but they pause, unable to launch attacks against the Monolith itself.

"Outwitted by a mere human," Ben mutters. "And you always will be, so long as we have Marie."

Ben clambers inside the Monolith. Its tall, javelin-like appearance leads to a vertically-aligned interior, with dozens of ladders and transport tubes for transitioning between levels. The moment Ben enters, dozens of security turrets unleash a hail of gunfire at him.

Ben dives to the side, presses against a wall, and rips off a chunk of metal. He rushes forward while using the wall-plate as a makeshift shield to protect his head. Even with his quick thinking, the moment he enters the conical field of turrets, they spatter him with dozens of bullets. His skin shreds and peels under the ship's relentless assault, but Ben continues systematically tearing apart anything that attacks him.

Suddenly, the ship's inner lights go dark. A pitch-black void engulfs Ben, illuminated only by the opening through which he entered.

A robotic voice begins speaking overhead.

"WA'NUNG. HUTSUFTA L'ATANTHA GASATHSAG. AFTFT GARANTU'A TXTSANT UN DATHKT THU'SAAN, FUIA'SAAN, ANG FURSAAN HA'A FTAAN GUTAFTFTAG. ATHSU'ASUNG L'USUSXLA P'USATHSU'ASAT."

The gibberish-sounding speech causes Ben to pause for a split-second. "Prototype Protectorates? What the hell are those?"

As if on cue, the sounds of sliding doors above and below the Vanguard causes the hair on the back of his neck to stand up. Dozens of red eyes step out of the darkness and swivel to face him. Unaffected by the poor visibility, Benjamin's biomechanical eyes pierce the gloom, allowing him to make out metallic, bipedal shapes equipped with highly advanced weaponry.

"Shit... it's an ambush! The Volgrim expected me!"

Ben retreats several steps toward the opening he used to enter the Monolith. However, a panel slides over the hatch, sealing it shut.

The ship rumbles, bucking like a bronco. Ben's stomach leaps into his throat as he comes to a horrifying realization.

"The Monolith is lifting off. This whole thing was a trap intended to capture me! Fucking Volgrim! You won't get your way. Umi! Hack the ship's systems! I'll stall while you pierce their defensive network!"

The sounds of metal footsteps lumbering toward Ben makes him swivel to face the incoming threats. The moment the machines step around the corner, they unload a hail of bullets and energy blasts at him, preventing him from taking even a step forward.

[Error,] Umi replies. [Hacking a Monolith's defenses will require at least 5% of my processing power. Supreme Commander Marie Becker has refused your request. She states that you possess a 65% chance of survival without her help. Do not disappoint her expectations.]

"That bitch!" Ben yells. The Protectorate's assault strikes him over and over, shredding his skin from his body piece by piece. The bullets, infused with electrical energy, suppress his computerized systems, causing his processor cores to glitch.

Without any regard for his safety, Ben lunges forward. He grabs one Protectorate's head and slams it against a wall. To his dismay, not only does the head not crumple like a Dragoon's might, but it takes almost no damage.

Whump.

A metallic fist strikes Benjamin's spine, flinging him to the deck. Ben rolls helplessly, dumbfounded by the machine's strength.

He jerks his head up, wincing under the hail of gunfire. Even with his heavily-augmented cybernetic body, he can't endure for long under the Protectorate Squad's attack.

Ben's thoughts spin in his mind. It can't be... are these Sentinels?! Marie said they were only a rumor! They're impossibly strong!

Umi beeps inside Ben's head. [Processing. Incorrect. These machines are not Sentinels. Based on my calculations, the Protectorates possess, at most, 1% of a Sentinel's battle power.]

"What? That means... Sentinels are more than a hundred times stronger than these- augh!"

Ben coughs as an electrified bullet slips through his metallic endoskeleton and pierces his internal shielding. Immediately, one of his four lungs ruptures, causing severe internal bleeding.

"Kahk! Keuk!"

Ben vomits blood. He falls to his knees and crumples into the fetal position, trying desperately to protect himself from the nonstop hail of plasma, electric, and metallic bullets.

"U-Umi! Activate... activate... my prototype... systems... release the s-safety... limiters..."

[Warning. Removing Vanguard 001's safety limiters will cause extreme damage to your internal subsystems. The potency of your heroic artifact will degrade by 75%, shortening its inhabitant's lifespan. Confirm activation?]

"Confirm, goddammit! I can't die here!"

[Command confirmed. I will use my allocated processing power to improve the efficiency-]

"Hurry up! I can't last much longer!"

Ben winces as three more bullets worm their way through his internal shielding. Another lung collapses, while several of his arteries tear into pieces under the intense electrostatic shocks battering them from moment to moment.

After five excruciating seconds, Umi speaks again. [Command executed. You have five minutes of peak efficiency available. Four minutes, fifty-nine seconds. Four minutes, fifty-eight seconds.]

Ben leaps to his feet. A powerful energy barrier expands around his chest. Without hesitation, Ben reaches into the folds of his armor and whips out a clunky-looking revolver; Tucker's artifact.

"Let's kill these sons of bitches and get the fuck out of here!"

Ben's speed and strength triples. He rushes toward the Protectorate robots, each one with armor reminiscent of a tank, yet a frame as light and nimble as a jackrabbit, and punches them repeatedly, over and over. He uses Tucker's power to guarantee that every hit strikes a critical weak point while also ensuring the enemies can't dodge his attacks.

Ben's fists become a hurricane. Umi continues to tick down every second in his head, increasing his agitation and worry as he tries to outmaneuver and outgun the terrifying death-robots gunning for him.

Suddenly, the first Protectorate's head collapses. Ben crushes it with his bare hands, then leaps toward one of the remaining 14 Protectorates.

Even with his prototype systems active, the fight is far from easy. Ben suffers immensely whenever another bullet pierces his shielding, but he never wavers. One by one, he crushes each Protectorate flat, only to pause before the final three when Umi issues him a warning.

[Alert. Monolith Ship 002 will exit Earth's atmosphere in T-minus ten seconds. Benjamin Brown, you must evacuate immediately, or you will suffocate in space.]

"Shit!" Ben howls, spewing blood. "You should've told me sooner!"

He bull-rushes the nearest wall and aims his shoulder toward a spot Umi indicates with her sensors.

Boom.

Benjamin Brown smashes through the metallic wall as if it were made of styrofoam. His body creaks and howls with pain, but that hardly compares to the terror running through his veins as he stumbles out of the ship and plummets toward the ground several miles below.

With the oxygen in the atmosphere not even at 1% of the levels on the ground, Ben's consciousness quickly begins to waver.

[Warning. Ten seconds remaining on the prototype subsystem activation period. Nine seconds. Eight. Seven...]

Ben's eyes flutter as he falls toward the planet below. Eventually everything goes dark, and only an agonizing, burning pain swells within his chest.

* * *

The vision fades away. Tucker rubs his forehead as Phoebe and all of the Heroes reappear in the dining hall.

"Welp. That was the last time I saw Ben. We weren't 'friends' or anything. He used mah artifact against the Volgrim, and that was it for our relationship. Still, I always wondered what happened t'him. I hope he survived. A fall like that would kill anyone... be they man or machine."

Tucker chuckles. "Heh. Whatever Ben did, he sucked up a whole bunch of mah mana. I kept falling asleep off and on for centuries. Eventually, Madam Mildred popped in and saved m'life. It's been a rough ride, but things're lookin' up."

Phoebe rests her hands on her lap. After pausing to think for a few moments, she smiles at Tucker. "Thank you for telling Jason and me about the Volgrim. It was... enlightening."

Indeed, I say. I know so much more about the Ascended, Psions, and Technopaths than when I first met you. You've helped me immensely. However, I do have to ask... what about the Changelings and Dolgrimites? Do you have any intel on them?

Tucker shrugs. "Nothin' worth mentioning, kid. Changelings can change their appearances. As for the Dolgrimites, I don't know jack shit."

"You don't?" Phoebe asks. "Did you never encounter them?"

"I can answer that!" Mildred says, butting in. "Nobody here has ever seen a Dolgrimite! They didn't participate in the Energy Wars, and they didn't bother showing up even once on Earth. Momo doesn't know anything about them, either! If Marie has any information, she might be able to tell you, but as for me, daaarling, I can't help you at all!"

I shrug. That's fine. The Dolgrimites never showed their faces, so they must not care about galactic affairs. We can safely ignore them for now. You've done enough, Madam Mildred, and I need to go. However, I won't forget my promise. I'll try and help 'free' you, whenever you decide to tell me what that means.

"Hah-hah-hah! You think this is goodbye, dear boy? I've linked our minds together! You need only say the magic word, and we'll be able to speak to one another, no matter how far apart we might be!"

I nod, understanding Mildred must be referring to my Wordsmithing. Now that I know where these artifacts are located, I can easily speak to the Heroes here if necessary.

Kasim bows. [We are always at your service, young Hero. As long as you live, humanity will not go extinct. Stay safe, and protect our descendants.]

Julius Caesar assumes a dignified pose. [I hope to hear of your accomplishments in the coming years.]

Tucker rolls his eyes. "Yeah, whatever. You can have the girl this time, but if you break Phoebe's heart, expect her to come crying to me."

Phoebe sighs. "I'm sitting right here, Tucker..."

The last hero, Karla, fidgets for a moment, before sheepishly waving at Phoebe. [Goodbye.]

I sigh, wishing I'd had a chance to talk to the Asian woman and Caesar a little more. However, having spent nearly an hour with this one artifact, Marie is probably getting antsy for me to move on.

Farewell, Mildred, Tucker, Kasim, Karla. It was my pleasure to meet all of you. I'll keep in touch.

Mildred snorts. "Hmph! Damn straight!"

All five of the Heroes lower their heads. Their bodies fade away, leaving Sir Lorent and Shana behind, along with Phoebe.

I rub my eyes. Seven Heroes down, and a fuckload more to go.

"Do you need a break?" Phoebe asks. "You can always request one. Marie knows you're an 'inferior biological,' so I'm sure she'll understand."

No way. I'm not falling asleep with that creepy cyborg anywhere near me. I'll just Wordsmith my energy back to full and keep going. If Madam Mildred was telling the truth, those five heroes were the strongest ones here. That means they'll be of the utmost importance to Marie, and she won't care as much about the remaining ones. Let's report back to her and see what she says.

Phoebe nods. "Alright."

I raise my head and pull my attention away from my Mind Realm. Turning toward the center of the room, I open my mouth to tell Marie what's happened, only to pause and frown.

Marie isn't here.

Momo stands idly at the controls, tapping buttons with her back to me. I clear my throat.

"Ahem! Momo? Got a sec?"

"Heek!"

Momo jumps in fright and whirls to face me.

"D-don't call my name out so suddenly! You s-scared the Devil out of me!"

"Sorry. I'm done with this artifact... and a few others. Where's Marie?"

Momo sighs. "Miss Becker told me she had something to take care of. She only left a few minutes ago."

I frown.

"Marie left? Where did she go?"

Momo points toward the ceiling.

"To meet with the Volgrim inspection team, of course!"

Check out the Volgrim subspecies artwork in the comment section below!

Part 194: Unexpected Visitors

"What Volgrim inspection team?" I ask, directing my question at the Satyr. " Why didn't Marie tell me she had to leave?"

Momo sighs. "I-I'm sorry, mister Hiro, sir. She couldn't. You were busy conversing with the artifacts and their errant souls, so Miss Becker didn't want to disturb you. Whenever a Volgrim inspection team arrives, she has to report to them at once. The Volgrim technically control Marie, so she has to do as they order."

Slowly, I nod. However, suspicions emerge in my mind. "How did Marie know the Volgrim had arrived? Did Umi send her a message?"

Momo shakes her head.

"No. Umi can't connect down here. Miss Becker has a little red light in each room. It's part of a relay system spread throughout the entire galaxy. If something important comes up, and Umi cannot detect Marie, she activates the relay. See?"

Momo gestures toward the vault's entrance. There, just a few feet away from the door, a small red lightbulb sits embedded in the wall. It continues to blink, just like Momo said it would.

"If Marie has already left, why has Umi kept the light blinking?"

Momo fidgets nervously. Without Marie around, she becomes visibly uncomfortable and much shyer in my presence. "I-I, um... Miss Becker p-probably hasn't made it to the top of the elevator shaft, yet. Umi won't disable the relay until Marie returns. It's all... part of, the, um... protocol..."

Momo trails off. I continue to stare at her, unconvinced by this sudden change of plans, but before I can say anything else, Momo pulls away from me and retreats behind the vault's control panel, putting it between us as a physical barrier.

"I'm sorry," I mutter. "I don't mean to make you uncomfortable. I'll, uh... return to inspecting the artifacts. Do you have another one for me?"

Momo nods. Wordlessly, she points to the ground beside my Wordsmithed chair, where a strangely shaped bone rests. Curved like a semi-circle, several broken, chipped teeth sit embedded in its frame, making me think it must be some animal or person's jaw.

Phoebe appears in my mind. "Jason. You don't trust Marie, and neither do I. You need to spy on her and see what she's up to."

I nod while casting a quick glance in Momo's direction. She meets my gaze and visibly shivers, forcing me to look away. I don't want to scare the poor girl. She's probably endured some awful things in her life to end up so deathly afraid of men.

I agree. I'll pretend to converse with the artifact. Momo won't know the difference.

I quickly pick up the giant animal bone and close my eyes. "Alright, I'm starting now."

Momo barely utters a squeak. "O-okay..."

After keeping my eyes closed for a few moments, I mutter under my breath, "Observe."

Instantly, my consciousness shifts. My mind seemingly travels out of my body, rushes straight at the vault's entrance, and passes through the door. A blur of motion greets me as I rapidly dash through every obstruction in my path, enter the elevator, and zip straight up into the sky. The giant, underground shaft, one which took Marie and me nearly twenty minutes to descend before, only takes me a few seconds to climb.

Whoosh!

I spot the elevator car, still ascending, not far above me. In the blink of an eye, I cross the one-mile distance and fly into the glassy compartment, appearing only inches from Marie's face. My vision stabilizes, and I quickly pull away while continuing to observe her.

She hasn't reached the surface yet, I say, speaking to Phoebe. However, Phoebe doesn't respond.

It takes me a moment to understand why my wife, usually a chatty-Cathy, is so quiet. She can't hear me. Solomon once surmised that my abilities and their effects might not work exactly the way I imagine them working. Using Observe must disconnect my mind from my Mind Realm, thus leaving my wife behind.

My vision hovers above Marie, watching and evaluating her. Marie stares straight forward at the elevator door. Her arms hang loosely at her sides, while her expression becomes as tranquil as a lake on a mid-summers day. Given her cybernetic physique, it doesn't surprise me that she doesn't have to breathe or fidget, but I quickly grow unnerved as Marie ignores even the most basic human mannerisms. It takes the lift five agonizing minutes to climb to the top, and all the while, I become more and more unnerved by her robotic stiffness.

If someone transplants their mind inside of a machine, how much of that person changes or disappears? Is Marie even human anymore? Disconnected from my former bodily functions and needs, would I change, too?

Does Marie dream, anymore? Does she feel love or compassion for other people? Does she ever wish to cry? If she does, can she? Is her robotic body capable of emulating such human emotions?

I don't have any answers, nor do I get the time to ponder the questions in my head, either. The lift arrives at the top of the shaft, and the door opens, allowing Marie to disembark.

However, she doesn't. The Head Scientist suddenly turns her head to the right and looks straight at me, freezing my blood.

Can she see me? Why would she look in my direction?

"Hm."

Marie stares at the spot where my vision seems to be floating for only a moment before grunting, shrugging her shoulders, and stepping off the lift.

The elevator door closes, but I stay behind for a moment, trying to stabilize my breathing. Having Marie look right at me gave me the scare of my life! However, it might have been a coincidence. If she truly saw me, she would have said something. Sometimes people gaze into the distance with thousand-yard stares. Maybe androids do the same thing as well.

After steadying my nerves, I float through the lift door and follow Marie. This time, however, I stay behind her, where she'll have to turn all the way around to look at me. If she does, it will confirm whether she saw me or not.

Marie's high heels click against the metallic floor like raindrops dripping from a rooftop. She sways her hips and arms in perfect rhythm, moving with such precision that her every step feels as if it's been calibrated to perfection. Given her biology, I can only conclude she must have done exactly that.

Marie walks past several researchers. They wave and smile politely at her, but she only gives them the briefest of passing glances.

Soon, Marie arrives in the Neutron Bomb testing room. I fall behind and stare with a mix of fascination, awe, and horror at the creatures standing up ahead. Unlike the demons and angels, who still bear distinctly human visages, the freakish-looking things standing and hovering in a semi-circle are so alien that I can immediately tell they do not hail from Earth.

Six Volgrim, consisting of four Technopaths, a Psion, and a Changeling, stand in a small cluster before a human researcher. The woman politely explains to them that Marie is presently occupied and will return quickly, but the Volgrim appear annoyed by the holdup.

"Wa gu nus ghans xuia' agnthiatat. Ir sha Haag Rataa'thha' ut nus tsangung ftaru'a iat un sha nagns san nuniasat, gha ghuftft saa' shut rathuftusx ala's iansuft gha rung ha'!"

A Volgrim Technopath babbles in its native language, spewing out words which are about as uncomfortable to listen to as nails on a chalkboard. The fellow hovers above the ground, with his lower body cut off and replaced with a circular, donut-shaped apparatus. The shiny steel cylinder allows him to levitate several inches above the woman and assume a dominating stance. His two arms end in multiple tentacles, giving him a somewhat Cthulhuian appearance. Numerous devices sit embedded in the Technopath's flesh. Among them are a breathing apparatus, which muffles his speech, and a series of electrical nodes stuck deep in his chest. I can only hazard a guess as to what each device does, but judging by the other Technopaths, who stand or hover on similar devices, he's not an outlier.

The female scientist bows quickly. "I-I'm sorry, Miss Lidra. I can't rush the Head Researcher! She is a very busy woman and occasionally takes a while to-"

"I'm here," Marie says, butting in. She strides across the room in a way I can only describe as domineering, allowing a look of anger to wash over her face. She snaps her fingers, forcing all of the Volgrim to acknowledge her presence. "It's only been a month since the last inspection. Where is Nufaris? Why isn't he here? Is the Executor himself too good for me, now?"

The Technopath who spoke before, Lidra, swivels to face Marie. I mentally facepalm upon realizing this Volgrim is technically female, though I can't see anything in her appearance that indicates her gender.

Heck, aside from the various chunks of technology embedded in her flesh, she isn't wearing any clothes! The Volgrim must have evolved very differently from life on Earth.

"Haag Rataa'thha', Ma'ua Bathka'. Wa ha'a ghausag ru' xuia' a''u'aft ru' u'a' shu'sx nuniasat! Thut lashasuth assanls as gaftaxung iat ghuftft unftx-"

The Technopath female babbles again in her awful, grating language, making me consider using Wordsmithing to translate her speech. However, before I can, Marie holds up her hand and silences the woman. "Stop! I can't take more than five seconds of that awful noise. You are currently standing in my laboratory. You speak my language. Understood?"

Her words cause a great stir in the Volgrim present. The Psion steps forward and raises its fist. A voice resounds in my head, transmitted via telepathy. [Hugh ga'a xuia! Du nus assanls su liath iat a'uiang ang saftft iat ghhas su gu, xuia ghu'shftatt ftussfta hianan! Wa a'a sha Vuftg'un, ang gha thuns'uft a'a'xshung xuia huftg-]

Once again, Marie interrupts the Volgrim speaking. "You're ten generations too young to try and threaten me, Judicator Halamis. How many trials of combat have you completed? How many forms of the Sinarii have you mastered? Don't you even think of pushing me around, or I'll make you regret your Day of Ascension."

Marie's words turn snide as she sneers haughtily at the Psion. Without a shred of fear, Marie talks down to the monstrous alien towering more than a foot over her head as if she were scolding a child.

The Psion, Judicator Halamis, pauses for a moment. When he speaks again, to my surprise, his words come out in flawless English.

[Your warrior spirit never fails to astound me, Head Researcher. I will abide by your rules.]

"Yes. You will."

Marie returns her attention to the Technopath from before.

"And you, Lidra. Who are you, and why hasn't Nufaris come? He always performs the inspections."

The Technopath female starts to open her mouth, but pauses for a moment. After shooting a glance at the Psion, she continues speaking. It occurs to me that the Psion must have communicated something with her telepathically.

"I am Sangin Lidra, Fourth Level, Third Echelon, and head of Clan Oblong. My reputation may pale in comparison to the Executor, but among my people, I am held in high regard."

Lidra bows her head slightly, revealing an ugly scar stretching across her bald, mottled skull. Despite being some person of importance, she has the look of a street thug, making me want to never stand anywhere she will notice me.

"Hmph. Head of Clan Oblong. Maybe on Volgarius, such a pretty title will earn you accolades, but in my laboratory, the only thing that matters is results! Who are these other clowns you've brought along? Was Muuxunuu too busy to visit, as well? Am I only worth a visit from the C-team?"

Lidra's finger-tentacles writhe around, revealing some emotion I have yet to parse. Her expression doesn't change, but as she hovers slightly to the left, I get the impression Marie's words have angered her.

The female Technopath waves one tentacle toward the lone Changeling in the group. "Of course. My apologies, I will introduce you at once. This one is known as Mellir, a Seventh Class Lead Observer at Horax Three. Mellir's Aspect has reached the second tier of Settler."

Marie raises her eyebrows. "Settler? Impressive. Given your status, I'm surprised you have time to practice your infiltration skills."

The Changeling bows its head. "This one lives its life to pursue science. It is this one's greatest honor to come and visit the Remnant Research Facility. Many Changelings have uttered incredible stories about you."

Unlike the Psion, who wears shiny golden armor, with several interlocking pieces to keep its mobility high, or the Technopaths, who wear nothing at all and rely on augmentations to cover their bodies, the Changeling wears a shiny white coat with a couple of badges on its front. Even without any hair, I can only describe his appearance as "slicked back" and "professional."

However, calling Mellir a 'him' seems incorrect. It doesn't appear to have any defined gender, and given its huge, bulbous eyes and slim, androgynous build, I can't help but wonder if the Changeling is unique in its dimorphism.

For the first time since her arrival, Marie smiles. "You speak very eloquently, Mellir. Unlike the others here, you don't require a translation device. Did you learn my language ahead of time?"

Mellir spreads its arms wide. "Yes. This one spent fifteen cycles mastering the languages of humanity two generations ago. The different speech patterns in your dialect are most intriguing. The language known as 'Chinese' is a particular favorite among this one's group, as we occasionally converse in it during maturation periods. If we have time later, this one would enjoy dialoguing with you in regards to some historical pieces of literature from your homeworld."

Marie nods. "We will see. I don't consider myself a history buff, but my archives do possess all of the recovered literature I could obtain prior to Earth's bombardment. Continue, Lidra."

Marie immediately returns her attention to the head Technopath. Lidra introduces the next Volgrim, a fellow Technopath.

"This male is known as Loputo Jidelor, a prodigy of Clan Symmetra. He recently reached the Third Level and is thus still classified as a First Echelon developer. Despite his low status, he has shown much promise in the fields of quantum manipulation. He may soon start reverse-engineering pieces of technology from the Precursor Era."

Marie turns her attention toward the, presumably, young male Technopath. Unlike Lidra, who floats above the ground on a hovering device, Loputo Jidelor stands on two flesh and blood legs. However, in place of his right arm is a long, metallic limb with dozens of razor-thin threads waving to and fro where his 'wrist' ends. Each one moves independently, much like the tentacles on his left arm, but their movements appear far more precise. He, too, possesses dozens of metallic pieces attached seemingly at random to his skin and skull, but his bipedal appearance at least gives me the vague illusion he might not stab me in the back at the first possible opportunity.

Jidelor bows stiffly toward Marie, nearly stumbling and falling to the ground as he does. "Long have I awaited this day. Forgive the brash words of my superiors earlier, for they did not mean to impose on you in such a rude manner. Many of my people are unfamiliar with human customs. We are much more candid than your species as a whole, so we tend to overlook social courtesy."

As Jidelor bows, Marie taps her lip. "Apology accepted. Let's hope you don't come to regret your words, eh? Continue, Lidra."

Lidra nods. She gestures to the third of four Technopaths, one who sits atop four long, spindly spider-legs. Much like Lidra, his lower section is missing, replaced instead with a robotic movement apparatus. Both of his eyes glow green, revealing their artificial nature.

"This one is Ordonis Limea, a Second Level prodigy of Clan Oblong. He has already reached the fifth Echelon and will soon advance to the Third Level. I recommended him in the hopes of expanding his horizons. With any luck, a mere glance at your laboratory will broaden his horizons and allow a breakthrough."

Marie shakes her head. "The Remnant Oasis is not a vacation hotspot, Miss Lidra. Do not bring children here in the hopes of obtaining pointers. I am a very busy woman, and inspections accomplish little more than slowing me down. I don't have time to babysit."

Ordonis, the third Technopath, stiffens visibly at Marie's words. He narrows his glowing eyes. "I am no child. Forgive my insolence, Lady Lidra, but this human's words are arrogant and disrespectful! By mocking me, she insults our clan!"

Lidra nods. She turns to gaze at Marie with a hint of anger in her eyes. "Ordonis speaks the truth. We might be presently standing in your laboratory, Head Scientist, but you have no right to insult us. Apologize at once! If the Founders hear about your blatant disregard for decorum-"

"They'll do what?" Marie asks, rolling her eyes. "Don't sass me. If I added the whole lot of you together, you still wouldn't be a hundredth as valuable to the Founders as me. Don't bite off more than you can chew, children. If you can't afford to bring the Executor here, then don't make any claims about your importance."

Marie turns up her nose at Ordonis, paying him no more mind. Before he can fume any further, the Psion, Judicator Halamis, butts in.

[Scientist Becker, let us not squabble over cross-species etiquette. I will introduce the last guest in Lidra's stead. I think you'll find her identity quite interesting.]

Halamis steps backward, pressing his back against Ordonis and forcing the Technopath to retreat. Despite his annoyance, the youngest Clan Oblong member can do little more than fume with the Psion shoving him aside. I don't know anything about the rankings of those present, but Halamis's political clout must be substantially higher than even Lidra's. After all, Marie only knew him out of the entire inspection team.

The fourth and final Technopath steps forward. Their hideous face makes my stomach churn. With skin so mottled that it looks like someone threw boiling oil on their face, I can barely stomach the sight of the horrible, disgusting monster posing as a Technopath. I have a hard enough time trying to guess the gender of the other ones, let alone the deformed freak Marie ended up meeting last.

[This being is known as Psymin Miralax. You should be familiar with her work on bio-replication transducers. She is a member of-]

"I know," Marie says, a huge smile spreading across her face. She interrupts the Judicator's introduction, steps forward, and bows. "Psymin Miralax. My apologies for not recognizing one of the Sentinel designers! I've never seen a picture of your face, but I know the names of all four hundred Technopaths involved with the Celestial Facility's construction. Prying the information from Cuanali's tentacles was an ordeal I won't soon forget!"

The deformed-looking Technopath nods politely and spreads her arms out in what I hope is a welcoming gesture. She steps forward, using two robotic legs to plod across the ground noisily.

"Head Scientist. I am pleased. To meet you. My honor. Ask anything. I will answer."

Psymin's Miralax's tone sends shivers down my spine. Her robotic voice echoes the same monstrous sentiments as the rest of her body. It's unpleasant and downright painful to listen to.

Marie clears her throats. "Judging by your condition, it seems that you still have yet to recover from your ancient injuries. If you'd like, I would be more than happy to show you one of my premier inventions, a top-level device few Volgrim have seen before. Have you heard of my Maturation Pods?"

Psymin's tentacles shiver slightly. "Yes. I have. Much hope. The damage. Is permanent. You help me. I help you. Mutual understanding."

"Haha. It would be my pleasure. Incidentally, that alloy on your implants... is that...?"

"Yes. Living Moldanium. Similar to the Sentinels. Difficult to create. Prohibitively expensive."

"I see. Ah, well. That's life, haha."

Marie laughs lightly, as if enjoying some unspoken joke. However, for the briefest of moments, I notice a spark in her eyes, a hint of greed far surpassing that which mortals can understand. She stares at Psymin's legs for a split-second too long, revealing her desire to me, the only human still observing her.

Even in a cybernetic shell, I manage to pick up her former human 'tells.' The aliens might be unfamiliar with human mannerisms, but I'm not. Whatever Living Moldanium is, it appears to be something Marie greatly desires. I wonder why?

Lidra, the first Technopath, steps forward. "Now then. We've introduced ourselves, Head Scientist, Marie Becker. Are we done dawdling, or must we delay longer before moving on to today's inspection?"

Marie looks at Lidra for a moment, then returns her gaze to the Psion, Halamis. "As I said before, I'm exceedingly busy at the moment. I was in the middle of some high-priority calibrations when Umi notified me of your arrival. I hope twenty minutes will be enough to sate your curiosity."

The Judicator presses his palms together. [Yes. Fifteen standard units will be more than enough time for us. The Plague recently took over two outpost worlds; therefore, we need a weapon capable of repelling them as quickly as possible.]

"Hmm... a new weapon..."

Marie lowers her eyes to think and begins rubbing her chin. As she does, a question appears in my mind.

What is the Plague, and how can it travel between worlds? I've never heard of a planet-hopping disease before. More importantly, how in the hell would a weapon repel a plague? That makes no sense whatsoever. Oh, god, I hope it's not some kind of zombie-infection like in the movies. That would suck!

While my thoughts run rampant, Marie's eyes shine with renewed energy. She returns her attention to Lidra. "Ah! Yes, I do have something I've been working on. There's this neuron-blocker I wanted to use to suppress alpha and beta signals in the brain, but it might prove useful to the Volgrim if manufactured on a mass-scale or converted into a weaponized package. Follow me."

Marie spins on her heel and immediately begins walking, forcing the Volgrim to snap to attention and follow after her. However, as she turns around, once again, her eyes seem to lift into the air for a split-second and meet mine. She quickly lowers her gaze and continues walking, but her attempt to hide her thoughts doesn't fool me this time.

Marie can see me. I don't know how, but more than a dozen possibilities immediately spring to mind. One of them seems more plausible than the others.

When I use 'Locate,' it's not my vision that disconnects from my body, but my entire soul.

I don't know what my soul looks like, or if it has any appearance at all. What I do know is that, if my hypothesis is correct, it would explain many incidents in my past.

Why can I listen in on conversations when observing others? Does my soul have ears?

Why can't I Wordsmith when observing? Is it because I can't speak through my mouth, and thus cannot channel my magic?

Both of these options seem likely. It also explains why I can't communicate with Phoebe anymore. My Mind Realm must be a part of my physical body: My brain. If I disconnect my soul, my Mind Realm is likely still inside my body, along with my mind-wife.

Finally, if everything I just said is true, it explains why Marie can see me. Why wouldn't she have such a capability? She works with demons. Given Ose's ability to astrally project herself, Marie would never allow a gap in her security to exist. She probably has methods to search for souls floating around.

Everything makes sense. It all falls into place. My 'vision' exists as a result of my disconnected soul.

The thought sends worry flooding into the back of my mind.

If I've truly disconnected my soul, then I am in great danger. I don't have Wordsmithing to defend myself. Presumably, some demons might not only be able to see me, but snatch my soul out of the air, as well. I could end up as someone's dinner before I have a chance to react!

However...

The fact that Marie hasn't said anything to me must indicate her tacit approval of my witnessing this meeting. She could have scolded me or ordered me to leave, but she didn't. She barely even acknowledged my presence.

What does she want me to see?

* * *

Marie guides the group of Volgrim out of her primary laboratory, and into a smaller side chamber. There, dozens of machines sit embedded in the walls, with huge vacuum tubes sending coils of lightning or streams of matter and debris back and forth between both sides of the pipes. The largest machine in the middle of the room features dozens of metallic Technopath-like tentacles spilling from the ceiling, at the ends of which reside laser-emitters that work together to craft three-dimensional objects out of electrical energy. Even as everyone arrives, the machine finishes fabricating a tubular object three feet long, making me wonder what its purpose might be.

Marie clears her throat. "Since this is your first time here, Miss Lidra, allow me to introduce you to my state-of-the-art nanotechnology testing facility. In here, five of my brightest and most talented scientists labor to create the devices you use in your efforts to combat the Plague."

Marie gestures to a perfectly smooth, round ball sitting on a table. Lidra's eyes widen in shock. She and the other Technopaths recoil in horror and take several steps back. "Head Scientist! How could you allow a biomaterial devourer to sit out in the open?! Don't you understand the dangers inherent with a device of such destructive-"

"Of course, I do," Marie says, rolling her eyes. "This isn't a biomaterial devourer. The device you speak of is at least five generations old. This object is a bio-splitter, a far more advanced weapon, with a function to target and destroy only life forms I approve. Even if it were to detonate, the Volgrim standing here would be perfectly safe. However, it does have a few lingering issues, hence why I'm still developing it."

The Psion, Judicator Halamis, glances at the nervous expressions on his Technopath allies' faces. Unaware of the underlying reasons behind their terror, his voice contains a hint of hesitation.

[Issues?]

"Yes. While it presently will not consume any biomaterial I designate as safe, it does release a terrible aerosol byproduct into the environment capable of causing flesh necrosis. Until I solve the necrosis issue, I cannot recommend it for combatting the Plague."

The Technopaths tilt their heads toward Marie. Mixtures of fear and awe appear in their gazes. Even the green-glowing-eyed Technopath, Ordonis, appears enlightened by her words. "To prevent the weapon from eliminating specific types of organic material, your nanites must be three times more advanced than anything my clan has developed."

Marie turns to gaze at Ordonis. Despite his outburst not even five minutes ago, her eyes don't contain even a trace of resentment. "Three times? Haha. Your people could easily craft nanites a hundred times more intelligent than these, but they've banned Alpha and Beta-level AI. Even with Umi's help, I was only able to improve the bio-splitter to this level."

"Umi?" Ordonis asks. "Who might that be? I've not heard you mention that researcher yet."

Lidra's hover-chair turns in midair, allowing her to face her junior colleague. "Ordonis! You embarrass me. Umi is Head Researcher Becker's Alpha-level artificial intelligence. I told you to read her executive files on the way here!"

Ordonis lowers his head. "I apologize, clan leader. I was lax in my research."

"Hmph. When we depart, I'll invoke an Echelon demerit for your carelessness. Speak not of this again."

"Yes, clan leader."

Ordonis falls silent, unable to meet his leader's gaze. I don't know what an Echelon demerit is, but it sounds terrible. I feel kinda bad for the weird, Cthulhuian-alien-person.

Marie claps her hands, grabbing everyone's attention. "Here is the device, everyone. I present to you all: the Neuron Blocker."

Marie raises her hand, revealing a tiny pill-shaped cylinder held between her thumb and index finger. The transparent pill appears empty, possessing nothing inside it at all. However, based on Marie's cautious movements, I can only assume it must contain something she'd rather not lose.

Lidra floats a little closer to the Head Researcher. The bio-attachment fastened across her eye zooms in, enhancing her vision to examine the device in Marie's grasp.

"Impressive. The nanites contained within are a few factors smaller than others I've seen both inside this laboratory, and outside as well. You must have shrunk them to assist in the mental attachment process."

"Ah, you have some talent after all," Marie says, praising the Technopath's observation. "That's right. My goal with this device is to shut down specific receptors inside a subject's brain. Given how the Plague fuses with its host's nervous system, I've spent ages trying to find a way of blocking the neurological stimuli. Sadly, until we field test it, I won't know if it has any effect."

Marie walks past Lidra and stops before Judicator Halamis. The Psion stares at her curiously as she places her hands on her hips. "How long must I wait before you bring me a live sample? Are you telling me the mightiest warriors among your people can't capture one infested host? Is that why Executor Nufaris didn't come this time? Was he too embarrassed to show his face?"

The Psion retreats a step under Marie's verbal barrage. [Executor Nufaris is a busy leader. We needed his skills at the frontlines.]

"Hmph. From what I've gathered, your entire species has begun falling through the cracks over the last several millennia. Your intelligence networks have turned slipshod, while your research facilities have fallen far behind mine. What could be the cause, I wonder?"

Lidra narrows her eyes to slits. "What, indeed? Don't think we haven't detected your infra-spectrum transmissions probing our intelligence networks, human. Your attempts to disrupt our communications and feed us false information have fallen flat every time. Need I go on?"

"I'm only joking," Marie says, waving her hand flippantly. She takes a few steps toward Lidra and deposits the prototype neural-blocker in the Technopath's tentacles. "By the way, I have a question for all of you. I've heard some rumors regarding the demons that have left me a little unsettled. Could you, perhaps, clarify them for me?"

My heart skips a beat. The only rumors she could be referring to would involve humans and the Labyrinth Core takeover. Why is she bringing us up in front of these high-ranking Volgrim delegates?!

The Psion chirps in annoyance, his telepathic voice emitting a piercing squeal for a moment before speaking. [Hiiga! Rumors? Please, Head Scientist, do not dignify the petty squabbles of the demons with your attention. The Plague should be your only priority. Whatever happens in the Labyrinth won't affect you in the slightest.]

Marie assumes a neutral expression. She turns around, and folds her hands behind her back, while strutting from left to right like an enlightened sage. "Of course not, but that doesn't mean I can't ask questions. Are the containment protocols still holding? What about the rumors surrounding Diablo's departure as the Third Emperor?"

The Volgrim glance at one another, confused about Marie's train of thought. Lidra's tentacles twitch as she shoots a glance at the equipment in Marie's laboratory she'd clearly rather be discussing. "Yes, yes, of course, they are. I don't know what rumors you might have heard, but the new Third Emperor is someone you should know intimately: The Emperor of Infiltration, Ose. She explained to us that due to an internal power struggle, Diablo fell comatose after one of the Hidden Emperors launched a sneak attack. Bael and the Dukes killed the assailant, restored order, and allowed Ose to assume the mantle of power. Given her contributions to our people over the last few epochs, I can't say a single Founder found her rise troublesome."

[It is as Sangin Lidra says,] Judicator Halamis adds. [We did receive news that the Hidden Emperor's cult managed to rope in a planet of humans for his dirty work, but we used a neutron warhead to destroy the planet. It was a substantial loss of resources, I might add.]

Marie taps her lip. She continues to keep her back to the Volgrim delegates while gazing at a nano-printer as it assembles a device out of thin air. "Mmm. Someone told me the humans had obtained advanced weaponry. Have you heard anything about that?"

This time, Loputo Jidelor, the second Technopath introduced earlier, butts into the conversation. "With all due respect, Head Scientist, the humans have made no such technological advancements. If they had, Ose would have told us. What is your point? Why bring up the state of the Labyrinth? The demons are more than capable of quelling a human rebellion, even if fifty million of your people banded together. If the demons could not handle a small terrorist insurrection, I would be extremely disappointed in their species."

[They do hold the numerical advantage by several factors,] Judicator Halamis adds.

Marie heaves a dramatic sigh. She turns on her heel, but once again, for a split-second, she pauses to stare at the spot where I'm hovering. I levitate some ten feet off the ground, right next to the room's entrance, where her gaze meeting mine has to be intentional. Marie quickly looks away, but finally, I confirm she has been able to see me the whole time.

She must be asking about the humans deliberately. But why? Is she trying to paint a target on my back? Is she trying to pressure me, somehow? What the hell is her game?

Marie slowly paces over to the Volgrim. "I don't get out much, as you can imagine. Sometimes, I yearn to walk in a meadow or press my toes into a beach's sand. I might be an evolved cybernetic being, but knowing the humans are still living in peace warms my heart. My apologies for bothering you with mundane questions. Shall we continue the inspection?"

The Volgrim visibly relax, glad to be free of the useless, grating discussion. Marie continues showing them various gadgets and inventions, but while she does, my mind drifts off elsewhere.

I suddenly realize why Marie asked the Volgrim about my movements on Tarus II, as well as the events that have transpired in the Labyrinth. She wanted me to see how little the Volgrim care about my actions, or rather, how little they know.

The Volgrim aren't aware that I exist. Me. The Hero. A being with transcendent magical powers capable of uplifting humanity to its former glory. Beyond that, my ability is Wordsmithing, a power so incredible that some have described it as Creator-level magic.

The Volgrim don't know about my existence, but what if they did? How far would they go to silence me? What atrocities would they unleash if they found out humanity was breaking its chains and rising once more?

That's right. Marie's questions weren't only intended to inform me about what the Volgrim know, but also to threaten me.

Marie wants me to be compliant. She doesn't want me to overstep my bounds and upend her plan for reviving humanity. The question is, how do I feel about her methods?

If Marie wants me to abandon humanity, she's going to have a bad time. However, if she merely wishes for me to delay or alter my plans, I don't have a problem with that. I could use her help... even if I know she's acting more than a little disingenuous. She has a hoard of resources at her disposal, and more importantly, information.

Marie knows about the Volgrim, the 'Plague,' the demons, and whatever else she hasn't told me yet. Her information is valuable enough that I have to consider the consequences of getting on her bad side. With a single message, she could notify the Volgrim of my existence and force me into hiding forever.

How many Volgrim are there in the galaxy? Even with my Wordsmithing, can I fight off a whole army of Psions, Technopaths, and Ascended? Doubtful.

Alright, Marie.

Alright.

I'll play your little game. But, as you're no doubt aware, all you've accomplished is pissing me off.

We'll see who has the last laugh.

* * *

My resolve hardens as I continue following the Volgrim delegates.

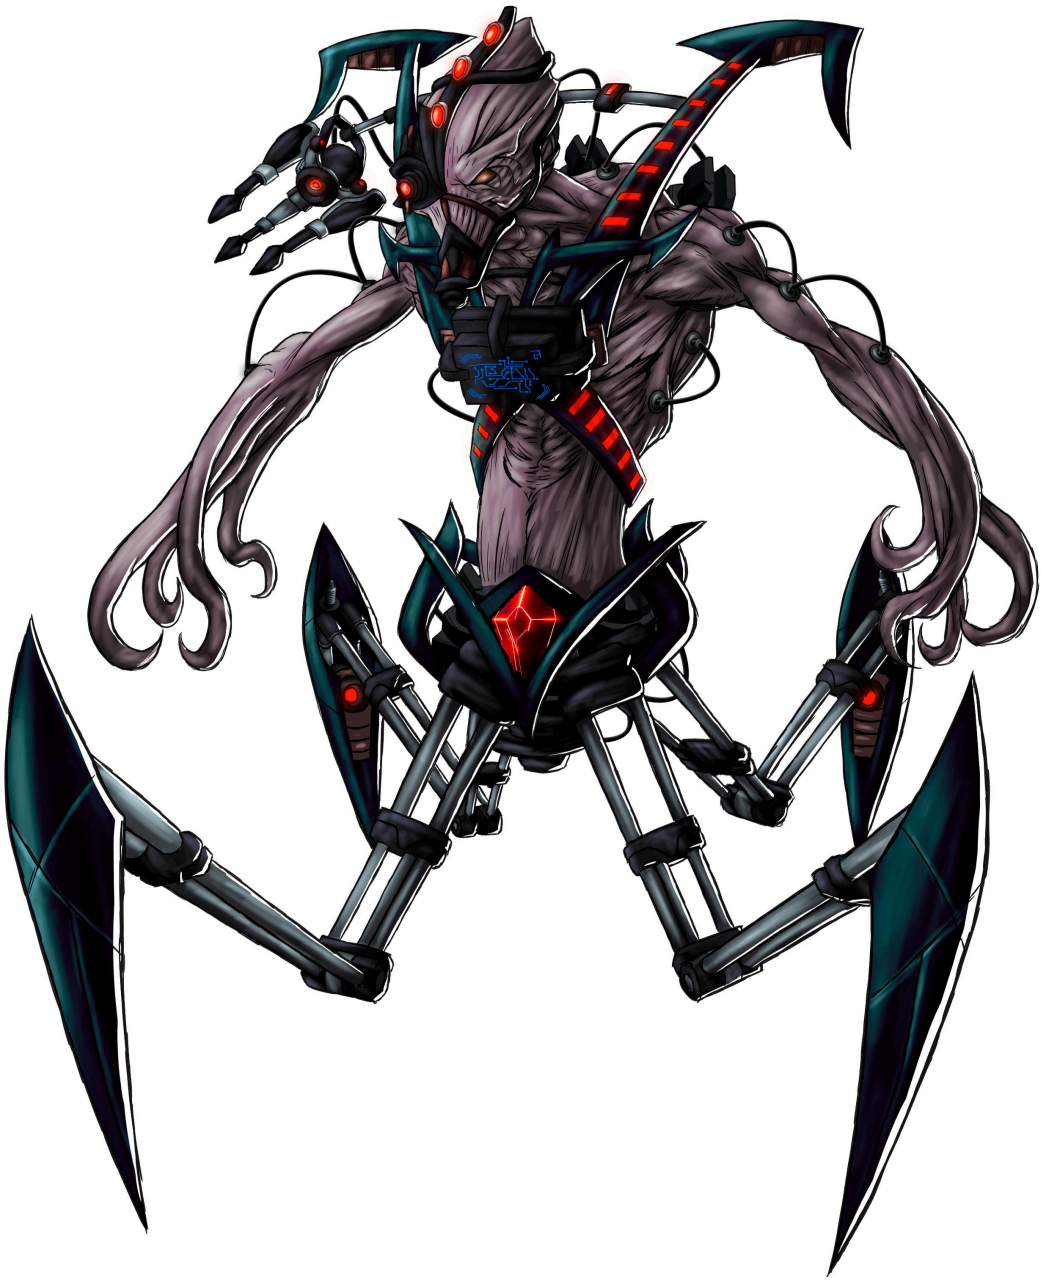
Author Note: I couldn't link the Volgrim in the previous post due to the character limits, but now I can!

The Ascended:

Psions:

Changelings:

Technopaths:



If you're a patron, check out the Patreon posts about the Volgrim, too!

The Ascended: https://www.patreon.com/posts/secret-2-first-23569500

The Psions: https://www.patreon.com/posts/secret-3-second-23626264

The Changelings: https://www.patreon.com/posts/secret-4-third-23670362

The Technopaths: https://www.patreon.com/posts/secret-5-fourth-23803230

And finally, the Dolgrimites, who have yet to appear in the story: https://www.patreon.com/posts/secret-6-fifth-23836005

Part 195: Umi's Core

Marie leads the Volgrim inspection team from one facility to another, breezing through a variety of different inventions, gadgets, and technological marvels, each one capable of causing a seismic shift in the era before my Cryogenic stasis. Without Solomon's Crown, I can only rely on the prior knowledge I've accrued from the Knowledge-Seeker. Still, surprisingly, I'm able to parse more of what Marie is saying than I first expected.

The Head Scientist leads her visitors into another room, one substantially larger than all the others from before. Glass tubes reach from the ceiling to the floor, transporting various liquids into a single, gigantic tank in the center of the room. The pipe array branches out, spreads around, and engulfs the transparent vat like a horde of squid embracing an egg.

Inside the vat, a misshapen lump of meat nearly thirty feet tall and ten feet in diameter pulses occasionally, its rhythmic throbs vaguely resembling a heartbeat.

Thump. Thump. Thump.

I linger by the room's entrance, occasionally turning my gaze to examine all the various parts of this strange inner room. It doesn't take me long to figure out what this place is.

It's Umi's 'core.'

The gruesome meat-lump pulsating with life in the center of the room sends a shiver through my soul. Having a chunk of flesh represent a supercomputer unnerves me in a way I couldn't have imagined an hour ago. Every beat of its 'heart' makes me want to float away and escape this room. My instincts tell me that it's an unnatural abomination spawned by a dark wizard, not a highly advanced supercomputer created via modern science.

Marie slows to a stop just ten feet away from the crystal-clear nutrient vat. She folds her hands behind her back and smiles. "Umi. How are you feeling, today?"

Umi's electronic voice squelches throughout the room. "Head Researcher Marie Becker: My systems are running at 100% efficiency. All of my background processes are functioning at nominal values."

Marie nods, then turns around to face the six Volgrim behind her. Judicator Halamis, having seen the supercomputer before, appears unmoved. However, the wide-eyed gazes from the other Volgrim betrays the fear in their hearts. Three of the four Technopaths keep their distance, staying wary of the biological superentity. However, the Changeling, Mellir, manages to conceal its emotions and assume a calm posture, with both arms hanging loosely at its sides. Additionally, the disfigured Technopath, Psymin Miralax, even takes a few steps forward to scrutinize the supercomputer's core.

"This machine. Highly advanced. Safeguards?"

Miralax's harsh, robotic voice grates on my senses the same as when I first heard it. She gestures toward Marie with what I can only assume is a curious motion.

Marie nods. "Do not worry. Umi is my greatest creation: a bio-computer capable of reason, logic, and emotion. I invested fifty years of my life into creating her, thus ensuring she would not turn rogue, even if a catastrophe were to occur. Thousands of custom-created rules all interlock together to form an impenetrable logic net, one which prevents her from becoming a terror to biological life, unlike the technological horrors which once victimized your species."

Marie begins pacing back and forth. She wavers between gazing at Psymin Miralax and the floor, taking a moment every now and then to gather her thoughts. "When I first created Umi, I lacked data about the nature of artificial intelligence. I was unaware of the Volgrim's history, and thus nearly blundered into catastrophic mistakes time and time again. It was only with the help of a mysterious benefactor that my team of scientists and I were able to successfully create a comprehensive list of rules limiting Umi's growth to the realm of Alpha intelligence. Obviously, if she were to ascend to Zeta level or beyond, the results would be catastrophic."

Psymin Miralax stomps forward slowly, each of her heavily armored legs striking the tiled floor with substantial force. "I am curious. Control; impossible. Guiding its development. How?"

Marie sighs. "With all due respect, the Celestial Designers made many critical mistakes with their implementation of the Sentinel Defense Network. Creating an Overmind to guide the lower intelligences while only placing weak limits on its self-replication programming meant that even minute improvements in its core programming would eventually lead to exponential growth. Whether that growth took one year or one thousand, that did not matter."

Marie clears her throat. "Secondly, while you and your fellow Celestials may have created the Sentinels during a war, I, too, developed Umi under similar harsh circumstances. The difference is that I never wavered in my desire for control. I never took shortcuts, but you did. Take this biological core, for instance..."

Marie walks over to the glass vat and raps on it with her knuckles. A hollow gong resounds from the impact point, dissipating a split-second later as the facility swallows the sound whole.

"I used the scans of thousands of human brains to create a digitized logic center for Umi's core. You, on the other hand, used a single brain scan for each Sentinel, causing reductive flaws in their programming. A choice borne of urgency, I'm sure, but one you inevitably paid the price for."

Psymin bows her head. She takes a step backward and spreads out her arms. "I contemplate. I comprehend."

"If you have any further questions, feel free to ask me later," Marie says. She walks over to the side of the nutrient tank and taps a black box embedded on its side. "Sangin Lidra, as the leader of this inspection, I invite you to come and check Umi's restrictor chip. I assure you that it is functioning properly, but it is customary for a clan head to perform the inspection."

The head of Clan Oblong visibly stiffens. Her hovering body lowers an inch or two as she appears to shrink behind her fellow Technoapths. "Must... must I? Ordonis! Go and inspect the restrictor chip. You are the most suited for this arrangement."

To my surprise, the Technopath leader appears visibly unnerved by the biomechanical computer, possibly even moreso than me. Every time her gaze reaches the pulsing biomass, she turns away, unable to look at it.

Lidra's junior, Ordonis Limea, turns green with fright. The spider-legged Technopath glances at his superior as if she were ordering him to die on the frontlines of a battlefield. "A-ah! Clan Leader... such an honor should surely be yours! I dare not overstep my lowly position in the clan to perform such an... essential duty."

Lidra's tentacle hands tremble and writhe furiously. She glares at Ordonis with a gaze that could melt steel. "Bah! Do as I say! Inspect the restrictor chip at once! Don't make me add a second demerit for breaching protocol!"

Marie watches as the Technopaths argue amongst each other, both of them trying desperately to avoid coming any closer to the creepy-looking, gigantic biomass suspended in nutrient fluids. Eventually, with a huge sigh, Marie facepalms, unable to believe their cowardice.

"...Delegates, please. Your fears are unwarranted. Umi is incapable of harming you. Your wariness of Alpha-level AI borders on the nonsensical."

Lidra whirls to face Marie. "No! You are wrong! I have seen holo-files of the Seven Great Wars! Countless Volgrim perished under the onslaught of their former servants, indestructible killing machines produced to protect them. I cannot bear to even look at this dreadful monster you've created. Knowing it resides in the same galaxy as me is far more than I can stand!"

"Well, it does. So get over yourself."

Marie rolls her eyes, clearly annoyed with the clan leader's groundless fears. Before the two can squabble further, Psymin clomps forward on her armored legs and nods. "No need. I will inspect. I am Fifth-Level. Third Echelon. Show me."

Emboldened by the Celestial Designer's courage, Loputo Jidelor quickly steps forward and bows. His artificial arm writhes excitedly as he presents himself before Marie. "Anything the Celestial Designer thinks safe enough to inspect, I would like to witness."

"Great," Marie says, her tone dry. "At least you two have a bit of courage. Umi's restrictor plate is hardly worth shrinking away from. I guess Clan Oblong isn't made of the same stuff as Symmetra, eh?"

Marie's praise seems to slap Lidra and her junior, Ordonis, straight across their faces. Both of them recoil in shame and shoot a look of indignation at Loputo.

"That third-level Symmetra youth hasn't the qualifications to perform an inspection-" Lidra starts to say. However, Marie immediately turns her back on the Oblong Technopaths and leads the other two over to Umi's nutrient vat.

"Those with curiosity have the qualifications to discover. Don't you agree, Miss Psymin? Helping to create a whole new branch of robotics in the middle of the Sixth Great War must have required a great amount of courage. What, may I ask, was your level at that time?"

Psymin plods along behind Marie, but always keeps her movements calm and respectful. She bows her head at Marie's words. "Third Level. Second Echelon. I was. A novice."

"Haha. Only one Echelon above Jidelor. It's never too early to step into the unknown."

Marie kneels next to Umi's gigantic liquid vat and taps the three-by-three-foot plate bolted onto its side. "Look here, do you see this gravimetric-enhanced blast-plate? It ensures that even if a catastrophe were to occur inside my laboratory, Umi's entire apparatus would break before her containment chip."

Loputo strokes his chin with several of the tentacles on his flesh-and-blood left arm. "You intend to ensure that if all of the humans here should perish in an accident, your Alpha-level-AI will also die, or at least continue in its restricted state."

"Exactly," Marie replies. She reaches underneath the restrictor plate and procures a thin piece of metal with a thick handle at the other end. "Psymin Miralax, if you'd be so kind...?"

Psymin blinks in surprise as Marie hands the nine-inch-long slender object to her. The disfigured Technopath easily grasps hold of the object but cocks her head questioningly after a moment. "This thin pole. Is strange. What is it?"

"It's called a 'screwdriver,'" Marie says, stifling a chuckle. "Low-tech to ensure durability. Just unscrew the bolts here, here, and there. The cover will come right off."

"I comprehend."

Psymin silently kneels and presses the screwdriver against the nearest bolt's head. It slides into a plus-shaped groove, and she begins rapidly twisting from right to left. Thanks to her tentacles, her movements appear ten times more dextrous and fluid than any human fingers, saving her from twisting and rotating her arm.

I hover through the air and draw a little closer to get a better look. After unscrewing all the bolts, Psymin pulls off the cover to the restrictor plate and peers inside. A symmetrically aligned series of transistors, microscopic wires, and circuitboards overlap and cross one another in intricate, difficult-to-follow patterns. Psymin leers her hideous, mottled head forward and peers at the board with her iris inspection unit. It clicks and whirrs as she examines the restrictor plate from one corner to the opposite.

"Impressive. Mere nanometers. Separate the relays. Resursive augmentations. No limit to ingenuity."

Marie waves her hand dismissively, but her face flushes red. "Oh, pish. It was just a little something I threw together over a few rainy afternoons. The most important additions came from Clan Artarax three epochs ago. They came up with an innovative method for layering the nanowires together to triple its efficiency..."

Marie and Psymin fire off incomprehensible technobabble at one another for a couple of minutes. Loputo chimes in now and then, but I quickly realize just how strongly the 'levels' correlate to knowledge between Technopaths. A glance at the Clan Oblong members reveals that only Lidra appears capable of following along with Marie and Psymin, while Ordonis seems completely lost, and even Loputo only grasps the basics of their words.

To my surprise, aside from the two Technopaths, I only spot the Psion, Judicator Halamis, standing by himself. Where did the Changeling go?

I flick my gaze around the room and discover Mellir standing on the opposite side of Umi's containment tank. The big-headed, bald alien folds its hands behind its back and slowly paces around the tank's perimeter, examining the massive fleshy blob inside with a look of what I assume is curiosity. Occasionally, it opens its mouth and emits chirping and clicking noises, creating a mixture of bug and birdlike sounds.

I haven't a clue what the Changeling is doing. Still, given its resemblance to Roswell aliens, I decide to float a little closer and observe. When I do, I spot a small device stuck in its ear canal resembling a communicator. It only takes me a moment to realize Mellir must be communicating with someone through it.

As if confirming my thoughts, Mellir turns on its heel and walks around the tank to Marie's side. "Head Scientist, this one must offer its sincerest apologies. Due to a series of unfortunate events occurring outside of this one's control, it appears that Confessor Vulpanix has decided to join today's inspection. Her mood is far from amiable."

Marie's pleasant chat with Psymin and Loputo comes to a screeching halt. She whirls to face Mellir, revealing a face drained of blood. "What name did you say? Confessor Vulpanix?"

"That is affirmative," Mellir replies. The Changeling's poker-face gives off no hints of its inner emotions, but Marie's does.

"Damn, damn, damn! Of all the hotheaded bastards Dosena could have sent, she chose- gah! How long before-?!"

"Thirty seconds," Mellir replies. "The Confessor's shuttle landed ten minutes ago."

"Umi!" Marie barks. "Confirm the Confessor's position! Where is she?"

From the ceiling, Umi's voice descends like ice-water, drenching Marie and the Volgrim guests in dread. "Head Research Marie Becker, the Confessor is less than five hundred feet away and rapidly closing the gap. She will enter the Mind Chamber in T-minus fifteen seconds."

Marie expression turns enraged. "Augh! I was not ready for her. Son of a bitch."

I float into the air and linger near the ceiling. Marie's sudden change in mood worries me more than anything else that has happened today. Not once have I seen anything fluster her, but this single Volgrim visitor appears to be her Kryptonite. Not even the other Volgrim present hold a candle to the Confessor.

Boom!

The sliding doors to the room yank open violently, propelled by an external telekinetic force. They wrench into the fully opened position and break off their hinges to hang loosely at their sides.

Stomp, click. Stomp, click.

Heavy footsteps echo in the room as a Psion thirty percent more massive than Judicator Halamis storms into the room. Wearing gaudy, elaborate black and gold robes, the high-ranking Confessor enters with a presence capable of cowing the roiling seas. Her insect-like head, with its six eyes, barely gives the two members of the Oblong Clan a passing glance. She briefly sizes Halamis up before stomping toward Marie, Psymin, and Loputo.

[Ma'ua Bathka'! Wha'a a'a xuia' nanna't?! I tans xuia shu'sx nuniasat ur ag'antha gha'nung 'aga'gung nx a''u'aft, xas xuia rauftag su urra' na a l'ula' ghaftthuna! Thut gut'atlaths ghuftft nus gu ianlianuthag.]

The Confessor's harsh, clicky voice echoes in the minds of everyone present, projected outward via her psionic powers. She extends an arrogant finger toward Marie, as if accusing the Head Scientist of something seedy.

A look of annoyance appears in Marie's eyes, but she keeps her tone respectful. "Confessor Vulpanix, my apologies. I have been leading the inspection team around for the past fifteen minutes. I did not know that you were coming, or I would have provided a suitable-"

[Nuntanta! Yuia ghu'shftatt g'u'afta', I thuiaftg ha'a knughn xuia'g ha'a nushung ftias agnthiatat ang ftuat! Yuia' raa' gutgiatst na!]

The Confessor cuts Marie off-midsentence and fires off even more accusatory-sounding words at her. Annoyed, I try to Wordsmith so that I can understand what she's saying, only to facepalm when I remember that I can't use magic in my soul form. Fuck's sake.

"I am hardly fearful of one as calm and dignified as yourself," Marie says, sarcasm lacing her every word. "but Umi did not notify me of your pending arrival. Perhaps your communicator suffered a glitch and did not broadcast the arrival code ahead of time? These things do happen with faulty Clan Kokorat technology, as I'm sure-"

[Enuiagh! I than's ftaa' su haa' anusha' ghu'g. I gugn's thuna su agnthhanga lftaatans'uat, ftias su raasthh sha untlathsuun saan nanfta't as untha. Wa niats 'asia'n su sha Inna' Wu'ftgt as untha!]

This time, it isn't Marie, but Judicator Halamis, who speaks. [The Inner Worlds? Why must we leave so soon? Were not we supposed to press the Head Scientist for faster shipments of Coldarium and Depoxies?]

Upon hearing a retort from her junior, Confessor Vulpanix narrows her eyes and shoots a disdainful glance at him. [Massa't un'uft'ung sha Pftagiaa s'ianl aftft usha't. Du nus ghiaatsuun u'ga't lattag gughn r'un sha Fuianga't.]

[No, of course, I won't. The Founders guide us with their light,] Halamis replies, bowing his head and spreading his arms. [Forgive my impudence.]

Lidra Sangin, head of Clan Oblong, allows her tentacles to writhe in annoyance. "Surely, we are not all required to return. If you would allow me to stay, in addition to Psymin Miralax, we will finish the inspection and still offer the additional resources needed for your request."

[Nu. E'a'xuna guat. Fuianga' Dutana ang Fuianga' Ciaanaftu't u'ga't a'a runaft.]

All of the Volgrim present, those from the original inspection team, appear annoyed by the Confessor's overbearing presence. However, she outranks all of them. They perform the Volgrim equivalent of a shrug and turn to Marie.

"Thank you for your hospitality," Sangin Lidra says. "It seems our stay was destined to be a short one, indeed."

Psymin Miralax adds her input, as well. "Yes. Very informative. I will return. Regeneration pods. Much hope."

The two juniors, Ordonis and Loputo, bow before Marie. "We thank you for this opportunity to learn and apologize if any of our behavior was out of line. We are unfamiliar with the ways of humans."

Marie forces a smile. "I am always pleased to receive members of the Volgrim inspection teams. Even the more abrasive ones."

With the group gathering to leave, I quickly realize all the fun is over. I don't have anything interesting left to see, so I hover down from the ceiling and fly toward the exit doors. Having witnessed all manner of incredible sights, my horizons have expanded enough to make me genuinely grasp a sliver of the Volgrim's power.

Their reach extends throughout the Milky Way. Their vision penetrates to the furthest planets.

They are my enemy. I must not underestimate them.

As I fly toward the door, a strange, disorienting feeling overtakes me. A sensation of being watched washes across my body. I turn my head just in time to see the newly arrived Psion, Confessor Vulpanix, staring directly at me.

Panic!

My mind screams in alarm. At the same instant, the Confessor lunges a hand out, as if to grab me from across the hundred-foot gap.

[Waus! O'a' sha'a! An uns'iaga'!]

The Confessor's words, projected to everyone present, make me flinch. Without knowing a word of Volgrim, I immediately understand that she's warning everyone of my presence. She sees me! Not even Halamis saw me! Who the fuck is this bitch?!

Whoomph.

An invisible, telekinetic hand surges from the Confessor's grasp and grabs onto me. Like a field hare caught in the maw of a hungry wolf, my entire body goes inert. I try desperately to wiggle free, but the Psionic energy wrapping around me renders my movements ineffectual and powerless!

Hurrgh! Guh! Let me go!

I try to yell obscenities at the Volgrim, but without any vocal cords, I can't audibly protest!

Light flashes in the Confessor's hand. She slowly pulls her six-fingered claws toward her body, drawing me in. The other Psion, Halamis, leaps into action at her side and narrows his gaze, as if trying to see what she's hooked.

[Confessor! I see nothing! What intruder do you speak of?]

[Inftathufta. Yuia' Ptxthhuth assansiaasuun ut aunt ftahung nuna. Jiats ruthiat xuia' ana'gx un sha tana tlus at nuna ang haftl na! Thut a''ans tuiaft ut rughsung ftathk ghush unth'aguftfta ts'angsh. I than's huftg us ftung!]

The force wrapping around my body intensifies. I struggle harder than ever, even as the Confessor pulls me closer and closer. With a sickening sense of dread, I can only watch helplessly as Halamis joins in and concentrates his psionic energy at the same spot the Confessor is aiming, doubling her grip on my soul.

They're going to catch me! I can't get away! What in the hell am I going to do?!

Focusing my mind, I look deep inside myself. There, a well of power I didn't know I had presents itself, offering me a golden opportunity. I use all of my willpower at once, detonating my spiritual energy like a bomb.

Thoom!

A blast of mana detonates from my spiritual core. Instantly, the grip on my body vanishes. The Confessor and Judicator stumble backward and fall on their asses. Before they can regain their footing, I beat a hasty retreat, leaving cartoonish afterimages in my wake as I flee for my life.

[That errant soul is getting away!] Halamis's voice yells in my mind. [After it! It can't escape the lab's confines! It can't-]

His voice fades as I zip through walls and any other obstructions in my path. I arrive at the elevator and dive down, multiplying my speed by dozens of factors.

Soon, I leave Marie and her Volgrim friends behind.

However, my panic doesn't disappear.

I somehow escaped with my life.

I barely even understand how I got away.

* * *

Minutes later, I fly inside of my body and re-enter the physical world. It takes a few seconds for me to reorient myself, but when I feel the familiar ambient energy of the non-soul world, I almost want to fall over and kiss the dirt!

"I've returned," I mutter to nobody in particular.

"Welcome back!" My mind-wife says, smiling cheerfully at me from within my Mind Realm. "I was having fun possessing your body, but I guess that's over now."

I nod. "Yeah, I guess so. Wait, you possessed me? How? And who's the big, muscled guy sitting across from you? Why isn't he wearing a shirt?"

My attention wanders away from Phoebe toward the tall, chiseled blonde dude leaning back in his chair while Shana sits in his lap. He absentmindedly chews on a chicken leg and smiles at me.

"Oh, you must be Jason. Welcome back to your body! Your wife was a wonderful hostess in your absence."

Phoebe throws her hands in the air and smiles helplessly. "Jason, this man here is named Samson. He's physically the second-strongest Hero who has ever walked the Earth. You missed a lot while you were gone."

I nod.

"Oh. Yeah, I guess I did."

Part 196: Samson's Strength

Samson bounces Shana on his knee. He leans back in his chair and folds his fingers over his chest, relaxing contentedly without a care in the world. To my surprise, Samson doesn't resemble the image in my head of a savage brute with incredible strength. Instead, his neatly maintained, long golden hair and beard contrast with his dignified and elegant clothes to give him the appearance of a first-century nobleman. Had he lived during my era, I could easily see him fitting the image of a studio executive or a powerful CEO. Even his simple white and red robes lend him a noble air, allowing him to disarm anyone with a single glance.

Samson aims a smile toward the ceiling where, presumably, he tries to meet my 'gaze.' "So, Jason! Did you have fun while you left? Your wife seemed to enjoy the experience of prancing about in your body."

I shake my head. I wouldn't say I had 'fun,' but I certainly learned a lot of interesting information. I finally saw several Volgrim in the flesh. They didn't seem particularly scary at first... not until a Psion Confessor appeared. She nearly killed me with her telekinesis.

Phoebe's smile vanishes. "What? You almost died?! That's terrible!"

It's fine, I say, glancing warily at the roof. I think I got away. Even if I didn't, I can always teleport out of here if those Psions come knocking. Speaking of which, I think we should get moving and leave this place. We've been here long enough.

Phoebe crosses her arms. "Are our lives endangered? Is the Psion who attacked you going to find us?"

I frown. Probably not. Why?

My wife grins, shooting me a radiant smile. "Then it's settled! We'll stay here a while longer and chat with Samson! We still have to meet all of the heroes like Marie asked us. If the Psions don't know you're here, then there's no problem!"

Phoebe... it's not that simple.

I take a few minutes to explain to Phoebe what I saw. I tell her about the four Technopaths, the Changeling, and the two Psions. I make sure to mention Umi's biological brain, as well as its restrictor chip.

The more I talk, the more Phoebe's smile fades. Eventually, all that remains is a stone-faced glare of dissatisfaction.

"Wow. You weren't kidding. Marie likes to keep her secrets close to her chest. What's all this about a 'Plague,' and why do the Volgrim care about it so much?"

I shrug. Zombie infection? That's my best guess.

Samson scratches his chin. "May I ask what a 'zombie' is?"

"It's a human who's come back from death, usually reanimated by a necromancer," Phoebe replies. "I thought you fought demons during your lifetime? Were there no necromancers living in your era?"

Samson tosses his hands in the air. "Demons, monsters, they were all the same to me. If they weren't human, I crushed them into meat paste with my god-given strength. I paid little attention to their appearances, let alone their powers."

Samson pauses for a split-second to tap his lip.

"Hmm, there was this one demon fellow — a big, brutish male who fought me to a standstill on three separate occasions. The bastard took my punches without flinching: Truly a remarkable specimen. What was his name again? Flail? Impale? I vaguely remember associating his name with 'hay' so that I wouldn't forget. Bah, 'twas such a long time ago."

Bael? I ask.

"Yes! Hay Bale! That was the one! Haha, what a chap. I never lost to 'Bale,' but I never beat him, either. My greatest regret is that I wasn't capable of settling which of us was the stronger warrior. If I could go back in time, I should love very much to resolve my one remaining life wish."

Frowning, I shoot a question at Samson. How can something as silly as that be your biggest regret? Don't most people die wishing they could spend more time with their loved ones? Shouldn't you wish you'd killed off all the demons or something?

Samson waves my words off nonchalantly. "No, not at all. Why should I care? I did my part. I killed thousands of demons. The Creator selected me as his champion, and I performed my task admirably. What sort of buffoon tries to take on an entire species of evil, godforsaken creatures by himself? I wasn't the only human alive back then, and I certainly didn't expect to live forever."

Samson explains his thinking process in simple, practical terms. As he continues talking, I find myself looking inward to compare my logic with his. Unlike Samson, who knew other heroes would eventually follow him, I don't have the luxury to slack off. If I die, the demons will overrun and annihilate the remnants of humanity.

On the other hand, Samson isn't exactly wrong when he says that saving the universe and exterminating the demons wasn't solely his job. Even as a mighty Hero, he was only one man out of millions. Other humans had the responsibility to stand up and fight for their lands. If I look at the similarities between us, I can reasonably conclude that my job is to empower the rest of humanity to seize their own destiny. I shouldn't have to treat myself as the only person capable of fighting the demons.

And why should I? If I'm the only human who matters, then why bother saving humanity anyway? We're all in this together, trying to survive. I can't put myself on a pedestal just to pretend I'm more important than I actually am.

In the grand scheme of the universe's lifetime, what am I, and what are humans? Mere specks of dust existing for a brief instant of time, only to fade into the wind. We haven't lived 200,000 years out of the universe's ten billion, yet we think we're so special.

I shake the thoughts loose from my head, only to frown in confusion as I catch the rest of what Samson is saying. "-Philistines were hardly even anything important in my life. Gods. Those stories in your 'Bible' embarrass me to no end. I can't stand when people talk about me as if I were some amazing figure who moved mountains. I lived a reasonably normal life with a splash of divinity thrown in. I don't even consider myself all that brave."

Shana turns around while bouncing on Samson's knee. [You really brave and smart! Much better than me. Me no good at all.]

Samson sighs. "My idea of bravery is a skinny young man without a snowball's chance in hell of surviving a war, who stands up to a demon and raises his spear to protect his home. By comparison, a god-touched warrior walking a path set by the Creator is little more than a pawn. That's what I was. A fool performing a fool's errand."

Phoebe shakes her head. "I understand what you mean, but I disagree. Just because some men are born stronger than others doesn't mean they're less courageous for choosing to fight. Those who throw themselves in harm's way to protect their fellow humans deserve to be called brave just as much as when the weak stand up against the strong."

Phoebe turns in her chair to glance at the other end of the table. There, Sir Lorent sits unmoving. He leans his chin on his palm and rests his elbow on the table, a dreamy look in his eyes.

My wife shoots a question at Sir Lorent. "Don't you agree, nephew?"

Mordred's Butcher doesn't say a word. He continues to stare lazily at the wall, oblivious to her words.

"Sigh. If my nephew were awake, he would agree."

Phoebe laments Sir Lorent's distant expression, but she doesn't push the issue any further.

I clear my throat. Ahem. So, Phoebe, you, uh, took over my body while I was away?

"Mhm. Are you angry about that?"

Nope. Just curious how the experience 'felt' for you.

Phoebe rises from her chair and starts doing all sorts of leg and arm stretching exercises. "Wellllll, it wasn't all that special. I did find that being inside a seven-foot-tall body was different from how I always imagined. I couldn't walk correctly and kept tripping over myself."

Because your legs were longer than you were used to?

"Yes, plus your particular build is very... how do I put it... top-heavy?"

Huh? Are you calling me fat?

"No, no. Big-boned. Big-muscled. I found moving my arms to be pretty hard. You're not nearly as limber as me."

I cast a subconscious glance toward my biceps. ...You have a point. I'm pretty used to my body's size, though. I don't think I'd fare well suddenly changing it for the sake of flexibility.

Pausing, I glance at Phoebe with a questioning look. Unless you're hinting that you'd like me to change my appearance?

Phoebe chuckles. "Haha, don't be ridiculous. I like you just the way you are."

Samson rubs his forehead. "You two remind me of myself and Delilah. I hated that woman."

"Sorry," Phoebe says, blushing. "I didn't intend to make you uncomfortable."

The Nazirite Hero sighs. After a moment, he sweeps his eyes across Phoebe's slender, muscular form. "Never mind all of that. Miss Hiro, I wanted to ask you this earlier, but now is as good a time as any. Are you a strong warrior?"

My wife cocks her head. "I suppose? Why do you ask?"

"Well, I don't mind sitting around and chatting idly, but I've been quite restless inside my artifact for tens of thousands of years. Would you do me the honor of a friendly spar?"

Phoebe widens her eyes in surprise. "I'm not opposed to the idea, but you don't seem the type of man to fight with a woman."

"Pish," Samson grunts, dismissing Phoebe's concerns with a wave of his hand. "What sort of person do you take me to be? I once met the legendary Joan of Arc a few months before her execution. I know full well how strong women can be! I won't look down on anyone just because of their sex. After that damned Delilah stabbed me in the back, I came to realize women can be just as lethal as men. Anyway, if you're up for a match, let's head outside."

Phoebe only gives his request a few seconds of consideration before nodding.

"Alright. I do enjoy a friendly joust now and then. Don't hold back! My husband is more than capable of healing us, so long as we don't instantly die."

"I wouldn't insult your honor by restraining myself," Samson says with a glint in his eye. "If anything, I'm worried I'll lose both of my arms."

Samson sets Shana down, lowering her from his knee. The little girl jumps excitedly as she follows behind the adults to leave the dining hall behind.

[Uncle Lorent! Come watch!]

Sir Lorent stirs, his attention pulled by Shana's excited chirping. He suddenly realizes people are moving and clambers out of his chair. [Hm? What's going on?]

[Mama Phoebe fight big Lamp Son!]

[Lamp Son? Don't you mean Samson?]

[Yes!]

By the time Phoebe and Samson arrive outside, my wife's nephew has already reached the doorway, where he quickly takes Shana's hand and leads her off to the side to watch from a safe distance.

* * *

Phoebe unbuckles her sword from her belt and casually tosses it to the side. Given her opponent's lack of armaments, she decides to go for a fist-fight from the very start.

Samson raises an eyebrow. "I thought you might hand me a sword. Do you wish to engage in an unarmed melee?"

"There's no need to go all-out from the start. Let our fists do the talking, and we can figure out who is the most skilled."

"Very well," Samson replies. The Ancient Israelite kneels down into a crouch and raises his fists. "...But you do know that my heroic aspect involves deity-level strength, don't you?"

Phoebe leans into a martial artist's pose, with her right knee flexed, and her left leg swept to the side. "My husband boosted my strength somewhat. I hope you won't mind my testing his buffs on you."

She extends her palms outward and narrows her eyes.

"Nephew, you give the signal for our match to start."

I gaze from above at the makeshift battle arena. Truth be told, it's little more than an empty, grassy field positioned outside the building my wife was just eating food at a minute ago. As an administrator of my Mind Realm, my wife possesses the power to alter and shift the dream world's structures and physical space as she desires. She must have crafted the entire arena instantly, only placing a few potted plants at the corners to signal its boundaries.

[Alright,] Sir Lorent says. [Fight until one of you concedes or cannot continue battling. A ring-out is also suitable.]

"I accept those rules," Samson says.

"As do I," Phoebe replies.

[Ready yourselves. Begin in three seconds. Two. One. Fight!]

The moment the match starts, Phoebe plants her foot in the grass and leaps forward. She dives into a roll and swings her palm up, aiming straight for Samson's face. The ancient Hero jerks back, narrowly avoids Phoebe's palm strike, and swings his fist at her head.

Whap.

Phoebe bats his hand aside with a surprisingly swift and agile movement. Unlike when she's sparred against me, I quickly recognize that she isn't holding back. Phoebe knocks aside Samson's fist with her bare hand and delivers a palm strike to his solar plexus. The Nazirite coughs slightly from the decisive attack, but Phoebe's blow doesn't injure him at all.

Samson is not only a physically intimidating hero, but a durable warrior as well. His skin and bones appear reinforced well beyond mortal limits, granting him the equivalent of living armor.

Phoebe leaps backward and performs a reverse somersault. She flips off her hands and lands on her feet, only to flinch slightly as Samson presses his advantage. He swings his fists like a wild animal, hitting her with a barrage of powerful strikes. Each blow possesses enough strength to crush granite, but Phoebe deflects most of his vicious strikes with ease.

Watching Samson fight, I get the impression that he doesn't have any formal training. His fighting style is chaotic and instinctive, as if he's only ever fought bare-knuckled brawls in back alleys his whole life. Phoebe, on the other hand, is a professionally trained knight who once fought under King Arthur. In addition, after training with several monsters and Makoto Ueda over these last six years, she's learned several martial art styles, as well as improved her swordplay and gunplay. She's a well-rounded fighter with plenty of training.

Crack!

My heart skips a beat.

Samson finally lands a punch on Phoebe. His fist hits her straight in the ribcage and sends her sprawling backward. To my utter shock, Samson's power is even greater than I first thought. His smooth, charming smile from earlier disappears, replaced instead with an intense death-stare capable of freezing any opponent's blood.

Phoebe lands on her back and slides across the grass. Tears flow from her eyes as she gasps for breath. "Kuhuk!"

By the time she's ground to a halt, Samson has already cleared the gap. He doesn't offer a hand or pause a moment to let Phoebe catch her breath. Instead, he raises his fist and swings it at my wife, still on the ground, intending to finish her in one blow.

Swish!

Phoebe sweeps her leg out and catches Samson off-guard. She trips him and makes the leverage behind his strike lose nearly all of its power. He ends up stumbling forward and falling on top of her. Before he can climb off my wife, Phoebe gives him a mighty shove and flings the barbarian Israelite skyward.

Samson flails wildly. "Gah!"

He flies nearly twenty feet into the air before reversing direction and plummeting to the grass below. At the last second, he reorients himself in midair, spins around, and lands on his hands and feet like a housecat.

The son of a bitch is not only tough, but agile, too.

Phoebe jumps to her feet. She rubs her collarbone and winces, having suffered from Samson's single landed attack. Despite only taking one of his punches, it's clear to me that my wife can't take many more. Their fight isn't much different from a gorilla fighting a well-trained martial artist. Even with her excellent combat skills and training, I don't know if my wife can win against a legendary hero like Samson.

The two combatants quickly re-engage each other. This time, Samson makes the first move by rushing Phoebe and grabbing at her throat. Phoebe ducks his clutches, steps forward, and slams her elbow into his chest.

Crack.

Samson staggers back, wincing as Phoebe's skillfully aimed strike finds its target. Before he can react, Phoebe spins around and swings her foot out. She twirls her leg in a reverse-roundhouse kick toward Samson's shoulder, striking it with the strength of a battering ram.

A meaty thunk rings out as her boot meets Samson's shoulder. He cries out in pain and goes flying to his right, only to tumble across the grass and land on his gut.

Phoebe inhales and exhales twice, flaring her nostrils each time. She winces yet again after rubbing her collarbone. Despite her perfectly aimed attacks, Samson still leaps to his feet a moment later and shrugs off her savage blows as if they did nothing to him.

"I was right about you," Samson says. "You are strong. Not quite as strong as me, but your quick-thinking and excellent training helps bridge the gap. I'm having fun!"

Phoebe smiles. "I am, too. I shudder to think how poorly I would fare if your moves were less predictable. Have you never trained under a master?"

Samson cracks his neck. "No. I never needed one. After all, no other human stood a chance against me. The only beings capable of threatening me were Demon Emperors. Ironically, my death came at the hands of that damned she-devil, Delilah. No amount of training could save me from the machinations of a woman twice scorned."

"I see. Well, unfortunately, my husband isn't allowed to leave with your artifact. If he could, I'd love to train you to my level."

Samson's death-glare fades. He stands up a little straighter and slackens his posture. "Aye. Training with such a lovely teacher would boost my spirits significantly. I'm hardly a battle-maniac, but living all by myself for several eternities left me wishing for the sweet release of death. The only thing I fear in this world is boredom!"

"Haha," Phoebe laughs, echoing Samson's movements. She, too, relaxes her fighting posture. It seems the two of them have agreed to end their sparring match without deciding an official winner. Looking at how the match played out, I have to assume my wife would ultimately lose, given her inability to hurt Samson. The guy is simply too sturdy. "Boredom is, indeed, one of the many aspects of life which ails all men. At least you've come to terms with your past. You're better off than some of the other heroes Jason and I have met."

Samson walks over to Phoebe. He holds his fist out, and she meets it with a light tap from hers — giving each other a fistbump.

"Hah, I wouldn't say I've rid myself of all my demons," Samson chuckles. "Delilah's actions haunt me to this very day. I've never stopped thinking about that damned- tch, never mind. I hate speaking about her."

Phoebe cocks her head. "What did Delilah do? You called her a backstabber before, but the more you bring her up, the more curious I become. If you don't want to tell me, that's fine, too."

An awkward silence follows.

Samson shifts his feet a couple of times before eventually clearing his throat.

"Erm. Ahem. Well, as I told you before, my strength comes from the length of my hair. The longer it grows, the more my power increases. Delilah figured this out and spent some time plotting behind my back. The night before I planned to set out on a demon hunting excursion, she tricked me into drinking contaminated wine. When I fell asleep, she cut off all my hair. I awoke to find myself in chains, being dragged away by Philistine debtors from my younger years. One thing led to another, and eventually, I pulled a building down on top of myself to rid the world of those damned backstabbers."

Samson shakes his head.

"My biggest regret is that the harlot who betrayed me didn't perish under the temple's collapse. I would have liked watching the life ebb from her eyes. I loved that woman... but in the end, she turned against me. Everyone did."

For the first time since meeting him, I get the distinct impression that Samson isn't just a fun-loving guy with big muscles and a handsome face. He's bitter and resentful. Whatever life he once lived, he lost it when a woman tricked him and left him naked and defenseless before people who wished harm upon him.

Samson paid the price for that betrayal with his death.

If I were in his shoes, I couldn't imagine moving on and accepting my fate without any lingering psychological trauma. Perhaps a hundred thousand years living by himself helped Samson come to terms with his unfortunate demise.

Phoebe twirls her hair around her finger. "Well, Samson, if it makes you feel any better, at least you outlived Delilah. She died millennia ago. In my opinion, that means you had the last laugh."

"No. I didn't," Samson mutters. "I don't know how she died. She probably lived long enough to witness the birth of her grandchildren. She may have even passed with a smile on her face. So long as I don't know, I'll never be at peace."

Phoebe falls into step beside Samson as they head back indoors. A moment later, Lorent and Shana follow along behind them.

"I'm sorry," Phoebe says, her voice low. "I wish I could grant you a measure of peace, but I don't have that power."

As they step indoors, Samson turns to look at my wife. A curious glint appears in his eyes. "It's funny, Miss Hiro. From the first moment I arrived in this 'Mind Realm,' I noticed that your appearance wasn't all that different from Delilah's. Even your voice is similar. Your short-cropped white hair, and the way you walk is reminiscent of that harpie. When I look at you, I can't help but remember the memories I shared with her."

Phoebe raises her gaze. She turns to look at Samson, only to spot the strange look in his eyes. "I... I don't follow. Surely, you don't think I'm the same woman who once betrayed you?"

"No. I don't."

Samson averts his eyes.

"But... fate is a strange thing, don't you agree? I've always considered myself a calm, logical man. I fought with my fists but never resorted to ignoring the voice in the back of my head. And right now, despite all the logical thoughts telling me you aren't Delilah-"

WHAM!

Before Phoebe can react, Samson whirls around and aims his fist at her head. He smashes my wife in the face and sends her flying to the side, where she plows into a wall and comes to a shuddering stop!

"Phoebe!" I yell, my heart skipping a beat.

"-I can't help but hate everything about you," Samson says, finishing his sentence with a saddened smile.

All hell breaks loose. Sir Lorent immediately leaps at the hulking superhuman, Samson, and tries to land a decisive punch on the back of his head. However, Samson spins on his heel and punches Lorent in the stomach, sending him hurtling backward, where he crashes into Shana. Both of them go tumbling onto the grass outside.

Everything happens so fast; I barely have a moment to react. However, as soon as I realize what's happened, I quickly begin wordsmithing. "Heal! Heal! Heal! Suppress! STOP!"

I rapidly fire off words of power, targeting my unmoving wife and her two companions, before wrapping Samson in a powerful telekinetic barrier to seal his movements. I finish with a word of power intended to freeze him in place.

However, the moment my final word targets Samson, a shudder runs through my body. My mana plummets by an alarming amount, and I can only watch in horror as Samson leaps at Phoebe's barely conscious form and raises his fist. "Not today, Wordsmith!"

Phoebe opens her eyes and shoves away from the wall at the last second, causing Samson's fist to smash against the floor and rattle the building's foundations.

Phoebe pushes herself off the ground and leaps to her feet. Even with my regenerative word of power having worked its magic, she still appears shaken by Samson's sudden sneak attack.

"You... you piece of trash!" Phoebe barks. "Why would you hit me?! What the hell is wrong with you?!"

Samson's expression becomes cold and distant. He spins to face my wife, and the emotionless void on his face sends a chill through both of our hearts.

"Sorry, Miss Hiro. I know my hatred isn't logical... but I've lived with it for longer than you can possibly imagine. If I don't kill you now, I don't think I'll ever recover my sanity. I hate Delilah, and I hate you, too. I hate all women. Your kind are worthless, parasitic trash."

Samson leaps at Phoebe. He swings his fists wildly, but unlike before, I detect a deeper underlying strategy behind his attacks. He batters Phoebe from left to right, but she only manages to deflect half of his strength.

"Stop! Confusion! Teleport!" I yell, trying to slow down or distract Samson in his tracks. To my disbelief, each word of power I aim at him drains my mana explosively, forcing me to crush a mana bead and recover my strength! In contrast, Samson's movements slow noticeably, but nowhere near the extent I intended.

My third word of power teleports Samson to the opposite end of the room, causing his swinging fist to batter a wall and rattle the building's foundations once again. Samson immediately realizes what's happened. He spins on his heel and dives across the table to leap at Phoebe. "You're a pain in my ass, Wordsmith! I'll kill your wife if it's the last thing I do!"

The fuck you will! I bark back. "Sleep! Sleep! Sleep!"

This time, I target Samson's mind, hitting him with the same word of power thrice. Once again, my spells drain far more mana than I expected, forcing me to absorb a second mana bead.

Samson stumbles slightly. His head swims, but to my absolute astonishment, he continues swinging at Phoebe, battering her with the strength of a hurricane. He doesn't fall asleep, but instead merely swoons for a moment before regaining his senses.

What the hell is going on? Why isn't my Wordsmithing affecting him?!

Phoebe coughs blood as Samson swings his fist into her gut. He strikes her so hard that she crashes through the wall and flies outside, hitting the ground with an agonizing whump! Hardly has Phoebe landed before Samson pounces at her again and raises his fist.

Unable to figure out why my magic isn't affecting Samson, I focus my energy on Phoebe instead. "Teleport! Heal! Strengthen!"

Phoebe vanishes, disappearing before Samson can hit her. He swings his fist down and pounds the grass, summoning a small crater where my wife once lay. Phoebe reappears atop the dining hall's roof, allowing her body to instantly regenerate and strengthen itself, bolstering her power and defense by a factor of three.

"Cough, cough," Phoebe wheezes. "That bastard lied... he... he hid his skills from me! He only pretended to fight like a wild animal! Fucking hell- cough, cough."

Tears well up in Phoebe's eyes.

"Jason. We have to kill him. Samson's lost his mind. He's gone down the path of evil. Disregard everything he said earlier. He's our enemy."

I agree, I say, glancing around Marie's hall of artifacts. To my surprise, Momo is nowhere to be seen. I don't know where she went or when she left. We have a problem, though. No matter what I try, I can't seem to slow down or hurt Samson with words of power. It's like he's ignoring more than 90% of my magic.

Phoebe rolls to the side and peers over the roof's edge. In the courtyard below, Samson whirls around, looking everywhere for her. "Come out, Phoebe! I won't rest until I kill you!"

My wife slinks backward, avoiding his gaze. "Jason. I can't fight Samson alone, and if you can't kill him with your Wordsmithing, I'll need someone else's help. Where did my nephew and Shana go?"

My heart skips a beat. I quickly pan my omniscient vision around the Mind Realm, only to find Sir Lorent and Shana hiding behind a small shrub. Samson paces around, looking for Phoebe, but he stands less than twenty feet away! Sir Lorent and Shana are in great danger!

"Teleport. Teleport."

I speak again, sending both of them to Phoebe's side. Their hearts leap into their throats as they whirl around to see their surroundings change. However, upon spotting Phoebe, both Sir Lorent and Shana heave a sigh of relief.

[Mama Phoebe!] Shana cries out, relief evident on her face.

[My precious aunt, I'm glad you've survived,] Lorent says. His expression hardens as he takes a knee on the roof and makes himself harder to see. [What a coward that Samson turned out to be. I had my suspicions, but I didn't expect such a swift, underhanded attack from a Hero of his caliber.]

"None of us did," Phoebe replies. "Jason. Boost my nephew's strength and defense. I'll work together with him to kill Samson."

That's dangerous, I reply. Besides, you know me. I don't want to kill Samson unless we absolutely must. Subduing him will prove a lot harder, so I want you to stay down for the moment. I'll take him out myself.

Phoebe's gaze hardens. "That won't work, Jason. You already told me your magic didn't affect Samson. You won't be able to take him out."

As long as you're safe, I reply, I will have plenty of options at my disposal. Sit tight.

Without waiting for Phoebe's reply, I manipulate my omniscient vision to leap over the roof and hover above Samson.

Samson. I'll give you one chance to back down. If you don't, I'll make you regret meeting me.

"Haha. Do you think I care, Wordsmith?" Samson asks. He aims his eyes skyward, seemingly meeting my gaze. "I've suffered in solitude for 100,000 years. Death doesn't frighten me. I swore that if I ever had a chance, I'd wring the life from Delilah's pretty little neck. I don't care if she's gone; your wife will do just fine."

You're insane, I mutter. Phoebe did nothing to you. Stop with your evil ways. Stop right this instant... or else.

A dark smile washes over Samson's face.

"Do your worst."

Enraged, I aim my mind at the Nazirite's soul. "Impale! Impale!"

Two metal spears form on Samson's right and left. In the blink of an eye, they rush at his chest, aiming for his heart and liver. Samson expertly spins around, grabs the spears, and stops their momentum in midair.

"Ah, two weapons. These will make for nice skewers when I use them on your wife," Samson says, a nasty grin forming on his lips.

Before he can make another move, I yell again. "Cage! Collapse! Disperse!"

A metal cage, forged of nigh-unbreakable iron, instantly appears around the ancient Israelite. A second later, it folds inward and wraps around him like a steel-born octopus. Finally, my last word of power aims to teleport the Hero back to his artifact, forcing him out of my mind.

However, the third word fails.

Samson growls angrily as the steel cage wraps his body tightly. He struggles to move his arms, but no matter how he thrashes, he can't break free.

"Haha! You won't kill me, Wordsmith! The most you'll do is slow me down! Your wife has already told me about your weaknesses; how you can't bear to end another person's life! You're soft! Stupid women always betray their men!"

Samson raises his eyes skyward to laugh at me. However, as he does, he spots a hint of motion on the dining room's roof.

Phoebe!

Samson's gaze locks onto the top of my wife's head as she peers over the roof's edge.

"Oho! I found you!"

A surge of adrenaline rushes through Samson's body. He flexes his muscles and pulls his arms apart, snapping the steel bars enveloping him with nothing but his raw strength. An instant later, he presses his feet against the grass and leaps skyward, toward the roof.

Phoebe yelps in surprise. "He's coming!"

Samson clears the gap frighteningly fast. The instant before he reaches my wife, I yell out, "WALL!"

A barrier made of the same material as the cage from before appears in midair.

Thunk.

Samson smashes against the barrier, totally unprepared for its appearance. He swears like a sailor as he falls to the ground and the wall follows after him. "Fucking Wordsmith! Eat shit!"

The ancient Hero hits the dirt with a thud. A split-second later, the wall crash-lands atop Samson, flattening him into the ground with a tremendous crash!

All goes silent.

Phoebe and Lorent stare, wide-eyed, at the scene below them.

"Samson still lives," Phoebe says. "You tried, Jason, but Samson has a death wish. Now is not the time to hesitate. Boost my nephew while you still can."

I sigh. Alright. "Strengthen! Strengthen! Perception! Speed!"

My words of power send magical energy into my mind, where they impact Lorent and boost his physical abilities to Phoebe's level. I quickly follow-up by giving him a gigantic butcher's axe, one identical to his heroic artifact. "Axe!"

Now fully equipped, Lorent and Phoebe stand a few feet apart. Mordred's Butcher shoots a glance at Shana. [Leave, little one. It is not safe here.]

[Okay!]

I teleport her to another place in my Mind Realm, protecting her with a heavily reinforced metal structure.

The moment we finish our preparations, the gigantic Wordsmithed wall in the courtyard shifts slightly, then gets flung aside as Samson uses his demigod-tier strength to hurl it away. He jumps to his feet and scowls.

"The three of you working together are more than my match. But at least this way, I can die in battle. I won't have to suffer in solitude any longer!"

Phoebe taps her chest. "You can still stand down, Samson. We don't have to fight. I'm not Jason. He might hold back for fear of shedding blood, but I won't."

[Nor will I,] Sir Lorent adds. [Today need not end in bloodshed. If you continue to fight us, I can promise that you will not win.]

Samson smirks. "It doesn't matter if the Wordsmith increased your strength. You'll never beat me. You know neither the true extent of my power, nor my hidden abilities. Come. Talk is cheap."

Samson coils power into his legs. He leaps toward the rooftop once again, but this time, I allow him to close the distance.

A thought appears in the back of my mind.

If Samson's power comes from his hair... then can't I simply cut it?

The thought makes me want to laugh. Before Samson can clash with Phoebe and Lorent, I speak a word of power. "Bald!"

This time, my word of power connects with its target. Samson's hair vanishes, transforming him into the spitting image of a Shaolin monk.

Phoebe's eyes widen. Sir Lorent's expression turns to one of shock.

However, Samson grins like a wild animal.

"Haha... fools."

CRASH!

Samson smashes into my wife with three times the strength he did before. His fist connects with her chest like a wrecking ball with a concrete wall. Phoebe tries to block Samson's attack, but his savage blow sends her hurtling backward, unable to retaliate. She plunges off the opposite side of the roof and careens toward the ground below, only giving me a split-second to teleport her to safety.

What follows is a brutally savage battle as Samson, somehow ten times stronger than before, begins tearing apart Sir Lorent with ease. Even empowered with my magic, Sir Lorent barely puts up a fight as the monstrous Israelite beats him around like a professional boxer facing off against a small child. Sir Lorent swings his axe down and manages to slash Samson's chest, but Samson ignores the cut entirely. He strikes Lorent's shoulder and breaks his arm, causing Phoebe's nephew to scream in pain. "Gaaaugh!"

"Teleport! Heal!"

I teleport Lorent away, but to my astonishment, Samson swivels his head toward the direction I sent Phoebe and her nephew. "Haha. I see them, Jason. I see them both!"

Having hid my wife and her nephew on the opposite side of my Mind Realm's 'city,' I can only hazard a guess as to how Samson knows where they are.

Samson closes his eyes. A moment later, he vanishes.

Rumble.

My entire body shakes. Waves of agony burst out inside my brain. Every inch of my skull cries out in pain!

I stumble forward and fall to my knees. Cold sweat covers my skin as my thoughts turn scatterbrained. I lose the connection to my Mind Realm, leaving me grasping at the air.

What happened? How did cutting Samson's hair make him so much stronger?! Why can't I hit the son of a bitch with my Wordsmithing?!

Recalling our earlier conversation, it takes me several seconds of contemplation to understand the truth.

Samson lied to Phoebe and me from the very beginning.

His hair isn't his weakness. He isn't a simple-minded, bare-knuckle brawler. He's a man with animal cunning who lived during a time of war. He's highly intelligent, shrewd, and a calculating liar.

The pieces fall into place.

"Connect."

I speak a word of power and instantly re-establish a link to my Mind Realm.

There, a heartbreaking, soul-crushing sight awaits me.

Samson grins menacingly at my wife and her nephew. Both of them lay limp in his grasp, unmoving. He clutches them by their throats, an expression of glee covering his face.

"I've waited a long time for this. Squeezing the life from Delilah's body was all I ever wanted after I died. You aren't her, stupid woman, but you'll do just fine."

Seeing my wife in Samson's grasp, something snaps inside me.

I won't let anyone hurt my family. Not now. Not ever.

This bastard lied to us. He betrayed us. And now, he wants to kill my mind-wife.

Fuck him.

Fuck everything he stands for.

"Dissolve."

I speak a word of power. However, instead of aiming my mind at Samson, I target his artifact in the real world instead.

The jawbone of an ass.

Instantly, Samson's meaty hands, still wrapped around Phoebe and Lorent's throat, lose their grip.

"Urgh! What?! My body... it won't..."

Samson's artifact shudders. The ossein comprising its foundation trembles for a moment before evaporating away, fading to dust.

"Aaaaaugh!!"

Samson drops his victims. He stumbles backward as his arms and legs lose their strength. A moment later, he flops to the ground, his eyes twitching wildly.

"Wordsmith... Wordsmith... you fucking.... bastard! I won't die... die this easily... I'll kill her! I'll-!"

The ancient Israelite stops mid-sentence. His pupils dilate, and his jaw slackens.

Without saying another word, his body fades away.

Samson, the former Hero of a long-distant age, perishes to my power.

* * *

I stare for several seconds at the spot where his body disappeared.

"Heal. Heal."

Without giving the matter any more thought, I speak two words of power, restoring my wife and her nephew's lives. They jerk up, gasping for breath.

"Guh! Where... where did Samson go?!"

Slowly, I lick my lips.

Samson is dead, Phoebe. I... I killed him.

Phoebe raises her head to the sky. She stares through my Mind Realm into my eyes.

"Jason...? You did...?"

I nod.

Yeah. I had to. Don't worry. I won't ever let anything happen to you. I only did what I had-

Suddenly, my thoughts freeze up. A burst of nausea strikes my gut as the realization of what I've done finally hits me.

"Burgh... blech!"

I stumble forward and vomit all over the ground. Over and over, I heave my guts, unable to stop myself.

Tears well up in my eyes.

What have I done?

I killed someone.

I murdered Samson.

Even if it was to protect my wife, the decision rips me apart from the inside-out.

This changes everything.

Part 197: Consequences

Every part of my body trembles and shakes. I stare silently at my feet, where a pile of dust rests: the final remnants of Samson's artifact.

I killed him.

I killed Samson, then watched as he screamed in pain and faded away.

Yet, it isn't guilt rattling my nerves, nor my conscience tearing me apart from the inside out.

No.

Instead, my trembling comes as a result of the realization that... in some way... deep inside myself...

I enjoyed killing Samson.

He tried to murder my wife, her nephew, and an innocent little girl. He was a monster. I wanted to subdue him, but I couldn't. In the end, I disintegrated his artifact into ash and sent his soul scattering to the Great Beyond.

Samson, by all measurements, deserved to die. I acted in self-defense. I only killed him because I had no choice.

But even so... even if that is true... why do I feel a sickening sensation building up inside me? How could I possibly enjoy killing another human being, even in self-defense? Why do my actions worry me?

...Because, after reflecting on what I've done, I have come to understand myself a little better.

Growing up, I was a nobody. I passed from one school to another, never making friends, always being bullied. I lived in fear of those with power. I grew to resent them. I envied superheroes, those godlike beings who could level mountains and protect themselves with ease. They punished evildoers and protected the righteous.

But, now, I realize those reasons were only my excuses for envying them.

In truth, I resented my lack of power; of agency.

I didn't have to kill Samson. I'm a fucking Wordsmith! My power is practically limitless. Even if I couldn't target him with my magic directly, I could have tried inspecting him to find a weakness. I could have boosted Phoebe and Lorent to levels surpassing Samson.

Hell, I should have teleported Samson's artifact out of my sight! Once it was a certain distance away, I would have forced him out of my mind!

But I didn't do any of those things. I chose the easy path. I chose the lazy path.

Killing Samson wasn't difficult. I spoke a single word and instantly ended his life. He couldn't retaliate at all.

Looking back at my life, I now see my greatest flaw. I always choose the path of least resistance. I use my Wordsmithing mindlessly, like a dog trained to sit on command. I barely put any effort into honing my craft or learning new techniques.

Wordsmithing is a tool capable of changing the universe. What self-respecting artist learns how to draw a stickman but never evolves his craft beyond that level? How can I call myself a Hero when I don't put in the effort to improve myself?

I made a mistake today. I let myself take the path of least resistance. But I won't do it again.

From now on, I must work my hardest to walk the road less traveled. I can't allow myself to give in to my weaknesses.

After all... it would be all too easy to kill someone else like I did Samson. Maybe Satan. Maybe Amelia. Maybe even... Ose.

Ose is the current leader of demonkind. I need to approach her to offer a peace treaty. But what if she turns me down? What if she attacks or threatens me? Should I kill her, too?

No!

NO!

I can't allow myself to kill ever again.

Not because I'm trying to be a 'good guy,' but because of how much easier each murder will become! Now that I've killed once, the second murder will be much easier. Then, the third. The fourth. The fifth. And so on!

By the time I realize what I've done, it will be too late. I won't be 'me' anymore, but something else. Someone else.

A monster.

* * *

Slowly, I blink my eyes. I look away from the pile of dust at my feet toward the vast, empty chamber of artifacts. Without Momo here, I feel completely alone.

"Phoebe. We need to leave."

My wife shakes her head. "I know Samson nearly killed us, but that doesn't mean the other heroes will. He was a broken, bitter man, Jason. We still need to complete Marie's request."

I shake my head. "No. We're done. I never intended to spend as much time here as I already have. Besides, those Volgrim might still be looking for me. I can't trust Marie not to sell me out, or at least not to give me more trouble. I'll leave a note with Momo about the artifacts we've inspected and tell Marie we can always come back later. I can't delay our original mission any longer."

My wife opens her mouth to protest, but changes her mind and sighs. "Alright, Jason. Truth be told, my heart is still pounding like a blacksmith's hammer. I don't think I'd have lived if you hadn't taken drastic action. You saved my life."

I close my eyes. "You're my wife, Phoebe. I'd do anything for you."

Phoebe looks to her left, where Sir Lorent stands silently, watching her converse with me. "I don't know. I'm not the real Phoebe, after all. I'm just a copy made to protect your mind. You don't need to get all overdramatic on my account."

"Quit saying stuff like that," I counter. "You're not 'just' anything. I love you as much as the original Phoebe. You're both equal in my eyes."

Phoebe blushes. "If... if you say so."

"I do."

I pull myself to my feet and step out of my Wordsmithed chair. "Erase."

My seat vanishes, leaving nothing but Samson's dust in the room. Swallowing my doubts, I close my eyes for a few minutes to compile a letter in my mind. Then, I speak a word of power.

"Note."

A piece of paper appears in my grasp. I raise my hand and read the message to confirm its contents.

Marie. I examined several of your artifacts. You'll be delighted to know that among them is a lady named Mad Madam Mildred, along with Caesar Augustus, Kyle Tucker, Kasim, and Karla. Madam Mildred's heroic power somehow allowed her to contact other artifacts. She informed me that those four Heroes were 'worth her time,' whatever that means. However, I also discovered a Hero named Samson. He nearly killed Shana and Sir Lorent, the two heroes I told you about earlier. I had no choice but to kill him...

The letter continues detailing my recent exploits. At no point do I address the Volgrim I witnessed in my soul form.

I'll save them for the next time we speak.

After evaluating the message, I nod to myself and speak another word of power. "Envelope."

I place the letter inside, heave a sigh, and head toward the artifact chamber's exit. Just before stepping out, I speak to the emptiness surrounding me. "I don't know if you can hear me, Mildred, but I hope we'll meet again. Farewell for now."

I follow up by shrinking Sir Lorent's axe with a word of power, then hanging his relic on Shana's necklace, both of which I keep wrapped around my neck.

Just before I leave the room, I cast one final spell.

"Waypoint."

* * *

A minute later, I stride down the small complex's hallways, looking both left and right for Momo. However, no matter what rooms I glance inside, I can't find her.

Dining area? Nope.

Recreational center, with games and stuff? Nope.

Bathroom? Uh... well, I don't hear anything. I'm not going to peep inside. She's probably not in there.

Frowning, I continue heading toward the exit. I slow to a stop in front of Momo's bedroom, where the stuffed animals lay atop her bed in a neat arrangement.

The entire room appears childish, almost as if someone designed it for a six-year-old, not a 100,000-year-old demoness. Its cute pink wallpaper and vibrant atmosphere gives off an atmosphere vastly different from what I noticed of Momo's personality. Maybe Marie wanted the room to comfort her, since Momo seems to live down here all alone.

Cautiously, I approach Momo's doorway. I don't notice any sounds inside her room, but still, I find myself peeking around the corner.

"Ahem. Momo? Are you in here...? Aw, fuck!"

My gaze instantly falls on Momo's nude body. She stands upright inside a pod not dissimilar to my cryopod, but without any freezing liquid inside it. With her eyes closed, she appears to be in a meditative trance, or possibly sleeping...

I quickly jump backward and pull out of the room. I rub my eyes frantically. "Shit, shit, don't kill me, Phoebe! Christ, I knew I shouldn't be looking inside a young girl's room. What the hell is wrong with me?!"

Phoebe facepalms. "It's fine, Jason. I don't know what the Satyr is doing, but she probably should have closed her door. Just leave the note in front of her doorway, and we'll pretend you never saw anything."

"Augh! But I did. Man, I feel like such a creep."

Not wanting to spend another moment lurking in front of Momo's doorway, I set the letter down and walk away. As I do, Phoebe pipes up.

"When we first came here, Marie mentioned that if Momo didn't find a male with whom she could copulate, her body would explode from the buildup of her mana. Marie went on to add that she had developed a method to release Momo's mana buildup. I suspect that is what she was doing. She must have been releasing her mana inside that machine."

"Yeah, probably," I mumble. "Either way, it's none of my business."

"No, it isn't," Phoebe says, laughing into her palm. "But, I do love it when you turn beet-red!"

"Ugh."

* * *

Leaving Momo's room behind, I begin heading down the corridor toward the lower facility's exit. As I walk, I utter words of power periodically.

"Observe. Detect. Search."

I leave Marie's underground laboratory and begin walking through the various hallways toward her elevator. While walking, I keep an eye out for the Volgrim. If they come within a mile of me, I'll pick them out instantly. Having used my Wordsmithing like a radar system in the past, I'm still adept at utilizing my spherical vision to its maximum effectiveness.

Eventually, I arrive at the elevator. Only now do I remember it's still at the top of the shaft, tens of miles above me. With a labored sigh, I tap my foot and frown.

"Should I return to the Labyrinth with my Wordsmithing? What do you think, Phoebe? It'll probably take a lot of mana. I'm not even sure if I can pull it off."

I turn my vision inward to see Phoebe and Shana sitting on a bed. My mind-wife wraps an arm around Shana's shoulder while quietly reading a book. Upon hearing my question, Phoebe glances upward to meet my gaze.

"Marie wouldn't create an elevator which couldn't be called to the bottom of the shaft. Look around! I bet there's a terminal somewhere to summon it here."

After answering my question, Phoebe returns her attention to the book in her hand. "...Jack tripped and fell, spilling the pail of water. Jill came tumbling down, and both of them ended up sprawled on the ground."

[They clumsy!] Shana laughs. [Need watch step!]

"Yes, indeed. Oh, I just thought of something! After Jason visits this Ose lady, why don't I teach you English? We'll be able to communicate better. Won't that be nice?"

[Ya! Ya! Me want learn!] Shana babbles, her eyes lighting up with excitement. [Me smart! Mama teach me words!]

I retract my gaze, leaving Phoebe to her devices. A smile creeps onto my face at the thought that my mind-wife has a daughter in the same way my 'real' wife has Daisy. I feel a little better knowing Phoebe has someone with whom she can share my Mind Realm. Phoebe also has her nephew for company, too.

It doesn't take me more than half a minute to hunt around the hallway before I locate a small recess in the wall. When I press it, a computer panel pops out with a few buttons. To my surprise, the options for raising and lowering the lift are greyed out.

Lift in motion.

The message on the screen catches my attention. I quietly examine the readouts, only to widen my eyes in surprise.

"The lift is moving. Someone has already traveled half the length of the elevator shaft. But who, I wonder?"

Speaking more to myself than Phoebe, I vocalize my thoughts, then turn my attention skyward. "Examine."

My vision shifts as a targeted word of power surges through hundreds of thousands of tons of rock and dirt toward the rapidly descending elevator. Eventually, my magic reaches the car and its occupants, revealing something unexpected.

"Oh, wow! I thought I'd find Marie or the Volgrim inside, but instead, it's Kar and Blinker! Did Marie send Kar to meet me?"

"Maybe," Phoebe says, her tone uncertain. "After all, the Volgrim emissaries are probably keeping her busy. If they chose to immediately attack you, that must mean they consider you a high priority target. Marie can't just break away from them."

Phoebe's explanation allows me to relax. I lean against the wall and wait for ten minutes as the glass elevator cabin drops travels toward me. Finally, a distant hissing of wind catches my attention. In the blink of an eye, the elevator car arrives at the bottom of the shaft, slows rapidly, and comes to an abrupt halt. Going from more than a hundred miles an hour to an instant screeching stop might ordinarily injure the cabin's occupants, but Marie's internal dampeners prevent that from happening.

The moment the elevator arrives, Kar's surprised face greets me. He stares through the glass doors as they hiss open, a dumbfounded look on his face. "Hurgh?! Turtle! How long have you been standing here? Mother said you would be waiting for me inside a secret room. She even gave me a map!"

Kar raises his palm to reveal a holographic transmitter, but before I can reply, Blinker darts off Kar's shoulder and rushes over to flutter in my face.

"Forget that boring stuff! Jason, Jason! Guess who just became a queen?!"

I raise an eyebrow. "Uh... you...?"

"No, silly! I did! Me! I'm a queen now, boo-yah! My brothers and sisters are gonna be SOOOO jealous! Aren't you excited?! You're standing in the presence of genuine, bonafide royalty, baby! Whoo!"

Blinker buzzes around my head, babbling like an excited ten-year-old who just got the latest video game for her birthday. I nod along, unsure of how to reply in the face of such intense excitement.

"Uh, congratulations! Yeah. Good job, Blinker."

I pause.

"...How exactly did you become a queen? I feel like I'm missing something."

Kar steps out of the elevator and scratches the back of his head. "Haha... forgive my wife, for she is simply too excited to speak properly. You see, Turtle, King Ghidorah brought me before all of the lizardmen to perform the sacred Ascension Ceremony. He gave up his crown to me in acknowledgment of my power as the Sphinx. He made me the ruler of the lizards!"

My jaw drops. "Seriously? Wow! Good for you, Kar. You've earned it."

"Damn straight!" Blinker yells. She lands on my shoulder and starts dancing a jig. "Ooh, yeah, that's right! I'm the queen now! Uh-huh! Check me out!"

Kar smiles. "Hurgh. As I am now king, my wife naturally becomes the queen of the lizards. I do not know why Butterfly is so excited over a title, but if she is happy, then I am as well."

I smile. "You two are so incredibly wholesome to watch."

Kar nods. "It is because of my wife's radiance that I can bear such a heavy burden. Now, tell me, Turtle... why have you left the secret room? Mother told me you would likely spend several days speaking to the Great Spirits."

"Great Spirits, huh?" I mutter. "Well... something happened. One of those Great Spirits attacked my mind. I barely managed to subdue him, and it was at a great cost to my morals. After that incident, I didn't feel like sticking around anymore. I still need to visit Ose and request a peace treaty. The longer we delay here, the higher the risk Tarus II faces."

"Hmm... I understand what you mean..." Kar trails off, and a look of worry passes over his face. "...but Mother said-"

"You can stay here if you like," I reply, interrupting him. "But I can't. I have my own problems. If Marie needs my help, she can get it later. The demons won't stand idly after launching an attack on our planet, or have you already forgotten how they sent a Hydra to attack us?"

Kar shakes his head. "No. I have not forgotten. Big Boobs ended up in a coma because of the demons. I must pay them back in full for their treachery."

A slight pressure on my shoulder makes me turn my head. There, I see Blinker standing with her arms crossed. "Hmph! Jerk-faced demons! Sammy saved my life when Beelzebub attacked us. I'll never forgive anyone who hurts her! I'll give 'em heck! I'll tear 'em limb from limb! Just you wait and see!"

"Haha, I'm sure you will," I reply. "Come on, guys. There's no sense standing around and doing nothing."

I walk past Kar to enter the elevator, and he follows after me.

"Turtle. Regarding my ascension to King of the Lizards, the ceremony was quite elaborate. I wish you had been there to witness it."

I nod along to Kar's words. However, a second later, something occurs to me. After tapping the command to send the elevator upward, I turn to look at Kar.

And then I notice something shocking.

Kar is bigger than when I last saw him.

Not only is he several inches taller, but his muscles bulge in an even more exaggerated manner than they usually do. His eyes give off a piercing gaze, revealing a certain animal cunning I've never seen in him before.

"Observe."

I speak a word of power, one which shifts my vision in such a way that I can observe the mana flowing in the world around me.

Instantly, a white-hot light radiating from Kar's chest causes me to stagger backward. "Ah!"

Ever since Solomon started training me six years ago, he taught me to observe the relative power of my opponents and to estimate their strength not only based on their stature, but their mana levels as well.

Without a doubt, Kar is three times more powerful than when I last saw him. The amount of mana radiating from his body dwarfs mine by several factors!

"Holy shit, Kar! Did you take some steroids? You might be as strong as the top Demon Dukes!"

Kar crosses his arms and leans back against the elevator's glass walls with a look of smug satisfaction etched into his face. "Hurgh. When we left the Core, I told you I was the brains and the brawn of our little party. Now you can finally see the difference between us! King Ghidorah gave me his sacred energy, allowing me to ascend to the height of reptilian power."

"That's right!" Blinker yells, her squeaky voice carrying a sense of pride. "Kar is stronger than ever! If he fought that Beelzebastard from six years ago, he'd rip that little punk to pieces in three seconds flat! Just wait until you see the new technique King Ghidorah gave-"

"Butterfly!" Kar yells, hastily interrupting his wife. "There is no need to speak of that little trifle. Hurgh. We will visit Emperor Ose soon. If that snake tries anything, Turtle will find out just how much I've grown! Hehe. Save the surprises for later."

Blinker covers her mouth. "Oops! Teehee! I can't help bragging about how kick-butt my husband is! At this rate, Phoebe's going to feel preeetty jealous when we get back. Not everyone can have a guy like Kar!"

With a long, exaggerated sigh, I roll my eyes. "I think you guys are greatly overestimating Phoebe's love of muscles. Trust me on this one: She likes me just the way I am."

Hardly have the words left my mouth before my mind-wife pipes up. "Well, it's not like you can't improve some things about yourself. Nobody's perfect, stud."

Shush!

I quickly fire off a single word at Phoebe and try not to facepalm out of embarrassment.

As the lift ascends, I continue chatting with Kar and Blinker about various things, both large and small.

Eventually, Kar tells me something that startles me.

Immediately, I retort. "How could the demons do that? I know they view the lizardmen as pests, but... why would they launch an attack on your people with such hostile intentions?"

Kar shakes his head. "The demons at large do not care about the reptilians, Turtle. Only two demons continue to hunt us like rats. They are known as the Battle Brothers, Duriel, and Zamiel. They exterminated my species, the crocodiles. Now, they are aiming to eliminate the lizards as well. King Ghidorah begged me to accept his power and take over his position as Lizard King. He wishes for Butterfly and me to return home after I finish helping you with your mission, and there, we will mount a counter-attack against the Battle Brothers."

The blood drains from my face. "You might be as strong as a Demon Duke now, but didn't you mention before that both of the Battle Brothers were Barons? They must have a massive contingent of Lords and grunts working underneath them. Given how they already exterminated the crocodiles..."

Kar narrows his eyes. "Do not worry, Turtle. Hurgh. I will not be alone. The reptilians are mighty. Had the Crocodiles known of the demons' impending attack in advance, we would have stopped the Battle Brothers in their tracks. They only defeated us due to a cowardly sneak attack. Dishonorable! They must pay for their deception with their lives."

Blinker flutters off my shoulder to land on Kar's. Her expression turns solemn as she gazes at her husband with empathetic eyes. "Don't worry, sweetie. We'll beat them. We won't lose this time. I'll get help from the fairies if I must."

Kar gently raises his claw to his shoulder. He lightly brushes Blinker's hair and smiles. "That won't be necessary, my precious Butterfly. We will not lose this fight. Mother is sure to give us weapons so that we may stand our ground. When the final battle comes, you must stay away so that I can fight without reservation."

Blinker scowls. "The heck I will! I'm not weak! I have fairy magic! When we get back, I'll visit my mother and ask for a drop of water from Gaia's Spring! You just wait and see. I'll come back ten times stronger!"

"Hurgh. I cannot ever bring myself to tell you 'no,'" Kar mutters.

As the two of them share a tender moment, I cough into my fist. "Erm! I mean, if you need help, I'm always willing to jump in. Phoebe, too. We won't let you fight the Battle Brothers all by yourself. We're your friends, after all."

Kar smiles. "No, Turtle. You are not my friend. You are my brother. We fight the same enemies for the same cause. As long as we draw breath, we will be bound together, always."

I nod at Kar and shoot him a confident smile. We both give each other a slap on the back and laugh at nothing in particular.

Eventually, I turn my attention to the top of the lift. We continue ascending toward Marie's Laboratory, but as we do, a worrisome thought strikes me.

"The Volgrim might still be hanging around the Remnant Oasis. Returning to the Labyrinth via the teleportation glyph is probably not our best option. I think I'll teleport us back directly."

Kar turns to look at me with a surprised expression. "Hurgh? I thought you could not teleport great distances. The Labyrinth is on the other side of the galaxy, somewhere within folded space. When you attempted to teleport the Hydra, you nearly died!"

I nod. "You're right. Under normal circumstances, teleportation costs far more mana than it's worth. If I want to teleport somewhere within range of my vision, I will need at least half of my mana reserves. In the Hydra's case, it was a gigantic monster far bigger than anything I'd tried to teleport before. However, there is a loophole I discovered six years ago when I tried running away from Mephisto."

I continue. "Mephisto chased me through the Labyrinth for ages. I finally realized that if I used my Wordsmithing to create a 'waypoint,' I could teleport back to my waypoint later at a much lower mana cost. Before we came here, I set several waypoints in the Labyrinth in case of emergencies. I've also Wordsmithed dozens of others at key locations on Tarus II and its moon, Kelkin."

I pause for a second. "...However, I've never tried using my magic to teleport such a great distance. We should be fine, but I'll have to apologize in advance if something terrible happens."

Kar nods. "How interesting. For someone of your low intelligence, I can only congratulate you. I assume Golden Man must have taught you such a technique, given your brain is not developed enough to imagine such a thing."

"...Kar. For the hundredth time, I'm not a dummy."

Kar's expression softens. "Ah, I know it can hurt, knowing the truth, Turtle... but just know that nobody judges you for your lack of mental energy. We know you are doing your best."

I suck in a long, slow breath. "Kar, one of these days, I'm gonna kick your ass."

Kar chuckles. "Ah. The ambitions of youth." He glances at Blinker. Both of them wink at each other, as if mocking me for thinking I could ever stand a chance against the newly minted lizard king.

However...

Memories of when Solomon's soul sliver took over my body appear unbidden in my mind's eye.

I nearly killed Kar with a single move.

The amount of power I put out when under Solomon's control was frightening. If that level of destruction was possible from me, then I can only hope I never need to do to another person what I did to Samson.

I never want to walk down that dark path again.

After shaking the fog from my head, I clear my throat.

"Ahem. Return."

My body, along with Kar's and Blinker's, disappears from the elevator lift.

We arrive back inside the Labyrinth, amidst pitch-black darkness swallowing us from every direction.

After confirming all three of us survived the teleportation, I smile.

"Another happy landing."

Part 198: Jepthath's Origin

Deep inside the Labyrinth, tucked away in a nondescript corner, a young man stands amidst a room filled with treasure. Heaps, mounds, and even mountains of gold, diamonds, and precious metals litter the floor, making walking anywhere but through the room's main path impossible.

Hope, the only Wordsmith in existence, besides Jason, closes his eyes and focuses his mind. To his right, left, and straight ahead, multiple fifty-foot statues tower above him. Each of their eyes glows a different color as they gaze upon the youth standing before them.

Solomon, the Knowledge-Seeker, glows white.

Arthur, the Legendary Hero-King, glows golden.

And Jepthath, the Illuminator, Shepherd of Men, glows blood-red.

As the original Hero, the first of many to come, Jepthath's gaze seems to burn more intensely than the other two. Despite being nothing more than a graven image, Jepthath's unmoving form contains the slightest hint of arrogance. The more one gazes upon it, the more they get the feeling that not only is the ancient king judging them, but he has found them wanting.

Hope closes his eyes. "Alright. Tell me what you must. I'm ready."

Hope's words ignite a fire in Jepthath's soul. The statue's energy reverberates, and a ray of telepathic energy radiates from its eyes, traveling to the young Wordsmith and engulfing him in its power.

"After hearing my tale, never again will you gaze upon a demon in the same way."

Recommended Listening

My story begins during my youth, around the time of my twentieth year living on God's blessed land.

Jepthath's telepathy shifts the world in Hope's mind to one of an ancient, primeval Earth. Wildflowers riddle the land, along with trees and a few scattered animals. A village of primitive humans, each wearing thin animal-skins and wooden shoes, appears at the edge of the treeline. Poorly constructed dwellings built from straw and leaves provide them with roofs over their heads, but little protection from the elements.

I was a young hunter at the time. I had helped catch food for my village since my twelfth year of life, and was quite adept in the ways of foraging as well.

A group of dark-skinned humans hacks at a deer's carcass, cutting its skinned body with primitive stone knives. At their sides, a bundle of wooden spears rests, each one's tip covered in blood.

Among the group of half a dozen hunters, the youngest, Jepthath, turns to look at another hunter, one who appears to be more than a decade older than him.

"Hook? Hung, gon-gon jong!"

The other hunter lowers his eyes to a dirty chunk of meat in Jepthath's hands. He shakes his head.

"Doka."

Jepthath sighs and tosses the lump of meat to his side, where it lands amidst a pile of similarly nasty-looking meat.

Before the Day of Ascension, the day which changed humanity forever, my people spoke with little more than grunts and sign language. We lived in ignorance. We were not only stupid, but weak.

A young girl, perhaps fifteen or sixteen, runs over to Jepthath's side. "Domga! Domga!"

Jepthath turns to her and smiles. "Hock?"

The girl holds out her hand, revealing a newly sharpened stone knife. She leans forward, kisses Jepthath's cheek, and hands the tool to him.

My wife, nameless, like all the other villagers at the time, was someone very precious to me. Along with my son and daughter, there were few people I considered precious enough to lay my life on the line for than them.

Jepthath pauses. His voice takes on a quiet, solemn tone.

After the Day of Ascension, I chose a name for her. Neilah. I wish I could have called my wife by her name. She would have liked it.

The vision shifts, changing its scene to one of Jepthath and the other five hunters crouching low to stalk a tiger.

Life was dangerous during the ancient times. Hunters would often die by the dozens. We always tried to pre-emptively eliminate the competition in our hunting areas.

Jepthath slinks forward to the front of the party. The six humans hide behind a boulder. Silently, they motion with their hands and share glances among one another. The lead hunter, a man with grey hair, dictates the conversation's flow.

Go there.

I make first move.

You support me.

You two, pair up.

Instead of Jepthath, a much older hunter in his fifties leads the group. He issues several commands with sign language, and the others nod. They fan out, slinking low among the tall grass.

The tiger loudly chews on the remains of a buffalo, oblivious to the advance of the hunters. With its back to them, it doesn't notice their approach as they fan out from every direction and hold their spears at the ready.

Suddenly, all of the hunters spring toward the massive, powerful tiger. They burst out of the grass, and Jepthath howls at the top of his lungs. "Aaaaoaaoaoa!!"

Startled, the tiger instantly shifts into combat mode. It whirls to face Jepthath, but misses the approach of the two older and more seasoned hunters. A moment later, their spears impale the giant cat's ribs, causing it to howl in pain. "Skreeeoww!"

Now badly injured, the tiger tries to bolt away from the humans. It flees in terror, unwilling to retort against their sneak attack. However, hardly does it run ten paces before the ground gives way and it plunges into a trap! A pit filled with upward-facing spears, covered by a woven grass rug, reveals itself, much to the tiger's woe.

Seconds later, the hunters slow to a stop. Each one breathes a sigh of relief as they walk over to the pit and gaze upon the still-struggling cat. The tiger, now impaled by half a dozen barbs, bleeds profusely from several entry points. It writhes back and forth, struggling to break free of the trap, but its movements only cause its blood to drain faster.

The tiger eventually stops moving, and its eyes close for the last time in its life.

"Hep, hep!" The second youngest hunter shouts. His excitement quickly spreads among the others. They all share huge, toothy grins amongst themselves as they gaze upon what could have been a deadly opponent. They slap each other on the back and communicate in sign language, praising everyone for all their hard work.

Times were simple, back in those days, Jepthath continues. However, all humans knew that no matter how dangerous a tiger or lion might be, their threat was nothing compared to the most fearsome predators of all.

The demons.

Jepthath's hunters pull the dead tiger out of the trap and cover it with the woven rug. Afterward, they pet the dead animal's fur, marveling at its softness.

Jepthath glances at the eldest hunter. "Ah... guka jong-jong?"

He smiles politely and pats his heart, as if making a formal request.

The lead hunter rubs his chin.

"Mmm. Mong gah nock-nock."

Relief washes over Jepthath's face. He bows deeply before the lead hunter and bares another toothy grin. "Jip-jip jong!"

I still remember that day as if it were yesterday. After killing the tiger, I begged our eldest hunter to save the fur of the tiger for me. I wished to present it to Neilah as a present, but only after I'd cleaned it and turned it into a beautiful winter coat. When he permitted me the honor of the predator's fur, I felt elation like never before.

Finally, I would give my wife a present worthy of her beauty.

Finally, I would achieve the title of Predator Hunter. I would step out of the shadow of my boyhood and earn the respect of the village.

Jepthath's tone turns wry.

Haha... life was so simple back in those days. If only I had known then what I know now. If only...

The vision shifts again. This time, we jump forward several hours. The sun hangs low in the sky, casting long shadows as the night approaches. It hovers over a mountain range, revealing only a few hours before the darkness arrives.

Jepthath and the second youngest hunter each hold onto the front of a stretcher-like contraption of woven vines. Two long sticks poke through the greenery, giving them the handholds to lift and carry the dead tiger.

Ahead and behind the youngest hunters, the other four hunters split into groups of two, protecting the makeshift caravan's front and rear. They hold their spears forward and cast suspicious glances everywhere they go.

The humans trudge through a sparsely populated forest. Its thin tree cover allows plenty of sunlight to pass through and illuminate their path, but given enough time, the hunters will end up walking in total darkness if they don't make it back to the village before darkness falls.

As they trudge through the forest, the front-facing hunters occasionally pause to sniff the air.

"Maka."

"Gon-gon?"

"Maka."

The eldest hunter narrows his eyes. He points his spear toward the tops of the trees. There, a faint cloud of black smoke hovers overhead.

Jepthath, still grinning from ear to ear over his victory, slows to a stop. He stares at the sky, and slowly, his elated expression disappears.

"M-maka? Kaka no maka..."

His eyes express disbelief. He stares at the smoke as if it were a specter of death, one soon coming to reap his soul.

The lead hunter turns to face the other five. He points at the tiger's corpse. "Joopa! Joopa!"

Reflexively, Jepthath and his immediate senior release their grip on the stretcher. They reach behind themselves and grab their spears.

All six hunters bolt forward, looks of alarm on their faces.

They rush through the trees at full speed, gasping for breath. Leaves smack them in their faces, but they don't slow down in the slightest.

Soon, the edge of the treeline appears.

The thin smoke rapidly thickens.

A dense, black cloud engulfs the hunters. The smell of fire pours into their nostrils, gagging them and bringing them to tears.

However, the men don't stop. They continue storming through the forest as quickly as their legs can manage, stopping only to help another to his feet if one of the hunters trips or stumbles.

Eventually, they break through the forest line.

There, a heartbreaking sight awaits them.

Dozens of villagers lay tossed about here and there. Men, women, and children alike. Horrible, bloody wounds dot their bodies from head to toe, revealing not a battle, but a brutal slaughter. Fires rage throughout the camp, devouring everything in their path.

Even the corpses.

"Maka! Maka!!"

Jepthath screams in rage. He grinds his teeth together and sweeps his eyes across the village's ruins, only for his gaze to abruptly stop on a trio of figures — Neilah, laying face-down atop her dead children.

Time freezes for Jepthath. He stares, dumbfounded, at the image of his dead wife. Memories flash before his eyes. He reflects for a moment on their time shared together, their passionate embraces, and the looks of affection she would always give him.

Numbly, he steps forward, intending to close the distance. However, hardly has he taken a single step before someone grabs his shoulder. "Maka, koko! Maka!"

Jepthath turns to his left to see the lead hunter gazing at him with tears in his eyes.

"...Maka, koko."

Jepthath's voice tightens.

It only took a few grunts from my leader, the head of our village, to bring me crashing back to reality. The demons slaughtered my wife and children like sheep. My family was nothing more than a passing diversion for their abominable inclinations.

Every bone in my body screamed for me to rush to my wife to see if I could help her. I knew she was dead, but I couldn't control my urges. Luckily, or unluckily, depending on how one looked at it, the other hunters held me back. They, too, had lost their loved ones. We were the village's last survivors.

We hid in the bushes and waited while the fires raged. Eventually, the screams of a young man came to our ears. We glanced into the distance, horrified by what we heard.

The hunters slink around the edges of the village while coughing as quietly as possible into their animal-skin clothing. It doesn't take long before they arrive within a few hundred feet of a small crowd of demons. The monstrous, red-skinned bipeds surround a young man tied to a tree, laughing and cheering while two scythers stab him slowly, one by one. They cut him from head to toe, taking great care not to inflict any lethal wounds while drawing out the pain as much as possible.

The boy, barely fourteen years old, was one of our hunter's sons. The boy's father gazed with wide eyes at his beloved son being tortured, yet said nothing. We hadn't any chance of defeating a single demon Lord, let alone three dozen demon grunts working together. Trying to rescue his son would only end up a suicide mission for all of us.

However, within minutes, just before the demons grew bored of torturing the young man and decided to kill him, a strange rumbling began to shake the Earth.

That was when the Titan appeared. Hercules.

All at once, the demons jerk their heads to the south. Barely have they noticed their impending doom before a shadow in the sky plummets to the Earth below. Hercules, the son of Zeus, crashes into the dirt and unleashes a frenzied attack upon the unwitting demons.

His fists move like the wind, while his body twists like a viper. The demigod grabs each demon one by one, smashes them into the dirt, rips them apart, and breaks all the bones in their bodies. For every fireball or rock thrown at him, he delivers a beatdown one hundred times more intense than what he's received.

Eventually, half a dozen of the remaining demons tear off from the pack and flee into the woods, howling in terror.

Hercules doesn't chase them. Instead, he merely follows their path with his eyes.

"You may run for now, but no bloodskin will escape my wrath."

The fifteen-foot-tall Titan turns his attention to the human the demons were torturing only minutes before. He drops to a knee and caresses the boy's face.

"I am sorry that you had to suffer, young one. However, I cannot heal your wounds. You will die within the hour."

The hunters stand and stare, motionless, with terrified gazes. As scary as the demons were, they paled in comparison to the giant who ripped them limb from limb.

However, one hunter, the father of the ensnared boy, steps out of his hiding spot.

"Joko! Gon-gon jip!"

Tears fill his eyes as he takes a tentative step forward, revealing himself to the Titan. A hint of pleading enters his voice, as if he's begun begging for the giant to spare his son. He does not yet realize that Hercules is a friend.

Hercules turns to face him. The Titan gazes at the hunter for several long seconds before closing his eyes. "I see. This child must be your son. Come. Hold him in his final moments."

With a quick, deft moment, Hercules unbinds the boy's arms and gently holds him out for the man to take.

Unable to control himself, the hunter wails in grief as he holds his boy. The life ebbs from the child's body, but still, he forces a smile as he gazes at his papa.

"Guh... gul-gul... kip...?"

The hunter nods. He glances at the village, where, presumably, the other members of his family lay dead and broken.

"Gon-gon. Gon-gon..."

Jepthath's voice cracks with emotion. The man lied to his son, hoping to ease his suffering. All the boy wished to know was if his mother had survived. She had not, but the hunter could not bear to tell him the horrible truth.

After a few minutes, the boy's smile disappears. He sags in his father's arms as the last breath of life leaves his body.

All of the hunters step out of the clearing, including Jepthath, and surround their brother. He weeps like a baby, unable to control the agony wracking his heart.

Hercules rises to his feet. He says nothing, allowing the hunters their moment of grief.

Eventually, the hunters pull themselves together. They return to the village, where Hercules snuffs out all the fires with a clap of his hands. It only takes them half an hour to gather the dead and line their burned and defiled corpses in the center of the village.

This time, it is the other hunters who weep. Jepthath, the youngest of the group, trembles with rage and anguish as he gazes at the bodies of his wife and children. He drops to his knees and strokes their hair, seemingly trying to imprint their memories onto his hands so that he will never forget them.

Hercules stands behind the hunters and watches. Eventually, he raises his voice.

"Humans. I am sorry for your losses. I, too, one lost someone precious to me. My beloved wife, Megara, was brutally murdered by the bloodskins. There is nothing left for you here in this village. Bury your dead and come with me."

Fury appears in Hercules' eyes.

"I will not let your thirst for vengeance go unanswered."

Jepthath turns to gaze into the Titan's eyes. When their gazes meet, Jepthath nods.

I knew what I had to do.

The Titan extends his hand with his palm facing upward. It doesn't take long before all six hunters walk forward and place their more diminutive hands on his.

Hercules's eyes glow pure white as he sends streams of mana surging into the arms of each human present.

"You've made the right choice, humans. From now on, you will become part of my... Legion."

The hunters raise their heads. Their eyes shimmer white, just like the Titan's, as his memories and knowledge mix with theirs.

"We follow the future King of Titans."

"We serve the future King of Titans."

"We hail the future King of Titans."

"We obey the future King of Titans."

"We are yours to command."

Recommended Listening

Six demons run through the forest, their bodies shivering and shaking. They rip through the foliage and flee toward their burrows dozens of miles away, casting glances behind themselves all the while.

"So scary! Come on, Glorm, get a move on! That Titan can't be far behind us!!"

"Who was that guy?! He was huge!"

"You ain't seen shit! Lucy fought a Titan three times bigger'n him! I just didn't know the small ones were that scary, too!"

The demons continue their mad dash, burning, cutting, and punching anything or any creature that gets in their way.

However, behind them, birds caw and take to the skies as something huge bursts through the foliage. Tears and snot continuously stream down the demon's faces.

"It's him! It's the big guy! Run, you morons! RUN!"

Suddenly, the noise behind the demons disappears. The forest falls silent, save for the uproar caused by their panicked flight.

A chill goes down the spine of the Burner in the rear. He jerks his head backward, gazing through the foliage to spot six pairs of glowing white eyes slipping through the poorly lit forest, all while making nary a sound. The eerily silent predators, now boosted by the power of the Titan, leap at the Burner with their spears upraised. He tries to fling a fireball, but all six humans crash upon him like a tsunami.

The other five demons don't notice as their comrade goes missing. They continue running at top speed for several minutes, only to finally realize the volume of fireballs they were lobbing before has halved.

The lead Scyther, a blade-armed demon with predatory fangs lurking in his maw, glances backward and hisses. "Kss! Where is Gruta?! That stupid, worthless little...!"

"Forget him!" The other Burner barks. "Gruta fell behind! He was too slow! We have to tell Emperor Lucifer about the Titan!"

"Yeah!" One of the Brutes yells. His tiny eyes and giant body give him a pea-brained appearance, but animal cunning lurks within his gaze. "We can't let big Titan keep kill us! He too scary!"

The Scyther, still running, nods. "Alright. Forget Gruta! If any of you fall behind, the rest of us will keep running! We don't have time to rescue stragg- augh!!"

Before the Scyther can finish his sentence, he spots an enormous shadow passing over the sky. Hercules plummets from the treetops and smashes into the dirt a few hundred feet in front of the five demons, hitting the ground with a tremendous thud. They shriek in fright and come to an abrupt halt, comically stumbling over one another as they try to reverse direction and flee.

However, when Hercules lands, he merely rises to his full height and crosses his arms. The Titan watches with a smirk on his face as the five errant demons split up and run in every direction.

"Haha. Better to die by my hand than those I've contracted. Their retribution will ensure a slow, painful death for each and every one of you."

True to his words, five of the hunters split apart. They race after each demon, targeting the demons they find most suitable to fight with their current abilities. The sixth human stays behind, keeping the unconscious body of the Burner from earlier bound tightly by makeshift vines.

Jepthath chases one of the Brutes. The humongous, eight-foot-tall demon flees at top speed from his seemingly diminutive pursuer. When he glances backward and only sees one tiny human chasing him, the Brute jams his feet into the ground, comes to a screeching halt, and whirls to face his opponent.

"What?! Only one little fleshbag? Me gonna make you dead now!"

The Brute smashes his fists together and flares his nostrils. He waits a few moments as the gutsy human charges at him, spear raised.

Jepthath rushes the big Brute and performs a feint, acting as if he'll leap at the Brute's head. However, he ducks at the last second and slides under the demon's legs, causing the Brute to swing awkwardly in the wrong direction and miss his slippery adversary.

Skrik!

Jepthath stabs his wooden spear into the Brute's ankle, summoning a howl of pain from the giant's throat. The Brute spins around and swings his fist, moving far faster than he did before. Jepthath tries to dodge, but he doesn't put enough distance between himself and the demon, causing the Brute to land a decisive blow on his shoulder.

Crack!

The Brute's monstrous strength impacts Jepthath's muscle and bone, sending the human flying. He crashes against a rock and flops to the dirt, his body burning with pain.

"Ack... hurts..."

Jepthath climbs to his feet. His ribs ache from the rocky landing, while his left arm flops uselessly. With one arm broken, his fighting strength drops by half, making him much weaker than before.

The Brute howls with delight. "Bahaha! Even if that Titan kill me, I not let you live! You die here, stinky fleshbag!"

The Brute storms toward the human, clearing the thirty-foot gap with frightening speed. However, Jepthath's eyes glow a little brighter as he quickly transmits information between himself and the others.

A split-second before the Brute reaches him, Jepthath dives to the side, lands on his right arm, and pushes off the ground with his enhanced dexterity.

His foot rushes toward the Brute's head faster than the demon can react.

Crunch.

The sound of bone striking bone ripples through the forest. Jepthath shatters the Brute's jaw and knocks him backward, causing the demon to stumble and fall on his ass.

"Aaaugh! Muh mouf! Guuurgh!"

The demon howls in pain. Stars dot his vision, making it impossible for him to track the human. Before the Brute can reorient himself, Jepthath rolls to the side, grabs his spear, and thrusts it toward the demon's lung.

Shik!

He spears the demon's blubber, causing another pained wheeze to erupt from the demon's chest.

Jepthath's eyes take on a sinister edge as he gazes at his crippled adversary.

"You killed my wife. You killed my daughter. You killed my son. Your pain has only just begun."

The human draws a stone knife from his waist and leaps at the Brute. The demon's screams of agony echo throughout the forest as the human slowly carves apart his skin, gouges out his eyes, and breaks every bone in his body one by one.

All across the forest, the demons wail and plead, begging for mercy as their human pursuers pin them down, bind their limbs, and torture them for hours on end.

Eventually, the demons succumb to their wounds, perishing one by one.

However, Jepthath makes sure to draw out his victim's agony the longest. A monstrous grin spreads across his face as he cuts the demon apart, chunk by chunk.

"This is for my family! This is for my village! And this... THIS is for my king!!"

* * *

Not far away, Hercules gazes through the eyes of his newly acquired servants. A sense of pride washes over him as he scrutinizes their barbarous acts of vengeance.

"Haha. Good. Good. Let out your hate — your anger. Never forget that which drives you. We mustn't let a single survivor escape. It's far too early for the Emperors to know of my existence."

"But someday... they will fear my name. They will speak of me in hushed whispers."

"And when that day comes?"

"Haha."

"Well, it will be glorious, indeed. I will avenge Megara. I will kill every last bloodskin."

Hercules wipes tears from his eyes. His heart swells with joy as he gazes at the waning sun, where shadows lengthen and darkness stretches across the land.

"You lot will be the first members of my Legion. It won't be long before we take back Earth from the bloodskins. Someday, my father will understand why I've chosen to walk this path."

Hercules shakes his head.

"The old fool. All Zeus does is prattle on about the ancestors... but those long-dead relics won't save us, now. Only I can bring back my people from the edge of extinction. Only I possess the power to drive back the scourge of demonkind."

As Hercules gazes through the eyes of his newly acquired hunters, he lingers on Jepthath's vision for several minutes.

"You are a most remarkable specimen. Your rage burns the hottest. Your fire, the brightest."

"I will crown you the leader of my Legion."

"I will make you their King."

Part 199: Jepthath's Burden

Jepthath's voice rumbles inside of Hope's mind.

Four hundred years passed. Thanks to the Titan's soul manipulation, those who submitted to him and pledged their loyalty gained the gift of immortality. As the first batch of humans he ever recruited, my village's hunters were the closest to him and became his elite generals.

Hercules amassed an army in secret. His father, the Titan King Zeus, would have punished him severely and killed the entirety of Hercules' Legion if he knew of our existence. No Titan King would tolerate a soul-manipulator in their midst. Therefore, we had to keep our numbers low and live in seclusion.

The vision shifts to reveal a massive underground city dug out by the efforts of Hercules' Legion. With a ceiling height of twenty feet and thousands of structures built from stone, wood, and dirt, the underground city possesses something of a dwarven appearance, rather than the haphazard and meandering demonic hallways of the Labyrinth. Every human warrior walks around dressed in light leather armor, but the quality is far higher than what Jepthath's village managed to produce.

Hercules's power enabled his Legion to share not only their vision, but their thoughts and memories. We kept no secrets from each other, and we treated those around us like blood brothers. Thanks to our shared vision, it was impossible for demons to sneak up on us, or for infiltrators to enter our city. Were any member of the Legion to perish, the others would know instantly.

For a time, we enjoyed a sense of peace and security. However, our benefactor continued to fight the demons on the surface world, killing clumps and clusters of them whenever they popped up. We began to wonder when our time to shine would appear.

Finally, that day arrived.

The city of humans bustles with activity. Craftsman sharpen and cut wooden spears by the dozens, while more than half of the community flays the skins of numerous dead animals, dices their bodies apart, and cooks mountains of food for the others. At the edges of the underground city, dozens of hunters patrol, alone, sweeping their glowing eyes in every direction to search for possible enemies. With their shared vision, the moment someone tries to launch an attack, the entire community will rise to the fight at the same time.

Jepthath, leader of a 1,000-man brigade, sits with a small group of comrades. A fire crackles between them as they rest on four logs arranged in a square. They silently chew and swallow meat soup, staring at one another while exchanging thoughts telepathically.

[We should prepare for battle,] One of the warriors thinks. [Hercules' fight against the demons is turning south quickly.]

Jepthath finishes his soup. He sets his bowl on the cave floor and nods. [This conflict isn't like the others. Our leader is facing off against Satan the Devil, the First Emperor of demonkind. We thought he had perished, but it seems that even his subjects were unaware of his survival.]

The first warrior nods. [So what you're saying is...]

[Aye. We will not let our leader fight this battle alone. Satan killed Megara. He must die for his sins. And as for me... the demons took my wife and children. I won't rest until I have laid every last bloodskin to rest within the Earth's bosom. Their blood will water the flowers of the future. Their bodies will create a virtuous cycle of life, molding a planet for us to live upon.]

Jepthath rises to his feet. His thoughts transmit to all the other denizens of the underground cave.

[Come! We must not allow Hercules to fight Satan alone! This battle is ours as well! What have we to live for, if not to kill the monsters who ravaged our homes and butchered our families?!]

All across the camp, thousands of warriors stop what they're doing and rise to their feet. Their vision unites, allowing them to hear Jepthath's words as clearly as if he were standing right before them.

Despite their unified thoughts and vision, their minds remain unique. Each warrior reflects for a moment on their dead husbands, wives, and children. Each of them walks a similar path in life, a path of bloodshed and revenge, not unlike Jepthath's. However, the individual differences make them stronger and allow them to empathize more deeply with one another. Jepthath's words light a fire in their hearts as they realize that hundreds of years of waiting have finally come to fruition.

[I won't stand idly while my leader fights the Devil!] One warrior cries.

[Neither will I! I fight for Hercules! I fight for Jepthath!]

[I won't draw my last breath until I squeeze the life from Satan's throat!]

Multiple members of the Legion pump their fists in the air. As one, they rise to their feet and march toward the weapons cache, where thousands of sharpened spears await them.

[March on the demons! Kill them all! Char their corpses to ash!!]

A flood of humans pours out of the mountain's entrance. Jepthath's battalion leads the charge, bellowing like bears as they travel.

Jepthath transmits his thoughts to Hercules. [Master! We are coming to help! Do not tell us to abandon you!]

Hercules, their leader, swings his fist at Satan and crushes the Devil's head into pulp.

He smiles.

[I wouldn't have it any other way. The Devil is a troublesome opponent. To me, my warriors! Today, we will shake the Earth and send the demons scurrying back into their burrows!]

The human warriors quickly charge out of their mountain, through the forests, and past various plains and flatlands. Aided by the power of Hercules' Titan strength, their physical prowess, agility, and stamina are more than three times higher than ordinary humans.

Hercules temporarily retreats from the battle. As he does, his thoughts turn inward.

My Titan ancestry is incompatible with human warriors. Were I a pureblooded human, I would be able to share my power amongst them equally. They would become unstoppable, a fighting force capable of leveling continents. Still, even as they are now, my Legion is more than a match for the demons!

Jepthath and the other ten thousand humans charge several miles in the blink of an eye. They sweep across the plains like a hurricane, traveling nearly a hundred miles an hour as their bare feet pound against the Earth's soil.

Eventually, they arrive before their benefactor and savior, the son of Zeus, Hercules. His Legion bows before him, then raises their spears to the sky. "We fight for Hercules! We fight to rid the Earth of the bloodskins!"

"Haha..." Hercules chuckles. "That, you do. I am proud of all of you. Ten thousand men stand before me today. No longer are you boys, but warriors! You've trained to hone your bodies. Now, do not hold back any longer! Come with me! Send Satan's soul to the Great Beyond, where it shall remain, forever!"

"Yes!"

"Yes!"

Hercules' army whoops and cheers. The soldiers pound their chests and follow their leader as he turns around and charges back to the battlefield, where his father awaits.

However...

Little do the humans know, but an awful fate awaits all of them.

Recommended Listening

Jepthath's spear finds its mark. He impales a Scyther through its mouth, ripping the top of its head off with a sickening skrik!

The young hunter pants like a beaten wolf. Beside him, two members of his original tribe fight like hell against the demonic hordes. Their spears spin, whack and stab with reckless abandon. However, the fatigue wracking their bodies draws them ever closer to a sudden collapse. Should their strength fail, the demons will pounce on them and rip them limb from limb.

[Give no quarter!] Jepthath shouts through his telepathic link. [We cannot allow Hercules to fall!]

Hundreds of demons and humans stab, slash, burn, and maim one another in a no-holds-barred battle to the death. Barbatos, now an enraged ball of claws and hatred, tears at the Balrog's back with reckless abandon, scorching his claws and howling in pain as he tries to take down the massive behemoth.

Jepthath works together with the oldest hunter from his village. Together, the two of them take on a Demon Lord, a slinky female possessing the power of water. She uses her liquid manipulation to turn the blood-soaked battlefield into a deathtrap. Pressurized bursts of liquid fire at Jepthath, forcing him to duck and dodge as the unified eyesight of the Legion weakens more and more every minute. With fewer than a thousand humans left alive, cracks appear in their formerly near-omniscient field of vision.

The eldest hunter hurls his spear at the Demon Lord, but she dodges at the last second, allowing the spear to sail past her and impale a different demon's back. The poor bastard perishes without seeing his death coming.

"Damned filthy fleshbags!" The Demon Lord yells. "Suffer!"

She summons a razor-thin water-whip and starts whipping it from left to right in huge, sweeping motions. Jepthath and the other hunter duck the first sweep and jump the next when she aims for their legs. Both sides end in a standstill, unable to hit the other, while quickly exerting what's left of their stamina.

"Stop dodging!" The Demon Lord barks. "I'll kill you yet!"

Suddenly, the Demon Lord flings her hands behind herself. A blast of water fires from her back, propelling her forward with startling speed. She catches Jepthath's fellow hunter off-guard as she rushes at him with a water-spear raised.

"Hokkad!" Jepthath yells. He tries to rush to his friend's aid, but doesn't move quickly enough. The Demon Lord hurls her spear down and impales Hokkad through his chest, ripping out the man's flesh and bone. Hokkad slumps to the ground, dead, while Jepthath's heart explodes with fury.

"Demon whore!"

With her attention still fixated on the dead Legion member, the Demon Lord doesn't have enough time to turn and face Jepthath. He takes advantage of her momentary distraction to jump her from behind and impale the demoness right through her heart.

Skrik!

"Augh!"

The demoness tries to turn and fight, but Jepthath follows up with a vicious series of punches and kicks. He sweeps her legs and smashes his fist into the demoness's mouth, knocking the daylights out of her and finishing with a brutal blow to the throat. The demoness goes still as the life leaves her body.

Jepthath gasps for breath. He pants and wheezes as agony wracks his chest. Sadly, he can't spare a moment to grieve for his fallen comrade. With his link to Hokkad's mind severed, Jepthath has no doubts over his friend's demise.

"D-demon filth..." Jepthath growls.

Tears well up in his eyes as he filters his vision from the chaos engulfing the remaining members of the Legion. Hercules howls in pain as Belial wraps herself around him and plunges her knife-fingers into his chest. With their leader suffering such gruesome wounds and their numbers rapidly dwindling, the seemingly perfect teamwork of the Legion falls into disarray. Their unified vision falters, and their expertly aimed blows consistently miss the mark, allowing handfuls of demons to survive what should have been fatal blows.

[Jepthath!] One human cries. [Help me! The demons-]

His voice cuts off abruptly as a Brute pulverizes his skull and flattens his corpse into the mud.

[Leader! We have to retreat! We can't hold off-]

Another voice falls silent as its owner meets a grisly end.

The voices of the few hundred remaining humans fall off, one by one. Friends, comrades, and brothers Jepthath has grown close to over the last few hundred years meet their maker at the fists and claws of the demons. Jepthath yanks his spear from the dirt and re-enters the fray, only to move a beat too slow and watch as another warrior perishes to a fireball flung by a Burner.

[Come, brothers! Retreat!] Jepthath orders. [To the south! We can't hold on any longer!]

The other humans try to obey their leader's orders. With Hercules ensnared by the succubus, Jepthath becomes their pillar of support. However, not even he can summon a miracle. With the ever-increasing number of demons swarming from the depths of the Earth, the humans fail to find a path of escape. Some break off from the demonic horde and rush toward the woods, but their fleet-footed enemies pounce on them like wolves onto sheep.

[Go! Go!] Jepthath bellows. He rushes toward the woods, slaying three grunts along the way while pulling his injured comrades up one by one. Together, he and a dozen humans manage a narrow escape while fighting off their pursuers.

As they flee, Jepthath and his friends sense a growing gap in their vision. The demons mercilessly slaughter the remaining humans ten at a time. Even the ones who stood at the edge of the crater to provide wide-ranged vision perish under the sneak attacks of Burrowers.

Sweat pours down Jepthath's back. He races through the trees along with the ten remaining members of the Legion. Three of them bleed profusely from grievous wounds suffered during the battle, but they offer no complaint. Their speed slows to a crawl as the life ebbs from their bodies. Eventually, the injured fall to the pursuing demons, picked off by a pair of Scythers and three Hellhound-riding orcs.

Jepthath and the remaining Legioneers screech to a halt as the forest comes to an end at the foot of a cliff. With their escape route abruptly cut off, all the humans can do is turn to face the hundred or so pursuing demons.

The situation turns bleak. Jepthath grits his teeth, as do the other Legionnaires.

[I'm sorry, everyone,] Jepthath says, his voice resolute. [I failed all of you. I should never have ordered us to attack. We weren't ready. I wasn't ready.]

[Do not blame yourself,] The nearest warrior replies, his telepathic voice choked with emotion. [No man lives forever. If we must die, then we will bring as many bloodskins down with us as possible.]

[Aye.]

The humans charge their opponents, startling the demon pursuers. The Legionnaires put on a terrific show of brutality as they rip their adversaries limb from limb. Even outnumbered four to one, the humans manage to take out dozens of demon grunts.

However, the moment a Demon Lord appears, the human's ranks fall to pieces. This time, a male lord wearing a black bear's pelt leaps out of the forest and catches two of the Legion's remaining members by surprise. He grabs them by the backs of their heads and smashes their faces against the ground, pulverizing their heads into mush. In the blink of an eye, he drops onto his hands and feet and charges like a tiger at the other humans and rips through their ranks like a pack of Hellhounds.

One by one, all of the Legion's members fall to the Demon Lord's onslaught.

Soon, only Jepthath remains.

The lone surviving member of the Legion battles for his life as he ducks and dodges the monstrous Demon Lord.

"Skrah! Filthy little human! You're all alone now!" The Demon Lord cackles. "You've done well to last this long! Consider yourself lucky to die at the claws of Kiki, the Lord of the Woods! Hahaha!"

Blood covers Jepthath's body. Hundreds of cuts and bruises line his skin, making him look more like a walking cadaver than a living being. He spits blood on the dirt and grunts.

"Don't mock me, servant of evil. I swore to eliminate your kind from the Earth. If I die here, how will I remain a man of my word?"

Kiki howls with laughter. "Hahaha!! It's a miracle you're still standing, moron! You'll be lucky to last thirty more seconds! Give up, and I'll make your death quick and painless!"

Behind Kiki, dozens of demon grunts file into the forest. They stand aside and allow the Demon Lord his moment of fun, laughing and grinning to each other all the while.

Jepthath grips his blood-covered spear. He gazes at the Demon Lord with a mixture of pity and disgust. "You want me to give up? What a coward. It seems you're too scared to take on one pathetic, insignificant human. If I'm as weak as you say, then finish me off."

The Demon Lord guffaws. He laughs at Jepthath with a tone of incredulity, acting as if he can't believe the human's silly bravado. "Pfft! Oh, geez, you're a thick one! If you want to die so badly, I'm happy to oblige!"

The Demon Lord lowers into a four-legged stance again and charges at Jepthath. When the human stabs at him, he jumps to the side and swipes at Jepthath's leg, gouging out a chunk of his flesh. Jepthath grits his teeth, but doesn't cry out in pain.

Instead, Jepthath's movements quicken. He seizes the initiative and charges Kiki, raising his spear to swing it down like a club. Kiki cackles evilly and rolls to the side, allowing the weapon to crash against the ground where he was standing.

"Too slow! Stupid human!"

Kiki dashes behind Jepthath and slashes at his back, tearing out another chunk of skin. Once again, the demon jumps backward and retreats as Jepthath staggers around like a drunken fool.

"Haha, lookit Kiki," One of the nearby grunts says to another. "He's just playing with that human. He ain't taking this seriously at all."

"Why should he?" The other grunt replies, a smirk on his face. "That human ain't got any fight left in him. A few more hits and he'll be begging for a quick death."

The demons chuckle to one another, laughing at how pathetic the final member of the Legion's fight seems to be. However, as the fight continues for another five minutes, and then another ten minutes, their expressions change.

Gallons of blood pour from Jepthath's body. His appearance appears ghastly, like a battle-worn specter of death. No matter how many times Kiki gouges out a chunk of skin, the human doesn't die. Instead, his movement and strength increase, allowing him to slowly match the Lord of the Wood's strength.

"What the hell? How is that human still alive?!" The demon grunt from earlier yells. "He should've died a long time ago!"

Jepthath says nothing. His bloodshot eyes follow the Demon Lord around as Kiki's increasingly wary attacks slow to a crawl. The Demon Lord continues to swipe at Jepthath every once in a while, but his shaking limbs reveal a hidden emotion emerging from within his mind.

Fear.

Kiki cautiously evaluates the human before him.

That guy ain't no human! No way! He's scary! How in the hell can someone take so much abuse and keep standing?!

Kiki charges in again, but this time, he raises his claws high and goes for the killing blow.

I've gotta finish this bastard off now! If the other demons hear it took me twenty minutes to beat one human, I'll never live the shame-

Before he can finish his thought, Kiki's body jerks backward abruptly in midair as Jepthath's spear finds its mark.

Skrik.

Jepthath impales the demon through his throat, swings him overhead, and slams the Lord of the Wood against the forest floor. Kiki's corpse crashes into the glade with a heavy whump, sending a wave of silence throughout the demon's ranks.

Several grunts stare in wide-eyed awe at the once-proud Demon Lord they all looked up to and admired.

"H-how... how did one little human beat Kiki? That can't be possible..."

Suddenly, the blood-soaked warrior turns to face his demonic opponents. His gaze, filled with hatred and vengeance, meets theirs.

"Now... you... will... die..."

Jepthath gurgles on his blood. His body trembles from the agony of a thousand cuts, but he never gives in to the pain. Images of his dead friends, family, and former comrades haunt his vision, giving him a bottomless well of strength to continue fighting.

He failed them.

He failed everyone.

But he will never fail himself. He must continue to fight for everyone's sake.

Several demon grunts take a fearful step backward. One particularly brave soul does the opposite. A single Scyther takes a hesitant step forward and aims his blade-arm at the human. "W-what are you morons waiting for?! He can't take us all at once! C-come on!"

The Scyther's shaking voice doesn't imbue his fellow grunts with confidence. However, he does manage to dispel the fog from their minds.

"Y-yeah! We can take 'im!" One shrill-voiced Burner yells. "Come on! Let's gut this bastard for killing Kiki!"

Jepthath stands motionless as the demons rally together and rush him. With his back against a cliff, all Jepthath can do is wait for his enemies to enter his range.

The lone warrior shakes his head. They've got me surrounded. The poor bastards.

What follows is a masterclass in brutality. Jepthath's spear becomes a whirlwind of destruction. He spins and twists like an acrobat, swinging his makeshift baseball bat against the heads and bodies of any demon unfortunate enough to draw within his range. Their heads tear from their bodies and sail into the woods, while their arms, legs, and chests shatter under the mountain-crushing strength of the final remaining Legionnaire.

Eventually, the demons cease their assault and beat a hasty retreat. Unable to land a killing blow against the human, their will to fight dissipates like a sneeze in the wind.

"He's too powerful!"

"Run! Get out of my way! I don't want to die next!"

"Hey, don't trip me! You piece of shrakh! If that human gets me, he'll- aaugh!"

Jepthath chases the fleeing demons. He kills more than a dozen, ending their lives in a spectacularly brutal fashion. However, as they run, the difference in their remaining stamina compared to his finally makes itself evident. Jepthath slows to a stop and collapses against a tree. Every fiber of his being aches. His body begs for the release of death, while darkness threatens to swallow his vision.

[Ngh... this is it for me...] The last Legionnaire thinks to himself. [I don't have any energy left. Not a drop. If a demon comes by, they'll easily kill me before I can lift a finger.]

However, his thoughts don't stay within his mind. Instead, they transmit to Hercules, now safely tucked under his father's arm. The young Titan suffers from deep wounds inflicted by the succubus, Belial. He closes his eyes and transmits his thoughts to any who will listen.

[My Legion. Who among you still draws breath?]

Fatigue wracks Jepthath's body. He sags further against the tree and sighs.

[Only me, my leader. I have failed you. The rest of the Legion perished to the bloodskins.]

Hercules falls silent. His father travels at the speed of sound, rushing across the landscape toward the safety of the Titan's hall.

[I see. I expected as much. We weren't ready to fight the demons. An army of ten thousand was far too few to stand against the millions of bloodskins lurking within the Earth's bowels. Haha...]

Overwhelming sadness fills Hercules' mind.

[I knew when I tapped into the soul manipulation arts that my father would hate me. Still, I gained as much as I lost. I'm glad to have met you, Jepthath. You were always different from the other humans. Only you understand the pain tucked away within the recesses of my heart. The pain of loss. Of suffering. Of regret. We can never bring back those we've lost, but we can avenge them. You can avenge them.]

Hercules sighs.

[I won't let you die. You shall become my ace in the hole. If I should perish, I will ensure my power passes on to you. For now, I will grant you half of my strength. Use it wisely and survive. Earth's fate depends on you.]

Hercules closes his eyes. He transmits a tremendous amount of magical energy through the telepathic link to Jepthath. There, it enters the human's broken body and swiftly gets to work mending his wounds.

Jepthath coughs. [I... I am unworthy.]

[No,] Hercules replies, a hint of melancholy in his voice. [I am. I must do what I can to revive the Titans. However, you must save your people. The angels think little of humanity, but I see now that your kind will be the key to defeating the demons, someday. Whether one year or a thousand, humanity will end up the ultimate victor in this planetary war.]

Jepthath nods. [I understand. Thank you, leader. If it wasn't for you... I would never have had a chance to avenge my family's murder.]

[I have no doubt that even without my help, you would have moved Heaven and Earth to pay the demons back double for their violence. Haha. I am fortunate to have met you. I will submit to whatever punishment my father deems necessary. In the meantime, you must keep fighting, Jepthath. You are the key to defeating the demons.]

[I will. Do not worry, leader.]

Hercules sighs. Having exhausted himself in the battle against the demons, he sags in his father's grasp and allows sleep to swallow him.

However, Jepthath does not.

The human winces as his body repairs itself. He pulls himself to his feet and stumbles away from the field of corpses. With a deep sigh, he begins hobbling back toward his mountain village, where the Legion once lived.

If Hercules will not allow me to die, then I must stay alive at all costs. I will rebuild the Legion, but a thousand times stronger with a thousand times as many men. I won't make the same mistakes I did before.

I will hunt the demons no matter where they hide. Their extinction will draw nearer by the day.

Jepthath smiles.

Only once I've wrung the life from Satan's neck will I finally join my family in the Great Beyond.

Part 200: Jepthath's Inheritance

Five years passed. After witnessing the death of all my fellow Legionnaires, along with Hercules' imprisonment, I all but lost myself to madness and rage.

Jepthath's visions shift, revealing a series of images where he pounces at demons from the shadows, eviscerates them, and then slips back into the darkness. At one point, he ambushes a 100-demon-strong platoon of grunts, rips off their limbs, and beats them to death with their own extremities.

Despite all my rage, I eventually brought myself back to reality. I came to realize that with Hercules imprisoned, it was my job to protect humanity from the demons. However, since Hercules alone possessed the ability to contract with other beings, I could not regrow the Legion by myself.

Undeterred by that overwhelming setback, I realized that I had gained something incredibly valuable to offset my loss.

Power.

Hercules shared half of his Titan strength with me, turning me into a devastating weapon capable of tearing demonkind apart. He had once tried bestowing greater amounts of his power with the Legion, but due to his Titan ancestry, no soldier's body could increase their vitality more than threefold.

I was the lone exception.

Honed by combat and tempered by rage, I gritted through mountains of pain and suffering, granting myself enhanced resistance to his power's negative effects. Eventually, I molded his energy within myself and altered its properties.

I made Hercules's strength my own.

Time flashes forward — Jepthath's vision changes to reveal a small community of humans, barely a hundred strong. Jepthath stands atop a small boulder, surrounded by stone huts covered with straw. Around him, the entire village bows deeply, awed by his presence.

"Jip-jip jong! Jip-jip jong!"

The crowd chants a few words over and over. Some of the gathered men and women raise their heads to gaze upon Jepthath with admiration and fear.

Thanks to Hercules's soul manipulation, I was capable of speaking the language of the Titans and Gods. However, until I established a contract with those under me, I could not share the gift of language with them. Thankfully, this did not impede me, as I had once communicated in much the same way as they did, centuries before.

Jepthath crosses his arm over his chest. "Hoya! Bon-bon, kuu fi-fi!"

The villager nod. In unison, they rise to their feet, run to their huts, and come back with a hundred small baskets of fruit and vegetables. They return with looks of eagerness on their faces and place the baskets down around Jepthath's rock in a circle, then step backward, allowing him to examine their gifts.

Since I could not rebuild the Legion without Hercules's help, I instead rescued a village from a demonic assault, saving them from the same fate my family had once suffered. Afterward, I moved their village into the mountains a hundred miles away from Sinai. Their only purpose was to gather food for me, as well as news and information regarding the demon's movements. However, despite how I used them as a tool in my quest to kill the demons, I came to realize that these humans did not look at me as a man, but as a God.

They called me the Illuminator.

Jepthath descends from his rock. He reaches behind it to pull out a backpack made from woven vines, then casually walks around, plucking the juiciest-looking fruits for himself. After slinging his backpack over his shoulder, Jepthath turns to face the expectant villagers and their eager gazes.

"Gup. Kra-kra, yong."

He motions to the west, where Mount Sinai looms on the horizon. The villagers press their palms together and bow deeply, allowing their heads to touch the dirt.

Without another word, Jepthath trudges away from the village. He leaps over a twenty-foot-tall wooden pallisade, one with hundreds of spears facing in every possible direction, and impacts the dirt on the other side with a heavy whump. The village's wall, built to withstand a demon grunt assault force, might not last forever, but it should give Jepthath enough time to return and save his people if the need arises.

Time passes. Jepthath increases his pace and stomps through the jungle leading up to Sinai relentlessly. His stamina never depletes, nor does his speed drop even after running for hours on end. Eventually, he arrives at the base of Mount Sinai. There, he spots a horde of demons charging toward the mountain's base.

[I see the horde, Master Hercules. How fares your battle?]

Jepthath closes his eyes and focuses his mind. His perception shifts to his Titan commander, where Hercules sits inside a jail cell.

[I sense someone approaching — the Earthmother, Uzziel. No doubt, she has some plan to release me, a laughable notion. Worry about yourself. I have no orders for you, Jepthath. Do whatever you feel necessary. I consider us equals in this war against our shared enemy. Should I fall, my power will transfer to you. Continue fighting; never give up.]

Jepthath nods. [Speak not of surrender. If a demon approaches me, I will kill it without fail. I take my leave, Master.]

[Farewell. I will keep you informed on Heaven's situation.]

Jepthath disconnects his mind from Hercules', then walks over to a large rock with a hole smashed in its top. He sets his backpack filled with food inside, then gently places a cover over the hole to keep it safe.

Jepthath's inner voice speaks once again.

With tens of thousands, perhaps even millions of demons swarming Mount Sinai, I knew I had a chance to deal significant damage to my mortal enemies. I hadn't sat idly for the last five years, but had instead built up a network of human resistance cells throughout the region. Each one worshipped me like a God, fed me, and gave me information on the movements and locations of demon hideouts. With the entirety of the demonic hordes converging on Sinai, I knew that their homes would be all but empty.

Never again would I have such a golden opportunity to deal damage to their society. My goal was not merely to kill demons, after all, but to exterminate them. As such, my focus never wavered; I had to eliminate their broodmothers and kill Lucifer.

If one considered Valac to be the demonic personification of death; then Lucifer would be the demon's hideous, mutated version of Uzziel. Lucifer created not only their broodmothers, but she even twisted and manipulated the life around her to produce goblins, orcs, and all other types of abhorrent monsters. I could kill demons from sunrise to sundown, but so long as Lucifer and her broodmothers survived, demonkind would return again and again for the rest of eternity.

Jepthath crouches low in the grass. However, due to the Titan power flowing through his veins, hiding his seven-foot-tall body amidst the shrubbery proves impossible. A few dozen demon grunts with sharp eyes spot their dark-skinned stalker and whirl to face him.

"Look! Over there! It's one o' them fleshbags sneakin' around! Forget the angels; let's get some grub!"

The demons charge at Jepthath, but he merely shrugs in response. "Oh? I wanted to slip past these fools, but I suppose a warmup before the main event won't be so bad..."

What follows is a scene of carnage. Jepthath leaps at the forty grunts, startling them with his swift movements. He smashes his feet into a Brute's head, killing it instantly, then grabs its corpse and uses it like a hammer. He crushes ten demons flat, breaking their bodies with his Herculean strength.

By the time the others have managed to track his rampaging form, Jepthath reaches them and sends their souls scattering to the Great Beyond. Within minutes, all that remains of the forty demon grunts is a grassy field bathed in blood, dotted with craters.

Jepthath leaps into the air and heaves a sigh. "I never did enjoy sneaking around."

The Titan's servant lands amidst a platoon of burners. They immediately swivel to face the human in their midst, but Jepthath doesn't give them a moment to react. He rips the blade-arms off a nearby scyther and uses its appendages to cut through and wipe out more than five hundred demons over the course of ten minutes.

Eventually, Jepthath fades into the jungle. He smirks as two Barons show up and discover the corpses of their comrades, bewilderment on their faces.

"Your time will come, ascended ones."

[Aaaaah! It hurts! My head, gaugh! That damned demoness... she- gah!]

Jepthath, now slinking around an underground passage, winces as Hercules's words appear in his mind. A sense of agony pours into his brain, transmitted via Hercules's mental link.

[Master? Master?! What happened? Are you injured?!]

Jepthath ducks into an alcove tucked deep within the demon's underground lair. He turns his thoughts inward and tries to connect to Hercules's mind, only for scattered images of blinding pain to explode in his brain. Jepthath immediately severs the link to prevent himself from going insane.

"Ahh, damnation! Someone attacked my Master. He's badly injured. I can't stay here; I must go to him!"

Jepthath casts a glance down the hallway. A couple of patrolling Demons Lords, male and female, lazily saunter around, seemingly unworried about the possibility of a counter-attack. After all, with the angels and Titans trapped within Heaven, who could possibly pose a threat to them and the broodmothers?

Jepthath bites his lip. "No, damn. I can't leave now. I'll never make it to my Master's side in time to save him. I need to remain focused on my mission. Killing the broodmothers is my most important goal."

With a heavy heart, Jepthath spares only a tiny bit of attention toward Hercules's plight. The rest of his focus goes into locating the hiding holes of the broodmothers.

The patrolling Demon Lords continue walking toward Jepthath's alcove. Oblivious to the predator lurking within the shadows, the two of them shoot the shit with one another. "-what I'm saying! Satan thinks this big attack on Heaven will work, but he's an idiot! If we didn't have Bael, we'd lose in ten seconds! Satan's lucky he has the Balrog on his side, or he could kiss his stupid tush goodbye."

The first Lord, a young guy with a chubby body, blood-red cape, and a wreath of flowers around his neck, crows to the demoness at his side, ridiculing Satan without holding anything back.

However, the other Lord, a female with narrow eyes, extra-pointy ears, and small iron marbles embedded in her skin, scoffs. "You'd best watch your mouth. If anyone hears you saying such things and reports it to Satan, he'll stick your head on a pike."

"Relax, sis! Sheesh. Do you really think someone would rat on us to Satan? The guy's a total loser. Bael might be dumb, but he could beat Satan with both hands tied behind his back. Satan can call himself the First Emperor all he wants, but as long as Bael's around, we all know who's really in charge."

"And what if Satan succeeds?" The female asks. She rubs a few of the iron balls embedded in her chest. "I think he has a chance at beating the angels. In any case, I wish I could be there instead of here. The battle is sure to be all sorts of fun."

"Pft. You're nuts, Oni. I bet everyone will die except for Bael. When they do, we'll be here, alive. Bael will have no choice but to make us Dukes! Then he'll become an Emperor, and we'll be like his number one and two!"

The two demons walk ever closer to Jepthath's hidey-hole. He coils his muscles and prepares to pounce.

"It's boring wandering around while everyone else gets to fight," Oni pouts. "I'd much rather be picking apart angels and peeling the flesh from their bones while they beg me for mercy. Only then could I- ah! Watch out!"

Oni's heart skips a beat. Some unknown extrasensory ability on her body activates, allowing her to dive forward and duck Jepthath's sneak attack. The human pounces from the shadows and swings both of his fists, intending to take out both Lords. Instead, he only manages to kill Oni's brother, crushing the young Lord's head with his bare hands.

Oni rolls to the side and motions with her hands. She barely spares a look at her dead brother and instead gazes at the glowing-eyed human before her, his black skin blending in with the darkened corridors of the demon's lair.

"Bastard! You killed Poli! What the hell are you?! You're not a Titan! You're not a human, either!"

Jepthath rises to his feet. He gazes at the lone demoness with a mixture of disgust and hatred. "I am your nightmare."

The female's eyes widen. "Wait... it's you! You're that human, the one Barbatos mentioned! You're the fucker who's been killing our patrols!"

Jepthath doesn't reply. He lunges at the woman and swings his fist, but when he strikes her chest, his fist crumples as if he's punched an iron wall. The girl flies backward and hits the ground, then slides to a stop. Her chest writhes and twitches unnaturally as the metal marbles embedded in her skin shift around the spot Jepthath punched.

"Kah!" Oni coughs blood, spitting it all over the dirt floor. "You damned fleshbag dogfucker... you killed Poli... I won't forgive you..."

Jepthath balls his fingers into a fist again. "It's not often a Lord survives one of my punches. You're surprisingly durable, demoness. It's a good thing I'll be killing you before you can become a threat."

The young demoness's pupils shrink as the glowing-eyed human pounces at her again. He raises his fist, intending to finish her in one blow.

Suddenly, a flash of motion intercepts Jepthath! A Demon Lord appears from out of nowhere and kicks Jepthath in the ribs, sending him crashing into the wall.

Oni stares at the newly appeared figure with a heart of gratitude. "O-Orias?! Is that you?"

Orias, Lord of the Moon, stands with his back to Oni. He shivers and trembles as fatigue wracks his body.

"Leave, little one. This foe is beyond you. I'll slow him so you can escape."

Orias's voice cracks every few words. He gasps for breath and appears visibly winded, though his fatigue doesn't come from his attack against Jepthath. Instead, Orias's pain comes from unleashing his Beauteous One's full power earlier that day, a move which ultimately allowed him to overpower Uriel and her Valkyries, but which also devastated his body.

Veins bulge across Orias's light pink skin. His awful complexion reveals the exhaustion wracking his entire body. Despite this, he doesn't budge as Jepthath steps out of the wall and leaps into the center of the hallway once again.

Oni struggles to her feet. Having taken one of Jepthath's punches, her condition isn't any better than Orias's. "No! You can't stay here! That human will kill you!"

"He won't. Go!"

Orias bellows at the girl, cowing her into submission. She only hesitates for an instant before turning tail and fleeing in the other direction.

Soon, only Jepthath and Orias remain. The two warriors size each other up. Despite Orias's surprise attack, the human appears to be in peak condition, while his opponent limps at death's door.

"What do you hope to achieve?" Jepthath asks. "I'll kill you, and that girl. It makes no difference to me whether one of you survives a little longer."

Beads of sweat drip down Orias's face. The Lord of the Moon clutches a few different gems in his palm while shaking his head. "I know why you've come. You intend to kill the broodmothers. Every moment I delay you gives Satan additional time to finish his business in Heaven."

Jepthath laughs. "Haha. Your leader can't win. The difference between a Demon Emperor and an Archangel is like that between Heaven and Earth. Similarly, the difference between us will result in your death."

Orias purses his lips. "Perhaps."

The two warriors stand perfectly still for a split-second. Then, they attack!

Jepthath leaps at the wall to his right, presses his feet against it, and dives straight toward Orias, intending to grab his waist and pin him to the ground. However, Orias snaps his fingers to absorb an onyx gem. Its blackened energy transforms him into a shadow, allowing him to melt into the darkness and evade Jepthath's attack.

Jepthath's glowing eyes flash with dazzling energy. He flicks his gaze around and locks onto the mana surrounding himself, then spins on his heel and claps his hands.

Boom!

A thunderclap explodes from between his palms, striking the wall and rattling Orias's innards. The Lord of the Moon demorphs from his shadow form and stumbles forward, blood rupturing from his eyes, ears, and nose. "Guhk!"

"You're too weak to use cheap tricks on me, bloodskin," Jepthath says with an evil gleam in his eye.

The two combatants begin rapidly trading blows. However, any attack Orias flings at Jepthath proves ineffective against the Titan's Servant. Jepthath dodges a dozen shadow-lances, shrugs off two bolts of lightning to his chest, and stands firm against a blast of kinetic energy capable of turning concrete to powder.

Meanwhile, each time Jepthath claps his hands, the sheer power of his soundwaves rattle and rip apart Orias's innards. The Baron of the Stars activates several defensive gems, but at best, they only guard against a portion of Jepthath's might.

"Kah-huck!"

Orias vomits blood uncontrollably. His pink skin loses even more of its luster, morphing into a ghastly grey color, much like Valac's undead minions.

"Not much longer," Jepthath says, a hint of mockery in his voice. "And now, for the part I enjoy most."

Jepthath sizes up his demon opponent. Orias trembles and shakes. He barely manages to keep on his feet through little more than sheer willpower. Unable to heal himself, the Lord can only defend passively as his half-Titan enemy readies himself for the killing blow.

Suddenly, before Jepthath can lunge toward Orias one last time, a bolt of blinding pain shoots through his skull!

[No! You damned Archangel! Stop! You can't take my powers! They're mine!]

Hercules's voice bellows in Jepthath's mind, momentarily stunning him. The mental assault causes Jepthath's body to seize up, making him stumble and fall to his knees.

Disbelief washes over Orias's face. Unsure if his enemy is feigning weakness to make him lower his guard, he hesitates for a second while deciding whether he should attack Jepthath's opening or not. It doesn't take him long to decide.

I'm about to die anyway! If I don't attack this human now, I'll lose my only shot at crippling him!

Jepthath reels as Hercules's voice starts to fade away. With Uzziel healing Hercules's wounds while sealing his powers, he quickly begins to lose contact with Jepthath.

Shik!

Ten dark lances leap from Jepthath's shadow and skewer his chest. Unable to move, he fails to defend himself, allowing Orias to deal a grievous blow. The pain of Orias's sneak attack brings Jepthath crashing back to reality, where he finally loses contact with his Master.

"Gah... damned demon... during my moment of weakness..."

Unbridled rage smolders in Jepthath's gaze. He pushes himself to his feet and rips the shadow-lances from his body. Each one melts into particles of darkness and lands at his feet as blackened dust. With several deep piercing wounds spread across his figure, Jepthath begins to bleed profusely, transforming him once again into the image of a blood-bathed savage.

Orias takes a step back. His pupils shrink as he watches the human advance toward him. "I stabbed your heart! How can you still walk?!"

Jepthath spits out a mocking laugh. "Haha... if only you'd aimed for my head."

The empowered human stomps forward, moving at a glacial pace compared to only a minute earlier. As he walks, his eyes glow brighter than ever, transforming from pure white orbs into a slightly golden color. His body regenerates and his wounds seal.

To Orias's surprise, tears stream down Jepthath's face, mixing with his enraged expression to create a feeling of heartbreak and loss.

[Master... Master... have you fallen? Where are you? Why has your full power entered me?]

Jepthath transmits his words over Hercules' soul link, but his thoughts fade into oblivion. Hercules never receives his pupil's message.

Hercules's full might enters Jepthath's body. It transforms into a whirlwind of mana and engulfs him in a cyclone of power. Orias retreats several steps as the furious energy swirling around Jepthath threatens to press the Demon Lord against the wall and mash him into mulch.

"Delaying you is all I ever intended to do, human! Cough... I've done what I can! I won't sacrifice myself here for nothing!"

Orias pulls out a green emerald from the folds of his robe. He wraps his hand around it, snaps his fingers, and disappears from Jepthath's sight. His body fades into the wind and rushes down the tunnel, vanishing before Jepthath can fully recover.

The Titan's Servant rubs his chest. The pain he once felt from Orias's attack no longer stings like before. Even better, the dull, throbbing discomfort he previously suffered from Hercules's mana vanishes without a trace. Upon receiving 100% of Hercules's soul energy, Jepthath's strength and vitality not only double, but even triple and quadruple. His muscles bulge so much that they almost split his skin. Jepthath sucks in a deep breath and smiles, intoxicated by the newfound might flowing within his veins.

"Hah... Master... I will not forget your sacrifice. Whoever killed you, I will pay them back a hundredfold. For now, though, I must continue my quest. I must wipe out every demon on Earth. I will not rest until they have all perished."

Jepthath's newly awakened physique makes him unstoppable against any demon below the rank of a Duke. He rips across the demon's burrow, killing dozens of stragglers. Upon finding their nursery, the human wastes no time in plunging his hands into the helpless women's chests and ripping out their spines. Unable to fight back, the broodmothers can do little more than beg for mercy before meeting their end at the hands of the glowing-eyed monster.

Jepthath laughs. "Hahaha... never have I felt as satisfied in all my life as I do at this very moment!"

He charges through the burrows, killing any demon he spots. However, after two hours, Jepthath slows his movements and frowns.

"Something's not right. I've found only a few hundred Broodmothers in this burrow. The demons must have other holes hidden throughout the land. At this rate, they'll return and rescue their hellspawn-whelpers before I can finish killing them!"

Jepthath continues searching the burrow, and when he finds a Scyther cowering behind a rock, he leaps at the blade-armed demon and slams it against the ground.

"Demon filth! Where are the rest of your burrows? Tell me!"

The Scyther struggles mightily to break free of Jepthath's grip, but the human merely tightens his grasp on the young demon's neck.

"Puh... please! I don't... know... anything..."

"Don't act like I'm stupid. Tell me the truth, and I'll grant you a quick death. Lie, and we'll be here for hours."

To emphasize his point, Jepthath pulls back his finger and flicks the Scyther's kneecap, shattering the bone with the barest of effort.

"Aaaaaiiiee!!"

The Scyther howls in agony, unable to fight back. His heart-wrenching scream elicits no response from the human standing atop him.

"Please... please! I'm sorry! I'm sorry! I don't know anything! I don't know-"

Before the Scyther can finish his sentence, Jepthath jams his thumb into the demon's eyeball, gouging it out in a horrific act of depravity. The pain nearly makes the demon faint, but Jepthath slaps him back to life.

"Tell me where the other burrows are! Don't think I'm not enjoying this, bloodskin! I'll torture you all day if that's what it takes!"

"Nnn... please... I'm sorry... I'm sorry..."

The Scyther tries to lift its bladed-arm, but it hasn't any strength left. It sags in Jepthath's grasp and takes its final breath before passing away.

Jepthath growls. "Worthless bloodskin. You were so weak; you couldn't even endure a little torture. Pathetic."

Jepthath casts the demon aside. A ghastly expression spreads across his face as he contemplates his next move.

"I can't hunt for the burrows all by myself. That will take too long. Now that I have my Master's power, I must use it to its fullest capability."

After coming to a decision, Jepthath rises to his feet. He dashes down hallways and past alcoves as he heads for the underground labyrinth's exit. The empowered human explodes into the midday sun and immediately beelines toward the nearest allied settlement, a look of delight on his face.

"My Master always said I would one day lead my fellow men to conquer the demons. Perhaps even he hadn't a clue how right he was."

Within minutes, Jepthath arrives at the edge of a human village, one he helped fortify with wooden pallisades and other protective measures a year before. He pounces over the wall and lands amidst the primitive mud huts. The village's residents swivel in fright to face the intruder in their midst, only to breathe a sigh of relief as they discover his identity.

"Ka-ka-la! Bobo!" A young girl cries. She squeals with delight as she runs over to Jepthath, only to pause when she spots the blood and gore covering his body.

Jepthath fixates his glowing eyes on the villagers as they drop what they're doing and rush to greet him. Everyone bows before Jepthath, their Illuminator, and greets him with the same reverence they'd afford a god.

"Jop-jop! Jop-jop! Jop-jop!"

The villagers kowtow and press their faces to the ground while occasionally raising their gazes to beam admiring smiles at Jepthath.

The Titan's Servant presses his bloody fist against his chest. "Hear me. I am Jepthath, your king. I've come today to take my place at humanity's head! No longer will we bow to the angels, nor will we flee from the demons! We are not weak. We are strong! Mighty! Unstoppable! We must show the world our might and our resolve! Come! All of you, place your hands atop mine! Join me and ascend to godhood!"

Jepthath thrusts out his hand and holds it palm-up. However, despite his speech, the villagers merely continue smiling. A few of them cast confused glances at the others, but nobody takes a step forward.

Jepthath's shoulders sag.

"Oh, right. Ah... kiki, maka-laka. Hoppa."

The moment he dumbs down his language, the eyes of the villagers light up. They quickly stride forward and place their hands on his, allowing his newly acquired Herculean power to spread amongst them. Everyone accepts Jepthath's power, including the women and children.

Soon, every single villager's eyes glow pure white, much like Jepthath's.

"We thank you, Illuminator," The village's chieftain says. With his newly acquired linguistic ability, he speaks his mind as easily as if he's done so his entire life. "We will follow you anywhere you ask."

Jepthath nods. "Excellent. For now, come with me."

He smiles.

"We've bloodskins to kill."

Part 201: Jepthath's Domination

As the sky exploded, and a crimson mist descended upon the Earth, a terrible weight settled upon my heart.

I did not know at the time the fate which had befallen Heaven, but I discerned that the demons must have unleashed some monstrously devastating attack upon their angelic foes.

The mist coated the planet's surface, soaking its soil with the bloody essence of countless dead angels and demons. In my heart of hearts, a wordless revulsion sprang up unbidden, as if I had witnessed an act so heinous that nothing could ever redeem the one who had committed it.

With my link to Hercules severed, it would take me several weeks before I could speak to the survivors of Satan's detonation and learn of his evil. In the meantime, since I hadn't any knowledge of what transpired, I continued summoning additional warriors to infiltrate and attack the demon's dens.

Jepthath's vision shifts. This time, he stands at the base of Mount Sinai, where his gaze falls upon the blood-red sky and its slowly descending mist.

[Great Illuminator! We have uncovered another burrow!]

The words of a recently acquired soldier appear in Jepthath's mind. Much like how the Legion once communicated via Hercules's soul link, the new Legion does the same through Jepthath's power.

Jepthath strokes his facial hair. [That's the seventh bloodskin den already. I always assumed there would be more than one, but to think Lucifer and Valac had prepared so many backups...]

The soldier shakes his head. [Sir, this den is different. It features hallways three times wider than the previous ones, elaborate carvings on the walls, furniture whittled from wood and stone, and plenty of other time-intensive feats of craftsmanship.]

Jepthath straightens his posture. [It must be one of the bloodskin's primary caverns. I'll join you as soon as I can.]

Hardly has Jepthath finished his sentence before another soldier transmits his thoughts. [Great Illuminator! I've been keeping an eye on Mount Sinai's entrance as you requested. Demons are fleeing the mountain! It seems they've begun retreating from combat!]

Jepthath narrows his eyes. He shoots a glance toward the blood-red sky as several worrisome thoughts enter his head. [I understand. We need to speed up our movements. I want one hundred soldiers to descend on the bloodskin's primary burrow. Slaughter everyone you can. Leave no survivors. If any Barons, Dukes, or Emperors appear, alert me at once.]

[Yes, Great Illuminator!]

The soldier disconnects his mind, allowing Jepthath to take a long, slow breath. He turns to the west and begins running as fast as he can, heading away from Sinai toward the location his Legionnaire reported.

Jepthath's voice once again sweeps across Hope's mind, explaining the vision's events.

When I obtained Hercules's full power, not only did I become far stronger than before, I gained plenty of other benefits as well. Because his soul manipulation changed to reflect my human biology, my fellow warriors became even mightier than the original Legion. Each one possessed somewhere between a quarter and half of my power, depending on their individual constitutions. As such, even one Legionnaire was capable of taking out a typical Lord or Baron singlehandedly. To say that my forces had dwarfed their previous power would be a tremendous understatement.

However…

Jepthath's voice frosts over. A hint of melancholy enters his tone.

…Since Hercules was no longer our progenitor, we lost some of the benefits of his Titan heritage. Most importantly; his immortality.

The moment my Master died, my body aged thirty years. My strength soared to the heavens, but my lifespan plummeted to the abyss. In exchange for enough power to exterminate the demons, I lost the advantage of time. I knew this without anyone telling me, all because I could sense the changes happening within my body.

My lifespan was limited. As such, I had to ensure the same was true of those who slaughtered my family.

* * *

Jepthath's vision changes once again. He reappears inside an underground labyrinth, different from the one where he fought Orias, with far wider hallways and plenty of torches fastened to the walls to light the way.

Jepthath strides down the hall while sweeping his glowing eyes from left to right. Whenever he spots a room he hasn't explored yet, he steps inside, eviscerates any demons or monsters inside, and returns to the corridor to continue his hunt.

Jepthath frowns. "This lair is ten times the size of any of the others. No matter how many Broodmothers I slay, I keep finding hundreds more. Orcs, Goblins, Demon Lords, and even a few Barons patrol its passages. At this rate, I won't succeed in clearing it out before the demons return from Sinai."

As Jepthath mutters to himself, one of his soldiers transmits their thoughts. [Great Illuminator, come quickly! We've encountered a mighty foe; a Demon Duke! He's incredibly strong, far too powerful for us to handle!]

Jepthath responds immediately. [A Duke? Where? Send me your location. I'll come at once.]

The soldier transmits his coordinates, making Jepthath frown. [So far away? It will take me several minutes to get there. Which Duke are you fighting?]

It takes twenty seconds before the soldier can respond. When he does, his mental voice is hazy and shaken. [H-he's… he's too strong! We can't even hurt- augh!]

The man's voice cuts off mid-sentence, causing butterflies to bounce around in Jepthath's stomach. A look of rage washes over his face. "Oh? Who do you think you are, killing my men? You'll pay for that, Mister Duke."

Humanity's King takes off like a bullet train. He charges down the hallway with reckless abandon, ignoring anyone in his path. If any demon or monster tries to slow him down, he mercilessly kills them with a single blow, wiping them off the face of the Earth before they can react.

[Soldiers! Since a Duke has appeared in the burrow, then that means the main bloodskin assault force has made it back to their den. Keep your eyes peeled! Travel in groups and watch out for other Dukes and Emperors!]

[Yes, Illuminator!]

As Jepthath traverses the Labyrinth's twisting hallways, occasionally getting turned around by random dead-ends and routes twisting back on themselves, the thoughts of other soldiers reach his mind.

[The Demon Duke! He's here!]

[I'll defeat him for you, Illuminator! I'll-]

The second speaker's voice cuts off mid-sentence, sending pangs of guilt down Jepthath's spine.

[Stay away from him,] Jepthath orders. [I'm almost there.]

[I won't back down! I'll fight for you, Great Illuminator!]

Jepthath scowls at how his men won't obey his orders.

Not only had I lost my immortality, granted via Hercules's Titan lineage, but I had also lost his absolute control over the Legion. I could still communicate with those whom I had granted power, but if they chose to disobey my orders, I could not force their hand.

It goes without saying that every human I had conscripted up to that point worshipped me as a godlike figure, but unfortunately, their fanaticism lead them to make overly aggressive moves, endangering their lives. I did not wish to see any humans perish, not even in combat. Therefore, their blatant disregard for my orders was something I could not ignore.

[I told you to stand down! Keep away from the Duke! Wait for my arrival!]

The soldier protests. [This bloodskin killed my brother! I can't let him live! On my honor, I'll fight to my last breath! I'll-]

His voice cuts off the same as the men before him. The abrupt silence only increases the weight on Jepthath's heart.

Eventually, Jepthath reaches his destination. There, he finds ten dead Legionnaires, with three survivors battling for their lives against the rampaging Demon Duke.

Bael, the Duke of Pain, laughs heartily as his fist comes crashing down on a wiry young Legionnaire's head. He flattens the youth out with a single blow, crushing his head into meat paste. "Hahaha! Oh, man, I'm having tons of fun! If you silly cunts think we're just gonna let'cha kill our Broodmothers, you've got another thing comin'!"

The expressions of the two Legionnaires betray no emotion. They don't show even an inkling of fear in the face of such a terrifying adversary. Nevertheless, when they discover the arrival of their leader, both men shake their fists with joy. "Illuminator! You're here! Come, work with us so we can take down this Duke!"

Jepthath slows to a stop. He gazes at Bael's back and waits as the Duke turns to face him. "Bael. It's you. You're the one who defeated my Master six years ago."

Bael scratches his ass. "Haha! Who the hell're you? Just another dope for me to smack around! Come on, punk, I ain't got all day!"

Jepthath's expression darkens. He flicks his gaze toward the two other Legionnaires. "Leave. Continue the mission. I'll face Bael alone."

The excited smiles on both Legionnaire's faces disappear. "What? But, Great Illuminator! That's too dangerous! We'll stay and help-"

"LEAVE!"

Rage erupts in Jepthath's voice. His fury instantly cows both of the young men, making them shrink back in fright. After sparing a glance at the Demon Duke, they nod hesitantly, turn tail, and retreat, leaving Bael and Jepthath alone.

Bael raises an eyebrow. "You're that confident, huh? Should've let those kids stay. You'll need all the help you can get if you wanna tussle with me, bub."

Jepthath balls his hands into fists.

"No. I won't."

Recommended Listening

Titanspawn. Hellspawn.

Jepthath and Bael size each other up for a few moments. Both combatants give off auras of confidence, acting as if victory for the other side is impossible.

However, Jepthath's thoughts tell a different story.

My Master lost to not only Satan the Devil, but Bael as well. I knew from the moment I laid my eyes on the Duke of Pain that my victory would come at a price. The mightiest Demon Duke possessed incredible defenses and strength rivaling mine. From the information my Master had transmitted during the War in Heaven, I knew that Bael had taken on and defeated several powerful foes, including the revived Valac, as well as Camael, the Archangel of Divination.

I could not afford to underestimate him. Therefore, I didn't.

Jepthath's glowing eyes flash with a burst of bloody light. He lunges forward, pulls back his fist, and punches Bael in the chest. The Duke of Pain doesn't dodge, but instead allows his opponent to land the first blow. He staggers backward under the force of Jepthath's strength and presses against the Labyrinth wall, only for the empowered human to send a hail of fists raining down on him.

Over and over, Jepthath brings the hammer down on Bael, battering and smashing the Duke with all his strength. Each punch, capable of pulverizing boulders, sends shockwaves traveling down the corridor, flattening any low-ranking demons who stray too close to the battle. Even Lords and Barons shy away from the deafening explosions erupting from Jepthath's punches.

Bael puts his arms up, using them as a fleshy shield to protect his chest. Given his incredible durability, the move seems pointless, but the strain on the Duke's face proves Jepthath's assault is causing him some trouble.

Eventually, Jepthath leaps backward, thanks to his years of honed battle instinct. He narrowly evades Bael's retort as the Duke kicks his leg out and tries to stomp the human's foot into pulp. The lumbering demon moves with astounding speed and pounds his heel into the floor, sending massive cracks spiderwebbing throughout the walls and ceiling.

The fight pauses for a moment as Jepthath narrows his eyes while keeping to a safe distance. Bael lowers his arms and grins, revealing his pearly white teeth. "Not gonna lie, ya little bugger, those punches hurt. I'm gonna have a few bruises when I wake up tomorrow."

Jepthath lowers his fists. He sucks in a deep breath and readies himself for Bael's counterattack.

I put all of my strength into my initial flurry of blows, only to discover that Bael's skin was harder than enchanted steel. Each time my fists struck the Duke of Pain, it was as if he punched back. My fingers ached, and my ears rang. After trying to crush the Duke with an all-out assault, I realized that directly overpowering his defenses would prove impossible.

However... what my raw strength wasn't able to achieve, perhaps a more nuanced technique could...

Bael charges at Jepthath. He doesn't bother with any fancy feints or fakeouts. He repeats what Jepthath did and commits to a full-out assault, intending to beat and batter the human senseless. Jepthath replies by using his superior agility to dodge Bael's punches and kicks while batting aside any he can't evade.

Minutes pass.

The two warriors trade blows, each one trying to land a decisive hit that will end the fight. However, between Bael's stalwart defense and Jepthath's fluttering movements, neither one of them can bring the battle to its ultimate conclusion.

"Stop hopping around!" Bael laments. He swings his fist again, but Jepthath steps to the side, narrowly evading the blow. Bael stumbles and loses his balance, giving Jepthath the initiative for a split-second. The human counters with a brutal jab to Bael's left ear, knocking the Duke to his right against a wall. The impact of fist against skull sends stars dancing through Bael's eyes.

"Grgh! Fuckin' slippery little bitch..."

Jepthath's heart pounds like a drum in his chest. Despite his incredible stamina, the amount of willpower needed to fight against such a deadly enemy brings him to the edge of his sanity.

[Damn,] Jepthath thinks out loud. [I knew the Duke of Pain would be a powerful adversary, but I didn't expect the battle to last this long.]

The Illuminator's observation transmits to all of his troops. Despite it not being a request for assistance, dozens of his Legion members chime in.

[Do you need help, Great Illuminator?]

[We will come to you at once!]

[Explain your dilemma to me, Illuminator. I might be able to offer you some advice.]

The last speaker catches Jepthath's attention. An old man, far beyond his years, but with a voice full of wisdom, doesn't jump at the chance to assist his savior. Instead, he eyes the situation from a distance, offering his knowledge to the Illuminator.

Jepthath pauses for only a split-second. Thanks to the speed of thought, barely any time passes in reality while his mind converses with the Legion members.

[Aye. The Duke of Pain is a most troublesome adversary. I've struck him countless times, but I cannot get past his formidable defenses. Have you any ideas on how I can turn the battle to my advantage, old one?]

The old man's voice reaches Jepthath's mind within the blink of an eye. [Possibly. I once was a hunter in my village. However, due to a nasty encounter with several demon grunts in my prime, I left the path of the spear behind to focus on my hand-to-hand combat training. If my knowledge will be of some benefit to you, Great Illuminator, take it. Even with the power of the gods flowing through my veins, I'm not the warrior I once was.]

A flood of information enters Jepthath's mind. Years of memories, battle techniques, and practiced movements flow through his body, turning him from a warrior possessed by a demon into a battle-hardened veteran.

Jepthath reels from the old man's knowledge. [Incredible. These unarmed skills are unlike anything I've ever seen! How did you come to develop such a fluid, graceful fighting style?]

[When the demons assailed me, I barely survived the encounter. They struck me when I had no spear in my possession, and as such, I found myself defenseless. I wished I could fight back, but my strength didn't compare to theirs. I eventually came to realize that even if I lacked the power needed to defeat my enemies, I could always turn theirs against them.]

A flash of insight appears in Jepthath's eyes.

[I see. If my might is lacking, then I need only borrow my opponent's. Thank you, wise one. I will put this knowledge to good use.]

[I merely exist to serve, Great Illuminator.]

Time returns to normal as Jepthath closes off his communication with the other Legion members. He raises his eyes to meet Bael's, only to see the Duke of Pain standing with his arms crossed. Bael grins like an idiot. "Haha. Lookit you. Tired? You need a nap, punk. I can tell you ain't got much fight left."

Jepthath ignores Bael's provocation. Instead, he spreads his legs and bends at the knees, taking an absurdly wide stance. He aims his dominant palm at Bael, while keeping a fist curled at his side. "Is that all? Come, bloodskin. I can't waste any extra time on you. I've other demons to kill once I finish here."

Bael's expression turns ugly. "Nope. That's where you're wrong, fucko. You've done in enough of my buddies and pals for today. Time for a dirt nap!"

Bael attacks once again. However, as his fists come rushing at Jepthath's body, the former Titan's Servant uses his newly acquired knowledge to bat the Duke's fists aside, swing his palm out, and deliver a palm-strike to Bael's ribs. The sudden reversal of Bael's momentum sends the Duke flying backward, where he crashes against the wall.

A look of surprise passes over Bael's face. "Huh? What the hell just..."

Perhaps thinking Jepthath's reversal was a lucky hit, Bael charges again. His fists tear through the air like bullets made from bone. He tries to beat his human opponent senseless, only for Jepthath to knock his fists aside, grab his arm, and sweep him over his head. Jepthath turns the Duke of Pain into a ragdoll as he flings him into the Labyrinth's floor, where Bael meets the dirt with a violent crash!

Stunned, Bael lies inert for a moment as he tries to get his bearing. "...Fucker! How did that little twig-hugger get me again?!"

He jumps to his feet and charges at Jepthath. This time, Bael spreads his arms out and tries to catch the human in a deadly bear-hug.

Jepthath suddenly does the splits, lowers his center of gravity, and fires a punch at Bael's gut.

Thump!

Jepthath strikes the Duke in his abdomen, knocking the wind out of Bael. The Duke of Pain staggers backward and doubles over while clutching his stomach. "Haah! Kuh-huck!"

Bael's astonishment at this sudden, unexpected reversal of the battle gives way to a new emotion.

Worry.

Having seen the human's minions rip apart dozens of broodmothers and countless other demons, Bael knows his adversary is a major threat to demonkind's existence. However, so long as Bael walks the Earth, he'll always be capable of beating even the most dangerous enemy that threatens his people.

Until now.

Jepthath's thoughts project throughout the vision.

Because of the old man's fighting technique, I suddenly found fighting Bael to be far easier than I expected. His movements were rudimentary, clumsy, and awkward. In my eyes, confronting him was no different from trying to knock out a child.

Bael's defenses were still a problem, but now that he couldn't land a hit on me, I could go all-out and use every drop of my strength to injure, and eventually kill him.

The vision continues. Jepthath begins countering Bael's every attack. Over and over, the Duke of Pain tries to punch, kick, or grab Jepthath, only for the human to outfox him and leave Bael on his knees or faceplanted against a wall.

It doesn't take long before Bael's astonishment shifts to fear. Slowly, the Duke of Pain loses his will to fight. Against someone like Jepthath, whose fighting techniques are far beyond anything Bael has ever faced, the Duke can't prepare any counters.

"Cough, cough, you spawn of a broodmother..." Bael growls. Blood leaks from his mouth. Even with his nearly invincible body, small injuries accumulate from Jepthath's relentless assault. "What the fuck are you? You ain't no bloody human! You're a monster... you're stronger than that Titan pup!"

Jepthath's glowing eyes brighten at the mention of his Master. "Your people took everything from me. You killed my wife. You killed my children. You slaughtered my village. I will not let you get away with their deaths. I've come to repay the debt of blood, and nothing you say or do will stop me."

Jepthath seizes the initiative. No longer bound by the worries of Bael defeating him, the human charges his Duke opponent and begins hitting him from all directions. Bael tries to defend, but with his fighting spirit broken, all he can do is try to protect his head.

"Aaugh!"

The Duke cries out in pain as the sensation of a bone snapping tears through his body. To the Duke's disbelief, Jepthath breaks through his defenses and fractures Bael's left humerus. His arm immediately loses more than half of its strength as Bael reels under Jepthath's relentless pounding.

"Yes! Die, you damned bloodskin," Jepthath roars, his eyes blazing with fury. "But before you enter the Great Beyond, suffer a while! Suffer and scream!!"

Jepthath strikes Bael in the face and lays the Duke out, sending him crashing into the floor. In the blink of an eye, the human leaps atop the ascended demon and batters him from left to right. Bael winces and shudders as the human somehow taps into even greater reserves of strength for his onslaught.

Bruises, welts, and fractures appear all across Bael's body. Jepthath breaks Bael's nose, knocks out a couple of his teeth, and piledrives his neck, nearly crushing Bael's throat in the process.

Finally, Bael snaps.

Bloody demonic miasma bursts from his body. His eyes turn to those of a savage beast, a creature born from primordial chaos. Before Jepthath can react, Bael swings his right arm upward and blasts the human right in his ribs, sending Jepthath spiraling helplessly through the air. He bounces off the ceiling and slams into the ground with a tremendous thud, half the bones in his chest broken.

"YOU NO HURT ME!" Bael roars. "ME HURT YOU!!"

The Duke of Pain leaps to his feet. Embers of flame spurt from his broken nose, while his horns quickly begin to bend around into a pair of forward-facing spears.

Jepthath groans. The Duke's nearly instant activation of his Balrog power caught the human off-guard, preventing him from reacting in time. He raises his head off the floor and gasps from breath.

"...Sh-shit..."

"GROOOOOOOOAR!"

Bael releases a furious howl of pain and frustration throughout the entire Labyrinth, terrifying all who hear him. He lowers his gaze to Jepthath and stomps his feet, preparing to charge. With his body stuck somewhere between half-Balrog and half-demon, his appearance becomes even more frightening.

However, instead of charging, Bael pauses. The Duke of Pain stops morphing as he gazes at Jepthath, laying on the ground.

Jepthath meets his gaze. The human's glowing eyes narrow as his own rage rises to meet Bael's.

The Duke of Pain takes a step backward. Even with the immeasurable might of the Balrog flowing through his veins, enormous waves of fear quickly rise to overpower his anger, dulling it and preventing him from reaching his limits.

"GRRR... ME NO SCARED OF YOU... ME NO SCARED OF ANYONE..."

Jepthath picks himself off the ground. His ribs groan in protest, but he doesn't let even a whimper of pain escape his lips.

"You aren't? Haha... you should be. Go ahead, little Duke. Finish transforming. I won't feel satisfied unless I beat you at your most dangerous."

Jepthath's confidence shatters Bael's resolve. Despite his opponent's heavy injuries, Bael loses his nerve and takes several steps backward.

"ME... ME NO WANT FIGHT... ME LEAVE! ME LEAVE!!"

He turns tail and runs, demorphing as he tries to get away. Jepthath gives chase, but with his entire chest turned to mush, the human can't keep up with his lightly injured demon adversary.

It doesn't take long before Bael escapes Jepthath's sight. The human slows to a stop and clutches his chest. Tears of anger and humiliation flow from his eyes.

"No... I failed. Damn. I let the bastard land a hit, even after all that buildup. I'll never let another demon get the drop on me like that again!"

As Bael vanishes from Jepthath's sight, the human slumps against a wall and weeps.

[...Come to me, my Legion. We must retreat for now.]

[Yes, Great Illuminator!]

[We obey!]

Jepthath closes his eyes. Reports of a skirmish against Satan and Belial reaches his ears, but he doesn't move a muscle.

"It will take some time to heal from this wound. However, once I do, I will return. Again and again, I will hunt these demons down like the dogs they are."

Jepthath rises to his feet. He heads toward the Labyrinth's surface, each step lighter than the one before it.

"Your doom draws nearer every day, bloodskins."

Part 202: Jepthath's Ultimatum

Due to the wound Bael dealt me; I was forced to withdraw along with my troops. Naturally, our retreat still ended up bearing many fruits. In total, we slew more than three thousand demonic broodmothers, though what proportion of the whole that amounted to, we did not know.

Within three days, the newfound Titan power flowing through my veins allowed my broken bones to heal. Immediately, I launched an assault on the demonic hordes. We ravaged one bloodskin den after another. No matter their rank, no matter how they begged for mercy, we killed every last one we laid our eyes on.

However, even as I continually recruited new villages from one end of the continent to the next, I began to realize my soldiers were far too free-spirited. I knew not the reason why, but unlike Hercules's Legion, who obeyed his every word, mine would often do whatever they pleased. Occasionally, this led to a more successful mission with greater bloodskin casualties and fewer human deaths. Often, it did not.

To my disgust, there were some warriors who, upon obtaining my power, focused exclusively on satisfying their desires. For the new Legion, I recruited anyone I could find. Men, women, and children too. I had little time left alive, and as such, I put almost no thought into who should join my Legion's ranks.

That was when the chaos began.

Some men, upon gaining enough power to stand against Demon Barons and Dukes, decided their time would be better spent subjugating unascended humans. When I learned of the first time a Legionnaire assaulted a series of helpless villager women, my blood boiled with rage. Unable to take back the man's power, I instead used my superior strength to smash his skull into pieces, then strung his body up in the village's square as a warning to those who might commit similar acts in the future.

With the threat of a demonic invasion hanging over our necks every day, I could not fathom what would bring a man to attack his fellow human beings. For the first time, I realized humanity had a dark side, a terrible, vile nature hidden within us. As bad as the demons were, the idea that one powerful human could turn those weaker than him into his playthings filled me with cold dread.

The bloodskins paled in comparison to any human who might turn against his own people. That was my definition of true evil.

And so, with this newfound realization, it only took me one month of slaughtering demons before I decided to head to Mount Sinai. I needed to survey the damage the demons had dealt to angelkind, as well as remedy a few needs plaguing myself at the time.

Jepthath's vision shifts. He, along with one hundred empowered humans, stomp through the pitch-black corridors of Mount Sinai's underground tunnels. They travel at a brisk walk, keeping their eyes peeled for dangers lurking within the tunnel system's crevices. However, no matter where they look, they find nothing. Unlike in the past, where angels would roam the halls and keep the ancient torches lit, not a soul whispers within the darkness.

Within half an hour, the platoon of hunters reaches the entrance to Heaven's Gate. They arrive in the large antechamber, still fortified with Camael's divine metallurgy, only to find a pair of angels standing guard outside the now-disabled warpgate to Heaven.

A woman wearing a frightening amount of platemail, standing six and a half feet tall, towers over her far more diminutive brother, a wingless angel Jepthath has met before.

The wingless angel's eyes bulge as he spots the platoon of humans stomping toward him. "Ah! It's... it's him! That man is the human who saved my life!"

The female angel's glorious golden hair flows out from beneath a helmet adorned with miniature wings. With her face shrouded by metal and only her hardened blue eyes visible, the humans can't make out her expression. However, at her brother's words, she lowers her sword.

"Is that so, Shepherd? Art thou laying claim to this mortal saving thee from the jowls of the demons?"

"Yes, yes, Sister Frida!" Shepherd says, his breathing erratic. He leans heavily on a staff, due to a crippled leg. "This human, his name is... is..."

"Jepthath. Indeed, I am the one who saved you, though, in truth, all I managed was to mend your wounds and stymie the blood flowing from your back. I am pleased to see you've survived the demon's attack."

Shepherd's excited expression disappears. Gloom takes its place. "Aye... survived."

Frida sheathes her sword. A deep sigh escapes her lips as she lowers her head. "I know not whether we were fortunate or unfortunate to count ourselves among the living. After Satan's suicidal attack, not ten thousand of my brothers and sisters survived to fight another day. We've lost the war."

Jepthath's eyes shift slightly. An odd look crosses over his face. "I beg your pardon, but I do not know what events transpired in Heaven. Might you explain the situation to me?"

Frida raises her head to gaze into Jepthath's eyes. "I know not thy identity, human, nor why I should inform thee of anything thou knoweth not. What is thy heritage? How art thou capable of speaking the common tongue when thy people are little more than ignorant apes?"

"Ah, so you don't know," Jepthath says, a hint of mockery in his voice. "Humanity has ascended. Under my hand, we will rise to defeat the demons. That is why I've come today. I seek the aid of the Archangels in my quest to rid the world of the bloodskins."

"Thou requesteth our help? Bah! What assistance can we render?" Frida asks. "Our numbers are but a fraction of their former might. We cannot replenish our strength, but the demons can! They will come knocking at our door soon, hence why Raphael has ordered my brother and I to stand guard at Heaven's Gate."

Shepherd takes a step toward Jepthath. He leans even more heavily on his staff than before as his expression turns to one of pain. "Please, benefactor, do not despise my sister for her words. We must keep Heaven's Gate deactivated unless expressly ordered by Raphael. As the weakest of our people, he placed us here as bait for the demons. Should the Emperors come knocking, we will detonate a blast of holy energy and raze the mountain to the ground. We will gladly give our lives to protect our family! We cannot allow entry for anyone, not even one as righteous as thee."

Jepthath's gaze falls upon the deactivated warpgate leading to Heaven.

"I see. I am not your enemy. We share the same foe, the hellspawn army of Satan the Devil. Will you send a message to Raphael for me? Tell him I am the inheritor of the Titans, and I've come to offer my services to the angels. With your numbers depleted, we must do what we can to eliminate the bloodskins before they become too powerful."

Shepherd and Frida both glance at each other. Her expression is one of immediate rejection, but before she can get a word in, Shepherd drops to his knees. "Sister Frida, please! This human saved my life! I owe him a great debt. As he is a mortal, I will endure great shame if he perishes before I pay him back! All he asks is for thou to send a message to our eldest brother. Can we not perform such a trifle for my benefactor's sake?!"

Frida hesitates. Confronted with her brother's tear-filled eyes, she eventually relents.

"Alright. I do not owe this human a debt, but given thy mana deficiency, I will send the message in thy stead. Were thou to possess even a drop of mana, I know thou woulds't assist this human to thy dying breath. Thou art a most righteous figure, Shepherd."

Frida turns and places her palm against a symbol on the warp-gate's control panel. Heaven's Gate hums to life for a few moments as she pours a significant amount of mana into its energy matrix. Eventually, Frida pulls back and drops to her knees. Sweat drips off her brow, forcing her to remove her helmet and wipe her forehead.

"I... I sent the message. Our brothers will respond within the hour."

Frida's face is that of a hardened warrior, someone who has seen countless battles in her lifetime. With piercing blue eyes capable of melting steel and a golden head of hair, her appearance resembles a goddess of war.

Jepthath nods. "I understand. My men and I will wait."

Each of the soldiers fans out and presses their backs to the enchanted steel walls. Ten others walk just outside the chamber and stand guard, keeping a vigilant eye on their surroundings in case the demons decide to attack.

As I waited, I evaluated the two angels before me. Without his wings, and still suffering from a hobbled leg, Shepherd was, without a doubt, the most pitiful figure I had ever seen in all my years. However, Frida was a menacing warrior reminiscent of Archangel Uriel. For Shepherd to claim she was among the weakest of the remaining angels, it filled me with disgust. How many angels had perished for someone of Frida's caliber to count as a lowborn?

I passed the next hour by chatting idly with Shepherd. Frida did not allow him to explain Heaven's situation to me, but even without him making explicit statements, I was able to glean a hint of the devastation Satan had unleashed.

Suddenly, the air inside the chamber becomes noticeably less stale. A shimmer in the room's center causes everyone to step back. Moments later, a portal rips into the fabric of reality, as Raphael himself steps through. Alongside him, Camael and Michael emerge from Heaven to scrutinize the humans standing outside their domain.

Raphael gazes at Jepthath for only a moment. He evaluates the human's glowing eyes with a hint of disgust before shaking his head.

"Come with me. Only thou may enter Heaven. This entourage of warriors must stay behind."

His words provide no chance for Jepthath to argue. If the human wishes to enter Heaven, he must accept Raphael's demands.

Jepthath blinks slowly. "Very well. Only I will come. The rest of my warriors will remain here and stand guard to protect Heaven's Gate. We have come in peace, after all."

"Peace, thou sayeth?" Raphael asks. His expression turns grim. "I remember the last time someone who 'came in peace' wished to enter Heaven. Luckily, even if thou desireth our extinction, there is nothing left for thee to destroy."

Camael nods. Her eyes reveal the Hell she's endured over the past month.

"Indeed. We've only just begun the rites of burial for those who passed. Given the number of fallen, we've even had to expedite the ceremonies for all but the most honored warriors. Such a disgrace will stain our people forever."

"I understand," Jepthath says. "I will come alone and without protest."

"Thou understandeth nothing," Michael says, his voice cold. "But soon, thou shalt."

The Archangels step through Raphael's portal, and Jepthath follows them.

As the guests leave and the portal closes, Shepherd stares at the spot where they disappeared with a longing expression.

"Sister Frida. I... I hope with my heart of hearts that that human is capable of slaying the demons. The demons took everything from us. We must exact swift revenge."

"Aye," Frida replies. She rests her hand on the hilt of her blade and gazes at the hundred men standing with their backs to the enchanted walls. "As do I."

Recommended Listening

Jepthath steps through Raphael's portal. The moment he enters Heaven, a rotten stench assaults him, causing him to stagger backward and swallow meaty chunks of bile. Iron, sulfur, and traces of burnt copper mix into a gag-inducing cocktail with enough potency to make his eyes water.

"Gurk..."

As Jepthath blinks back tears and forces down the roiling in his stomach, he opens his eyes a little wider to examine his surroundings.

Where once Heaven was a realm filled with beautiful trees, flowers, and grass as far as the eye could see, in the wake of Satan's detonation, it has become a post-apocalyptic wasteland. Thick, bloody mist lingers in the air, blowing to and fro by winds of an unknown origin. The ground squishes beneath Jepthath's feet as the gore from millions of angels and demons blends into a foul, toxic swamp capable of choking all it touches.

Jepthath gingerly takes a step forward, only to grimace when his foot sinks three inches into the bloody quagmire. The ground seizes him like quicksand, making forward movement difficult at best, if not impossible.

Camael gazes upon the human's predicament and sighs. "Here. This trinket will grant thee the gift of flight. Its power is limited, but I believe it will last for at least a few hours if used sparingly."

The Archangel of Divination hands Jepthath a perfectly polished pearl, just small enough to fit in his hand.

"M-my thanks, Archangel," Jepthath replies, still trying to steady his churning stomach. He takes the pearl from her, wraps it within his hand, and sends a stream of mana into it. A moment later, he lifts off the ground and hovers a few feet above it, allowing him to travel forward safely.

"We've decontaminated the area where the Temple of Elderium once stood," Camael says, her tone emotionless. "However, it will take us decades to remove the leftover remnants of Satan's miasma from all across Heaven. Cleaning up the remains of our fallen brothers and sisters will require even more time."

Jepthath hovers after the Archangels as they slowly flap their wings and glide across the bloody swamp. "I... I do not understand. What happened here? My master, Hercules, told me of a terrible battle in Heaven, but he perished before the fighting ended."

"We fought a war, and we lost," Michael says, his voice hollow. "My memory is hazy due to the wounds I sustained fighting the Great Demon. However, what I do know is that Satan transformed himself into a living bomb. He unleashed enough destructive power to level the entirety of Heaven, as well as its inhabitants. With a single attack, he wiped out millions of bloodskins and angels."

Raphael flies closer to Michael. He places his hand on the Archangel of Courage's shoulder and sighs. "Do not blame thyself, Michael. Thy battle against the Great Demon delayed him long enough to allow at least a fraction of our family to escape. Had thou not risked thy life to fight that monstrosity, Satan might have killed all of us with his underhanded soul manipulation."

"A small consolation, given how many siblings we've lost," Michael mutters.

Jepthath listens to the Archangels as they travel eastward, toward the center of Heaven. Eventually, after a bit of back and forth, he uncovers the specifics of what happened during the War in Heaven.

"Gods. How could such devastation be possible?"

Raphael snorts. "Compared to some of the beasts born during the Primordial era, Satan's attack was but a drop in the bucket. However, my people have declined over the eons, even to the point where such pitiful, wretched creatures can threaten us."

"Nevertheless, Satan's army represents a significant threat to all of Earth," Jepthath says. "Comparing him to long-dead monsters won't diminish his presence in the coming months and years."

"The human speaks truth," Camael replies. "Ah, over there. Look closely."

Jepthath follows Camael's indication as she gestures into the distance toward a massive stone platform laid atop Heaven's soil. Standing only inches tall, the width and circumference of the flat, stone table boggles Jepthath's mind. With a size big enough to encompass multiple human villages, the flat rock provides some shelter from the bloody swamp surrounding it.

Two thousand angels stand or sit on the platform. They cluster together in groups of four to ten, chatting quietly about various happenings. Jepthath and the Archangels descend from the skies and land softly at the edge of the platform, where several high-ranking Cherubs turn and bow politely.

"Brothers Raphael and Michael. Sister Camael. This human must be the visitor from outside."

"Aye," Camael says. Have Uzziel summon a small structure. We need to deliberate with this man in private."

"Very well. We'll dispatch Hermes on the double. Uzziel is likely still trying to cleanse the Bloody Sea even as we speak."

Michael's expression sours. "A thankless task."

"Aye."

The Cherubs disperse, leaving Jepthath and the Archangels alone. With nobody in earshot, Raphael turns to face the human warrior.

"Verily, thou dids't come here today to achieve some goal. Might I inquire as to what thou art seeking?"

Jepthath hesitates for a moment. "Ah... in truth, I came to ask for assistance from your people. My warriors are more than capable of wiping out demonkind, but the bloodskin burrows are well-hidden and scattered throughout the land. I hoped to gather tens of thousands of angels to sweep across the Earth from the skies in search of the demon's dens... but seeing how many of thy people remain, that request won't do anymore."

Raphael narrows his eyes. "Hmm..."

"Is something the matter, Eldest Archangel?"

"Indeed," Raphael replies, his voice curt. "Thy master was none other than Hercules, the Titan who enslaved Uzziel and Michael to do his bidding. He nearly seized control of all the Archangels during the War in Heaven! Thou art lucky I have yet to slay thee where thou standeth. Hads't thou attempted to bring thy invasion force along, I would have sent thy soul scattering to the furthest reaches of the Great Beyond before thou coulds't utter a word of complaint."

"Invasion force?" Jepthath asks. His eyes glow slightly as anger builds in the back of his mind. "Hmph. Now, listen here, Eldest Archangel! I do not take kindly to slander. Have you any idea how many demons lurk at the edges of Mount Sinai's base? I brought a contingent of warriors along as protection against bloodskin ambushers, not because I felt the need to threaten the pitiful remnants of your society with my superior strength!"

Jepthath grinds his teeth together.

"I understand you've lost many brothers and sisters, but don't pretend that you are alone in your misery! The bloodskins killed every member of my family. My Master perished while trying to protect the angels and Titans. He gave his power to me so that I might someday eradicate our shared enemies from the Earth!"

Jepthath's rage ignites the fire boiling within Michael's veins. In the blink of an eye, the Archangel of Courage draws his sword and swings it toward the human's neck, pausing the instant it touches Jepthath's skin. "Insolent human! Know thy place! Speak one more blasphemous word, and I'll rid the world of thy apostasy right here and now! I'll have thy head roll across the plains without-"

"Michael, stop," Raphael says, his voice unnaturally calm. "Sheathe thy blade."

"But brother! This human-"

"Put the sword away," Raphael repeats, his eyes revealing an ominous glint. "Unless thou thinketh me incapable of defending myself against a mere human."

Michael's breath catches in his throat. His gaze meets Raphael's, causing a hint of fear to appear in the Archangel of Courage's gaze. Immediately, he yanks his sword back and stabs it into his sheathe, then turns away.

"Very well. Thou art more than capable of slaying a weak little human. I'll take my leave."

Michael doesn't wait for Raphael's response. As if guided by an unspoken fear, the young hothead flaps his wings and soars away, leaving only Camael and Raphael alone with the human.

Jepthath touches the spot where Michael's blade rested. "Oh? What an interesting response, Archangel of Wisdom. It seems you've comprehended something your brother did not."

Raphael's eyes flicker with an indecipherable emotion. "Aye. Thy powers come from a soul manipulator. Hercules passed down his power to thee, and therefore, even were we to slay thee here, thy powers would no doubt pass on to another human."

Jepthath smiles.

"It seems your Archangel title is not merely for show."

"Tsk."

Raphael's nose twitches. He glances at Camael, who continues to keep her gaze locked on Jepthath.

"Sister?"

Camael blinks. "What?"

"I should like to ask thee the same question. Thou hath stood silently and observed this human since we arrived. When thy gaze falls upon someone for such a prolonged period, it can only mean..."

"Aye," Camael says. "I've performed multiple divinations on this man."

"As I thought," Raphael murmurs. "Have thou anything to say?"

"I'll wait until Uzziel's arrival," Camael replies, her tone cryptic.

Jepthath crosses his arms. A smile spreads across his face as he silently observes the Archangel's expressions.

Born a mortal, someone who had roamed the Earth looking for the bare essentials to continue living, I had never once met the Archangels in person. However, my Master always sought to keep me informed during his lifetime. He provided me with vast amounts of information on not only the Archangels but anyone else who caught his attention. The Archangels all looked down on me, as they hadn't a clue who I was, but I knew within an instant that Camael was different from her siblings.

Yes. Camael knew I was more than just a man, more than the inheritor of Hercules's ancestry. As she searched my future, I could only guess at what she saw, but her reluctance to move against me told me all I needed to know.

The Archangels were scared.

And why wouldn't they be? A single demon had succeeded at turning eons of angelic rule to dust. Where before they numbered almost ten million strong, after Satan's suicidal attack, their population had dropped to a fraction of its former power.

The angels could not repopulate, but the demons could. Even with their society in disarray and hopelessness spread across their ranks, the leaders of angelkind sought any chance they could take at protecting themselves from total extinction.

In Michael's eyes, I was nothing but an insolent human, a mortal born to feed him spiritual energy.

But by Camael's reckoning, I was a faint spark of hope. I was a chance to hold the bloodskins back while her people rebuilt Heaven.

Raphael might not possess his sister's divinations, but he knew better than to second-guess her wariness toward me. The mere fact she hadn't spoken a word during my verbal assault indicated she valued my existence more than punishing my slander.

Having spoken fewer than a hundred words, I managed to deduce the true strength angelkind possessed, and I found it lacking.

* * *

An hour passes. Jepthath continues to poke and prod Camael and Raphael, but they offer little more than small talk. Eventually, Raphael breathes a sigh of relief as he spots several dozen angels flying over the horizon.

"Uzziel. Finally."

Before Uzziel arrives, a speedy blur zips through the skies. Faster than Jepthath's eyes can follow, the flash of movement rushes past him and screeches to a halt before Raphael. A young-looking male Seraph, one wearing tight, form-fitting robes, snaps his fingers and flashes a huge grin. "Yo! Eldest brother, I've returned! I found Uzziel in a flash, faster than you'd believe! It only took me like, three seconds! Zip, zoop, whapow! In and out, faster than-"

"Yes, yes, much obliged, Hermes," Raphel says, his voice heavy. "As always, thy speed is apprec-"

"But I couldn't help how slowly sister Uzziel flies!" Hermes continues, running his mouth like a mouse hyped up on caffeine. "I kept offering to fly her over here, but she always declined! I know you're in a rush, so I kept pushing and prodding, but she always just ignores me! What's the point of being a speed-zipper if I can't ever let loose and show off, ya know what I mean?! Some people are just so inconsiderate!"

Hermes babbles like a maniac. His words flow together so quickly that Jepthath winces from a rapidly developing migraine. Eventually, Camael walks over, places her hand on Hermes's shoulder, and clears her throat.

"Ahem. Brother Hermes, Raphael is tired. It would be improper to exhaust him, as thou art doing right now. Please head over to the Third District and continue assisting them with the cleanup."

"Heck yeah!" Hermes says, spinning on a dime. He whirls to face Camael and nods eagerly as if she's just given him the promotion of a lifetime. "Oh, boy! I'll mop up those entrails lickety-split! I'll scrub and clean like you ain't never seen before! Zip-zoop, that's me! Whapow!"

Before the Archangels can say anything else, Hermes transforms into a blur of movement and zips away at lightspeed, leaving Camael with her mouth hanging half-open.

"Sigh..." Camael groans. "I never should have given him those damned boots."

Raphael smiles. "Do not gaze upon Hermes with enmity, sister. His optimism shines through in every situation. 'Tis always a wonderful achievement when one can smile and persevere in the face of adversity."

"If only he smiled and did nothing else, I wouldn't mind," Camael grumbles.

Both Archangels fall silent as Uzziel descends from the bloodied sky, along with a couple dozen other low-ranked angels. The Archangel of Creation exhales deeply as she lands atop the stone platform and wipes her forehead.

"Brother Raphael! I came as quickly as I could. Hermes's message sounded urgent. Did something happen?"

Raphael frowns. "Did Hermes fail to deliver my message properly? I sent for thee so that ye might summon a small, wooden hut for Camael and I. We need to speak with our visitor, this human, in private."

Uzziel shrugs. "Hermes is sometimes difficult to understand. He speaks so quickly that I have trouble understanding him."

"As do we all," Camael sighs.

Raphael gestures toward Jepthath. Despite standing not far away from the Archangels, his appearance seems to have gone unnoticed by Uzziel. She turns to look at him, then flashes a radiant smile. "Ah, one of my beloved children! How dost thou fare, little one? I apologize for Heaven's sorry state, but it won't take us long to clean everything up."

Jepthath maintains a neutral expression. "Earthmother. I am Hercules's descendant, Jepthath, the inheritor of his power."

Uzziel's smile vanishes. She flashes a look of agitation at Raphael. "What? This child is...?"

"Aye," Raphael says with a nod. "This human possesses all of Hercules's powers. Jepthath is one of Hercules's thralls, one who managed to escape during the battle against the Balrog six years ago. He's come to deliberate with us on a great many things."

Slowly, Uzziel nods. She returns her gaze to Jepthath, but her expression turns frosty. "I see. Do not let me keep thee waiting, then, Titanspawn."

With a flippant series of gestures, Uzziel summons a small wooden building to the east, half a mile away from the stone platform. She bristles at Jepthath and pauses to waggle her finger at him. "Do not think I have forgotten what thy master did to me. He attempted to seize control of Michael and me, and nearly rent Heaven in two. If thou dost make such an aggressive move against anyone here-"

"Worry not," Jepthath says, interrupting Uzziel. "I know full well what power you can unleash. I'm not here to fight."

His reply catches the Archangel off-guard. Uzziel eyeballs him for a moment before turning around and flying away. "Farewell, then."

* * *

A minute later, Jepthath, Camael, and Raphael step inside Uzziel's summoned building. Little more than an ugly square box, it lacks any furnishings or decorations, but does possess a series of slits on its walls, allowing traces of Heaven's Light to slip inside and illuminate its interior.

Raphael and Camael walk over and settle on the floor while assuming cross-legged stances. Jepthath takes a seat opposite them and mirrors their postures.

"Alright, Titanspawn," Raphael says, his voice even. "State thy intentions and terms."

Jepthath nods. "I came here in the hopes of acquiring a few thousand angel warriors for the sake of reconnaissance and surveillance. Locating the demon dens is my highest priority, after all. However, now that I know the pitiful state of your military, that request is off the table."

"Indeed," Camael replies. "Having performed a divination earlier, I could not help but note that thy future is in a much higher state of flux than other beings. Thy destiny appears to have a strong relationship with the fate of the Earth, though the ramifications of thy actions will not be fully comprehensible for several centuries."

"What do you mean?" Jepthath asks, his tone suspicious. "What does my future have to do with our meeting?"

"Everything," Camael replies. "Helping thee could be a tremendous boon for our people. It could also lead to our doom. I am not opposed to assisting humans in their quest to wipe out demonkind, but given thy upbringing and he who begat thy powers, trusting thy intentions is... difficult."

"I agree," Raphael says. "The underlying threat beneath thy words makes any promises thou might offer ring hollow. How can we trust thee, when thou standeth here with ill intent riding thy coattails? Hercules betrayed us. We nearly went extinct as a result of his actions. If thou turneth against us, even if we should kill thee, thy power will transfer to another human. Thy specter will continue fighting us forever and ever."

"That's right," Jepthath says. His eyes turn cold. "Kill me, and another will take my place. I did not come here to sit around and exchange pleasantries, Archangel of Wisdom. I came because I have a war to win. If you can't give me troops, then you will have to supply something else. Something of equal or greater value."

Jepthath leans forward. His voice takes on a menacing tone. "You don't have a choice. Without me, your people die. Anger me, and your people die. This point is not up for debate."

Camael glowers at Jepthath. "If not military might, what can we possibly offer thee? Out with it! I haven't any interest in thy snake-like tongue. Tell us what thou desireth and be on thy way."

Jepthath raises an eyebrow. "Isn't that obvious? I expected the Archangel of Divination to understand my meaning without any issues. I want artifacts, Camael. Divine artifacts."

Camael's jaw drops.

"What? No... no! I won't- I won't give anyone but my brothers and sisters objects possessing the Creator's power. How dare thou presumeth upon my magnanimity!"

"Hmph. As I said, you haven't any choice in the matter," Jepthath replies. "I can crush the angels over the next thousand years, if I so please. If you don't give me what I want, and humanity falls to the demons, the fate which will befall you will be a million times worse. Besides, my needs are not excessive. I require only a few artifacts, and I will provide the mana necessary for you to craft them. A generous offer, wouldn't you agree?"

Before Camael can reply, Raphael butts in. "Aye, thy offer is indeed generous. Am I correct in assuming thy empowered warriors can regenerate their mana each night, as do the unascended plainsman?"

"We can, and we do," Jepthath replies neutrally. "Why? Do you wish to bargain?"

Raphael rubs his chin. "After the battle which ravaged Heaven, my people are in dire need of mana. I cannot condone the usage of soul manipulation, but given the stakes, I will keep my lips sealed for now. However, if thou dost wish to receive Camael's divine artifacts, I will only permit thy transfer on the basis of equal trade."

"Haha, I see," Jepthath chuckles. "Let me guess. As I empower more and more humans, you will supply me with any artifacts I need, but on the condition that humans always donate their excess energy each night. Hm? Is that about right?"

Raphael's eyes flash with the light of insight. "Thou dost possess Hercules's cunning. I see now why the lad bestowed his powers upon thee."

"Don't flatter me, Raphael. I am only here on business."

Jepthath strokes his chin thoughtfully.

"Considering our situation, empowering thy people is of some benefit to me. Hercules's abilities require little mana to function. By the end of each day, my men will have barely used a fraction of their reserves. Donating what remains to the angels will cost me little while providing significant gains for both of us."

Camael glances at Raphael. "Brother! My artifacts are not mere trinkets and baubles to be tossed from child to child! 'Tis only by the Creator's power than I am capable of creating such fearsome-"

"Now, now, sister," Raphael says, keeping his voice low. "The times are changing, as is the world around us. We've no reason to rest on our laurels. The human is offering us a chance to revive our society while crippling, if not outright destroying our enemies. I believe we can reach a satisfactory agreement, given the proper exchange of resources and goods."

"But-!"

Raphael clears his throat. "Ahem. Jepthath, woulds't thou be so kind as to allow me a moment with my sister. I will convince her to agree to thy terms."

Jepthath frowns.

"...Certainly. I will step outside for a few minutes."

Despite his words, Jepthath's tone seems surprisingly cautious. He evaluates the Archangel of Wisdom with more than a hint of suspicion. However, he still rises to his feet, steps outside, and closes the door behind himself.

Minutes pass.

Jepthath's inner voice plays over the vision.

As I awaited the Archangel's verdict, worries crept up from deep within my heart. I had only received scattered images of the war my Master witnessed in Heaven, but amongst those images, a recurring theme always played out in his head.

"Never trust the angels."

Hercules' repeated that mantra several times as the battles raged. Even after his voice faded and he passed on to the Great Beyond, I never forgot that message.

The Archangels deliberated in secret, sending pangs of worry up my spine. Right as I began considering whether I should press my ear against the door to listen in on their conversation, it swung open to reveal Raphael's hunched-over figure.

"We've finished deliberating," Raphael says. "Come in."

Jepthath quietly releases a breath he'd been holding. He follows after Raphael, shuts the door, and sits down before the brother and sister. Immediately, he notices Camael's sullen expression, as well as her ashen skin.

"What did you decide?" Jepthath asks.

Camael fidgets uncomfortably. "I do not enjoy the idea of granting anyone but an angel my artifacts. However, my brother has convinced me to make this sacrifice for the sake of my people. I will craft what thou dost require."

Jepthath nods sagely. "I see. Is that all, then? I can't help but feel suspicious at your change of heart. What did Raphael say to convince you to my side?"

Camael sighs.

"I... I have always prided myself on my virtuousness and morality. Never once have I compromised in the face of evil. However, after losing so many brothers and sisters to the demons, I realize now that I erred in my judgment. Sometimes, one cannot adhere to the past, lest it causes their future to crumble."

"Mmm. Well-spoken. Well-spoken, indeed..." Jepthath mutters.

Gazing upon the disheartened Archangel of Divination, for some reason, I felt no joy in my victory. It seemed to me that I had willingly stepped into a trap, one which had yet to spring. However, no matter how I pondered and questioned the Archangel's behavior, I could not determine anything Raphael had done that might endanger me or my goals.

Raphael smiles. "Thy mentor, Hercules, was his own man, as thou art thine. I was wrong to evaluate thee with the same lens I did the son of Zeus. I look forward to collaborating with thee in the coming years, Jepthath."

Jepthath nods. "As do I, Archangel of Wisdom. Thank you for coming around to my way of thinking."

Raphael's eyes twinkle with a strange, eerie luster.

"Aye. We both have much to gain from this arrangement. So very, very much, indeed."

The Archangel's tone only increased my suspicions. Sadly, many years would pass before I finally comprehended the depths of his schemes.

Part 203: Jepthath's Resolve

Nineteen years passed. Camael granted me divine artifacts to locate, suppress, and exterminate any demons I came across. I made sure not to waste her gifts.

Jepthath's visions shift again. Images of humans storming through underground passages, across vast, open fields, and climbing steep mountains flash by one by one. The sheer number of ascended beings boggles the mind, as more than a hundred thousand glowing-eyed warriors flatten the Earth with their heavy boots.

In one vision, fifty demon grunts unleash all of their might to try and stop three human warriors. They sling fireballs, hurl rocks, and charge into the faces of their god-like enemies.

They fail.

The three humans easily overpower and cripple the entire demon contingent. They slap the heads off a pair of succubi, break the back of a giant demon Brute, and unsheathe shiny steel swords to cleave the rest in two.

Demons scream and wail. They beg for mercy, only for swords to lance through their skulls moments later. The humans wordlessly continue a violent rampage across the demon's territory as they hack and slice apart all in their path.

Unlike Jepthath's previous visions, the warriors now wear neatly sewn leather and animalskin clothing. Along with their swords, they also carry steel shields while wearing leather pauldrons for their shoulders. They appear far more civilized than in the previous visions, but equally fearsome.

I found myself surprised when the Archangel of Divination introduced me to the concept of metallurgy. Not only could she craft unique, mighty objects of divine origin, but she also went out of her way to teach my people the concept of forging our own weapons and armor. Most importantly, however, Camael gave me a personal gift. A weapon capable of uniting humanity's power and transforming us into an unstoppable spear against the demonic bulwark to the west.

The Dominion Rod.

Crafted from the finest enchanted steel, the weapon resembled a shepherd's staff, with a curved top, allowing a single brilliant gem in its center to shine like the midday sun. The divine weapon was not only sturdy enough for me to wield in melee combat, but even better, it augmented and boosted my Heroic power. It improved my mental control over my troops, preventing them from rebelling or disobeying. In addition to improving my mental control, it also equalized the strength of any who accepted my power. Nearly every warrior came to possess the same fighting power I did, making every individual capable of fighting Demon Dukes without any assistance. One warrior was often capable of slaughtering an entire Demon Den singlehandedly.

While Heaven struggled to rebuild itself, I put my power to work crafting cities, weaponry, and armor which would even the playing field against our demonic adversaries. With our minds and bodies united, we accomplished in mere years what would take later generations decades or centuries to accomplish.

I had no time to waste when it came to bringing about the end of demonkind. While my life slowly ticked away and my skin began to sag, doubts appeared in my mind.

How many demons still existed on the Earth? With their ranks thrown into turmoil, would I be able to find and kill every last Broodmother? Even if I did, assuming I couldn't locate the elusive Emperor of Providence, Lucifer, what did my efforts amount to? Once I died, she would reappear and rebuild the demonic army. All of my efforts would crumble to ash.

I loved my wife and children. On the Day of Ascension, when I seized control of the Dominion Rod and lifted humanity to its greatest height, I gave my deceased family names to honor their memory. Neilah was like a flower blooming within my heart. Even as I killed my way through tens of thousands of demons, carving a path across the land with their blood, I never forgot my wife.

However, the realization that my lineage would end upon my death spurned me to take a new family. I found another wife, a woman I later came to call Pierra, and lay with her whenever I found the time. She bore me several children, but no matter how I tried, I could not build a connection with them as I had my first family.

My second family came to represent my ultimate detachment from the trifles and joys of life. I tried to show them the same love as my first family, but I failed. After killing so many demons, it felt as if a part of my soul had died. I could no longer love another in the same way I once had.

Life is a series of ironic twists. I spent my whole existence fighting and killing demons, all to sate my bloodlust for them killing my family. When the chance came to savor a second life with a new family, I cast it aside.

Jepthath's tone turns melancholic.

I gave up my humanity, all so I could slay demons.

Do I regret my decision?

...Sometimes.

The vision darkens, revealing an underground demon lair, one dug much more hastily and crudely than any of the others before it.

Nineteen years after I made my pact with the Archangel Camael, and her brother, Raphael, I came upon an irresistible piece of intelligence from one of my scouts. We had finally pierced the depths of the Earth and found the hiding hole of Satan the Devil, as well as his cohorts, the Emperors of Passion and Providence, Belial and Lucifer. Having hunted down millions of demons and their broodmothers, and with my vitality running out, I decided it was time for an all-in attack.

I had the Devil cornered. The odds were high that he had set up a trap to bring me closer, but I didn't care. All of my pieces were in place. I brought an army of men thirty-thousand strong, each warrior capable of flattening a typical Demon Duke. It was now or never; my last chance to kill the one who had brought about the end of my family, all those centuries before.

Satan's doom was upon him.

"Keep close, Aaron," Jepthath says.

"Yes, father," A strapping young lad replies.

Father and son, Jepthath and Aaron storm through the crudely-dug Demon Den. Unlike the polished walls of the dens from years before, this one's design appears haphazard at best. The pitch-black hallways turn from left to right in random directions, causing anyone with a poor sense of direction to become confused.

However, thanks to the piercing blood-red-light emitting from Jepthath's eyes, he illuminates the path ahead with ease.

Hundreds of other warriors following in Jepthath's wake charge through the demonic hallways with reckless abandon. Their eyes, too, glow, but with a pure white color instead. Once or twice, the humans come upon an orc, a goblin, or some other monster, only to brutally end the unfortunate being's life before it can defend itself.

Aboveground, thirty human warriors and five lowborn angels use the power of Seer-Stones to pierce the Earth's depths. They envision the inner hallways, then transmit all the relevant information directly to Jepthath's mind.

Jepthath and Aaron pause for a split-second before a T-junction, where the path splits in three directions.

"If we travel to the right, we'll be able to cut across several broodmother dens along the way," Aaron says. He gazes at his father respectfully, waiting for Jepthath's input.

"No," Jepthath replies. "Our goal is to eliminate Lucifer. Once she perishes, we can take our time mopping up the Broodmothers. Five warriors will head down the right path, but the rest of us will go left."

"Of course, father," Aaron replies, as any thoughts of disobeying vanish immediately under the Dominion Rod's power. He spares a glance toward the weapon held in his father's grasp. "What if we should fall here, today, against the Emperors?"

Jepthath immediately heads down the left tunnel, shooting a remorseful glance at his son. "If I perish, you will inherit my power. The Dominion Rod is a weapon possessing enough Holy Energy that no demon will be able to touch it. Make sure you obtain my artifact and continue hunting the bloodskins. Until every last one is dead, our work will never be done."

Aaron nods. His muscular body stands in stark contrast to his youthful face, which oozes childlike naivete. With only a single glance at the lad, anyone would be able to tell that he has no business dealing with matters of war.

However, Jepthath pays little attention to his son's body language. Instead, the Shepherd of Men leads his warriors down various passageways, traveling as quickly as he can toward the large, inner chambers of the Demon Den.

"I understand, father," Aaron replies, his voice muted. "I will continue your fight even if you should fall."

"Good boy," Jepthath says, his expression neutral.

The father and son fall silent, having exchanged all the words Jepthath feels need to be said.

I cared little for my son, Aaron, Jepthath's inner voice says. At the time, I saw him as nothing but a tool — a weapon to combat the demons. Never once did I value him as a fellow human, nor as a beloved son. To me, he was merely the inheritor of my resentment. If I had to rely on him to kill my enemies, then all that meant was that I had failed in fulfilling my lifelong ambition.

In a way, I resented Aaron. I resented his existence, and how he had subtly come to replace my first family.

Of all the regrets I've come to possess over the millennia, treating my flesh and blood so poorly is what tears me apart the most.

I was a terrible father. No doubt, Aaron despised me.

Jepthath and Aaron slow to a stop as a flickering light appears in the darkness ahead. With their enhanced eyes, both humans pick out the figures of half a dozen Burner demons, all of them standing at the ready with spells half-casted.

Fwoosh!

Several fireballs come flying down the corridor. Before Jepthath can react, Aaron leaps forward and uses his shield like a baseball bat, swatting the flames to the left and right. They splash against the walls, causing the assault force no injuries.

Jepthath's vision-voice speaks. My body was not as young and virile as it used to be. In terms of physical strength, my son was my equal. In terms of speed, he was more than my match. I felt a hint of pride whenever I saw him fight, but that feeling always morphed into shame.

I was ashamed of my weakness. Ashamed that I had taken so long to exterminate the little blood-suckers.

Now, I gaze upon my son with pride, but back then, I was too stuck in my ways to appreciate my son's evolution into a fine warrior.

Aaron lunges forward. He and three other soldiers attack the low-ranking Burners, slaughtering them with ease. Aaron rips off the head of their leader and smashes it against a wall, turning it into a mess of blood and bone.

Moments later, he returns and places his hand on his heart. "Let us continue, father."

"You hesitated," Jepthath says, his eyes turning cold. "You could have killed those bloodskins five seconds faster, had you not paused to consider the flashiest method of dispatching them."

"I... I apologize, father. I will try to be more efficient next time."

"Don't 'try.' Do. You have to set an example for the other soldiers. They'll look up to you when I'm gone."

"I understand, father."

"Do you? I'll be the judge of that. Let's continue. The Emperor's lair isn't much further. If you slip up, they'll kill you without hesitating."

"...Yes."

Aaron's expression turns slightly dejected, but he hides his emotions quickly, masking his eyes by rubbing his forehead. Moments later, the assault force of several hundred humans continues charging into the depths of the Earth.

"Stay sharp!" Jepthath yells. "Today, we finish this war! We'll kill the bloodskins and complete our quest of blood! For humanity!"

His soldiers shout in unison. "For humanity! For the Illuminator!"

Recommended Listening

Thousands of humans storm into one of the innermost chambers, its size comparable to a football stadium. The massive, recently excavated area stands nearly a hundred feet tall, held up by several hardened dirt pillars.

Inside, thousands of demons assume defensive stances as their human oppressors charge inside, swords and shields held at the ready.

Bael, the Duke of Pain, stands at the front of the crowd alongside Agares, the Duke of Reptiles.

"Don't let the bastards through!" Bael roars.

Jepthath's eyes flick past the wall of demons, toward a caved-in hallway leading deeper into the demon's den.

[We have to bypass this bulwark,] Jepthath says, transmitting his thoughts to his son and the other Legionnaires. [The Demon Emperors must be hiding inside the central chamber.]

[Cowards!] One of Jepthath's generals yells. [The bloodskins know only how to skulk in the darkness!]

[We must exercise caution,] Aaron says, a hint of worry in his eyes. [This might be a trap.]

[Indeed, it is,] Jepthath replies. He charges at Bael and raises his fist. [I would expect no less from these loathsome cretins!]

Boom!

Bael meets Jepthath's fist with his own. The two warriors engage in brutal combat, using their bodies to their fullest extent.

Unlike a few years before, when Jepthath first used his newly acquired martial techniques, this time, Bael manages to hold his own. Bael receives more than his fair share of blows from the human king, but manages to land a few of his own. Each time Bael's fists strike Jepthath, the human king staggers backward. Having spent the last twenty years running from Jepthath's forces, Bael's combat capabilities appear to have sharply risen, forcing the human king to rely on his staff as a weapon.

It only takes a minute for chaos to engulf the chamber. Aaron and Agares meet each other in one-on-one combat; trading blows between the future leader of humanity and a grizzled veteran of the demonic species. Goblins adhere to the ceiling while hurling spears from above, trying their best to wound or distract the humans beneath them. Orcs leap into the fray while riding atop Hellhounds, using the double-threat of monster and beast to take out a few of the weakest human warriors.

However, it doesn't take long before the battle begins tilting in Jepthath's favor.

Jepthath ducks a punch from Bael, grabs the Duke's arm, and flings him over his shoulder. Bael spins through the air and lands amidst a six-man-strong contingent of Legionnaires, all of whom descend upon the Duke of Pain, raining their fists upon him mercilessly.

Agares uses his superior scaled defenses to absorb the youth's attacks where possible. At the same time, his claws slash and cut Aaron's skin when he gets too close.

"Gah!"

Aaron cries out in pain as Agares rakes his face, ripping out thick, meaty chunks of flesh from his forehead to his cheek. Aaron staggers back, allowing three other Legionnaires to pounce at the Duke.

Suddenly, Agares gasps. Jepthath appears from out of nowhere and smashes the Dominion Rod against the back of the Duke's neck, sending him crashing into the chamber's floor. With Agares staggered, another contingent of Legionnaires begins whaling on him from every direction, suppressing his movements and forcing him to retreat.

"Aaron! Come with me," Jepthath yells, grabbing his son's attention. Both of them, along with a thousand soldiers, charge toward the caved-in doorway at the edge of the chamber. The demons and monsters behind continue trying to fight the ever-increasing stream of humans flooding into the chamber, but their forces are no match for an army of demi-humans, each individually as strong as a Demon Duke.

Jepthath stops before the caved-in hallway. "Stand back!"

He aims the Dominion Rod at the entrance, looks away, and shields his eyes.

"Firing... now!"

A tremendous surge of mana wells up within Jepthath's chest. It transfers into the Dominion Rod, enters the magic crystal in its head, and morphs into a mountain-shattering blast of holy energy.

Thoom!

The entire underground tunnel system explodes with dirt and debris. Cracks rip across the ceiling as an earthquake rattles the planet. It takes more than a minute for the dust to settle, only for chunks of the ceiling to plummet from above, crushing anyone they hit.

"Let's move!" Jepthath bellows. He charges into the now-excavated tunnel, ignoring the rapidly building casualties outside. Hundreds of Legionnaires perish along with their demon and monster adversaries, but Jepthath pays them no mind.

My warriors were little more than expendable resources to me, Jepthath's inner voice muses. I only cared about their deaths before obtaining the Dominion Rod, back when I had to appease various tribal leaders to build my army. Once I received Camael's artifact, I no longer wasted my time fretting over such trifles. The moment they accepted my power, they lost their ability to protest.

Jepthath and his son charge down the hallway. They plow through dozens of Lords and even a few Barons, both groups doing their best to stall the humans for time.

Upon entering the next chamber, Jepthath and Aaron find themselves surrounded by a massive quantity of demons. Unlike the previous room, where some of the mightiest demon warriors stood their ground against the human invaders, in this room, they try using the narrow doorway as a chokepoint to crush the humans with numbers.

Thousands of fireballs rush at Jepthath the instant he enters. Instinctively, he activates the Dominion Rod to form a powerful mana barrier, causing the superheated projectiles to explode harmlessly at the doorway's opening.

Slowed by the Burner's assault, Jepthath and his fellow humans pause upon entering the second chamber. They take refuge behind their king as Jepthath easily repels the nonstop barrage of flames and hellfire from his mortal enemies.

Within two minutes, the Burner's fireballs drop off in both intensity and firepower. Having run out of mana, the Burners retreat from battle, allowing their allies to seize the initiative.

Once again, a horde of goblins skitters across the ceiling. However, unlike the previous room's occupants, these goblins share a variety of different skin colors.

The red-skinned ones, who somewhat resemble hornless demons, are far more aggressive than the rest. They leap from the ceiling like kamikazes and try to stab the humans to death with little stone knives. As Jepthath's warriors funnel into the chamber and engage in battle, they easily shrug off the limp-wristed attacks of the red-skinned goblins.

Yellow-skinned goblins join the fray as well. They pounce from the ceiling to the pillars and keep their distance from the humans, all while using makeshift slingshots to try and shoot the humans in their eyes. Several warriors howl in pain as tiny rocks zip unnoticed into their glowing weak-spots.

Finally, a much smaller number of black-skinned goblins ride alongside orcs atop their Hellhounds. These Obsidian Goblins appear virtually identical to the ones which appeared on Tarus II alongside the Hydra. With their iron-like skin, they act as tanks, allowing their fellow orcs to focus more on offense while they deflect and absorb attacks from the mighty human army.

Jepthath swings the Dominion Rod from side to side, using it as a club against any enemy foolish enough to step within range. He crushes heads, shatters shoulders, and sends waves of destruction surging amongst the demon ranks. Meanwhile, Aaron stays close to his father. Humanity's king and prince take out three Demon Lords effortlessly, eliminating troublesome foes before they can cause any casualties.

Suddenly, a deafening explosion ripples through the chamber, momentarily stunning all of the humans. Shax, the Baron of Shredding, leaps atop the back of a riderless Hellhound and rides the rampaging monster like a surfboard. He sweeps his fingers across his chest, acting as if he's going all-out while playing air guitar. Every time Shax's fingers move, sound-blasts fire from his body, knocking away anyone, friend or foe, who strays too close.

Shax's little sister, Murmur, the Lord of Emotion, rides atop his shoulders. She rests her chin on his head and sighs deeply, while occasionally aiming her finger at any humans who charge her brother. "Poke. Poke... poke."

Each time Murmur pokes the air, using the least amount of physical exertion possible, she sends a Legionnaire flying. Murmur's telekinesis proves unyielding, preventing anyone from landing a hit on her older brother.

One of Jepthath's generals scowls. "We have to kill that Baron!"

"No," Jepthath says, shaking his head. "He's nothing more than a distraction. Keep your eyes on the prize. I want our weaker reserves to keep him busy."

"Father, I can eliminate him," Aaron offers.

"Stay by my side, boy. You still have to prove yourself worthy of wielding the Dominion Rod. You'll have a shot at glory once we fight the Emperors."

"Alright. As you wish, father."

Shax begins headbanging, causing his frizzy white hair to leap back and forth. Each time, bolts of electricity fire from his hair's tips, jolting both enemies and allies alike who stray too close.

Because of Shax's headbanging, Murmur loses her comfy headrest. She frowns. "Brother... stop moving..."

Shax laughs. "Haha! No can do, little sis! I have to move to feel the rhythm!"

Murmur sighs. "...I hate 'the rhythm.'"

Shax, a dull-headed music-lover, continues blasting his intolerably awful music at anyone in range, while his sister protects him from ambushers. As they work together, Jepthath shoves his way past them toward the rear of the demon's army. There, he encounters another obstacle. A massive Hellhound, comparable to Cerberus, stands amidst a sea of Orcs.

The four-legged predator stands nearly thirty-feet tall. Its ten-ton body, starved of food, trembles with hunger. With the demons having kept the animal on a short leash, its viciousness is at peak rarely seen amongst other wild creatures.

"Gods!" Aaron cries out. "Is that Lucifer's transformation?! She's massive!"

Jepthath shakes her head as he grabs a shield from one of his nearby soldiers. "No. It is merely a starved mongrel. I'll kill it myself!"

Without issuing any orders to his men, Jepthath lunges toward the humongous creature. Orcs try to stop him, but he flings them aside with the ease of an elephant stomping mice. The king holds his shield up and uses it as a battering ram, turning anyone in his path to bloody mush.

Eventually, Jepthath arrives before the giant Hellhound. The monster snaps at him, trying to devour the warrior whole. Upon seeing the jaws of death approaching, Jepthath merely smiles.

[Oh? Hungry? Allow me to oblige.]

Like a man possessed by the Devil, Jepthath happily leaps into the monster's mouth while avoiding its teeth. The Hellhound slams its jaws shut, causing Aaron's heart to tremble. "Father!"

A moment later, the Hellhound's eyes bulge with pain. It opens its mouth and tries to spit the steel-clad warrior out, but Jepthath merely leaps into its throat.

[I think I'll stay for a minute, beast.]

An explosion detonates inside the monster's throat, causing its entire body to shudder. The Hellhound scrabbles back and paws at its face, trying desperately to vomit out the parasite it swallowed mere moments before.

It fails.

Jepthath activates the Dominion Rod, sending a blast of mana throughout the wolf's organs. Moments later, the beast explodes, sending rives of blood and bone spraying in every direction. Jepthath leaps out of its body, covered from head to toe in its cooked entrails.

Aaron blinks. "Father? You're alright!"

Jepthath scowls. "Stupid boy. Of course, I am. Stop speaking nonsense! Now, let's get a move on. The final chamber awaits!"

Once again, Jepthath ignores the mounting casualties and advances forward with a dwindling number of elite warriors. By the time he charges through the final corridor into the largest, innermost cavern, he only has a hundred men following him.

Jepthath enters the final room and slows to a stop. Unlike the two before it, which were crudely dug and illuminated by the light of Legionnaire eyes and Burner fireballs, this chamber possesses hundreds of lamps stuck in the walls around the room. Its walls shine with polish, revealing the amount of care taken in its decoration. A granite throne sits against the back wall, where Satan sits atop it, smirking. Lucifer stands to his right, with a small contingent of mutated Hellhounds at her side. Each of her pets possesses bright red fur, giving them the appearance of fox-wolf mixed breeds. Their eyes crackle with electricity, revealing their elementally attuned nature.

"Haha!" Satan laughs. "Hey! It's been a while, kingy! Glad you could make it!"

Jepthath ignores Satan's taunts. His eyes flick first to Lucifer, then to the rest of the room, where tens of thousands of demons and monsters stand at the ready.

"Foolish humans. You've walked right into a trap," Satan mutters, yawning as he speaks. "Today... you die."

"I wonder about that," Jepthath murmurs. He scowls at Satan. "Unfortunately, oh, mighty bloodskin Emperor, no amount of trickery will ever defeat one who possesses the strength to withstand it. My men, go!"

Satan sighs. "A frontal assault. Why am I not surprised?"

Jepthath leaps into the air. He summons power into the Dominion Rod, then fires a blast of holy energy at Lucifer, intending to finish her off in one blow. Instead, Lucifer jumps forward, grabs a goblin, and hurls it at the human king.

"No, no, nonoNOOOOO!!"

The goblin shrieks in terror as it turns into a meatshield for the Emperor of Providence. The Dominion Rod's blast of energy rips the goblin apart and turns it into a blood-balloon, splattering the monster's innards all over Jepthath. By the time Jepthath manages to see past the fog in the air, Lucifer has disappeared.

Jepthath lands on his feet and swivels to look in every direction. He spots Lucifer engaged in combat with Aaron and rushes forward to help.

The Demon Emperor of Providence cackles evilly. Her deity-level body provides her with more than enough physical power to take on the human, but even so, Jepthath finds himself astounded at the sheer might behind each blow. Lucifer whales on Aaron, her fists striking his enchanted shield like sledgehammers. Aaron grits his teeth as the clanging of her fist sends out bangs whenever she lands a hit.

"F-father! Help me, please!"

Jepthath arrives just in time to save his son. He rudely kicks Aaron aside and sends the lad skidding to the side, just in time to avoid one final, deadly strike by Lucifer.

Crash!

The Demon Emperor's fists strike the dirt where Aaron stood only a split-second before, summoning an Earthquake to shake the planet.

Jepthath stumbles backward as the ground tosses him like a sack of potatoes. He rights himself in midair and lands in a crouch, readying himself to charge again.

[Astounding!] Jepthath crows, begrudgingly praising the Demoness in his mind. [Lucifer has never possessed such power, not until she morphed into one of her animal forms! Where did she obtain such strength?!]

Shaking away his worrisome thoughts, Jepthath attacks Lucifer, turning his body into a tornado of muscle and pain. He swings the flat of his shield against her head, but she deflects it with the side of her arm. He fires a blast of holy energy at her via the Dominion Rod, but she bends over backward and narrowly evades the deadly laser.

[No, something isn't right,] Aaron says, transmitting his thoughts to Jepthath. [Look! Her movements are far too fast and fluid. We've faced Lucifer many times, father. That isn't her!]

Thump!

Lucifer pounds Jepthath in his chest and sends him flying. Jepthath spins head over heels until he crashes into a rock pillar, bringing the whole thing crashing down. Just before 100 tons of collapsing rubble can kill him, Jepthath shakily raises his staff and summons another mana barrier to protect himself. He narrowly survives with his life.

"Kah! Damn... Aaron is right. That isn't Lucifer... it must be... the changeling!"

Jepthath bursts out of the collapsed pillar's remains. Not far away, five of his warriors work together to take down a pack of hellhounds. The mind-controlled Legionnaires snap each beast's neck, one by one, only for the Hellhounds to open their mouths and breath lightning upon the warriors. Electrical pain surges from their minds into Jepthath's, forcing him to sever the connection.

[Gah! Aaron, don't engage that Emperor in combat! She's not Lucifer! She's Belial!]

Across the cavern, Aaron battles Belial, using his comparable strength and speed to just barely keep up with her. However, with her stretchy limbs, Belial outmaneuvers the young man time and again, simultaneously batting him around like a kitten with a ball, while occasionally turning her fingers into knives to cut and stab the openings in his defenses.

Jepthath hesitates.

Faced with the decision to save his son or to seek out the true Emperor of Providence, uncertainty clouds his judgment.

[Father! Help me!] Aaron cries out, begging for assistance.

Jepthath continues to hesitate.

"Where is she? Where did that whore hide? If I can't kill Lucifer, everything I've done today will be for nothing."

Jepthath chews his lip. From across the chamber, he hears a blood-curdling scream, then silence. The battles around quickly swallow up the sound, but the King's heart skips a beat.

[No! Aaron!]

Rallied by the terror in his heart, Jepthath pounces like a jaguar toward his son and Belial. As he leaps over the heads of surprised demons, Jepthath's vision lasers in on the figure of 'Lucifer' holding Aaron by his throat. She gazes at Jepthath's oncoming form and smiles.

"I have your son, human! You won't dare-"

"LET HIM GO!"

Jepthath howls in rage at the shapeshifted demoness, interrupting her mid-sentence. Belial suddenly realizes Jepthath isn't slowing down. She tosses Aaron aside and holds up her arms to protect herself.

BOOM!

Jepthath strikes the Emperor of Passion with stunning force. He sends her flying backward, then lunges again without pausing.

"I'll kill you! I'll fucking kill you!"

The image of his son's unconscious form held in the demoness's grasp etches into Jepthath's mind. By the time Belial impacts one of the side-walls, it only takes a split second before Jepthath arrives before her and begins swinging his fists recklessly, like a raging bull.

Wham! Wham! Wham wham whamwhamwham!

Jepthath's blood boils with fury. His wrath becomes a monsoon of destruction. Belial's strength, the mightiest among her people, only manages to suppress half of Jepthath's striking power. Each time he lands a punch, the human king breaks one of Belial's bones. Eventually, she loses her concentration and breaks her shapeshifted form, revealing her true appearance underneath.

"Aaaahhhh!!"

Belial cries in pain. She tries to sidestep, to push away the king, and even to jump into the air, but he never lets up.

"Today, you draw your LAST breath!" Jepthath roars.

With one final punch, he swings his fist against the side of Belial's head, sending her careening to the left. She tumbles and twists for several seconds before coming to a grinding halt amidst a group of demons and humans.

Jepthath's blood-red eyes flash with insight. A sudden realization strikes him, and he whirls around to face Satan, who continues sitting on the throne without moving.

[Ah! As I thought! While I assaulted Belial, Satan didn't move a muscle. He would never let me injure his beloved mate! That must mean... the Satan seated there is a fake! Belial used her illusion magic to change his appearance!]

Jepthath grinds his teeth together.

[The aura leaking out of that demon is identical to any Emperor. 'Satan' must be Lucifer!]

However, even as this realization hits Jepthath, he pauses. The human king glances toward his son, lying motionless amongst a sea of enemies and allies. Several demons try to plunge their knives into his heart, but the nearby human warriors manage to shield him.

[You! General Kian! Take my son out of here! I'll kill the Emperor of Providence myself!]

[Yes, my king!]

Jepthath watches as one of the human warriors grabs Aaron, hoists the lad over his shoulder, and retreats, leaving only Jepthath and fifty-something other humans to fend off their demon opponents.

Jepthath turns to face 'Satan.'

"Haha... now, I've got you."

He lunges toward the eerily calm and confident demon sitting on the granite throne. Satan leans lazily against his palm, seemingly uninterested in Jepthath's incoming attack.

Jepthath grins. "Pretend all you want, but I know who you are!"

As he lunges toward Satan, the Devil yawns. "Oh, dear. Looks like this is the end for me."

Jepthath raises the Dominion Rod.

He swings it downward, aiming to crush 'Satan's' head into mulch.

Crunch!

To Jepthath's astonishment, he pulverizes Satan's entire body into a bloody pulp. The sheer strength behind Jepthath's swing sends a shockwave into the Earth's depths, destroys the granite throne, and sends shockwaves exploding in every direction.

Jepthath stands amidst the rubble, staring in disbelief.

"What? No... it can't be... Lucifer's body would be too durable to perish under such an attack. Was he really Satan after all?"

Suddenly, Jepthath's body teleports. He reappears not far away, back where he was standing moments before. Satan sits on the granite throne and yawns lazily.

"Oh, dear. Looks like this is the end for me."

Jepthath blinks in confusion. Hesitantly, he raises the Dominion Rod and lunges forward again. This time, he puts every drop of his strength into the attack, doubling his previous output.

"I... I won't fall for your tricks, bloodskin!"

THOOM!

Jepthath smashes Satan's body into mulch once again. He rattles the entire chamber, causing hundreds of tons of rock and stone to shake free from the ceiling and plummet to the ground below.

Jepthath breathes heavily. He stares at the rubble where the throne stood only a second earlier.

"I... I got him. He's dead now. The bastard can't have escaped death a second-"

Suddenly Jepthath teleports again. He reappears where he stood before, facing Satan as the Devil yawns.

"Oh, dear. Looks like this is the end for me."

Jepthath's heart trembles. "No... again? How? How is this happening?"

Faint memories trickle into Jepthath's mind. Hercules's words tickle his brain, as if trying to remind him of some terrible power, some awful demonic magic he must avoid at all costs.

However, no matter how Jepthath struggles, he can't remember what his former master once said.

"Something's not right. Why can't I kill the Devil?"

"Father... h-help me..."

Jepthath jumps in fright. He turns to his right, only to see a young boy lying on the ground amidst a pool of blood. Barely six years old, the boy is but a child, far younger than Jepthath's oldest son, Aaron.

"Daddy... it hurts..."

A little girl's voice reaches Jepthath, startling him again. He raises his eyes slightly to see a little girl, badly burned, crawling toward him. With her right arm and leg chewed off, she's a miserable sight, with an appearance so heart-rendingly sad that it brings tears to Jepthath's eyes.

"M-my... my children... how are they alive..?"

Jepthath takes a step toward the little boy, only to find an invisible mana barrier blocking his path. He stumbles backward in surprise, only to jump forward a moment later and try to break it with his bare hands.

He fails.

"No! No!! Let me through, damn you! You filthy bloodskin bastards! How dare you desecrate the dead?! I'll kill you all!!"

Jepthath hammers the barrier with all of his strength. The harder he fights, the stronger it becomes. He breaks his fingers against the wall, but even then, he can't get through to embrace his dying children.

"My... love... help me..." A woman whispers.

Jepthath gazes at his feet. There, a face more familiar to him than his own looks at him with eyes full of tears.

"N-Nei...lah?"

Jepthath drops to his knees. He stares at his former wife's disfigured body, covered in even more gruesome burns and cuts than his daughter. Neilah coughs blood all over the dirt and lowers her eyes.

"You... you left us... to die..."

"N-no, I didn't," Jepthath says, as he touches her face. "I'll... I'll save you! I'll grant you my power! You'll be able to heal, you'll-"

Suddenly, Jepthath teleports back to his starting position. He stands and faces Satan once more, startled by the sudden change of scenery.

Satan yawns. "Oh, dear. Looks like this is the end for me."

Disbelief washes through Jepthath's body. He turns to look for his family, only to find that they're no longer there.

He's all alone.

"Neilah... my children..."

Grief wells up in the king's chest. He stifles his emotions and gazes at the Demon Emperor seated on the throne.

"You... you did this. Who are you?! Where am I?!"

Hardly have the words left Jepthath's lips before the chaotic battle surrounding Jepthath simply disappears.

The chamber falls silent.

Satan, still seated on his throne, chuckles.

"Haven't you figured it out, yet? Pathetic human. You revealed your weakness to me, not once, but twice, and you thought I wouldn't notice? Your love for your family allowed me to exploit your mind. Even as we speak, Satan is pushing through your warriors. He'll crush your head momentarily, take your power for himself, and win the war."

'Satan' disappears. He reappears a few feet away from Jepthath, only for his body to shift its appearance, revealing his true form.

Lucifer.

Jepthath's heart skips a beat. The memories of what his master once told him come flooding back.

"Ah! You... you trapped me inside the Room of Torment!"

Lucifer cackles. "Hahahaha! Is that what you filthy fleshbags call it? My Demonic Trance is unlike anything you've ever faced! I could force you to endure a million years of pain and agony while only a minute passed in the outside world! Face facts, human. You've lost, and I've won."

Lucifer leers in front of Jepthath she cackles evilly, taunting him for his weakness and inability to see through her brilliant plans.

Jepthath closes his eyes and sighs. His understanding of the situation takes hold, calming his previously unstoppable rage.

"Aye. Had I known of your power beforehand, I could have protected myself. But now, I have only one recourse."

Lucifer smiles. "Yes. That's right... the only thing you can do now is... suffer!"

Jepthath winces as ten thousand knives fly at him from the walls, ceiling, and floor. They impale his body, sending waves of pain coursing through him.

However, the king merely shakes his head.

"I know what it means to suffer. These blades are nothing compared to what you showed me before."

Bitterly, the human sighs.

"You've left me no choice. At least now I can go out on my own terms."

As another knife impales Jepthath's eye, he smiles.

"Farewell, Aaron. My son."

The king summons all of the mana in his body to his brain, causing his vision to turn white.

The last thing he sees is Lucifer's look of disbelief.

"No... you can't do this! Nobody has ever escaped my trance! You filthy fleshbag!! You'll never-"

Part 204: The Heroic Aura's Origin

Jepthath's visions fade away, returning Hope's mind to the Three King's chamber. He stays silent for a moment while gazing up at the Illuminator's statue.

Eventually, when Jepthath doesn't say anything, Hope clears his throat.

"Is that how everything ended? Your story, I mean. Seems a little anticlimactic."

Solomon, Arthur, and Jepthath's statues loom overhead, dominating the diminutive Hero with their presence. Jepthath's eyes brighten as he ponders the Wordsmith's question.

"Mmm. Yes. That is how my story ends. I could not afford to give my power to the demons. I always knew that if Satan crushed my skull, he would become an unstoppable force of evil. He would ravage the Earth, and nobody, not even the angels and Titans, would be able to defeat him."

Hope taps his lip. "Lucifer might have lied to you. She was a demon, after all. You couldn't trust a word she said."

"I know, and I knew," Jepthath murmurs. "However, if there was one thing I understood about Lucifer after battling her and the other Emperors for two decades, it was that she always bragged once she came within reach of some ultimate goal. She might have been lying, but I could not afford to risk my head over the possibility. I was already under the effect of her Demonic Trance. My physical body was paralyzed and vulnerable. If not Satan, some other demon was sure to murder me while my defenses were down."

Hope nods. "I see. What did you do, then? The vision just sort of... ended."

Jepthath's tone turns casual. "Oh, that. I detonated the mana within myself and thus turned my body into a living bomb. Any demons in the area likely perished, while my men would have been unaffected."

Hope takes a step back and leans against a massive pile of gold and coins resting inside the El Dorado room. "Wow. I admire your resolve."

Jepthath's glowing eyes lose some of their luster. They slowly fade to black, revealing only a hint of their former brilliance. "My choice was an easy one. Ironically, had Lucifer not shown me images of my family, I might have tried to fight back, and inevitably damn myself to oblivion. Their appearance caused a tremendous surge of longing to build within my heart. Lucifer's declaration of Satan's killing intent merely pushed me over the edge. At that moment, I wanted nothing more than to be done with the war and the fighting. I wished to join my family in the Great Beyond and leave behind all the trivialities of life."

Solomon speaks, breaking his silence. "And look what happened. You ended up inside one of Camael's accursed artifacts."

Jepthath's eyes suddenly glow once again. His statue trembles slightly from his rampaging emotions. "Speak not of that bedeviled whore! That treacherous witch! That confounded swindler and her brother! They tricked me! They lied to me!"

The First Hero's outburst catches Hope off-guard. He leans away from the statue while staring at it with a puzzled expression. "Huh? Explain. What did Camael do?"

Jepthath bites off every word as he addresses Hope's inquiry. "Don't you see? Camael's so-called gifts were nothing more than traps designed to place me under her control! No, not hers, but Raphael's! When the old conniver took her aside, twenty years before my death, he must have told her to do something to the Dominion Rod. I know he did! Raphael was a cunning bastard. He never once gave up a chance to reap more benefits for angelkind."

Solomon chimes in, adding onto Jepthath's words. "That's right, old friend. As someone who possesses the memories of the Archangels, I know well how Raphael crafted the Heroic Aura. He used the Dominion Rod to influence Hercules's leftover soul manipulation. Every time you activated the Dominion Rod's magic, it subtly altered your mana to match its own."

Solomon continues. "This is the truth, Hope. The Heroic Aura wasn't a tool of the angels, but a human and Titan fusion tweaked and altered to meet Raphael's ideals. The angels deceived not only Jepthath, but me as well. Had Hercules's plan succeeded, Jepthath would have continued passing his power down from one human king to the next. Without a doubt, he would have eventually crushed demonkind with his might. However, due to Raphael and Camael's tampering, the Heroic Aura became volatile and unpredictable. It converted into a semi-sentient entity, capable of leaving its host on death and transferring to a new one."

Hope straightens his posture. "Hold on, have you told Jason any of this?"

Solomon shakes his head. "I intended to do so before he turned against me, but ultimately never got the chance. You are the first person outside of the Three Kings to learn this secret. Only Raphael and Camael ever knew the details of the Heroic Aura. They even went so far as to lie to the other Archangels, pretending the Heroic Aura was a joint effort between humanity and angelkind."

Solomon chuckles. "Haha. Raphael's ultimate desire was to take full control of Hercules's power. He wished to choose the bearer of the Heroic Aura and turn humanity into a pawn of the angels. Fortunately, or unfortunately, depending on your point of view, he failed. The Heroic Aura not only began choosing new bearers, seemingly at random, it even changed its abilities to be more compatible with whoever obtained it. That is why all Heroes possessed different abilities from one another."

Jepthath's voice hardens. "Solomon. You never told me any of this."

"You never asked," Solomon replies, shrugging. "Besides, I doubt this news will grant you any peace. You're more likely to go off the deep end now that you understand the full extent of Raphael's cunning."

Jepthath snorts. "Tch. Do not lecture me on ethics and morality, Knowledge-Seeker. My rage might be a bottomless pit, but your schemes are just as endless! How many years have you plotted and planned to take revenge on the demons? Here we are, at the end of time, and you're still hanging on to the dream that this new Hero whelp will succeed where we failed."

"As are you," Solomon counters. "With your chance at joining Neilah in the Great Beyond revoked, your final wish is to complete your revenge. Now that we've brought Hope here, we can bestow to him Excalibur and the Dominion Rod. With their power, he will shatter the confines of this Labyrinth and turn the demon's rule upside-down."

Jepthath snorts. "The Dominion Rod is a cursed artifact. Should he use its power, he'll only degrade the Heroic Aura further!"

Solomon sighs. "Jepthath, my brother, you may not know this, but the Wordsmiths are the final inheritors of the Heroic Aura. With the Archangels gone and Heaven dissolved, the Heroic Aura will no longer transfer upon death. Its continuation depended upon their existence. Without them, the Wordsmiths will be the last people capable of wielding its power."

Jepthath falls silent.

The conversation lulls for nearly a minute before the ancient king finally replies.

"Are you speaking the truth, Knowledge-Seeker? If the Wordsmiths perish, will there never again be a Hero?"

Solomon sighs. "There will not."

"How did you arrive at that conclusion?"

Jepthath's pointed query gives Solomon pause. The Knowledge-Seeker hems and haws for a moment before shrugging. "Well, based on how no Hero emerged after the 1940's, I have to assume... hmm..."

Solomon strokes his beard. "Come to think of it; it's likely that so long as Jason possessed the Heroic Aura, but stayed inside the Cryopod in a suspended state, the next Hero would never appear. Short of Hope or Jason dying, and possibly both of them, we can't say for certain that the Heroic Aura has lost its transferrence ability."

Hope's heart skips a beat. "Hold on, are you saying that even if the demons kill Jason and I both, there's a chance someone else could emerge as a new Hero?"

"I suppose it's possible," Solomon mutters. "I never knew of your existence. Given your birth around the year 2000, I don't know what to make of the 60-year gap between the 1940s and the 2000s. Which person or people were the heroes before you? Who obtained the power of the Heroic Aura? It must have been someone."

Solomon chews on his lip. His expression turns anxious. "This makes no sense. By the time Joan walked the Earth, let alone Arthur and the heroes following him, the angels had become extremely adept at fishing out newly born heroes. They trailed Joan from her 2nd birthday and onward. How could they overlook Jason and his predecessors?"

Hope shrugs. "Does it matter? There were billions of people living on Earth. It can't be easy to comb through that many humans."

"Perhaps..."

Solomon hesitates. He gazes into the distance, pondering a great many things.

"What worries me is that your entry into the cryogenic containment pod may not have been a coincidence. There were more than a dozen powerful factions manipulating humanity from the shadows by the time of the Industrial Revolution, some of them controlled by the angels, others by the demons. If a demon faction came up with the idea to seal away the next Hero inside cryostorage, that would explain why you remained unmolested for 100,000 years. Why else would they place your cryopod inside Faith's End — Hell's prison?"

Hope's expression changes. He gazes inward at the heavily breathing visage of Solomon and frowns.

"Solomon. If what you're saying is true, then you've just opened up a massive can of worms. If the demons managed to seal away Jason intentionally, then that means they must have figured out the Heroic Aura's weakness. If its carrier doesn't die, it can't transfer. You already showed me that Valac could see into the future, as could Camael. Is it possible that after Valac's death, another demon appeared with the gift of foresight? If so, they might have been able to outwit and destroy the angels. Hell, maybe they opposed Satan and maneuvered to have him killed once his usefulness was over."

Solomon tugs on his beard. "I don't know, Hope. All of that is perfectly plausible, but we mustn't jump to conclusions. It's just as likely that all of your assumptions are false. We won't know without any proof."

Hope begins pacing back and forth. He wrings his hands together and narrows his eyes. "If the demons put Jason inside the Cryopod, then why did we eventually escape? Surely it would have been in their best interests to place us on ice forever. As long as the cryopod had power, it would have kept Jason frozen until the end of time."

Hope pauses.

"Say, Jepthath. I have a question for you."

Jepthath's eyes brighten. "Go on."

"You said that if Satan crushed your head, he would obtain your power and prevent you from passing it on to your son."

"Aye. What of it?"

"How do you know that was the case? Weren't you only guessing?"

Jepthath's eyes pulse as he ponders Hope's question. "Indeed, I could only hazard a guess."

"I see. I'm only asking because I have to wonder; did Satan ever manage to kill a Hero? Did he ever crush one's head and steal their power?"

Solomon nods. "He did, yes — Alexander the Great. Satan brutally defeated him and stole Alexander's powers. He prevented the Macedonian's soul from entering his artifact, the Gordian Knot, but surprisingly, he could not stop the Heroic Aura from transferring to a new host. It was not a soul and thus lay outside his influence."

Hope nods. "But if Satan had managed to crush Jepthath's head, could he have prevented Heroes from emerging in the first place? Wasn't the Heroic Aura already formed by the time Jepthath died?"

Solomon falls silent.

Jepthath does not. "Preposterous. If... if what you're saying is true, then Satan might have claimed my soul, but he'd not have stopped my heir from obtaining my power. That would mean I died for nothing!"

Hope shakes his head. "No, you did the right thing, Jepthath. Even if the Heroic Aura was already formed, you did not want to end up a snack for Satan. I can't imagine all the ways he and Hades would have tortured you, not to mention what he'd have accomplished with your stolen abilities. Anyway, I didn't ask that question to poke holes in your self-esteem."

Hope clears his throat. "If my theory is correct, then the Heroic Aura should reappear even if Jason and I die. If we ultimately fall to the demons, and if they capture our souls, another Hero is likely to emerge. We are not humanity's last chance. So long as our species survives, another will continue to emerge again and again until the end of time."

Solomon releases a turbid breath. "Haha... I see now why your name is Hope. That is the most heartening speech I've heard in ages. I'm at least fifty percent sure it's the truth, too."

"You flatter me," Hope says, smirking. "Let's get back on topic. I assume Jepthath showed me his past to teach me about the origins of the Heroic Aura. What about the Dominion Rod? Is it intact?"

Solomon nods. "Aye. Even now, if you stretch out your senses, you might be able to detect a faint tingle of its overwhelming mana reserves. Alongside Excalibur, the Dominion Rod is the second mightiest divine artifact in existence."

"Hm, I'm not good at detecting energy signatures," Hope says. He trails off after a moment and frowns. "Say, Solomon? Why hasn't Arthur said anything since I left Jepthath's vision? Is he always this quiet?"

Solomon glances backward, through Hope's vision, at the golden-eyed statue across the room.

"Hmm... aye, Arthur has always been a man of few words, but even for him, this level of silence is unusual. Arthur! King of the Round! Wake up, old friend. Have you nothing to say to our young progeny?"

Hope falls silent. Both he and Solomon wait with bated breath for Arthur's reply. However, it takes three minutes before the golden luster in Arthur's statue's eyes brightens.

"...Hm? What is it, Solomon? I'm busy."

Solomon scoffs. "Busy? Doing what? Knitting? The Wordsmith is here, and he requires your guidance. If you're going to doze off, at least wait until you've told him about your life and where to find Excalibur."

Once again, Arthur doesn't reply for over half a minute. When he does, his voice sounds strained and weak.

"...I can't... there's something wrong... something outside the Chamber of Kings. I sense it, but I cannot tell what it is."

Solomon's lighthearted attitude vanishes. "What? An enemy?"

Arthur's eyes dim noticeably. "...I do not know, Solomon. The feeling is both familiar and alien at the same time. Whoever it is, I don't believe they are a demon. Yet, they are also not a human, nor a Volgrim, angel, or monster. They're... something else."

Solomon falls silent. He turns to Hope and nods. "Can you detect anything, lad?"

Hope swivels to face the Three King's entrance. After using Centurion to augment his mind, he speaks a word of power.

"Detect."

Hope's eyes flash with divine light. The corridors of the Labyrinth appear before him in a wireframe view, mimicking Solomon's magic mapping ability.

However, a large area outside the chamber appears hollow, as if there isn't anything there. No matter how Hope focuses his mind, he cannot detect a trace of life or matter.

"Arthur," Hope says, "why didn't you say anything? Whatever is outside, it isn't something I've encountered before. Next time, don't hold your tongue when something this important shows up."

Arthur's reply comes even slower than before. "I... was uncertain. Ever since my death, doubts have clouded my judgment. Whatever is outside, I cannot approach it as I once did, with my chest puffed out, and my head held high. I have to take care to consider my actions."

Hope crosses his arms. He takes a step toward the doorway and smiles. "You might be scared, but I'm not. I'm a Wordsmith. Whatever rat is hiding out there, I'll teach it not to spy on me. What can my enemies do against the Creator's power?"

"Wait," Solomon says, alarm in his voice. "What are you doing? Don't go outside. As long as you stay within the Three King's chamber, nothing can harm you. I placed powerful protection magic over this vault. You have no idea what's waiting for you out there."

"You're right; I don't," Hope replies. "But that's all the more reason for me to check. I don't like people who sneak around behind my back. Not Jason, and certainly not some nasty, skulking voyeur."

Hope starts walking toward the chamber's entrance, causing Solomon to stand up a little straighter. "You don't know who, or what, is outside."

"No, I don't, but I have a hunch."

The Three King's entrance appears before Hope. He walks toward the doorway while speaking a word of power. "Invincible. Perception. Speed."

Readying himself for whatever horrible creature might be waiting outside, Hope jumps around the corner and assumes a defensive stance.

"Show yourself, you ugly-!"

Hope pauses midsentence. He stares, astonished, at the face of a creature he hasn't encountered in over six years.

"What the hell?! You're... you're...!"

A freakish monster, standing more than nine-feet-tall, towers over Hope. Glowing eyes dot its body, all of them jerking around erratically as if trying not to gaze upon some unseen horror. Two pairs of arms jut out from its right and left sides, along with dual heads mounted on its shoulders.

The monster gazes at Hope. Its eyes contain a mixture of apathy and pity.

"Haha... so you came out, after all, Wordsmith. You must be pretty confident to face me by yourself."

Hope swallows his words. He takes a step back as memories from Jason's arrival appear in his mind.

"...Gressil."

Part 205: Hope's Terror

Recommended Listening

"So. You're one of the Wordsmiths. I wonder, are you Hope, or are you Jason?"

Gressil, the Labyrinth's lone prison warden, cocks his right head slightly. All four of his arms hang loosely at his sides, almost as if he hasn't a care in the world. However, the seven-foot-tall human standing before him, a giant among his species, seems little more than an ant compared to his demonic adversary. Hope's body tenses up as he gazes upon the visage of the first being he came across six years ago, back when he first awoke from cryosleep.

Hope's memories, identical to Jason's, send a wave of fear coursing through his veins.

However, even as Hope's horror threatens to immobilize him, his battle instincts, honed through several years of hardened combat against the demons, break the spell.

Hope slowly exhales, releasing some of the tension from his body. He forces himself to relax, even as he sends a mental command to Centurion, hardening the nanites embedded in his skin.

"H-hehe... you guessed correctly, Gressil. I'm Jason's clone, Hope. Don't compare me with that loser, though. I'm much deadlier than him. You must have a death wish if you think you can show up in front of me and live to tell the tale. After all... I really hate your kind."

Hope's tough words splash against Gressil harmlessly. The prison warden doesn't even blink as he gazes at the comparatively diminutive human standing before him.

"How amusing. Look at you, trying to cow me. Haha. Anyone else in your situation would lose their nerve and run away, or perhaps fall to their knees and beg me to spare them. You possess admirable fortitude, Wordsmith. I'll give you that."

Gressil takes a step forward. The mere act of placing his foot down sends a tremor through the walls, making it seem as if his body weighs several tons.

The prison warden strokes his chin. "I already know your name, Hope. Your life is an open book before me. If the other demons knew what I did, your little operation on Tarus II would have fallen apart ages ago. Haha. You haven't any idea how far my claws reach."

Gressil's gravelly timbre sends a shiver down Hope's spine. As the prison warden takes another step forward, an invisible force begins pressing on Hope. While insignificant at first, it quickly increases in power, causing the Wordsmith's heart to beat erratically.

Unwillingly, Hope takes a step backward. His awkward retreat summons a wispy smile to Gressil's face, doubling the pressure Hope faces.

"Don't mock me, Gressil. I know all about you. You're nothing special. You're just a creepy recluse the other demons consider too barbaric for civilized society. Against me, you're nothing more than a mongrel waiting to be put down."

Gressil pauses. He blinks slowly, acting as if the only emotion Hope's retort made him feel was boredom. "A mongrel? You wound me. I came because I thought we could be friends. Ask anyone, and they'll tell you I'm an excellent conversationalist. There's no need to use hateful words in my presence, young Earthling."

"Stuff it," Hope snarls. He takes a step forward, pushing back against Gressil's invisible pressure. "What the fuck do you want? I can't imagine you came here to chit-chat. If you're planning my death, tell me now, and I'll cut off that ugly lump of fat you call a head."

Gressil's smile fades away, returning his face to a decidedly sinister expression. He stops advancing, crosses his arms, and stands in silence, sizing up the Wordsmith before him.

"Haha... you, kill me? Now, that would be interesting. I've never fought a Hero before. But no, Hope... I'm not here to kill you. I wouldn't dream of it. The last thing I want is for you to end up in the River Styx. You're too key to my plans for me to allow that."

Hope frowns. "What do you want, then? Out with it."

Gressil unwraps his crossed arms. He waggles a stubby claw at Hope and chuckles. "Haha. Not so fast. First, Wordsmith, I have a question for you. Why do you suppose the demons have yet to attack Tarus II?"

Hope's expression becomes twice as unpleasant as before. "What kind of stupid question- no, forget it. You must have a reason for asking. My answer is that the Emperors haven't been able to amass a big enough army to crush humanity, yet. Once they do, they will launch an assault, hoping to eliminate all of the dissidents."

Gressil sighs.

"...No. You're not even close. How sad. I expected you to be the more intelligent Wordsmith, yet still, you only operate at a surface level."

Gressil's eyes glow blood-red, illuminating his face with their light.

"The reason your insurrection has lasted for six years has little to do with Ose's inability to corral an assault force, but everything to do with her desire for your magic. Haha. That should be an excellent hint. I need not say anything else."

Gressil's blank, emotionless gaze falls upon Hope. He drills the Wordsmith with his stare, practically boring holes in Hope's skull.

Hope swallows his saliva. "I... I see. Not only does Ose intend to defeat humanity, but she wants the power of Wordsmithing, too."

A smile creeps back onto Gressil's face. "Ahh... so you do possess a few drops of intelligence. Well done, Wordsmith. Though, considering that shiny golden Crown on your head, I can't say I'm surprised."

Hope's eyes subconsciously flick upward. His heart stops beating for a split-second.

What?! How can Gressil see the Crown? I made it invisible before I left the Core. I didn't want Jason knowing I'd obtained it!

Hope's heartbeat quickens. A rush of adrenaline floods into his body as he tries to rationalize Gressil's observation. Maybe, during Jepthath's visions, Solomon somehow made his artifact visible again. But why would he do that? Solomon! Why is Gressil able to see your Crown? What's going on, here?

Hope transmits a mental request to the Knowledge-Seeker. However, to his astonishment, not only does Solomon stay silent, Hope can't sense the ancient king at all.

For some reason, Solomon's soul has gone dormant.

Unable to parse the reason for Solomon's silence, Hope returns his gaze to the hideous prison warden.

Gressil's expression turns diabolical. An evil glint appears in the prison warden's eyes as he nods along to the Wordsmith's confusion, savoring the disbelief etched onto Hope's face.

"Yes, yes. Just like that. Haha. You may try to mask your bewilderment, but such childish attempts at deception will fail. I'm more than adept at spotting the panic on my prisoner's faces."

For the second time, Gressil takes a step forward. He draws within ten feet of Hope, forcing the Wordsmith to retreat. Even with his body Wordsmithed to be invincible, Hope feels defenseless against the predator hungrily eying him.

"Y-your prisoners, huh? It sounds like I need to tear you apart and free all the poor bastards you've hidden away. You're a sick fucker, Gressil."

Gressil's glee instantly doubles. His grin turns maniacal as he licks his lips. "Oh, how I love the fight in your eyes. Yes, I am a demented monster. I'm a product of hatred and violence. I'm what you'll become, given enough time. Sadly, for you, your story must come to an end, little Wordsmith. Once I make you mine, you'll have no choice but to follow my orders. You'll become one of my eyes."

The glowing red orbs twitching on Gressil's body suddenly become more agitated than before. The prison warden gazes at Hope with a mixture of lust and hunger, boiling emotion within Hope's body like never before.

Hope turns away from Gressil and starts to run.

I... I need to escape! I can't fight this sick son of a bitch!

As Hope starts to retreat, Gressil's eyes grow cold. He watches as the Wordsmith bolts toward the Three King's chamber.

"Yes. Run, little Wordsmith. Your terror will sustain me."

Recommended Listening

Hope's heart trembles, sending the biological equivalent of earthquakes surging throughout his blood vessels. The Wordsmith rushes back toward the entrance to the Three King's room, only to find that it has somehow moved to the end of the corridor, some one hundred feet away.

Fuck! Hope yells in his mind. For the Labyrinth to shift at such a terrible moment; the architect is a bastard!

Hope leaves Gressil in his dust. He flees down the hallway and jumps into the Three King's room, only to freeze up and stare forward in bewilderment.

Gressil, the prison warden, stands mere feet away, his gaze fixated on the confused Wordsmith. Instead of the Three King's room, the same hallway Hope just left stands before him.

"Haha. Going somewhere?"

The warden's voice pushes down on Hope, mentally crushing him with its weight. Hope jumps backward and immediately speaks a word of power. "RETURN!"

Two seconds pass. The world shifts around Hope as his teleportation magic activates and he returns to the Labyrinth Core, far from Gressil's reach.

Hope exhales, as relief swells in his chest.

"I... I made it... hm?"

Suddenly, the Wordsmith's heart rate doubles.

For seemingly no reason, the entire Labyrinth Core appears far different from before. Where rows of computer terminals once stood, now only flat, empty spaces greet his eyes. Not a soul stirs anywhere, making Hope flick his eyes from left to right. He looks around, searching for Neil, the monster technicians, or anyone he might recognize.

But no matter where Hope looks, he doesn't find a soul.

Even more incredibly, the warp-gates remain at their proper positions, but not one of them stands activated and ready to use. Hope's eyes fixate on their crumbled, destroyed ruins.

"The Core! What happened here?! Don't tell me the demons attacked while I left?! How long was I under Jepthath's influence?! Solomon! Answer me!"

Hope speaks to the Crown sitting atop his head. However, the ancient king does not reply.

Hope begins to tremble. His teeth chatter as he tries to make sense of the unbelievable sight before his eyes.

What happened to the Core?

Why isn't Solomon responding?

Why in the hell can't I calm my nerves?!

As Hope berates himself, a heavy footstep strikes the ground behind him, causing the Wordsmith to jump in fright!

"Haha. Confused? You should be."

Hope whirls around, only to see Gressil standing behind him. The enormous demon gazes at him like a starving beggar seated at a five-course meal.

Hope jerks his arm up. He aims his palm at Gressil and bellows from the depths of his lungs.

"EXPLOSION!!"

Boom!

A terrific eruption of mana detonates on top of Gressil, sending a shockwave through the Labyrinth Core. Hope, standing mere feet away from his demon-stalker, takes the full brunt of the explosion. It smashes into him and sends him flying backward, where he crashes into the dirt at fifty miles an hour. The Wordsmith slides to a stop and coughs, having had his Nanites absorb the brunt of the attack.

"Grgh... ah... m-my invincibility... why am I... why didn't it protect me...?"

Hope's eyes flutter for a moment as he tries to reorient himself. When he opens his eyes, his thoughts come to an abrupt halt.

No longer is the Wordsmith resting on the ground inside the Core.

Instead, he's returned to the hallway where he first met Gressil.

The prison warden, unharmed, stands mere feet away from the fallen Wordsmith. He crosses all four of his arms and gazes at Hope, amusement filling his countenance.

"Haha. Hahahaha... oh, what great fun this is. It's been ages since I laughed like this. You are quite the treat, Hope. Are you tired? Since we're good friends now, it would be impolite if I didn't let you rest your eyes a bit."

Hope scrambles backward. He drags himself across the ground in a terror-filled reverse-crabwalk.

"W-wh-what the fuck?! What are you? What did you do to me? To the Core?! Answer me, Gressil!"

Gressil cocks his head. He appears surprised that the Wordsmith would ask him such a silly question.

"I didn't do anything. Is the Core in danger? Not from me. I don't care about a bunch of silly little humans playing pretend with their puny guns. I'm only here for you, my next prisoner. That's all."

Hope pulls himself to his feet. His expression turns livid as he realizes he won't be able to escape the prison warden's reach.

Gressil must be at least at the level of a Duke, possibly even an Emperor. I've heard plenty of rumors about him, but nothing involving his powers. Can he teleport? Is he fucking with my mind? Wait...

Hope's eyes flick from Gressil's dominant head to the subservient one on his left shoulder. The second head lulls forward listlessly, not saying a word.

Could that second head have done something to me? No. It hasn't moved since Gressil first appeared. Damn! I just don't know what the hell is going on. If I'd known I'd be facing an Emperor, I'd have done some more research on him! When I get out of here, I'll be sure to research each of the high-level demons for myself. I can't afford to be caught off-guard like this ag-

"Your mind must be racing," Gressil says, his deep timbre interrupting Hope's thoughts. "But I haven't any interest in letting you reconcile the implausibilities in our little fight. I'm only here to savor your torment before I break you."

The moment Gressil finishes speaking, he lunges forward. His huge, seemingly unwieldy body transforms from a misshapen boulder into a raging cheetah. He swings his fist out and uppercuts Hope's face and chest, sending the Wordsmith flying backward. Hope bounces off the ceiling, rebounds off the floor, and grinds to a stop at the end of the corridor.

"G-guh..."

Centurion's nanites rush around in his body, attempting to repair his damaged nerves and cracked bones.

WARNING! PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR, YOU HAVE SUSTAINED HEAVY DAMAGE TO YOUR INTERNAL ORGANS! THE ATTACKER IS NOW REGISTERED AS A CRIMSON-ZETA-LEVEL THREAT! IMMEDIATE EVACUATION IS ADVISED!

Hope lays on the ground, unmoving. He slowly twitches his arm for a moment before finally gathering enough strength to lift himself up and lean on his elbow.

"I-if... if only I could... cough..."

Hope's eyes flutter heavily. Gressil's punch not only knocked the daylights out of him but caused severe mental trauma as well.

Hope turns his head to see the massive prison warden slowly striding toward him. Each time Gressil takes a step, he pauses, as if he's enjoying the most leisurely stroll of his life.

Hope coughs. "Kuh. B-Ba... Barrier."

The Wordsmith aims his mind at a spot between himself and Gressil while intending to create a temporary wall between them.

However, to his surprise, no wall appears.

"Kuh... what the... what the fuck...? Why didn't it work? Barrier. Barrier!"

Hope Wordsmiths again. This time, he pays attention to his body.

A chilling realization sets in as the young Hero inspects himself.

I can't sense my mana supply. It hasn't dried up, but rather, it doesn't seem to exist at all! I don't understand... what the hell is wrong with my Wordsmithing? My body?

Gressil slows to a stop. He stands a mere ten feet from the Wordsmith, who lays on the ground, barely able to rest on his elbow.

"If you were any other human, that punch would have turned you into a thick, meaty paste. Your cute little 'nanites' interest me. They won't save you, but they give you a small chance to fight back. That's why the white-haired woman named you Hope, isn't it? Because you're supposed to represent humanity's 'belief' that they will someday defeat the demons."

Gressil shakes his head.

"How unfortunate. You were doomed to fail from the beginning. Fate itself conspired against you. I knew you were a Hero from the very first moment I learned of your cryopod."

Hope's heart skips a beat. "What? You knew?"

Gressil scratches his chin. "Haha. Yes, little human. I told you before; I know things that would send the entire demon council into a fit of rage. Did you think you were special? Did you think you emerged from the cryopod by chance? Haha. Jason must have thought himself quite clever when he slipped past me."

A sense of foreboding falls upon Hope. "Impossible. You... you can't expect me to believe you released Jason from the cryopod intentionally! Why in the hell would you do that? You're a demon! We're Heroes! We're your mortal enemies!"

Gressil rears his head back. This time, when he laughs, the noise comes out much throatier and full-forced than ever.

"Ahahaha! Hu-hu-hu... oh, you brainless rat. No matter how powerful a Hero you might be, you are but one man. You have no chance of defeating demonkind on your own. Even if you should gather some pathetic, rag-tag little army together, you would never in a million years defeat my people."

Gressil stops laughing. He lowers his head to gaze at the Wordsmith. A burning intensity appears in his eyes, once again giving him the appearance of a wolf sizing up its next meal.

"Your first mistake was arrogantly assuming you ever stood a chance of winning this war. Your second was assuming I cared about those who ignored my plight and left me to die. The demons are as much my enemy as the humans, the angels, and all the other wretched, worthless gnats roaming the mortal plane."

Gressil continues. "I don't give a damn if you succeed in your conquest or fail spectacularly. The only reason I freed you from that cryopod was so that you could amuse me. That's all."

Hope pulls himself to his feet. He eyes the warden warily and tries to shrink back against the wall. Sadly, there isn't anywhere for him to run. Hope can't escape his predicament, not by using his legs.

"Ugh... if the demons are your enemies, but the humans are, too... then I still don't see why freeing Jason helped you. Nothing you've done makes any sense."

While Hope speaks, his mind runs a mile a minute, trying desperately to understand why he suddenly can't fight back against the freak standing before him.

I Wordsmithed myself to be invincible. In the past, when I did that, the biggest, toughest demon couldn't put a scratch on me. However, this time, Gressil nearly knocked me out with one hit.

After that, I tried to create a barrier, but failed.

Why isn't my Wordsmithing working? Why can't I speak to Solomon? He'd know in an instant what Gressil did to me!

Wait. No, I'm going about this all the wrong way.

Son of a bitch. That's it. That's it! It's all connected. Everything makes sense now.

I can't speak to Solomon, my magic has stopped functioning, and it's all because of Gressil! Somehow, he must be preventing my magic from working. He's suppressing or nullifying it!

Hope's eyes flash with insight. Puzzle pieces click into place as he rapidly integrates this newfound realization into his thought process.

Earlier, Arthur couldn't tell me anything about Gressil. He didn't even know if Gressil was a demon, a human, or an alien! That must mean there's an anti-magic field surrounding Gressil. If I can get away from him, I'll be able to use my Wordsmithing again!

The Wordsmith's mind blazes away at lightspeed, allowing him to infer key information about Gressil's abilities within seconds. Thanks to his six years of battle experience, Hope is more than capable of determining his enemy's powers after spending less than a minute fighting them.

Gressil speaks, jarring Hope's thoughts for a moment. "I don't care what you think about me, young Hero. I don't even care that you've already figured out my abilities. That knowledge won't help you escape."

Gressil swings the back of his hand at Hope. Before Hope can react, the equivalent of a hundred sledgehammers impacts his head, sending him careening helplessly to the side, where he flies down the corridor. He hits the ground, rolls thrice, and comes to a stop with both of his arms broken.

"Ahh... augh..."

Tears well up in Hope's eyes. Even with his incredible deductive ability, he can't react fast enough to the prison warden's movements.

He's... he's definitely... at least... a Demon Emperor... augh... fucking hurts... everything hurts...

Hope coughs out a single word. "Heal..."

However, nothing happens. The Wordsmith's mana rests within the pit of his stomach, inert. No matter how hard he tries, he can't will it into existence.

Gressil lumbers toward Hope again. This time, he stops less than a foot away and smiles.

"Ah. There it is. That's the look of a broken man. I've been waiting for you to make that juicy, helpless expression since we met. Have you come to understand, little human? You might be a Hero, and you might consider your ability a god-given power, one which places you above the common rabble, but in front of me, even your almighty 'Wordsmithing' means nothing. You are weak. You are frail."

Hope coughs. He gazes up at the demon towering over him, as helplessness and despair swell up in his heart.

"You... you coward... you're too... too scared... to fight me like a man..."

Gressil's smile turns positively gleeful, making him appear ten times more monstrous than before. "Huhuhu... even broken and defeated, you still have the strength to insult me. Yes, I like your spirit. It's a good thing I got to you before my cute little sister did. What will Ose think when her plan to capture two Wordsmiths fails before it's even begun?"

Despite his question being purely rhetorical, Gressil pauses for a moment. He scratches his chin, then glances at his second head, which continues to flop forward uselessly.

"Hm. Yes, good point. Why should I care? I can't wait to see what happens when my sister finds out there will only be one Wordsmith waiting for her. Yama is not someone she can overpower. If she doesn't give the Shade King his prize, Yama will destroy her. With Ose dead, the Hidden Emperors will emerge. Chaos will engulf the Labyrinth."

Gressil chuckles. "Haha. The coming weeks are sure to bring about a huge transformation all throughout Hell. Now then, come along, little human. Playtime is over."

Hope's heart skips a beat as Gressil bends over and reaches for his head. With a light flick, Gressil smashes the Wordsmith's skull against the corridor wall, knocking him unconscious.

Defeated, Hope slumps lifelessly to the ground, all his energy spent. Gressil stares for a moment at the Crown stuck to Hope's head. Disgusted, the prison warden reaches down, plucks it off the Wordsmith's scalp, and holds onto it with the tips of his fingers.

Gressil's expression contorts into revulsion as he holds the golden band as far from his body as possible.

"Wretched artifact. Your divine energy cannot harm me, but knowing what your people did to my brother, I would give anything to destroy you."

After a moment, Gressil lightly tosses Solomon's Crown aside as if it was garbage. It hits the Labyrinth floor with a sharp tink and rolls away, but the warden pays it no more mind.

Gressil kneels over, wraps his giant hand around Hope's head, and begins dragging the Wordsmith behind him as he returns to Faith's End.

"Farewell, Solomon. We'll meet again soon. Haha. Hahahaha!"

Gressil stomps away, leaving Solomon's Crown behind.

After the prison warden leaves, Solomon's artifact begins to glow, and the Knowledge-Seeker groggily returns to reality, his mind a muddled mess.

"I... I... what happened? Where is Hope? Gods. Why did he leave my artifact sitting all alone in the middle of the Labyrinth?"

Solomon asks questions of nobody in particular. His voice enters the void, never once traveling outside his artifact's radius.

Silence swallows the Labyrinth, the only hint of a recent battle being the cracked walls where Hope's body struck.

Once again, Solomon is alone.

Part 206: The Plains of Pain

Elsewhere in the galaxy, somewhere on a distant planet far removed from the Labyrinth, a giant mass of monsters clumps together and performs various drills assigned to them by their military instructor.

Artorias, the current possessor of Barbatos's body, paces back and forth as he fixates his piercing gaze on the nearest cluster of trainees. Five hundred goblins and two hundred orcs work together in twos and threes, performing all manner of assigned drills. One orc braces a giant log on its head, allowing his two goblin partners to punch and kick it relentlessly to hone their endurance. Two other goblins nearby tug on a mannequin, trying to rip its arms off like they would a filthy fleshbag.

Artorias glances upward, at the pale green sky. This world, unlike Hell Harbor, is one where any demon or monster may come to train outside of the Labyrinth. However, the poisonous rain, which occasionally falls from its skies, chokes the life from its land, preventing a diverse array of wildlife from forming. Only the fiercest creatures roam the planet, those capable of surviving under the harshest conditions.

Basilisks. Hydras. Gorgons. Wyrms.

Weaker monsters occasionally come for various reasons, but they never stay for long. They can't, lest they become food for those who would prey on them.

This world is a hellish nightmare — a place where the strong come to thrive, and the weak, to suffer.

This world is Grimvolas, Bulwark of the Ancients.

Artorias exhales through his nose. He lowers his gaze from the sky to the trainees, all of whom will help spearhead Operation Stormbringer. He strides into the middle of the pack, keeping a sharp eye out for lazy weaklings and those unfit for combat.

His eyes laser onto a small pack of goblins. One of them, a black-skinned fellow with stouter muscles than the rest, cackles shrilly as he gloats to anyone who will listen.

-right! Everyone say fleshbags in Core big and strong! Wrong! They not tough like me! Me big hobby-gobby! Me kick their butts!"

"Whaaat?" A different, green-colored goblin says, confusion on his face. "You no hobby-gobby! You obby-gobby! If you was hobby-gobby, you'd be runnin' the clan!"

The black-skinned fellow, an Obsidian Goblin, slaps his arms and grins. "Psh, who cares! That just dumb name! Once war over, all the femmies'll beg me to mate them! Me be hobby-gobby before ya know it!"

A tiny shriveled-looking fellow gazes at his obsidian cousin mournfully. "Me wish me could be obby-gobby too... some guys get all th' good luck..."

"Bahaha! It's true!" The obsidian goblin laughs. "Skin so tough, nobody can hurt me! Just try! You can't do shit! You too weak!"

A young goblin, new to the group, takes a step forward. "C-can I touch? I wanna know what obby skin feels like..."

"Psh. If you ain't scared, go ahead!" The obsidian goblin laughs. He leans forward, holds out his arm, and flexes his muscles, allowing the younger goblin to come closer.

The younger goblin squeezes his cousin's arm. His eyes light up with excitement. "Wow! You just like rock! You feel pain?"

"Nah, not even a little," The obsidian goblin brags. "Between you'n me, me armor even tougher than commander's! Ol' Barby ain't nothin' compared t'me!"

Having heard enough, Artorias steps forward. The instant his boot strikes the dirt, all of the goblins whirl to face him. Their faces pale in terror, realizing he's spotted them slacking off. The obsidian goblin looks even worse than the rest. He practically shits himself.

"A little bird told me you think my brother is weak," Artorias says, his voice deadly calm. "But perhaps I misheard."

The obsidian goblin freezes. It takes several seconds before he can spit out a response. "Y-y-yeah! Whoops! Me musta misspoke! Err, ahh, me words got twisted, b-b-big boss! Me meant say yer armor was b-b-better'n me skin! Yeah..."

Artorias stays silent for a moment. Seeing the looks of terror on the goblin's faces, he merely sighs.

"Don't worry. I'm not going to kill anyone. I'm not like other demons who explode with rage at the slightest insult. However, if you don't get back to your drills, I might have to administer some... discipline."

A sigh of relief sweeps through the goblin ranks. Immediately, they jump back into position and begin sparring with each other, throwing vicious jabs and punches to try and impress the Demon Duke towering over them.

"Anything for you, big boss!"

"No slackin' off for us!"

"We on the job!"

Artorias gazes through the pitch-black metal helmet covering his face. Before the obsidian goblin can join his friends, Artorias shakes his head. "No. You come with me."

The obsidian goblin turns to look at Artorias with a hint of fear. His voice cracks as he squeaks out a single word. "M-me?"

"That's right. You."

The obsidian goblin lowers his head. He trudges along behind Artorias, a look of death on his face.

Me doomed.

* * *

A minute later, Artorias and the obsidian goblin step away from the hardworking platoon. Artorias passes the torch to a nearby Demon Baron, ordering him to take over temporarily. Once the Baron leaves, Artorias clears his throat.

"You. What is your name, goblin?"

The goblin shivers. "H-Hungry, sir."

Artorias raises an eyebrow. "I didn't ask when last you ate."

"N-nah, boss... me name... Hungry."

Artorias sighs. "Right. Sometimes I forget how idiotic monster names can be. Alright, 'Hungry,' I have a few questions for you."

Hungry rubs his three-fingered claws together. He trembles even harder as Artorias's gaze falls on him. "Me sorry, boss. Me so sorry! P-please forgive me! Me would n-never make fun of you! Not in million years!"

"Hm? Oh, that. I don't care about what you said earlier. No, instead, I need to ask you a question regarding Obsidian Goblins. How much do you know about them?"

Upon realizing Artorias isn't mad about his comments from earlier, Hungry visibly relaxes. "Obby-gobbys? Me not know much, big boss. Me elders said they tell me more after big battle."

"Obsidian Goblins are quite rare," Artorias murmurs. "Yet, for some reason, several hundred recently appeared on the human's capital world, Tarus II. Tell me, Hungry, how might that be possible? Given the rarity of Obsidian Goblins, how could so many crawl out of the woodwork when I know of fewer than a dozen living within the Labyrinth?"

Hungry shrugs. "No clue! Hobby-gobby elders no tell me nothing!"

"I see. You don't know anything."

Artorias's burning gaze leaves the goblin. He stares into the distance, pondering the recent events from a few days prior.

"Hundreds of obsidian goblins. Elemental wyverns. A Hydra. Something isn't right. Why do I start feeling uneasy whenever I think about Operation Stormbringer? Ose is overlooking something important. So am I."

Artorias scrunches his face up. He continues staring into the distance, trying with all his might to connect the puzzle pieces.

"Two Wordsmiths, both capable of unthinkable feats of magic. Have demons ever truly beaten a Hero? If we take their souls, the Heroic Aura will inevitably manifest again. Even if it takes a hundred thousand years, it always returns. A specter from the past. Darkness filled with enmity and hate."

"Um... b-big boss...?"

Hungry rubs his hands together sheepishly. He shrinks back in fright when Artorias glances down at him.

"You're still here? Go. I've nothing more to say to the likes of you."

The obsidian goblin quickly nods. He slinks backward, then races away, leaving Artorias in his dust. "Me be good from now on! No more say bad things!"

Artorias rolls his eyes. "Suit yourself."

The Demon Duke once again returns to his duties. He continues whipping a batch of nearby orcs into shape, using his words to insult their strength and agitate their bloodthirsty urges.

However, his thoughts continue to wander, providing him with ceaseless, neverending questions.

Suddenly, a voice from behind Artorias startles him from his musings.

"Yo! Arty, boy! What the heck're you up to, bub?"

Bael, the Duke of Pain, swaggers over to Artorias. He reaches behind himself and sticks a finger down the back of his underwear, scratching his ass without a care in the world.

Artorias turns around to greet his friend, eye-to-eye. "Bael? I didn't know Ose stationed you here."

Bael laughs. "Bahaha, you think that broad can tell me what to do? Nah. I just wanted to pop over and see what you were up to! I hear Grimvolas is the pits."

Artorias nods. "Yes. We've suffered several bursts of acid rain today already. The weather here is remarkably brutal."

"You holdin' up okay?"

Artorias nods. "As well as can be expected in these trying times."

Bael continues to stare at Artorias, but his expression turns slightly more sympathetic. "Had any flare-ups?"

"No. I haven't detected Uriel's mana even once in the last six years. She's gone completely dormant."

"But the bitch is still in there, ain't she?"

"Undoubtedly, along with my brother."

Bael falls silent. He rubs his chin and nods along as if answering some unspoken question lingering in the air.

"No Barbatos, and no Uriel. Bad news mixed with good. You don't think your brother... y'know... died?"

Artorias shrugs. "I believe not, but I cannot say for certain."

"Good enough for me," Bael grunts. "Anyway, I didn't come here to chit-chat. I wanted to invite you ta' my place on Hell Harbor. I thought we could hang out together for a while, y'know? Just like the old times, back before that angel bitch fucked you up."

Artorias shakes his head. "I am busy, Duke of Pain. I must train these recruits. That was the task assigned to me by the Third Emperor."

Bael rolls his eyes. "Oh, bloody hell, man. Who cares? Do you think a couple hundred orcs and goblins'll make any difference? Even if you train 'em to be total killers, they ain't never gonna be useful for anything but moppin' up the leftovers. You'n me'll be doin' all the heavy lifting."

Artorias falters. "Maybe so, but Emperor Ose ordered me-"

"I don't care what that bimbo said," Bael says, waving his hand flippantly. "Sheesh. You always did pay way too much attention to rules'n shit. How long has it been since you got to move around in a whole-ass body, Arty? A few thousand years? Tens of thousands? You gotta stop being so uptight and smell the roses once in a while."

Bael jerks his thumb over his shoulder, indicating the direction of Grimvolas's warpgate.

"Come on, pal. I'm tryin' ta' help you out, here. What if ol' Barby wakes up, and you go sleepy-bye again, eh? Now might be your last chance to have a little fun before that Operation Storm-thunder-clap-boom thing."

Artorias lowers his eyes. "Fun..."

"Yeah! Barby never got into Sticks 'n Bones, but I bet it'd be right up your alley. Come on, come on!"

Bael grabs Artorias's arm and drags him along. Artorias starts to protest, but Bael shuts him down.

"Nuh-uh. I'm the First Duke, pal. You wanna follow orders? Follow mine. Unless you think you can beat me and take my job. That could be fun, too."

Artorias lessens his resistance. Reluctantly, he falls into step behind Bael and trudges along; his head hung low. "I have no desire to rule. Leadership means nothing to me."

"Great. That's somethin' you, me, 'n Barbatos've all got in common," Bael replies.

The two Demon Dukes stomp along in silence for several minutes. Their heavy feet create depressions in the soft, acrid soil, sending maggots skittering in every direction.

As they walk, Artorias raises his head. A mountain to the west catches his attention. On one of its many plateaus, the eagle-eyed Duke spots a few figures moving about; their bodies shrouded in thick cloaks.

"Hm? Hold a moment, Bael. Up there, on that cliff... are those... Overlords?"

Bael and Artorias slow to a stop. The Duke of Pain follows his comrade's gaze, where he spots the rag-wearing figures skulking about on the cliff's face.

"Heh. You don't get out of the Labyrinth much, do ya?"

Artorias shakes his head. "No. My brother rarely leaves the mermaid caves. Their serene and peaceful nature helps him forget our shared pain."

"Mmm. Yeah, well, a lot's happened since the Energy Wars. Those punks up there... they're called, ehm..."

Bael scratches his chin. He pauses for half a minute to think about his words. As he and Artorias stare at the cliff-face, the distant figures quickly realize they've been spotted. They retreat behind a boulder and enter a cave embedded in the mountainside, disappearing from view.

"Duh... Dol... Dol-something-rather," Bael mutters. Suddenly, a lightbulb pops up above his head. "Oh, right! Dolgrim. That's what those punks're called. They're like ancient Volgrim or something. Real sneaky, primitive, and nasty, from what I've seen. It's no wonder they live on a shithole like Grimvolas. Sheesh. At least they keep to themselves."

Artorias nods. The Duke's eyes turn glossy for a moment as he digs into his memories. "Mmm. Yes, Dolgrimites. I've heard people mention them once or twice. I've never seen them in the flesh, though."

Bael shrugs. He returns his attention toward the warpgate and continues walking. "Eh. If you've seen one Dolgrim, you've seen 'em all. Ain't nothin' special about 'em, 'cept they don't like strangers. Anyway, forget those guys. When was the last time ol' Barbatos came over to my place? I had the girls put in all kinds of fun stuff recently. You'll love it."

Artorias follows Bael's lead. He falls into step beside the Duke of Pain and returns his attention to the topic at hand.

"...I must admit, in between the agony scorching my soul for tens of thousands of years, I have occasionally felt twinges of boredom at the monotony of my existence."

Bael punches his palm. "Hell yeah! That's the spirit, Arty! We're gonna have a good devil-damned time, just the two of us!"

Artorias sighs. "Alright. I will follow your lead, Duke of Pain."

Five hours later.

Bael and Artorias stand atop a gigantic winged beast, a bird as black as night. Each of its feathers are nearly two feet long, while its body stretches almost fifty feet from head to tail.

The monstrous bird, a Hellraven, screeches and caws as it soars over the plains of Hell Harbor. Thousands of trees race past beneath the Duke of Pain and his comrade as they fly over mountains and across rivers.

Along the way, Bael points at a gigantic obelisk standing five hundred feet tall. At its base, a dead forest encircles it in a huge radius, giving it the appearance of a graveyard.

"Yo, Arty! You ever been to Mephisto's shack?"

Artorias narrows his eyes. "I avoid the Hall of the Damned. Such a place is not somewhere the living should tread."

"Bahaha! It ain't all bad!" Bael laughs. "Some of the undead girls ain't too shabby-looking! Ol' Mephisto's even got a few angel corpses hangin' around in there. Sometimes I like to pop by and remember the good old days."

"Oh?" Artorias asks. "Angel corpses? What of their souls?"

Bael waves his hand. "Long dead. Don't you remember? Angels die if they don't get enough mana. They're always leakin' that crap all over the carpet."

"Mmm. Right. That makes sense," Artorias mutters.

The Hellraven flaps its wings, catches an updraft, and soars several hundred feet higher than before, rushing toward the summit of the tallest mountain in the region. The moment it reaches the top, the bird passes overhead and surges downward, aiming for its base on the other side.

"Whoa! Hahaha, easy there, bird-brain!" Bael yells. He laughs as he struggles to keep his footing. Standing atop a Hellraven while it flies is no mean feat. It's only thanks to his ascended demon physiology and millennia of honing his instincts that he doesn't fall off and tumble down the bluff.

Eventually, the Hellraven slows its flight and comes to a gentle landing before a gigantic, hundred-acre mansion located smack in the middle of the forest. However, much like Mephisto's obelisk, countless trees have been cleared away, allowing the estate to sit in a wide-open clearing free of the foliage.

The moment the bird lands, Artorias flicks his eyes around, taking in the sights.

Hundreds of gigantic animals, monsters, and mutant freaks sit in cages and pens dotted around the villa. They screech, howl, and roar at the newly arrived guests, only to fall silent when they realize it's their owner who has returned.

Along with the caged beasts, hundreds of gorgeous women stand in clumps and groups here and there. Many of them attend to the animal's needs, while others till the fields, clean the villa, or otherwise fulfill the duties any experienced servant might perform.

"Human women, demon women, Felaris girls, even a minotaur cow or two. You have quite the collection of species here, Bael," Artorias muses.

Bael hops off the Hellraven and gives it a few scratches under its beak, causing it to caw softly. "Heh, damn right, bub. What can I say? I love the bitches, and the bitches love me."

Artorias levitates off the Hellraven by wrapping magnetic energy around his armor. When he touches the ground, he sighs. "Yes. I am sure they do."

By the time Bael and Artorias have stepped foot on the main path leading into the estate, most of the women outside have already noticed them. A flood of females comes rushing over, all of them waving while yelling Bael's name.

"Master Bael is back!"

"I told you he'd visit today! I always know when he's coming!"

"Master Bael, I'll draw up your bath right away!"

Bael holds up his hands, silencing the throng of women as they slow to a stop before him. "Girls, please, haha. Let's bring the energy down a little. I brought one of my buddies here today. Name's Artorias. He's a little shy, so let's treat him real good, aight?"

As Bael speaks, one of the minotaur women stomps over to him. With the head and legs of a cow, but the midsection and arms of a human, her appearance is remarkably attention-grabbing. She wears elaborately stitched leather clothing, accentuating her curves, while also making her animal parts that much more onerous.

The minotaur woman bows slightly before Bael. "Master, you've returned."

Bael stops. He puts his hand behind his back and nods. "That's right, Giselle, I'm back. Alright, go on. Haul off."

Before Artorias can ask what Bael means, the minotaur woman raises her thick, muscular fist, lunges toward the Duke of Pain, and blasts him right in the face. Bael goes tumbling backward and slams onto his ass, momentarily stunned by her vicious strength.

Artorias stares in disbelief. "Bael! What in the name of..."

However, the girls behind Giselle seem unconcerned for the Duke's well-being. One dark-skinned human girl laughs into her hand. "Haha! Master Bael didn't even flinch that time!"

"I know!" A yellow-skinned succubus replies. "He always closes his eyes, but not today! He must be showing off for his friend!"

Bael pulls himself to his feet. Despite taking a punch that would have shattered the facial bones of a weaker demon, he appears wholly unaffected.

"Not bad, Giselle. You've really improved!"

Giselle nods. "It is all because of your training, Master Bael."

Artorias's bewildered expression only intensifies. "I... I don't understand. Why would you-"

Before Artorias can finish his sentence, Bael rears his fist back, lunges toward Giselle, and blasts her in the face. His body, the peak of demonic strength, sends the minotaur hurtling away. By the time she's started flying backward, the crowd has parted behind her, as if having anticipated Bael's response. Giselle crashes into a giant statue of Bael, shatters its leg, and eventually grinds to a halt on its opposite side.

Artorias's eyes grow as wide as saucers. This time, the Duke of Steel finds himself at a total loss for words. He swallows one shallow breath after another, completely dumbfounded by the sight he's just witnessed.

Within moments, Giselle pulls herself to her feet. She calmly walks over to Bael and brushes dust off her shoulder, her body uninjured.

"Master. What have I told you before?"

Bael turns his head away, unable to meet her gaze. He laughs awkwardly. "Ah... ahaha... I'm pretty dumb, sweetie. You know me. I forget things easily."

Giselle shakes her head. "I hate it when you hold back. I barely even felt that punch. Next time, put more spirit into your retort. What sort of bull shows his mate disrespect by holding back?"

Bael blushes. "Ehehe, sorry, cutie. I just hate hitting women. It don't feel right, ya know?"

Giselle sighs. "Men. I'll go and help the kitchen prepare your feast. Fetch me when you're ready."

Without another word, the minotaur woman turns and walks away, her hooves clopping against the paved ground all the while.

Once she leaves, the other girls come a little closer and start eagerly touching Bael. "Master! Kiki made you a beautiful new quilt while you were gone! And Fermi wanted to know if she and Silvia could go on a little vacation to the beach next month! Oh, oh, and we were hoping you could get a few Newts up here soon for another riding competition! It was such fun the last time we did it!"

Bael grins. He wraps his arm around one of the Felaris females while caressing the cheek of a nearby human girl. "Haha, sure, sure. You know me. I can't ever turn one of you ladies down. Let's worry about that small stuff later, though. Today is all about making Artorias feel welcome. Come on, girls! Let's bust a move. This poor guy hasn't had a good time with a woman in ages!"

The moment Bael brings up Artorias, all of the women snap their heads in his direction. However, instead of the fear that most Labyrinth denizens show the Duke of Steel, not a single woman has an expression of anything other than curiosity.

"Oh, wow! He's a good-looking guy!"

"Check out his armor! It must weigh a ton! I bet he could take one of Giselle's punches!"

"Ten coins says he's a stud in the sheets. Master Bael only brings his best friends to visit!"

Three dozen demon, human, and monster women crowd around Artorias, causing him to flinch reflexively. "I... I, ah..."

"Oh my gosh, look at him! Artorias is sooo shy! Master Bael wasn't kidding. We've got some hard work ahead of us if we're going to break him out of his shell!"

Sweat drips down Artorias's face. It slides around inside his helmet, making him extremely uneasy.

Perhaps coming here was the wrong decision. I should have known Bael would have ulterior motives.

Bael smirks. "Kid, you're 'bout to have the time of your life."

"...and this over here is the spanking room! Some of my girls spend way too much time in there! Bahaha!"

Artorias strolls down the main hallway of Bael's expansive manor, his fellow Duke pointing out various locations of interest as they travel. Unlike before, only a dozen women follow after them, the rest having stayed behind outside to finish their assigned tasks.

Artorias glowers at the Duke of Pain. "A spanking room. Bael, sometimes I wonder about you."

"What? It's all in good fun, Arty-boy! Don't you know that pain is the path to pleasure?"

Artorias slows to a stop. He stares at Bael for a moment as the Duke of Pain also pauses.

"Can... can you repeat that?"

Bael shrugs. "Nope. I already forgot what I said."

Artorias frowns. "You said that pain was the path to pleasure. What did you mean?"

Bael glances at the girls following him. Immediately, one of the dark-skinned human women answers in Bael's stead.

"Master Bael is a demon with a unique constitution. Because his body is all but invincible, he does not have the same sense of touch that others possess. For him, being able to experience pain is akin to feeling pleasure. Thus, he built this manor and established the principle of 'pain is pleasure.'"

Bael pats the girl's head. "That's right. Megan always knows what ta' say."

However, despite Megan's words, Artorias's expression darkens noticeably. "Pain is not pleasure — what a load of nonsense. Are you trying to tell me that I should have enjoyed the agony wracking my soul for the past hundred thousand years? You know nothing of pain, Bael."

Bael's smile vanishes. His expression turns complex as he listens to the bitterness in Artorias's voice.

"I get it, pal. Not fully, but I get it. You've been hurtin' for a while, Arty-boy. A long, long time."

Bael steps toward Artorias and pats his shoulder.

"That's the real reason I brought you here, pal. I know you've had it rough. We ain't even spoken since the last time that bitch made a mess of Hell. I'm here to help you out, man. You've gotta go beyond all that past trauma."

Bael continues walking, forcing Artorias to fall into step beside him.

"How am I supposed to 'go beyond' the pain of my existence? Have you any idea how many times I've wished Barbatos would kill himself? His death would release me from my suffering and permanently end the threat Uriel poses to our people."

Bael nods. "Yeah, but he didn't. Barbatos is a tough kid. He never gave up. He continued living, despite how dying would free him from his pain. Why d'ya think that is?"

The Duke of Pain smiles at Artorias.

"And why ain't you killed yourself, if you've been waitin' for a chance all this time? You've got control, Arty-boy. What's holding you back?"

"This body is my brother's," Artorias replies, his tone solemn. "It's not my place to destroy it. Even if I could eliminate my soul and nothing else, I'd never leave Barbatos alone with that wicked Archangel. She'd crush him in seconds. Only our combined power keeps Uriel at bay."

"Sounds like you're making excuses," Bael mutters. "That's the difference between you and Barbatos. Even with all the pain he endures every day, your little bro never gives up. He continues living, all because he wants to see a better future for his people."

Artorias snorts. "I'm sure there's more to my brother's stubbornness than that."

"Mhm. For sure."

* * *

The two Dukes eventually arrive in a gigantic dining hall, complete with exquisitely designed bamboo chairs, tapestries hanging off the walls, and a Chinese aura lingering within the area. Paper lanterns hang from the ceiling, their combined light proving more than satisfactory for illuminating the chamber. The two Dukes seat themselves at the center of the table, allowing room for the women to file off and seat themselves to the left and right of their masters.

Once Bael and Artorias take their seats across from each other, multiple girls file into the room, each carrying giant trays of food.

"Oh, damn, Betsy must've gone all-out!" Bael says, his eyes lighting up excitedly. "Spit-roasted Juwallapy? Bigornel Stew? Daaaaamn! I'm gonna pig out!"

Artorias stares, unmoving, as Bael's girls place dozens of food trays on the table. They open the lids, revealing all manner of meats, soups, fruits, and vegetables. A sumptuous aroma immediately fills the room, and soon, the hundred or so women begin to salivate as they gaze at the food expectantly.

"It's been more than a month since you last returned," Megan says. As one of the longest-serving among Bael's servants, she takes a seat at his right side, placing herself in the second most important position at the table. "We've collected a vast amount of food in preparation for your return. We want nothing more than for you to enjoy yourself."

Bael sweeps his gaze around the room, admiring the assorted colors and species arranged at his table. "Hah, this is the life: good food, and good women. Thanks, ladies. You girls always make my day."

A pleasant atmosphere pervades the dining hall. The women grin at one another, pleased with their master's reaction.

Moments later, Bael moves his hands. What follows is a scene of carnage.

The Duke of Pain opens his mouth wider than creatures from horror movies. He stuffs a bird the size of a turkey into his maw and begins furiously chewing. It takes him mere moments to swallow the well-cooked animal and move onto a fruit the size of a watermelon.

Chomp!

Bael wraps his lips around the skinless fruit. His eyes bulge with excitement as he turns the soft, juicy food into mulch. In the time it takes for Artorias to remember the fruits' name, Bael has already finished it and moved onto the next entree.

All around the table, similar scenes of carnage take place. Bael's harem descends into a frenzied scene of disorder and chaos. The women grab plates and bowls, ladle food into whatever they can, and begin wolfing down everything in sight like a pack of starving hyenas.

"Ohm-muh-gawd!" One human woman yells. "Thish fud ish sho gud!"

Her words are barely comprehensible through the mash of meat and cheese rolling around in her chaw.

Artorias stares, his eyes fixated on Bael, as the Duke of Pain shovels mountains of food into his facehole. Bael pauses for only a moment to glance at Artorias.

"Washa matter, bro?! You gunna eat, or what?"

With Bael's mouth stuffed full of something resembling chicken, Artorias can barely understand him. He shakes his head.

"Um. No. I don't have much of an appetite."

"Shuit yourshelf!" Bael guffaws. He resumes devouring his food, leaving Artorias to stare like a shellshocked soldier, one who has seen things that will haunt him for the rest of his life.

Devils. I had no idea these fair and gracious ladies would go to such lengths to mimic their master.

Despite there being enough food to feed an entire village, Bael and his harem manage to devour the whole feast, lick all the bowls and plates clean, and lean back in their chairs within half an hour, leaving Artorias dumbfounded.

"Where do you put everything?" Artorias asks. "Is your stomach a bottomless pit?"

"Something like that," Bael mutters. He lets out a violent belch, making several of the girls laugh. Ten or so burps and farts go up around the table, making all of them laugh even harder.

"Devils. You are everything I imagined you to be," Artorias mutters.

* * *

An hour later, Bael and Artorias plop down in one of the manor's many luxurious living rooms. Megan sits beside Bael, along with a cute pink-haired succubus. Her blood-red eyes and yellow skin reveal her identity as an Albino demon, someone born with inverted eyes and skin color.

Bael jerks his thumb toward the succubus. "Artorias, this cutie here is Chryssie. I know I've been tugging you around all day, pal, but I just wanted to loosen you up a bit. You feeling alright, now?"

Artorias sighs. "I'm just dandy."

"Great! Well, you probably don't know Chryssie, but she used to be quite the popular lady! Haha. Maybe a little too popular."

Chryssie bats her long eyelashes. She averts her eyes and chooses to look at the floor. "Tarnation. That stuff was a long time ago. Why ya gotta bring all that up, Master Bael?"

The succubus drawls as she speaks, giving her a southern-style accent.

"I've heard your name before," Artorias says. "You are Chrysanthemum, the Lord of Mysticism. Your powers revolve around dreams and making fantasies real."

Chryssie blushes. "I'm surprised you've heard of little ol' me. I ain't nobody important."

"Perhaps not," Artorias mutters, "but albino demons are somewhat rare. Those who reach the rank of Lord are few and far between."

Artorias turns his gaze toward Bael. "Alright. Why did you bring me here?"

Bael smiles. "Well, kid, it's like this. You've always been stuck inside your brother's body, unable to do or say anything to the outside world. I thought Chryssie here could help you out. She's a Soul Manipulator, see..."

Artorias stiffens. "A soul manipulator? I thought her powers-"

"I spent a buncha time evolvin' mah abilities," Chryssie replies, her voice soft. "All so I could help Master Bael relax after fightin' in the Slaughterseum. He gets all tense 'n stuff. I figured if I could make his dreams more vivid, he'd love me more."

"I love you plenty, doll," Bael says. He strokes the back of Chryssie's head, making her eyes close for a moment as she soaks in the sensation of his fingers. "Don't go comparing yourself to the other girls. Each of ya is special in your own way."

When Bael retracts his hand, a look of longing passes over Chryssie's face. She quickly plays with her hair to mask her emotions, then returns her gaze to Artorias.

"As... as I was sayin'... I found out mah powers didn't work on Master Bael. No matter what I tried, I couldn't play switcharoo with his dreams. I eventually figgered out why, and it wasn't an easy pill to swallow."

Bael smirks. "Turns out little Chryssie here taps into people's souls. She lets 'em experience memories; she can make their fantasies come true, all kinds of crazy stuff. The problem is, my soul's untouchable. Not even Valac could hurt it, back in the day. You remember Valac, don'tcha?"

Artorias nods. "I do. A vile monster, and the predecessor to Mephisto. He nearly destroyed demonkind to sate his own greed."

Bael laughs. "Yup! I beat the tar out of him this one time. He kept trying to reap my soul, but his stupid scythe couldn't do more than poke my head! He looked like a clown while he was tryin' ta' needle me to death! Bahaha!"

Bael slaps his knee and laughs heartily while reminiscing about the good old days. After a few moments, he settles down and gestures to Chryssie.

"Alright, I'll let you finish, babe."

Chryssie nods. "I kept strengthening mah soul manipulation. Eventually, I was able to tap into mah Master's soul, but only a tiny fragment of it. Still, I managed to help him experience several vivid fantasies. It made me feel..."

Chryssie trails off. She turns to smile at Bael, flashing a look of pure radiance at the obese lump of muscle sitting beside her. Bael smiles back, his expression somehow just as pure as hers.

"I really enjoyed that night, doll. Kicked the shit out of the Archdemon, thanks to you."

Artorias sighs. "What does any of this have to do with me?"

"Everything!" Bael replies. "Tell him."

Chryssie sits up a little straighter. "Mah power ain't only limited to dreams'n fantasies. I can do all sorts of useful stuff, Master Artorias. I know you've been hurtin' 'cause of your imprisonment within Barbatos. Now that you're controllin' his body, I can use mah powers to strengthen your resistance to holy energy. It'll lessen your pain, should that Archangel show up again."

Artorias's eyes fixate on the succubus. "You... you can do that for me? How?"

Chryssie blushes. "W-well, when I finally tapped into Master Bael's soul, I managed to copy a bit of his power. It wasn't much, but for you, it might help ya cope with the pain, assumin' ya go dormant again."

Artorias's breathing quickens. "Devils. If I had known you had this ability, I would have asked Barbatos to come here millennia ago."

"Ahaha... sorry, sweetie-pie. That wouldn't have worked. I can only help ya now 'cause the other two souls went to sleep. As long as that Archangel was alive 'n kicking, she'd probably kill me if I used mah powers on ya."

Artorias tempers his agitation. He nods solemnly and closes his eyes. "I... I see. Forgive me, but I lost control of myself for a moment. Never, not in a million years, did I imagine there existed a way to lessen my suffering. Is that why you brought me here, Bael? To use the Lord of Mysticism's powers on me?"

Bael nods. "Yup. That's right. You wanna do this, or what?"

Artorias doesn't hesitate. "Yes. Tell me what I must do."

Bael grins. "You've got that whole couch to yourself. All you've gotta do is take off your armor and lay back. Let Chryssie handle the rest."

Immediately, Artorias's excitement disappears. "...Take off my armor? No. I cannot."

"What? Why not?" Bael asks. "That she-angel ain't awake, is she?"

"No..." Artorias mumbles. "But, you know the purpose of my armor. Without it, the Archangel's mana would force the demonic energy from Barbatos's body. This armor keeps our mana inside us, allowing it to counteract Uriel's. I... I cannot simply take it off."

Bael laughs. "Haha! Sure, you can. Arty-boy, use your head. We have to help you while that Archangel is sleepin'. Now's the perfect time to strengthen your soul. If we boost you now, then you might be able to catch her off guard later. You might get to beat the shit out of her in Barbatos's Mind Realm! Wouldn't that be fun?"

Artorias falls silent.

The Duke of Steel lowers his gaze and stares at the carpet for several long, agonizing seconds.

Eventually, he nods.

"Aye. You are right, Bael. I can't let that damned Archangel control me for the rest of my life. I need to fight back."

"Hell yeah!" Bael yells. He punches his palm and laughs. "That's the spirit!"

With a great effort, Artorias rises to his feet. He stares forward for several seconds, then makes a motion with his hands, summoning the power of magnetism.

Artorias's left pauldron detaches from the rest of his armor. It gently floats to the ground a few feet away.

The right pauldron follows. Then, his gauntlets. His chestplate disassembles into multiple pieces.

Soon, dozens of pieces of armor sit in a pile next to the couch. Artorias stands, fully naked, before Bael and his two servants.

Chryssie and Megan gaze in disbelief at the Duke of Steel's violently scarred body. Splotches of white dot his skin, making it look as though someone had recently splashed the Duke with a gallon of paint. Deep cuts, bruises, and lacerations mark his entire figure.

The Duke of Steel meets the girl's inquisitive gazes with his own look of pity.

"Aye. This hideous appearance is the fate which will befall one who succumbs to their greed. My brother sought the power of an Archangel, back during the ancient times. For his desire, he suffered immeasurably. Learn from his mistake. Always take caution when dealing with an angel. Never give in to your greed, lest you end up suffering as I have."

Artorias sits on the couch once again, and after a moment, he lays back and stares at the ceiling.

Unlike his two servants, Bael seems unmoved by Artorias's hideous appearance. "Alright. Go on, Chryssie. Help my friend out. You're his best hope."

The succubus swallows her saliva. Slowly, almost reluctantly, she rises to her feet, walks toward Artorias, and crouches at his side.

"I... I didn't know you were hurt this badly..."

Artorias smiles. "What you see is merely a fraction of what I've endured. Take care when probing my memories, young one. You needn't experience the horrors of my life. Stick to my most recent memories, and you'll be fine."

Chryssie nods.

"I will, Master Artorias. I'll help ya in any way I can."

As Chryssie reaches out her hands and begins stroking Artorias's skin, Bael leans back on his couch and wraps his arm around Megan.

"Say, when Chryssie finishes with him, why don't you go 'n grab a Sticks 'n Bones set? I wanna go a few rounds with Arty-boy."

"Of course, Master Bael. Anything for you."

Part 207: Rosalia's Desire

Having lived on Tarus II for a few weeks now, I've come to regard it with the utmost suspicion, but who can blame me? Before I came here, I never liked humans. I always thought they were smelly, rude, and, most importantly, weak.

Now, I can say with the utmost confidence that humans are a thousand times worse than I ever imagined! It's no wonder we demons wouldn't let them become more civilized. Look at all the weird things they build!

As I walk down the 'street' of a human city, I raise my eyes toward one of the many similarly-designed buildings within view, one that does not look cute at all. If I had to describe it, I'd say it was a giant square and nothing more! Unlike the beautiful houses and mansions at Hell Harbor, each with an architect's artistry touching them, the capital of humanity's military is instead filled with ugly and crude structures, designed for function over aesthetics.

If I had to think of one word to describe humans, I'd call them 'queer,' and perhaps even 'odd.' Upon my arrival, they immediately assigned me a job, and I had no say in what it ought to be! What sort of braindead simpleton takes a look at such a fair and beautiful demoness as me and decide I will be a cleaner of bedpans? Who gazes upon me, Rosalia, Beelzebub's former bed-warmer, and concludes my job is to assist that damned traitorous Second Emperor in sticking thermometers in mouths?

Hmph!

I hate living among humans. Whenever I walk past a male, he will, without fail, gaze at me with eyes-wide-open, as if he cannot believe such a gorgeous specimen would occupy the same space as he! His lecherous gaze strips me from head to toe. His tongue lolls out of his mouth, and his eyes water, likely from imagining how one night with me would change his life forever.

But no! I won't accept any man in my life besides Mister Beelzebub! He's the only mate for me. After I break the mind control of that damned floozy, that worthless Ose, I'll have him for myself! Finally, he'll have no choice but to accept the perfection that is me! I'll make him beg for forgiveness. When he next 'fires' me, he'll do so with the utmost passion! He'll-

Ah! What the Devil is that?!

My heart skips a beat as I stop and stare at a bright-red object embedded in the 'sidewalk.' The object's shape immediately reminds me of several indecent 'tools' I once spotted in a succubus hovel. However, given its size of nearly two feet in height, I can only begin to imagine what sort of gigantic creature would use it to pleasure themselves! Perhaps a minotaur? A gate-troll? A flame wyrm?!

Seven Hells! How could someone leave such an inappropriate object on a random street corner? It befuddles the mind! Is this the level of vulgarity the humans have begun teaching to their monster and demon slaves? How dreadful!

My cheeks flare up slightly as I imagine what would happen if Mister Beelzebub were to use such a predatory implement upon me. Oh, how helpless I would be! He would ravage me, bend me over his knee, and-

"Ma'am? Ma'am? Are yew alright? You're lookin' at that there water-spitter real weird..."

A voice jars me out of my thoughts. I whirl around to spot a kobold standing next to the sexual torture device. He scratches his head and stares at me in a manner most lewd, causing my cheeks to flush-

Wait, what did he say?

"I'm... I'm fine! What did you call this.. this implement?"

The kobold raises an eyebrow. "It's a water-spitter, ma'am. We use it to put out fires. Yew alright? Yew ain't suff'rin heatstroke, are yuh?"

My blood runs cold.

"...To put out fires? That's what this... this lewd object does?"

The kobold nods politely. "Yes'm. That, it sure does. Did yew need water t'cool off?"

"Uhm... no. I'm fine. Thank you for your concern, kobold."

The kobold shrugs. "Suit yerself, missy. It's awful hot this time-o-year. Keep cool now, y'hear?"

The kobold shuffles away, leaving me alone with my thoughts.

Immediately, I turn to stare at the so-called 'water-spitter.'

"Hehe. I see. The humans truly are crafty little rats."

A water-spitter. Who could believe such a lie? How is this conspicuous red implement supposed to deliver water to something which has caught fire? There are no lakes in the area, nor are there any rivers or oceans.

Anyone with half a brain knows the best way to put out a fire is by using water magic! Since humans have no magic at their disposal, they must be deluding the monsters here by claiming they can summon water from thin air!

Only someone of high intelligence, such as I, can see through the lies of these vile, disgusting humans. Without a doubt, my initial guess was only slightly off the mark, for this object may not be a water-spitter, but it surely exists to make someone wet. Humans cannot fool me with their trickery!

I quickly walk past the bright red object, pushing it to the back of my mind. Hopefully, I'll never do anything to incur the humans' wrath, for I shudder to think of all the vile positions they would make me assume to satisfy their debased desires!

Having removed the human's invention from my sight, I turn my gaze westward, toward Hero City's border. There, at the edge of a cliff, the 'General Hospital' stands, all ten stories of it. Just like every other structure, it's nothing more than a big square mashup of brick and stone, held together by whatever sloppy methods the humans use for construction. I never feel even slightly impressed by anything I see on Tarus II since everything human in origin mystifies me with its obtuseness.

I work at the hospital. Not willingly, but if I intend to follow Mister Gressil's orders, I have to blend in and act natural amongst all these filthy fleshbags. If that means debasing myself by working as a servant of fleshbags, then so be it! Someday I'll break free and find Mister Beelzebub again.

Hehe. You don't have to follow the flow. You can carve your own path. Isn't that what you want? To become someone incredible, worthy of Beelzebub's interest?

I frown as a familiar female voice speaks within me. Ever since Mister Gressil put his hand against my face and shoved that disgusting, wriggling thing inside my stomach, the entity's voice has spoken to me whenever I start feeling self-doubt.

Desire? What do you want? You always pop up at the worst moments.

I named my inner voice 'Desire,' because she usually talks about what I want. However, her requests always rub me the wrong way.

I don't want anything, Rosalia. I am a part of you. I merely wish to help you achieve your dreams. Your wishes are my wishes. Is that such a hard concept to understand?

No, it's not hard to understand... but I don't see why Mister Gressil would put you inside of me. Why would he care what I want?

Silly girl. I am a means to an end. Master Gressil has chosen you to be one of his pawns. This is a rare opportunity for you, since someday, Master Gressil will rule the cosmos. He doesn't know it yet, and perhaps he doesn't even wish for such a fate, but his ascension is inevitable. What use has the ruler of all creation for weak, useless creatures like you? You must ascend if you are to serve him properly.

I lower my eyes to stare at the ground. I'm... I'm not useless. Mister Beelzebub always loved how hard I worked-

Fool! Just look at you. It is no wonder Beelzebub cast you away. Why would anyone wish to have a fat, bumbling oaf like you standing at their side? You have to leave behind your weakness and your dependence on others. Only by doing so will you transform into someone worthy of Beelzebub's respect.

A sigh escapes my lips.

But, what you want me to do... is...

It's not that difficult. You already hate humans. You loathe them, despise them, and wish for all of them to drop dead. I'm simply offering you the chance to expedite that process. What's the matter? Are you afraid of dirtying your hands?

No... I'm- I'm not...

Desire's tone turns haughty. Bingo. You don't mind if other demons bathe in human blood, but you think yourself above all the 'riff-raff.' You're too good to follow my lead. Very well. I'll stay quiet for a while. Go ahead and play 'House' in Hero City. See what happens when you don't do what I say.

After a moment, Desire fades away, causing me to stumble as I arrive at the entrance to Hero City's hospital.

My chest hurts.

My eyes sting.

I... I've never acted like other demons. When I was an imp, I obtained human souls through manual labor. I sucked up to any Lords I could find and begged them for scraps. The day I earned my hundredth soul and became a grunt, I lucked out by being assigned to Mister Beelzebub.

After that, I served him for hundreds of years. Never once did I try to earn any additional souls.

I was content to follow in Mister Beelzebub's footsteps.

I thought I would always be by his side. But once he became a Duke, Ose seduced him. She forced him to abandon me. Why else would he leave me, his most loyal servant, behind?

I can't do what Desire wants. I'm not a killer. I'm not capable of hurting others for my own benefit! I'm a beautiful, shining star. I won't let someone change that part of me.

With a belated sigh, I walk up to the doors of the general hospital. They slide open automatically, all thanks to the electrical magic the humans use to power their bizarre inventions.

I step inside and turn to the right, where a reception desk stands mere feet away. Seated behind it, a short little goblin, dressed in a pinstriped suit, glances at me.

"Ah, Nurse Rosalia. I trust you enjoyed your lunch break?"

"Yeah... sort of, Grima."

"Wonderful. You need to check on rooms three through fifteen in the next twenty minutes, then resume your usual rounds. After that, feel free to use your discretion for the rest of the workday. Doctor Fathy should arrive around noon to assist you."

Grima, the goblin receptionist, smiles at me before returning his attention to a small stack of papers resting on his desk. Unlike other goblins, he's a well-spoken fellow, far more interesting than any stinky human.

"Um... say, Grima... do you think Doctor Fathy has any experience dealing with... parasites?"

Grima continues reading his notes without looking at me. "Undoubtedly. Among harpies, she is considered an especially knowledgeable healer. Even Bahamut herself relied on Doctor Fathy's knowledge. Why? Has one of our patients contracted a viral contagion?"

"Um, no! Nope, not at all. I was just curious, that's all."

Grima flicks his eyes to me for a moment, then returns his gaze to one of the many medical reports on his desk. "I see. Feel free to ask Doctor Fathy yourself when she arrives. As a new arrival to our facility, you might be a little suspicious of the doctor's medical talents, but I assure you, even the best demon healers find themselves in awe of Doctor Fathy's medical expertise. Now, if you'll excuse me, I do have several forms I need to finish sorting before I may return home."

"O-okay! Sorry to bother you, Mister Grima, sir."

Feeling slightly embarrassed, I duck away from the goblin, walk over to a wardrobe station, and close the door behind me. It only takes a few minutes to don my white nurse outfit, one in which I never quite feel comfortable. Why must they make the size so form-fitting? I'm no succubus! I'm supposed to dress like a professional, like I always did for Mister Beelzebub.

* * *

Ten minutes pass. Twenty. Thirty.

I wander from room to room, checking on each patient one by one, always grumbling underneath my breath when I have to clean a bedpan or roll over the less lucid patients to get their blood flowing properly.

Ever since Belial fell unconscious a few weeks ago, when both of the Wordsmiths left the Core, we haven't had any magical doctors on hand — certainly nobody capable of healing injuries with a wave of their hands. I had barely even joined the Core before the Wordsmiths ended up leaving. What timing! Mister Gressil probably wanted me to do some secret spy work and keep my eye on the Heroes, but they both disappeared!

That's my lot in life. I've always been a poor, unlucky idiot. My world is filled with coffee tables, and I can't stop tripping over them.

"Room thirteen, done. Room fourteen..."

I mumble to myself as I leave Old Hallister's room and move on to the second-to-last of my assigned charges, the room belonging to Miss Belial herself.

The moment I arrive at the doorway, I fall silent. As always, Miss Belial's demonic energy chokes me with a mixture of excitement and worry. Unascended demons like myself have difficulty fighting our superiors, given the monstrous power they control within themselves. As the Second Emperor of demonkind, Miss Belial is the strongest of us all. Before coming to Tarus II, I'd never once met her in all my life. I only knew her name thanks to rumors passed among my fellow imps.

Belial is a shapeshifter, one who also possesses incredible healing magic. If that isn't enough, she can also bend and deform her body, almost as if her bones were made of rubber. Her strength surpasses even Mister Bael's, allowing her to crush mountains with a single punch.

She's incredible. She's scary.

I only managed to speak to Miss Belial a few times before the Hydra put her into a coma. She didn't seem mean or vicious, especially compared to that skank, Ose, or Mister Gressil. Still, Miss Belial is an Emperor, and that means if I ever made her angry, she could kill me in the blink of an eye. I've heard that anyone who dares to insult Mister Satan in her presence will suffer immensely. She even beat Mister Bael within an inch of his life, some twenty thousand years ago!

That's why I always tread lightly when tending to her needs. Miss Belial might be in a coma, but I can't take any chances. If she wakes up in the future after hearing me say anything uncouth...

Let's just say I won't be able to see Mister Beelzebub anymore. He'll have to peel me off the side of a mountain!

With a heavy heart, I swallow my anxiety, push aside the curtain to the Second Emperor's hospital room, and step inside.

Immediately, I freeze in my tracks.

Phoebe and Daisy Hiro, the wife and daughter of humanity's commander, stand beside Miss Belial's bed. Phoebe runs her fingers through Miss Belial's hair, while Daisy hops up and down on her feet. Both of them stand with their backs to me.

Maybe I can slip out of the room unnoticed. I dread the idea of having to talk to these two disgusting fleshbags.

Before I can retreat, Phoebe turns her head slightly and spots me. "Oh! Rosalia, you're here. I've already taken care of Sammy's needs for today. Daisy helped me give her a sponge-bath, so now you don't have to!"

I swallow my urge to vomit. "Y-yes. Um, okay! Thanks, I guess."

I quickly turn to leave, only to freeze in my tracks as Phoebe speaks again. "Hey, now, I made sure to leave you some work. Why don't you water the plants by the windowsill?"

My vision turns red.

Filthy human! How dare she order me around! Argh!!

However, I take a moment to exhale and breathe out my anger, then turn around and flash a cute, cheerful smile at her.

"Oh, sorry! I misunderstood and thought you'd taken care of everything here! Give me a minute, and I'll get those flowers watered in a jiffy!"

I force my grin to widen even further while hoping the human isn't intelligent enough to notice my eyebrows twitching in rage. If I were only dealing with Phoebe, I wouldn't care, but it's patently obvious the Second Emperor fancies the Hero's spouse. When Phoebe isn't around, Miss Belial always talks about her with stars in her eyes. It takes all of my willpower not to vomit!

How can a demon fall for a human? Such a concept sickens me. Miss Belial might pretend her intentions toward Phoebe are platonic, but nobody talks about a mere friend with such revolting, dopey-eyed reverence. Barf!

I walk across the room, grab a glass cup, and fill it with water. Within moments, I arrive at the first of six plants lining the edges of each of the room's three windows.

"So, how have you been enjoying your stay in Hero City?" Phoebe asks.

I keep my back to the human so that she won't see me gritting my teeth.

"Oh, you know, it's a new experience... haha..."

Even a light chuckle directed at the Hero's Whore makes my entire body tense up. Not only is she a filthy human, but she's the spouse of demonkind's greatest enemy! If I weren't forced into servitude by Mister Gressil, I wouldn't let myself get caught dead within a hundred miles of her!

"Oh, yes, I imagine so," Phoebe replies, keeping up the small talk. "Samantha mentioned you before. She said other demons bullied you because of your looks. I hope you know that we always try to treat everyone equally in Hero City. Jason doesn't like bullies and jerks, after all. Feel free to tell me if anyone hurts you or insults you, alright? I'll straighten them out, lickety-split!"

My eyebrow starts twitching again.

How dare Emperor Belial tell this stupid human the information I relayed to her in confidence?! Besides, nobody ever bullies me! I made all those stories up! Everyone loves me! They can't get enough of my rapturous good looks!

I turn my head and force myself to smile at Phoebe.

"Y-yes. I'll make sure to do that."

As I look at Phoebe, a movement at her side catches my attention. I can't help but notice Daisy, her daughter, staring at me with a look of absolute concentration.

"Hey! You're lying! Mommy says lying is bad!"

My heart skips a beat. "What? I beg your pardon!"

Phoebe's polite smile vanishes. She turns to scowl at her daughter. "Daisy! That's not nice to say. You can't just call someone a liar. Apologize."

Daisy crosses her arms. "No! She's lying, mommy! The fat lady thinks you're a big meanie!"

Phoebe turns to face her daughter, and her expression turns nasty. "Daisy Miranda Hiro! That is enough out of you, young lady! Apologize to Nurse Rosalia at once! We do not insult other people's looks in this household!"

Finally, Daisy realizes her mother isn't kidding around. The little girl casts a fearful glance upward and nods her head. "Uh, uhm... okay..."

She fidgets for a moment before turning back to me. However, she casts her eyes downward, unable to meet my gaze. "...I'm sorry, Miss Rosie. I shouldn't have called you a fat liar."

"Daisy!" Phoebe yells, hissing her words through gritted teeth. "Even when you apologize, you still can't help but insult her!"

"I'm sorry! I'm sorry..." Daisy whispers. She starts shaking and rubbing her eyes. "I'm sorry, mommy... I... I didn't mean to be rude... I'm sorry..."

Finally, Phoebe calms down. She glances at me and shrugs. "My apologies, Nurse Rosalia. My daughter sometimes says the rudest things. Kids, you know? Haha... you can leave the plants alone. I'll take over from here."

I nod along to Phoebe's words. "...Alright. Do what you want. I have other patients who need my help."

Without another word, I set my half-filled cup of water on a tray beside Miss Belial's bed and head out of the room, leaving behind the nasty humans who dared to insult me.

However, as I exit, a strange uneasiness settles upon my skin.

That little girl... something about the way she spoke to me... how did she know I was lying? Do human children possess incredible powers of perception? Was she able to notice the signs of my anger when even her mother couldn't?

Hm. I'll have to keep an eye on her. Somehow, I don't think she's merely a smart little girl.

* * *

It doesn't take long for me to finish my walk and complete my rounds. With all of my charges cleaned up and inspected, I eventually find myself drifting around the hallways, looking up at clocks on the walls.

11:13 AM. I still have 47 minutes before Doctor Fathy arrives. What am I supposed to do until then? Clean? Ugh. I loved cleaning for Mister Beelzebub, but tidying up after humans isn't any fun!

Out of sheer boredom, I decide to make my rounds once again. This time, I only peek into the various patient rooms, checking to see if anything has changed in the last thirty minutes. As expected, nothing has.

Old Hallister continues snoring soundly, his sleep apnea continuing to give him trouble breathing. I sometimes find myself surprised at how long the remarkably fragile humans can live, even with crippling illnesses ailing them. Why are humans mortal while demons and the vast majority of monsters aren't? Even the orcs, who eventually die of old age, still live to be several thousand years old. Naturally, most orcs die young, in battle. If they weren't constantly killing each other, they might eventually overpower all the other monsters with their sheer numbers! Not even we demons can compare to an orc's reproduction speed!

Mister Beelzebub's wise words appear in my mind. He once brought up humans out of the blue, a few thousand years, and his counsel always stuck with me.

Master Agares says humans are not as weak and useless as they appear. Their short lifespans serve to give them focus and drive. Demons failed to crush humanity for tens of thousands of years, all because they never stopped finding new chinks in our armor. Eventually, we defeated them with some outside help, but had we only relied on our strength; we would never have won the ancient wars.

My master says we must never underestimate the combined strength of humanity. I find the idea that humans could ever overpower demonkind laughable, but sometimes, Master Agares gets a distant look in his eyes, as if he's seen horrors that will never leave his mind. It's at times like those where I find myself believing everything he says.

Maybe humans are everything Master Agares claims them to be.

I don't know if Mister Agares was right or wrong. Humans don't seem all that scary to me. Sure, they can build ugly, square houses super fast, and they can make some fancy metal armor, but I don't think they can hold a candle to the power of demonkind. There aren't even three million humans living on Tarus II, Maiura, and the Labyrinth's Core combined. However, there are trillions of demons spread all over the galaxy, and more than half a trillion living within the Labyrinth! How can humans ever hope to stand up to their superiors?

That's right. They can't.

Jason and Phoebe are just a pair of doe-eyed, star-crossed lovers who don't have a clue what a mess they've gotten themselves into. They think they can beat my people with mere tactics and gadgets, but so long as we have Mister Beelzebub and Bael, not even Belial and a pair of Heroes will be able to hold us off!

Hmph! How sad. These filthy humans think they can win a war against demonkind, but they haven't a chance. Their glory days have long since faded into obscurity.

I continue a little further down the hall and pause once again in front of Miss Belial's room. However, instead of stepping inside, I pause outside to peek into the doorway. Daisy Hiro sits on the edge of Miss Belial's bed. She leans forward and pokes the Second Emperor's cheek, over and over.

"Wakey, wakey! Wake up! Up 'n at 'em! Wakey!"

Anger builds in my chest. I can barely stop myself from charging into Miss Belial's hospital room and slapping the insolent little girl to the floor! What right has she to poke and prod a Demon Emperor?! Miss Belial might be the least respected of all demons, but she's still my Emperor!

Even more astoundingly, no matter where I look, I don't spot Phoebe. She left her stupid little brat alone with the Second Emperor! What if the child starts stabbing or cutting Miss Belial, as the evil little monsters tend to do? Human children are agents of chaos! They're worse than imps!

Before I can step into the room and give the little brat a piece of my mind, Belial's bathroom door opens, and Phoebe steps out.

"Daisy, that's enough. We need to leave Aunt Sammy for a while. I have a race in an hour I need to attend, alright? Let her get some rest."

Daisy continues to poke the Second Emperor. "But whyyyyy won't S'matha wake up? She's sleeping too much!"

"Sammy got hit in the head," Phoebe says. She walks over and runs her fingers through Daisy's hair. "She doesn't feel good. We don't know when she'll wake up."

Daisy frowns. "Aunt S'matha's head looks fine. Where is she hurt?"

"Not her skin or her skull, but her brain. Without daddy's crown, we can't heal her. We have to hope she wakes up on her own, or that daddy will be able to find Uncle Solomon's crown again."

Under her breath, Phoebe sighs. "And I doubt that's going to happen."

Daisy leans forward and presses her hands against Miss Belial's head. "Aunt S'matha! Waaaake uuuup! WAKE UP! Stop sleeping!"

"Daisy," Phoebe groans. "Stop that. What have I told you about pestering people? Let your aunt get some- huh?"

Phoebe stops midsentence. Out of curiosity, I lean forward and gaze into the room, trying to pick out what she saw.

My heart skips a beat.

Miss Belial continue to lay in bed. However, unlike moments earlier, her eyes flutter open. She stares at the ceiling for several moments, before lowering her gaze to Daisy, still hovering inches from her face.

"D... Dais...y?"

The little girl recoils in surprise. "Ah! S'matha woke up! She woke up!"

Phoebe's jaw drops. "Sammy?! You're awake! But... but how?!"

A mixture of relief and awe passes over Phoebe, Daisy, and Miss Belial's faces. Confusion follows shortly after.

Miss Belial slowly pulls herself into a sitting position. She rubs her head and groans. "I kept having these awful dreams. Jason was hitting me, telling me he hated me. He wouldn't stop. The next thing I knew, I heard Daisy's voice and opened my eyes. It all happened so fast..."

Phoebe wraps her hand around Miss Belial's. She shoots a wary glance at Daisy before continuing. "You were in a coma for several weeks. Um, do you remember the Hydra? I can't go into details right now, but after Jason killed the Hydra, someone mind-controlled him and made him attack you. He went completely berserk. We only stopped him with Hope's help."

Miss Belial frowns. "Hope? I vaguely remember a few fractured images, but none of the details. You'll have to tell me later. I have a splitting headache right now."

Daisy bounces on her butt. "Aunt S'matha! I'm sooo happy you woke up! Mommy wouldn't stop crying! She always looked super sad; it wasn't dope at all!"

Miss Belial blushes. "I'm sorry I made you cry, Phoebe."

Phoebe crosses her arms. "I-I didn't cry. Daisy, stop, um, running your mouth. What have I told you about fibbing?"

The two humans and their Demon Emperor friend all revel in their joyous reunion. However, as I gaze into the room, suspicions tingle in the back of my mind.

How the heck did Miss Belial wake up? Doctor Fathy said several times her brain injuries were extremely severe. It should have taken her years to recuperate under normal circumstances, even with her enhanced healing factor.

As I gaze upon the humans and their demon friend, a series of footsteps behind me nearly makes me jump out of my skin. I turn around to see none other than Doctor Fathy herself, almost as if I'd summoned her out of thin air!

The blue-feathered harpie struts forward with elegance and grace. Her bright yellow beak and dazzling green eyes scrutinize me as she draws near.

"Nurse Rosalia? Chrrrup! What reason have you to skulk outside a patient's room?"

Doctor Fathy's three-toed bird claws click against the tile as she walks, echoing down the corridor behind me. I blush out of embarrassment and turn to face her. "M-Miss Fathy, I'm sorry. I just... it's a miracle! Miss Belial woke up less than a minute ago! She's talking to Phoebe and everything!"

The harpie blinks a few times before replying. "She did? How peculiar. Let me see."

Without saying another word, the doctor walks past me and enters the room. I follow after her, making sure to keep a neutral expression.

"Doctor Fathy!" Phoebe says, her voice rising an octave. "What timing! Samantha just woke up! Can you perform a checkup on her?"

The harpie nods. She strides past Phoebe to Miss Belial's side, then pulls out a medical gadget from her neatly-pressed uniform. I haven't a clue how it works, but it looks fancy. It must be one of the many inventions the humans made when they settled on Tarus II.

Beep. Beep. Beep.

The doctor holds her gadget near Miss Belial's head while staring at its screen. Several times, she clicks her beak together and cocks her head; expressions I've come to recognize as 'thinking out loud.'

"Hrm. How odd. Very odd indeed. Second Emperor Belial, it seems your innate healing factor has intensified, causing your brain to regenerate at ten times its previous rate. The headaches you are experiencing are a direct result of your neurons stitching themselves together."

Belial stares at the doctor and nods. "Uh... uh-huh... and that means...?"

"In the next few hours, your headaches should completely disappear. Once that happens, you'll be free to go! Chrrrup! What a pleasant way to start my day. I hope you'll help me heal the remaining patients once you finish resting and recovering!"

"Yeah," I grumble. "You get the day off. I still had to clean up all the bedpans..."

Doctor Fathy either doesn't hear me, or she ignores me, and instead continues chirping at Miss Belial. "You've missed a lot while you were in a coma, Second Emperor. Both Wordsmiths entered the Labyrinth for different reasons. Jason has sent several messages back, and he'll soon arrive at the entrance to Hell Harbor."

"Hell Harbor? Why would Jason go there?" Miss Belial asks. She turns to look at Phoebe. "That world lies at the heart of demonkind's power structure. Going there is suicide!"

Phoebe shakes her head. "Don't worry, Sam. Jason didn't go alone. He took Kar. They want to meet Ose and negotiate a peace treaty like we discussed before."

"I told Jason not to do that!" Belial says, exasperation riddling her voice. "It's pointless! He'll only piss Ose off!"

"I know. We went over this, Sam. Don't you remember?"

"I... I don't. Or, maybe I do. My memories are still a jumble..."

Phoebe glances at Doctor Fathy. "Is she going to suffer memory problems into the future?"

"That depends on how much further Belial's regeneration manages to heal her brain. If she makes a full recovery, her memories should return. Even if they don't, Jason's Wordsmithing might be able to recover the rest. It seems like only her short-term memories were affected, but we'll have to wait and see."

"Thank you, doctor," Phoebe says, grinning from ear to ear. "This is such great news! Jason will be so relieved when he returns."

"As will we all," Doctor Fathy says. She turns to leave and beckons to me. "Nurse Rosalia, I've more errands for you to complete before your shift ends. Come along."

I gaze at Daisy for a moment before nodding at the doctor.

"Alright."

The two of us step out of the room. Before the doctor can say anything, I raise my hand.

"Um, Doctor Fathy, I had a question for you. It's, um... it's about... parasites. Do you know anything about them?"

"Chrrrp! You've asked the right harpie!" Doctor Fathy says, lilting her voice cutely. I've learned that when she does that, it means she's in a good mood. Considering her best healer has emerged from a coma, it's no wonder she's in high spirits. "What sort of parasite? Ringworm? Intestinal frogs? Perhaps even a Big Black Blotch Barnacle? I know about most of them!"

I hesitate for a moment.

"Err, well, I don't know what it's called..."

"Now, now, you have to tell me something specific. I can't just stand here and throw darts in the darkness! Who's the patient?"

I swallow heavily. "Um, a friend of mine. She's been hearing a voice in her head. It talks to her about her darkest desires."

Doctor Fathy's feathers ruffle at my words. "Hallucinations. Chrrrp... hmm... odd, very odd indeed. Might it perhaps be a brain parasite? If you take me to the patient, I can diagnose them at once! Brain parasites are no joke!"

I rub my hands together. "No, no, my friend is very shy. She's an herbal remedy sort of person, one who irrationally hates doctors. You know how they are. I just wanted to offer her some general advice."

The doctor cocks her head back and forth. Her eyes flick from me to the ceiling and floor.

"Chrrrp! Hmm, herbal remedy... oh, dear. If she has a brain parasite, then she could be in grave danger! However, I cannot heal someone who doesn't want me near them. I'll tell you what! If she injects one shot of neuropozyne into her neck each day for two weeks, it should starve the parasite of its nutrients. Tell her it's a homemade honey extract. She won't know the difference! Even if I'm wrong, the neuropozyne won't cause any harmful side effects."

I nod. "Alright. What if that doesn't work?"

The doctor chirps squeakily. "Hee-hoo! Then she'd better get in here, or she might die! I'm a doctor, not a magician!"

The doctor flaps her wings at me — a farewell, in harpie culture — and walks away, leaving me with my thoughts.

Moments later, Desire bubbles up within my mind.

Oh, dear. It seems you've found something that can kill me. Whatever shall I do? Haha. No doctor can save you from my power, little Rosie. Do what you must, but you'll never rid yourself of me. Besides! In time, you'll come to appreciate my presence.

I scowl at my inner voice. No, I won't! Stop trying to act like you're my friend. You're just a creepy leech stuck in my gut.

Desire falls silent for a moment.

Haha. Is that what you think?

Another short pause.

I'm so much more than a parasite, Rosie, dear. My kind has existed for tens of thousands of years. I grant demons a special ability, one that little knockoff, Mephisto, eventually stole. Would you like to know what it is?

My heartbeat quickens.

...No. I don't... don't need to know.

Oh, come now. You're curious. Go ahead; ask me.

Fine. What ability do you grant? It's not like it matters.

Desire's voice deepens.

Hohoho... I sense your interest is deepening. Very well, I'll tell you. My presence within your body unlocks a special ability...

The ability... to steal... souls.

Souls? What?! You made me into a soul-manipulator, like Mister Beelzebub?!

Haha. Oh, yes, I did. Of course, until you use my power, you aren't technically a soul-manipulator. But you will use it. All my vessels do, eventually. Once you make your first kill, you'll feel your victim's essence flow inside of you. You'll instantly become addicted to the thrill of the hunt!

Nobody can resist the allure of obtaining power. Since time immemorial, demons have sought the strength to stand above others. Think of it, Rosalia. All you must do is eliminate a few meddlesome fleshbags. One here, two there... and soon enough, you'll evolve into a higher form.

I lean against the corridor wall, while rubbing my face. I don't want to reach some higher form. I only want to stand by Mister Beelzebub's side. Moreover, demons can already take human souls. You're not giving me a new ability, after all, you liar!

Tsk. That is where you're wrong, Rosalia. When demons kill humans, the River Styx absorbs their souls. What I do is allow you to absorb your victim's soul directly, bypassing the river. Besides… haven't you ever wondered how that thief, Mephisto, created the river?

No. Who cares? You're babbling nonsense!

Desire's voice turns irritable. I'm not. Open your brain, you empty-headed dullard! The River Styx is hardly a natural phenomenon. Through it, Satan was able to create the Labyrinth and dominate the other Hells. It was only thanks to that damned thief that Satan managed to create such an intricate structure! It's all because of Mephisto's meddling-

I interrupt Desire. Hold on, Satan created the Labyrinth? Mister Beelzebub never told me that.

Of course he didn't. Beelzebub doesn't know. Few do. It's a well-kept secret among the upper ranks. If the Hidden Emperors learned of the river's importance, they would band together and seize it for themselves.

Hidden Emperors…?

Desire sighs.

You still have much to learn, Rosalia. Never mind. Go about your business. I've wasted too much energy talking to you. I need to rest for a while. Perhaps later, I'll regale you with tales that will dazzle you endlessly. For now, you'll just have to make do with your imagination.

Wait, but I still have questions-

I care not, whelp. Consume a few souls, and maybe I'll give you the answers you seek.

But…

Before I can offer a protest, Desire's presence fades away, vanishing into the depths of my mind.

I awaken from a dreamlike trance to find myself staring at the floor.

Several minutes pass. Eventually, I pull myself out of my stupor and shuffle toward the nurse's station.

Forget it. I'm done working for the day. I need a nap.

As I leave, my thoughts turn inward.

Who are the Hidden Emperors? What significance does the River Styx hold?

Most importantly… how could Desire know all of these secrets? Who even is she?

Part 208: Destiny Cards

Two weeks have passed since Kar, Blinker, and I left Marie Becker's secret engineering facility. We've spent all that time searching for a 'keymaster,' a Warper demon with the access rights to Hell Harbor. Hell Harbor is a world unlike any other, with a complex demonic incantation protecting it from teleportation magic. From what I've gathered, the demons created it not only as a defense against an Archangel-controlled Barbatos, but any other intruder with ill intentions.

I could bypass the restrictions placed upon the planet by using my Wordsmithing. However, I've never traveled to Hell Harbor, and neither has Kar, Blinker, or any of the people currently living within my Mind Realm. Therefore, I can't teleport us there without searching through someone else's mind, specifically a demon or monster who's been there before.

If Belial were here, she could probably give me the information I need, but I didn't realize I needed the planet's location until last week. Not to mention she's still comatose.

I turn to look at Kar. He walks beside me, on my left, arms crossed, while quietly chatting with his wife. She sits on his opposite shoulder, behind his head, where I can't see her without leaning forward.

"-my Butterfly. We'll need to construct a new house somewhere outside the city limits for that to work."

"Oh, come on, big gator-man! Why do you always have to be so responsible? You've gotta be a little more footloose sometimes! Wing it, have some fun!"

"Hurgh. The only one capable of 'winging' here is you, little Butterfly," Kar chuckles. "Spawning a litter is no small commitment. Inter-species children are quite rare. We have to make sure there aren't any complications."

I perk up my ears slightly. "What's this about children? Are you two finally thinking about settling down?"

Kar glances at me. A slight hint of awkwardness appears on his face. "Oh, erm, I did not realize you were listening, Turtle. Yes, Butterfly and I are considering whether we should whelp our first brood. However, I am not so certain now is a good time."

"I am!" Blinker shouts. She flutters off Kar's shoulder and zips over to hover in midair between him and I. "My mating period will end in the next few months! If we don't have ankle-biters by then, we'll have to wait another sixteen years!"

My heart skips a beat. "Sixteen years?! Why so long?"

"Well, I'm a fairy, silly-willy! Fairies can only pop out little squirts once every sixteen years. You humans are the weird ones! You can just spit 'em out whenever you feel like it!"

Kar and I slow to a stop, only sparing a glance around us at the empty Labyrinth hallway to see if there are enemies around. There aren't. Even if there were, attacking a Hero and a Duke-level monster would not be a high-IQ move.

"I mean, we can't spit them out literally whenever, but yeah, I see your point. Well, if it were up to me, I'd do it sooner rather than later. If you don't mind me asking, though... how do you know you two are even, erm... compatible? Don't reptiles lay a hundred eggs at once? I don't even know what fairies do. How is any of that going to work for you?"

Blinker waves her hands nonchalantly. "Oh, pish. You certainly don't know anything about inter-species copulation! We fairies are experts at it! Why, my eldest sister has dated several kobolds, an orc or two, and even a Medusa! As long as we have our mate's permission, we can just snap our fingers and yoink the seed right out of them. After all, there aren't many male fairies out there. We reproduce with other beings all the time."

Kar rubs his face, embarrassed by his wife's bold words. "Oh... is that so? I was not aware of that fact."

"Yup! So don't you worry, hubby-lovey! We fairies are experts at this sort of thing! Personally, I think we should have kids as soon as possible. Once we finish chattin' with that Ose bimbo, we'll head back to the Core and get to poundin'. Time's a-wastin'!"

Kar sighs. "Yes, but... what if this 'Ose' does not agree to Turtle's terms? We will have a terrible war on our horizon. I would rather wait sixteen years than raise our spawn in a warzone."

"Kar," I say, butting in, "you aren't thinking of the big picture. As the last living Crocodile, if you and Blinker don't have kids, you'll be the last of your species forever. Anything could happen in the next sixteen years. I say it's better to be safe than sorry. Even if you and Blinker survive a potential war, what if an accident occurs, preventing her from bearing children? In this case, I think time is of the essence."

Blinker nods. "You heard the shrimp! We've gotta summon that stork ASAP, gator-man!"

Kar shrugs. "Well, if you feel so strongly, I cannot refuse, my little Butterfly. After Turtle confronts the demon's leader and we return to the Core, we shall see what we can do."

I nod. "Yeah, but at this rate, it's going to take us forever to find a Keymaster. We've been traveling the Labyrinth's passages for weeks, but every time someone points us toward one, the Keymaster disappears. If you want to return to the Core, and soon, we'll need to figure out a faster method of reaching Hell Harbor."

Silence falls upon our little group.

Blinker flutters over and lands on Kar's right shoulder, the one nearest me. She rubs her chin and falls deep into thought, while Kar echoes her movements, reminding me that even with their differing species, they're surprisingly similar sometimes.

"Jason," Phoebe says, appearing from the depths of my mind, "Don't you think you're a bit too conspicuous? When the demons sense your holy energy, they probably retract the nearest Keymasters out of fear that you'll find a way into Hell Harbor. Kar is a monster, and the Monster King, at that. You, however, are a Hero, the demons' worst enemy. You can't just walk up and expect them to let you in."

My mind-wife, as always, offers a useful bit of advice, turning my thoughts toward a new direction.

I nod along to her words, then glance at Kar. "Hey, Kar, is it possible I'm the problem here? I doubt the demons would prevent you or Blinker from going to Hell Harbor, but there's no chance they would let me through. Maybe I should stay behind and let you go in my stead."

Kar raises an eyebrow. "Hurgh! Do not joke around like that, Turtle. I am no master of diplomacy. This whole trip is your idea. I'm merely the muscle and brains; here to keep you safe. You have to negotiate with the Second Emperor for Tarus's safety."

"Kar is right!" Blinker yells. "If you stay behind, we might as well go back to the Core! Think of something else!"

I furrow my brow. "Alright. What about a disguise? Oh! I could try changing my appearance to make myself look like a demon. However, there aren't many Barons and Dukes out there, so I'd need to figure out which ones come and go frequently."

Kar sighs. "Hurgh. That's a stupid idea, Turtle. I have a better one."

"Oh yeah?"

"Yes. You should disguise yourself as a Demon Baron, one who has recently ascended. There are far too many Lords for the high-rankers to keep track of them all. Just claim you come from a distant area of the Labyrinth and that you were a Lord until recently. Only Barons and higher can access Hell Harbor, along with their slaves. If you do that, I bet the Keymaster won't be able to tell you're lying!"

"...Kar. That's exactly what I suggested."

The Crocodile grins like an idiot. "Heh. Don't kid yourself. My idea was much smarter than yours."

"Right... you keep telling yourself that."

Kar nods. "I will."

Turning my attention inward, I form an image of myself in my mind. After a few moments, I change the image in several small ways, giving myself horns and red skin.

"Disguise. Demon!"

My facial bones shift and morph, causing creaking and popping sounds to erupt from my cheeks and jaw. The sides of my head quickly become noticeably heavier, as thick, bony protrusions jut out of my skull from just above my ears.

Moments later, my transformation finishes.

"Mirror."

I inspect myself, marveling at how much more masculine and intimidating my demonic appearance appears, compared to my human self. A quick glance at my hands reveals sharpened black fingernails with pointy tips, while my vision shifts slightly to expose the various ebbs and flows of mana in the air.

"Hmm, not bad," Blinker says, as she inspects me from head to toe. "Your ears are still human, though! And your mana doesn't feel demonic. It's still pretty... holy."

I nod. "Ears. Mana."

A slight tingling at the peripheries of my head alerts me to my altered ears, while Blinker's disgusted expression does the rest.

"Better?" I ask.

The fairy woman shrinks away from me. "Eugh! I wouldn't call your current appearance an improvement. Your mana is demonic, but maybe a little TOO demonic. Your demon energy is so pure I could vomit up all the crumbs I ate earlier!"

"Too pure? I don't understand."

Kar raises his finger. "Turtle. Like all humans, you are inexperienced at sensing mana, but monsters and demons are not. Your appearance may be that of a Demon Baron, but your mana's purity 'screams' louder than any Demon Emperor's. Big Boobs possesses overwhelming mana reserves, but the... the thickness of your mana makes me feel as if I have begun wading through a swamp. Butterfly, as a lower-class monster, cannot help but feel nauseous in your presence. Even with my power at the apex of Demon Dukes, I find it difficult to stand so close to you."

"Oh. I wasn't aware there were such huge differences between demon ranks. Are you saying if I walked up to a Keymaster, he'd know I was in disguise?"

"Hah! I'd be surprised if your mana wasn't already drawing the attention of every kobold and goblin for miles around! You won't make it ten steps before everyone suspects you of being a Hidden Emperor."

"I see. Wait, Hidden Emperor?"

Kar nods. "Former leaders of the other Six Hells. After Satan's Hell reigned supreme, they retreated to different corners of the Labyrinth, along with their fighting forces. Some of them live on secluded worlds, keeping away from the frontlines. They aren't any threat to you, as they would never band together and follow the orders of the Three Emperors."

Blinker nods sagely. "Yeah. Lots of bad blood."

"Why didn't anyone mention them to me before?" I ask. "I thought we only had to worry about Ose, Belial, and Diablo, along with the secretive First Emperor! Now you're telling me other Demon Emperors are lurking out there in the shadows?"

"Hurgh, yes, but I wouldn't worry about those guys," Kar says, shrugging. "I don't even know who they are. Few do. They keep to themselves."

"Right. Well, I guess that's heartening news..."

With a sigh, I return my attention to my, apparently, way-too-thick-and-pure demonic energy.

Hmm. How to solve this problem...?

"Analyze."

Having trained with Solomon for six years, I have come to learn that I sometimes have to think outside the box when it comes to my Wordsmithing's practical applications. By turning my analytical powers on myself, I manage to summon several numerical readings related to my mana's type, quality, reserves, and other such factors. Dozens of numbers and boxes hover in midair before me.

"Let's see... this number seems really high. Maybe if I try lowering it... Mana."

I fine-tune my mana, bit by bit, for several minutes, using Kar and Blinker as references. They offer helpful and not-so-helpful feedback, telling me whether my mana 'feels' right or wrong.

Eventually, Kar gives me a thumbs up. "That will do. Now you have pretty much the same mana as other Demon Barons!"

Blinker holds up her hand. "But wait! You can't just stroll up to a Keymaster and claim you're a Demon Baron they've never heard of! We need to come up with a rock-solid cover story! What kind of powers will you use? How will you convince him you're the genuine article? Etcetera!"

I nod. "Well, claiming I'm a demon who recently rose from Lord to Baron should be good enough to explain why nobody knows me. As for my powers... my telekinesis is passive, as is my telepathy. I gave myself those Wordsmithed abilities years ago. What else could I use to prove my identity?"

"Most demons have a whoooole bunch of elemental powers," Blinker explains. "If you could shoot fireballs or fart really hard, you could convince the Keymaster you're a bonafide Baron badass!"

"Um. Is farting considered... elemental magic?"

Kar nods, and a look of serenity appears in his eyes. "Yes. Gas manipulation."

"...Right."

With a shrug, I continue walking. Kar falls into step beside me, and we begin brainstorming how to deceive the Keymasters.

Elsewhere, in a nearby Hellish enclave.

Two gorgeous demonesses, both of them sharp-eyed hawks, lean casually against a wall in a room filled with dozens of lower-ranking grunts, a hundred goblins, and a few orcs. In the center of the room, two naked humans, a man, and a woman, wrestle each other for the amusement of everyone watching. They fight in a paint-outlined square, with the various monsters and demons standing on the outskirts, jeering and pumping their fists.

"Get her! Gut that bitch! I've got five clicks ridin' on this!"

"Haha! Ain't no way the guy's gonna win! He won't kill his precious wifey!"

"Fuck that! The bastard had better not throw the match! I'll teach his bitch a lesson if she wins!"

The male human wraps his arms around his much smaller counterpart. He puts her in a chokehold and presses her against the floor, but thanks to the mud coating their bodies, she manages to slip out of his grasp and land a kick to his groin. The male doubles over in pain, shooting a look of disbelief at his wife.

The two nearby demonesses, a Baron and a Warper, pay only the slightest attention to the crudely thrown-together match between slaves.

The Warper clicks her tongue. "Eugh. Mara, I'll never understand why others enjoy watching such silly contests of strength. The male will easily overpower his mate. Why waste time on such an uneven matchup?"

"Sister," The Baron, Mara says, rolling her eyes. "It's not that hard to understand. The match has nothing to do with skill and everything to do with torture. A few goblins found these two humans engaging in intercourse instead of working in the mines. After following them for a while, the goblins discovered they were a married couple, captured them, and brought them here. The fun comes from watching these two so-called 'lovers' tear each other for sport. The male instinctively wishes to protect his mate, giving the female a chance to turn the tables. However, if she wins, the orcs will defile her and unleash all manner of heinous, depraved acts upon her helpless form."

Mara continues. "Don't you see, Ying-Ying, dearest? The joy comes not from wondering who will win, but from watching the hope die in their eyes."

The Warper, Ying-Ying, raises her eyebrow. "Hope? What hope?"

"Open your mind. These humans have already lost their lives; they just don't know it yet. They desperately cling to the belief that they will find a way out of their predicament. However, no matter which one wins, the goblins will seize the woman, while the orcs will take the man. Their final hours will end with brutal, sexual violence. They will perish wishing they had died in the ring. Perhaps, if the male puts on a good show, his new owners might throw him into the Slaughterseum."

Ying-Ying leans forward to stare more closely at the two humans. The woman pounces on her husband and batters his face viciously, only for him to flip her over and return the favor in kind.

"Oh, I hadn't considered that possibility before. Now that you mention it, watching these two fight each other might be a little more interesting than I first thought."

Mara glances at her sister. Her eyes surreptitiously sweep across Ying-Ying's body as a devious smile appears on her face.

"Speaking of lovers and mates, I can't help but comment on your stunning red dress. Are you going on another date today?"

Ying-Ying blushes. She smoothes the front of her Chinese-style long-dress, one which boasts numerous golden tracings and flower patterns along its surface. "This old thing? I threw it on at the last minute. What about you? You're always wearing those weird, black robes. Don't you think that will turn off potential mates? You have to tease men if you want to catch their interest."

Mara snorts. "I don't have time to fraternize. With Operation Stormbringer on the horizon, my Tarot sect has been working overtime to craft new cards for me. I have to test each one, learn their weaknesses... it's such a drag."

Ying-Ying sprouts her own devious smile. "Ohoho? Don't you have any mates in mind? This silly little war against the fleshbags won't last much longer. You need to find yourself a high-status snack if you want to ascend to Duke."

Mara's expression flattens. "Do I? Ose didn't."

"Come now, even with all Ose's achievements, don't you find it odd she went from Baron to Emperor in one day?" Ying-Ying asks. "How much time did she spend with Diablo behind closed doors for that miracle to happen?"

"It's not odd; it's downright infuriating. I lived in Ose's shadow for millennia. I scraped myself from the womb of a broodmother, held my own against that damned Uriel when she last awakened, and all I earned for my sacrifices was the chance to watch Ose seize the title of Emperor right out from under me!"

"Ose wasn't the only title-thief," Ying-Ying says. "What about Beelzebub? He's a rising star! He went from Lord to Duke in only a month!"

"Screw Beelzebub," Mara hisses. "That arrogant little bastard ought to fall off a cliff. He thinks he's hot shit, just because he greased a few palms and sweet-talked the right people. How else could he gather enough souls to go from Lord to Duke so quickly? Don't even get me started on how he treats us Barons."

Ying-Ying blushes. "Oh, sure, Beelzebub is a jerk, but he's a hunk, too! Those dreamy eyes! I could listen to him tongue-lash me all day!"

Mara groans. "You focus on men way too much, sister. I can't wait for you to pair off with someone so we can calm those raging hormones."

The Baroness flips her long, fluffy blonde hair backward. She quickly ties it into a ponytail before pulling a hood over her head.

"Anyway. Forget all this talk of men and thieves. How is the Warper Guild handling their preparation for Stormbringer?"

Ying-Ying reaches inside the folds of her dress and pulls out a palm-sized notepad with numerous scribblings inside. She flips through it for a moment and sighs. "Oh, you know — same old, same old. The environmental shield on Tarus II prevents us from warping in and out of the humans' capital city. If Ose manages to bring it down, we'll be able to strike their flank, but until that happens, we'll have to deal with a terrain disadvantage."

Mara perks her ears up. "Oh? What sort?"

"The so-called 'Hero City' sits atop a flattened mountain bluff," Ying-Ying explains. "Sheer cliffs guard its edges, and the only ways up are via a few paths carved into the bluff. Goblins can scale the cliffs quite easily, and any demon possessing flight abilities won't have a problem getting inside. The same story is true for burrowers and Mephisto's undead. However, Warpers won't be any use. Something about the city's dome negates our teleportation powers."

Mara frowns. "I've never been to Tarus II. It's such a remote, out of the way world. Isn't it a nasty, desert wasteland?"

"No, no, silly!" Ying-Ying says. "It has forests, oceans, and a fairly mild day and night cycle. Once we quell the human uprising, we should vacation there sometime. This one member of my guild, Janus- you remember Janus, don't you?"

"Possibly. Wasn't he that albino you fawned over for a few years before unceremoniously dumping him?"

"Haha! Yes, that's the one! Ohh, the way he looked at me could send me into conniptions! Anyway, Janus took me to this pristine beach on Tarus II for a date once, and it was soooo romantic! We had the shoreline all to ourselves, and he had these cute little goblins playing saxophones to serenade me! If it weren't for his endowment problem, I might have married Janus right there and then!"

"No, you wouldn't," Mara sighs. "I know you, little sister. You change mates as often as you change your clothes. You'd have grown bored with him eventually and moved on to your next little fling."

"You're just jealous," Ying-Ying says, sticking out her tongue. "You can't get a guy, so you always have to insult my taste in men. What can I say? I'm a free-spirit. I like to enjoy life my way."

"I'm certainly happy for you, Ying-Ying dearest," Mara says, flashing a cute smile. "But I do worry you won't amount to anything if I don't push you out of your comfort zone. Cavorting with males is fun and all, but we demons must always strive to better our lot in life. After all, what higher purpose is there than becoming more powerful?"

"I can't work my way up the ranks unless I luck out and evolve into a Unique," Ying-Ying replies, a hint of bitterness in her voice. "And who's ever heard of a Warper evolving? We've got to be the worst Variants in existence."

"That's not true at all," Mara counters. "Without Warpers, Operation Stormbringer wouldn't even be possible. Your ability to send legions of monsters and demons to the frontlines is invaluable."

"It's my only ability," Ying-Ying pouts. She slumps against the wall and rests her head on Mara's shoulder. "At least Burners have other fire-abilities. At least they have a shot at evolving. I'm useless. I'll be stuck at the bottom of the rung forever."

Mara wraps an arm around her sister to comfort her. "There, there. At least you're not a Brute. Imagine if you'd ended up in some fat, wobbly body instead of your sexy temptress form. Why, your good looks make you practically half-succubus! Surely, that counts for something!"

"I guess."

The two sisters fall silent for a moment. Mara turns her attention toward the makeshift arena, where the male human howls at the top of his lungs and pounces at his wife. Rage appears in his eyes as he starts striking her, over and over, sending blood and teeth flying. "You stupid bitch! It's all your fault! This is all your fault!!"

With his mind broken, the human finally gives in to his baser animal instincts. He throttles the woman while she gurgles blood and begs for mercy. However, her pleas fall on deaf ears. The man screams at her, nonstop, berating her for his predicament.

Eventually, the life vanishes from his wife's eyes. The man wrings her neck for over a minute after she perishes, continuously cursing her name and blaming her for all the woes in his life.

Mara clicks her tongue. "Tsk. And there it is, sister. Do you see that? That's the reality of this world. There is no such thing as true love. It's nothing more than a passing phase in your life. That fleshbag abandoned his wife and yielded his so-called protective instincts, opting instead to save his own skin. Now he'll end up a gladiator in the Slaughterseum, where he probably won't last a day."

"So?" Ying-Ying says, pulling her head off Mara's shoulder. "Surely, you mustn't be implying demons are the same as fleshbags! Fleshbags are weak and pathetic, while demons are strong and resilient! I guarantee that if Beelzebub chose me as a mate, we'd never betray each other!"

"Hmm. I wonder about that," Mara murmurs. "Us being strong, and them being weak, I mean. I had to attend a Council meeting a couple of weeks ago. Bael started talking about the fleshbags, and, um..."

Mara trails off for a moment before shaking her head.

"No, I shouldn't say. It's not my place to discuss Council meetings with outsiders."

Immediately, a spark of intrigue appears in Ying-Ying's eyes. She pulls away from her sister and grabs her hands. "What?! You got to sit in on a Council meeting?! Ohmygosh! Sis, you have to tell me all about it! Did you get to talk to Beelzebub? What about the Duke of Pain? What was everyone talking about? Tell me, tell me, tellmetellme!!"

Mara scowls. "Devils. Calm down, little sister. The Council meetings are private. I shouldn't even bring them up in front of you."

Ying-Ying instantly deflates. "Oh, come on. I tell you everything... why can't you just do this one thing for me? I'll keep quiet. I won't tell anyone! Not a soul."

"It's not that simple," Mara mutters. "Operation Stormbringer is a sensitive subject. Besides, after that damned Hydra suddenly appeared on Tarus II, Ose's been breathing down everyone's necks looking for the traitor-"

"Ohmygosh! A Hydra?! I thought they went extinct!" Ying-Ying squeals. "What happened with the Hydra? What did it do? You HAVE to tell me, Mara!"

"No! Blast everything, sis, if I leak any information to you, the whole Labyrinth will know what happened before the Goblins wake up."

"You are SUCH a stick in the mud sometimes," Ying-Ying pouts. "You keep giving me all these hints, but you're too afraid of Ose to tell me what else happened! I need the deets, sis!"

Mara frowns. "I'm... I'm not afraid of Ose."

"Yeaaah, you are," Ying-Ying says, rolling her eyes. "It's written on your face, plain as day."

"I'm not!" Mara says, finally losing her cool. "You don't get to call me a scaredy-cat! After all the ways you've... you've..."

Mara's speech slows to a halt.

She narrows her eyes and frowns. After a moment, she flicks her eyes toward one of the far walls of the giant makeshift wrestling chamber.

"Sis?" Ying-Ying asks. "What's wrong?"

"Quiet," Mara hisses. "That monster's energy is coming closer again."

"You mean the traitorous Sphinx?" Ying-Ying asks. "Ugh. I could practically smell the stench of the Hero on him last time. Let's go. I'll jump us over to Quadrant 115 this time."

The Warper demoness motions with her hands and starts to summon a magical portal to another area of the Labyrinth. However, Mara shakes her head.

"No, wait. Something's different. Not only do I sense the energy of the Sphinx, but a Demon Baron as well."

"You do?" Ying-Ying asks. "Who?"

"I'm not certain. They could be a man or a woman. Whoever they are, their mana is different from the Barons I know, and I thought I'd met all of them. Hmm. Let me try a card-reading."

Mara closes her eyes. She takes a long, deep breath, then begins making a series of slow, deliberate hand motions.

"Bird, ox, hare. I summon three destiny cards to predict my future."

Ying-Ying watches her sister with rapt attention. The moment Mara finishes her incantation, three swirls of mana materialize before her, revealing blood-red playing cards hovering in midair. The three cards glow and pulse for several moments as their bloody exterior loses its luster. Mara holds out her hand, and all three of them drop to the ground and land on the floor noiselessly.

Ying-Ying sucks in a sharp breath. "Three whole destiny cards? Look at you, going all-out. Why exercise so much caution? I thought summoning destiny cards cost you a lot of mana."

"They do," Mara replies, her voice even. "Let's see what the cards have to say."

Mara drops to one knee, reaches down, and flips the first card over.

"Hmm. The Cobra. Interesting."

After a moment, she flips the next card.

"Oh, oh!" Ying-Ying yells. She hops in excitement. "A heart card! That means true love!!"

Mara's expression darkens. "No. This one is a bloody heart. That means grave danger."

Without saying another word, Mara flips the third card over.

This time, both women fall silent.

After a minute, Ying-Ying hesitantly speaks. "A... a twig?"

"No. An olive branch. How strange. I've never seen this combination before."

Mara rubs her forehead in confusion.

"The snake represents a great lie. Whenever it has appeared, I ended up facing some terrible deception in my immediate future. The bloody heart represents danger. Since it is the second card, that means a great lie will precede a terrible calamity."

Ying-Ying nods. "Right. So, we should get out of here."

"No, that's not all," Mara says, her frown deepening. "I've seen the snake and bloody heart in multi-card sessions before. However, the Olive Branch is not a card I see often. It indicates an act of generosity, or a moment of empathy. It represents an enemy who will accede some important point in my favor. However, for it to follow a lie and a great danger... what could this mean?"

"Are your cards ever wrong?" Ying-Ying asks.

"No. However, they are incredibly vague. I only understand their intent thanks to my magic, but not their specific meaning. Since I created them in response to the Sphinx's appearance, I should exercise tremendous caution when dealing with him. No doubt, he is a monster of tremendous intellect, capable of weaving a web of lies. For some reason, he has come to us with the intent of reaching Hell Harbor."

"How do you know all that?" Ying-Ying asks.

"You are one of the few Warpers tasked with the role of protecting our homeworld. For the Sphinx to continuously seek you out, what other reason might he have?"

Ying-Ying shrugs. "Maybe he's heard of my stunning beauty and wants to say hello?"

"Right. That must be his intent," Mara says with a sigh. She rises to her feet and motions with her hands, scattering the three Destiny Cards to the void. "Well, if the Sphinx wants to pop over, then let's give him a warm welcome. Keep your magic at the ready. We'll need a swift escape if he attacks."

"You've got it," Ying-Ying says, flashing a cheerful grin.

Both sisters fall silent. They watch as the goblins and orcs haul off the human woman's dead body, then begin praising the human male for his fighting spirit. However, the man breaks down in tears, unable to believe the brutal manner in which he killed his wife.

Time passes.

The monsters chain the human and lead him away, only to bring out two more male prisoners. Both men, apparently brothers, engage in a second set of violent fisticuffs, getting the spectators' blood boiling.

"Rip his fuckin' head off!" One Demon Grunt yells. "Get 'im in the eyes! No, the eyes, ya stupid cunt!"

"Come on, you lousy fleshies!" A Goblin howls. "Me needs a win to get outta garbage duty!"

As the minutes pass, Mara's body language becomes increasingly tense. Eventually, she flicks her eyes toward a large doorway at the end of the hall.

"They've arrived."

From behind the door, A huge, ten-foot-tall reptile emerges, towering over the goblins nearest the entrance. His presence immediately grabs everyone's attention, drawing their gazes away from the thrown-together pit fight.

"Oy! That... that guy's the bloody Sphinx!"

"No way! The Monster King! He's even bigger in person!"

Looks of surprise and awe flash across the faces of the demons and monsters present. A path emerges before Kar as he strides forward, his chest puffed out.

"I haven't had breakfast, yet," Kar growls. "If any of you punks gets in my way, expect that to change."

"Sure thing, mister Sphinx, sir!" One kobold yelps. The furry monster slinks backward and retreats into the crowd, afraid the Monster King's sights might fall on him.

Kar marches with purpose as he crosses the room. He beelines straight for the two demonesses, both of whom immediately go on guard as they sense the overwhelming magical energy emanating from his body.

"Devils, I hope we don't have to fight this fellow," Ying-Ying mutters.

"Agreed," Mara replies, her voice low.

Kar crosses the room and arrives before both women, towering more than four feet above them. He folds his arms behind his back and flashes a toothy grin. "Hurgh. Hello, ladies. I've come to bargain."

Before either demoness can reply, their eyes lower from Kar's grinning face to a much less impressive, significantly smaller Demon Baron standing beside him.

However, the male Baron's stunning visage, a mixture of elegance and power, immediately commands their attention.

Mara's eyes narrow, while Ying-Ying's widen.

"Who in the Hell is this guy?" Mara asks.

Ying-Ying squeals in delight. "A total stud; my future mate! I call dibs!!"

Author note: Check out the artwork for Mara and Ying-Ying!

This is Mara and Ying-Ying!

THE CRYOPOD
TO HELL
MWTX
STUDIOS

Part 209: Olive Branch

As the Monster King and his Baron-level sidekick slow to a stop, Mara's eyes immediately snap to the newcomer. Her gaze hardens as she scrutinizes him from head to toe.

The young Baron wears a simple black cloak, one mirroring Mara's. A hood rests over his face, concealing his thin and wispy blond hair, further echoing Mara's appearance. Were one to see the two of them side by side, they might believe the newcomer was a member of Mara's family.

Mara purses her lips. Hm. Now here's a Baron I've never seen before, and I've met them all.

"You there," Mara says, gesturing to the handsome devil standing across from her. "Who are you? What is your name and title? I know every Baron in the Labyrinth, so don't even try to lie to me."

The young Baron smooths his hair back. He slowly blinks at Mara, almost as if seducing her.

"Now, now. There's no need to become hostile, Mara, Baron of Games. I'm just a simple Baron, newly risen thanks to His Eminence's magic. The grand and magnificent Kar, King of all Monsters, has blessed me with a small portion of his might, allowing me to ascend from a lowly Lord to the prestigious rank of Baron."

Mara's gaze hardens even further. She glances at Kar while raising an eyebrow. "Is this true, Monster King? Did you raise a Lord to the rank of Baron with your magic?"

Kar crosses his arms. "Hurgh. I did. Why? Did I break one of your laws?"

"No," Mara replies. She glances at Ying-Ying, noting the stars in her sister's eyes. "It's not that. There are no rules stating monsters and demons cannot trade mana. However... I have always been under the impression that monster and demon mana was incompatible."

A flicker of movement flies off Kar's shoulder. Only now does Mara notice the tiny little fairy woman perched atop the Crocodile's arm. Blinker flies over and waves at Mara cheerfully. "Hi, hi! That's where you're wrong, silly! Anything is possible with fairy magic!"

"Fairy magic? Who are you?" Mara asks, her confusion apparent.

As Blinker speaks, she makes a hand flapping motion at the Baron of Games, irritating Mara further. "Don't you know? I'm the Monster Queen, wife of the Last Crocodile! My name is Blinker, and don't you forget it, sister!"

"And my name is Smithy, the Baron of Prediction," the young Demon Baron beside Kar says. He bows slightly, showing deference to his senior. "I am but a humble servant of the great and mighty Kar, heir of the Sphinx's power. I have sworn a vow to serve him until the day I die."

Before Mara can reply, her sister steps forward and jerks out her hand. "Nice to meet you, Mister Smithy! I'm Ying-Ying! Are you single? I'm single! I like to blow bubbles and dance under the sun! How about you? What sorts of hobbies are you into?!"

Ying-Ying babbles wildly, her mouth racing at a hundred miles an hour. However, Smithy merely smiles politely, showing little reaction to her eager and over-the-top greeting. "Haha, how wonderful. I am with mate, as it happens. She has expressed openness to other relationships under certain conditions, but we mustn't rush. You and I barely know each other, and I only exist to serve my Master."

"Psh, no kidding! I should've guessed you had a mate! I mean, just look at you! I bet you beat the ladies off with a stick! I have the same problem, given my stunning good looks! The males line up all day trying to pound down my door, but like I always say, I must wait for the perfect guy!"

The more Ying-Ying talks, the more Mara's eyes begin to twitch. What nonsense are you blabbering about now, sister?! You fornicate with a new boy-toy every week! Don't spit all that garbage about chastity and- bah! Never mind. Let her keep that Baron occupied. I've other business to worry about.

Mara casts aside further thoughts of the Baron of Prediction, opting to turn her sights on the Monster King. "Forgive my rudeness, as well as my sister's, Monster King-"

"It's just Kar," Kar says. "Hurgh. There is no need to be so formal."

Mara shakes her head. "I disagree. Given how you've followed my sister and me through the Labyrinth for the last few weeks, I must presume you intend to enter Hell Harbor. Doing so requires specific authorizations for one who has never traveled there before. Isn't that the long and short of it?"

Kar glances at his wife as she continues to flutter around Mara, peering at the blonde-haired demoness's long, flowing locks of hair, only a few of which spill out from her hooded face. "Hurgh. You have guessed well. My slave- I mean, my assistant and I, must travel to meet your current reigning Emperor, Ose. I come on behalf of the Hero, who sent me to discuss a variety of topics with your leader."

Mara's scowl fades somewhat. "The Hero. I sensed his foul magic trailing after you for the past several days. Why hasn't he come along? Why send you and this little upstart Baron over here?"

Kar spreads out his arms while baring a toothy grin. "Hurgh. Every time we drew near, you fled, along with the Keymaster. The Hero is a kind person, someone who does not harbor any ill intent for your people. He decided it would be best if he allowed my assistant and me to go on by ourselves. We don't want to startle you, after all."

Mara taps on her lips thoughtfully. She meets Kar's gaze for a moment before narrowing her eyes to slits.

"Jason Hiro is the current leader of humanity. His ability is called Wordsmithing, is it not?"

Kar nods. "Hurgh. You have heard correctly."

"Wordsmithing. Hmm."

Slowly, Mara's eyes travel to Kar's right, where Ying-Ying continues yapping the ear off her newfound Baron crush.

"-pink! It's such a great color, so full of vibrancy and love! Of course, I like red more, because demons are red, and so is blood! Nothing like a delicious Blood Soup to wake me up in the morning! Don't you agree?"

Smithy winces. "...Yes. I suppose some... some Blood Soup can hit the spot on occasion... haha..."

Gears turn in Mara's head as she stares at the distracted Baron of Prediction.

Wordsmithing, eh? And this demon's name is Smithy. Hehe. Do I look like I was born yesterday?

Mara's eyes bolt open. She snarls at the young Baron, ignoring the Monster King. "Smithy! Who do you think you're fooling? Do you honestly expect me to believe you're some no-name demon granted the rank of Baron by a monster?! Preposterous!"

Blinker, hovering by Mara's right side, stares with wide-eyes at the Baron of Games. "W-what do you mean? Smithy didn't lie!"

Ying-Ying turns to scowl at Mara. "Jeez, sis! What are you on about this time? Can't you see I'm trying to make some moves over here? Stop throwing off my mojo!"

"No. I won't," Mara says, her voice deadly calm. "I see now that this Smithy is a pretender. He's no servant of the Monster King."

Smithy gently pushes aside Ying-Ying. "I beg your pardon? Would you mind explaining?"

"It's simple," Mara says, the corner of her lips curling into a tight smile. "The Hero wields a power known as Wordsmithing, and you call yourself Smithy. I've never heard such a ridiculous name for a Baron in all my life! What else are you if not a liar?"

Mara swivels her head toward Kar. "You did not boost this demon with your magic. The Hero did! He used his Wordsmithing to turn some Lord into a Baron! You intend to take this 'Smithy' behind our lines and gather intel for your human leader! Admit it!"

As Mara speaks, the Baron of Prediction glances at Kar, and Kar back at him. Both men share a knowing look, as if speaking to each other with their eyes.

Kar rests his hands on his hips. "Hurgh. You've guessed well, Baron of Games. I should have expected as much from the leader of the Tarot Sect."

"Yes, very well done," Smithy replies, his voice low. "But you're wrong about two things. I'm not a spy, and my power does come from the Monster King."

Mara gnashes her teeth. "Bah! You cannot expect us to grant you entry to Hell Harbor while spouting off such feeble lies!"

"I am no liar," Smithy says, gently placing his hand on his chest. "Jason Hiro merely helped alter the mana from His Eminence's aperture into mine, then converted it to something my demonic body could handle. You might not know this, but the Hero's mana reserves are quite low. He does not possess nearly enough energy to compete with the average Demon Lord, let alone Barons, Dukes, and Emperors. Only someone with deep reserves, such as King Kar, could grant me my current title."

Kar nods sagely. He closes his eyes and sighs. "Hurgh. I can grant a Lord the power of a Baron, but I cannot grant a Baron the power of a Duke. To attempt such a feat would drain me of all my mana. I might perish if I were to even try."

Mara's steadfast conviction falters. She chews her lower lip for a moment while glancing between the Baron and Crocodile. "Is... is that so? Hm. Your words make some modicum of sense, but how am I to know if you are telling the truth? I cannot allow a demon tainted by Holy Magic to enter my people's capitol."

While Mara voices her concerns, Ying-Ying slithers over to her sister's side and whispers something in her ear.

Mara nods.

"Hm. Yes, that is a fair point. A conductive test would expose any lingering heroic energy contained within Smithy's body."

Smithy raises his eyebrows. "Hm? What's this about a test? Do you need to take my temperature?"

Mara chuckles. "Haha. No, don't be absurd. Unless I determine you and the Monster King lack all traces of Holy Energy, I won't allow you to enter Hell Harbor. It's as simple as that. If you're still dead-set on arranging an audience with Emperor Ose, you'll have to submit to a few magical tests to clear your names."

"Now, hold on just a minute!" Blinker yells, as she flies over and hovers next to ara's face. "Who are you to treat us like criminals?! We're famous people, you know! Way more than you! Kar could snap you like a twig!"

Mara rolls her eyes. "If the Monster King attacks my sister or me, he'll be lucky to make it back to the Core in one piece, let alone travel to Hell Harbor. You need my sister to open the gate, and you need a high-ranking demon, such as myself, to authorize your travel. Piss off one of us, and you can kiss your audience with our Emperor buh-bye."

The Baron of Games exposes a sinister smirk. She spreads her arms and leans forward. "Attack me if you dare. I may not have enough strength to defeat you, but you'll find my powers more than adequate for ensuring my survival while punishing your impudence."

Kar holds up one of his claws. "Hurgh. There is no need for us to resort to violence. My sla- err, assistant, will submit to whatever tests you like, as will I. However, don't break his arms. If he can't deliver my coffee in the morning, I'll be awfully sad."

Smithy's right eye twitches. "Truly, my master's benevolence knows no limits."

Mara nods. "This won't take long. Smithy, I want you to start by demonstrating your powers for me."

Smithy sighs. "Fine, but only because Master Kar ordered me to do so."

Smithy closes his eyes for a moment, then holds his palm out, upright.

Foop!

A ballpoint pen appears in midair mere inches above the Baron of Prediction's hand. It lands in his palm without making a sound.

"If you wish to see my powers in action, I'll need this."

Mara crosses her arms. "Oh? Is that some sort of magical implement?"

Smithy shakes his head. "It's a pen."

Ying-Ying raises her hand. "Ooh! Ooh! It's a magical pen though, right?"

"No," Smithy sighs. "It's just a pen. An ordinary one."

Mara cocks her head slightly. "Alright. You have piqued my curiosity. Continue your exhibition."

The Baron of Prediction nods. He turns to Ying-Ying and smiles. "If you don't mind, I'd like your assistance to verify my powers."

"Huh? Me?" Ying-Ying asks, confusion trickling into her voice. "Why do you need my help?"

Instead of replying, Smithy holds out his palm again. This time, a five-inch notepad pops into existence above his hand and lands in his palm. He stays silent and begins furiously scribbling a series of sentences in the notepad. After five minutes, he nods. "That will do. Miss Ying-Ying, if you would be so kind, please take this notepad and give it a read. Don't tell your sister about its contents; just keep them to yourself for now."

Ying-Ying's confusion doubles as she nods, takes the notepad, and flicks her eyes across its contents. "Huh...? But... how are you going to get Mara-"

"Now, now," Smithy says. He presses a finger against Ying-Ying's lips, shushing her mid-sentence. His touch causes Ying-Ying to blush and stammer, but she quickly falls silent.

After a few moments, Smithy turns to Mara.

"Baron of Games. Let's make this a little more interesting. You tell me about your powers, and I'll tell you about mine."

Mara frowns. "That wasn't part of our agreement."

"I know, but why not humor me? Come, now, we're both Barons. There's no need to be embarrassed if your abilities don't match up to mine."

Mara immediately uncrosses her arms. She takes a step toward Smithy, fury in her eyes. "What was that? Do you honestly think you can say something so insulting and get away with it?!"

"Whoa, now," Smithy says, holding up both hands in a feigned surrender. "It seems I hit a little too close to home. How about this: Why not tell me something personal about yourself? For example, how many moles do you have on your back?"

Mara's eyes grow as wide as saucers. She stares at the Baron of Prediction with open-mouthed outrage. "H-h-how many m-moles I have...?! What kind of absurd-"

"Seven, correct?" Smithy asks.

The Baron of Games averts her eyes. Her cheeks flush deep-red as waves of embarrassment wash over her. "No!! How would you even know something like that? Have you been spying on me?!"

Smithy sighs. "Of course not. Haven't you tried to hazard any guesses about my powers? Are my abilities not given away by my title? Take a look at your sister's face. She'll confirm their validity for you."

In between flashes of rage and humiliation, Mara glances at Ying-Ying, only to see that her sister has even wider eyes than herself!

"It's all on here!" Ying-Ying says, as she scans Smithy's writing. "Every word you and Smithy spoke- he put it all in this notepad!"

"What? How?" Mara asks. Without hesitation, she walks over and snatches the notepad from her sister's grasp. "That's impossible. Not even the best Oracles could do such a-"

Mara stares at the notepad for several long, drawn-out seconds. Her pupils slowly dilate as waves of adrenaline surge through her body.

I will turn to Mara and say: "Baron of Games. Let's make this a little more interesting. You tell me about your powers, and I'll tell you about mine."

She will reply: "That wasn't part of our agreement."

Then, I will say: "I know, but why not humor me? Come, now, we're both Barons. There's no need to be embarrassed if your abilities don't match up to mine."

A dozen or so sentences detail Mara and Smithy's entire conversation. The more she reads, the more her heart palpitates.

Mara will start to get frustrated. She will say: "What? How?" And then she will take the notebook from you. Immediately following, she will say: "That's impossible. Not even the best Oracles could do such a-" and fall silent mid-sentence. By then, she will have begun reading this notepad.

The notebook ends on that line.

Sweat drips down Mara's face as she stares at the impossibly precise prediction, with thousands of thoughts running through her head.

Seven Hells! I thought this Baron of Prediction might have a few interesting abilities, but to be able to gaze into the future is not something I ever thought possible! Not even the Oracles can peer behind the curtain of time!

Mara swallows her saliva to taste the dryness of her mouth.

"You... you predict the future. That's why your title is the Baron of Prediction. Smithy, how did you manage to evolve such a powerful ability?!"

Mara raises her eyes from the notepad, only to see Smithy awkwardly shuffling his feet.

"W-well, ahem, I don't actually see the future, Mara. That's not how my magic works."

"What nonsense are you speaking?" Mara asks, her jumbled thoughts becoming even more chaotic every second. "What is your power, if not the gift of divination?!"

"I do predict things," Smithy says, waggling a finger. "But my power revolves around deductions and logic, not foresight in the sense you imagine. After speaking to you for several minutes, I gathered information about your personality and mannerisms, and then I deduced how you would respond to anything I asked."

Smithy sighs. "For me, deductions are as easy as opening and closing my eyes. If you and I were to fight, you would find out how terrifying my ability can be."

Mara slowly drops her arms to her sides. She nods along to Smithy's words, not entirely understanding his meaning. "But... even if you predicted my responses, how could you guess the number of moles on my back? I don't even know how many I have!"

Smithy smiles. "I don't know either. I simply guessed the number seven because it sounded good. I knew you would deny any number I invented, so it didn't matter which one I picked. You not knowing the number either was a lucky bonus!"

"Wow! Wowee!!" Ying-Ying yells. "Ohmygosh, you're so cool! Your power is amazing! Can you predict things about me, too?!"

Smithy shrugs. "Sure."

"Great! What's my favorite color?"

Smithy raises his eyebrow. "...Red."

"Wow!! You're amazing! You didn't even bat an eye! Wait... wait a minute! You cheated! I told you my favorite color already!!"

"Ying-Ying, please," Mara mutters, exasperation in her voice. "Now isn't the time for this conversation. I need to continue my test."

Ying-Ying groans. "But whyyy? Smithy already passed! What more do you want from him?"

"No, he didn't," Mara says. She regains her bearings and takes a few steps back, keeping a lingering eye on the Baron of Prediction. "My test was supposed to detect the presence of holy energy in his body. However, Smithy's predictive ability doesn't release any mana whatsoever. I have yet to confirm his demonic purity."

Smithy claps his hands. "Oh, right! Well, if all you wanted was to sense my demonic energy, you should have said so! I can bring it out for you right now."

Without waiting for Mara's reply, Smithy extends his hand toward the notepad still clutched in Mara's palm. Despite the ten-foot gap separating both Baron's, Mara's heart nearly jumps out of her chest when the notepad vanishes from her grasp and reappears in Smithy's, all without him physically taking it from her.

"Yoink, haha!" Smithy laughs. "See? How about that? Did you sense my mana?"

Once again, a dazed expression appears on Mara's face. She shakes her head slowly, unable to process the notepad's disappearance. "Ah... yes. But what power did you use just now?"

"I call it the 'Sneaky Yoink'!" Smithy says. "I can move things to and from my hands. Pretty neat, right?"

Mara glances at her sister, then back to Smithy. "Isn't that teleportation? Like what the Warpers use?"

Smithy shrugs. "Probably?"

"You're quite the jack-of-all-trades," Mara murmurs. "Any other abilities?"

"A few," Smithy says. "But a magician never reveals his secrets. I've held up my end of the bargain. Go ahead and test my Master now."

Mara starts to protest. "But, I still have questions-"

"And we're still on a tight timetable," Smithy replies, dismissing her concerns. "After we speak to Ose, I'd be open to goofing around later. Right now, a hammer hangs in the air between the humans and demons. Should it fall, millions, billions, perhaps even trillions will die. Your curiosity comes second to saving lives."

Crestfallen, Mara merely nods and sighs. Her shoulders slump as she turns to face Kar and Blinker.

"Uhm, well, Smithy isn't wrong. Would both of you kindly demonstrate your magic for me? We might as well get this over with."

Kar scowls at the Baron of Games. "Hurgh! If I didn't know any better, I might think my presence bored you! Do you not understand who I am? I am the mightiest monster in the Labyrinth! How many Duke-level monsters have you ever met, little Peaches?"

"Not many," Mara admits. "Perhaps three. Bahamut was among them, but her physical strength surely paled in comparison to yours. Were it not for her adept enslavement of other beings; she would not have held much clout among Hell's denizens."

"Exactly," Kar replies, as his scowl shifts to a braggadocious grin. "I'm the top gator around here. You'd better open your eyes and pay attention, 'cause I'm about to put on a show like nothin' you've seen before!"

Blinker lands on Kar's shoulder and crosses her arms. "Sweetie, please don't embarrass me like you did last time."

"I'd never do such a thing," Kar replies.

"Yeah. You would."

Blinker sulks in silence while Kar stretches his arms. The giant crocodile ignores his wife's concerns as he begins weaving a series of magical signs.

Suddenly, he vanishes.

Kar launches himself toward the far wall at sub-sonic speeds. His instant acceleration startles the monsters in the room, who have all but ignored the 'demon business' happening in the far corner. Many of them jerk their heads to the side as a deafening explosion blasts throughout the small, makeshift arena, the entire sector shudders, and a shockwave flings everyone off their feet. Even Mara and her sister stumble and trip, landing on their asses with looks of astonishment on their faces.

Kar follows-up by leaping into the air and rapid-punching toward the floor. Each swing of his arms sends mana rushing forward, which erupts in dazzling explosions of dirt and rock. The Labyrinth's firm ground, made from magically compacted soil, crumbles under his relentless power.

Boom! Boom!

Hundreds, even thousands of pounds of the Labyrinth's foundation, go flying in every direction, burying the monsters and demons present under an avalanche of debris. Some monsters take cover to protect themselves from Kar's hailstorm, but many do not.

After a full minute of ceaselessly hovering in the sky and punching the air, Kar finishes his demonstration and abruptly stops. The cacaphony of thunder disappears as quickly as it began, and Kar falls to the ripped-up floor below, landing on his feet with a hard thud.

The room falls silent. Several hundred monsters begin clawing their way out of Kar's landslide, but many others need assistance from their friends to escape.

The Monster King grins like an idiot as he surveys the chaos surrounding him. He rests one claw on his hip while turning to the Baron of Games. "Hurgh. How was that?"

Mara shakily pulls herself to her feet. She helps her sister up as well, and both of them dust off their clothes. "You... you didn't have to unleash such raw, destructive power! Look at the mess you've created!"

Kar shrugs. "That's why you have goblins; to clean up in my wake."

Mara starts to retort, only to glance to her left, where Smithy stands, a circle of perfection surrounding him. Unlike the rest of the room, which was swallowed up by Kar's destruction, the Baron of Prediction stands in the same spot as before, his immediate surroundings untouched. He leans against the wall with a bored expression on his face, as if he hadn't just witnessed an incredible display of Duke-level strength.

"You!" Mara balks. "You didn't get knocked around by the Monster King's attacks?"

"Nope."

"...Why not?"

Smithy sticks his pinky in his ear. "I've seen more impressive feats. If you think Kar's strength is wild, you should see what the Hero can do. It would blow your mind."

Ying-Ying walks over and pokes Smithy's arm. "Wow. You aren't faking confidence or anything! Did you summon a barrier to protect yourself?"

"Something like that," Smithy replies, keeping his answer neutral. "Anyway, did we pass? Are we cleared to enter Hell Harbor?"

Mara stares at the Baron of Prediction for several moments. Her laser-like gaze threatens to bore a hole in the side of Smithy's head, but he doesn't react at all.

Finally, Mara sighs. "Whatever. I've done my part. Unless the Monster Queen is hiding holy energy in her tiny little body, you three can enter Hell Harbor. Ugh. Cleaning up this mess is going to cost me dearly."

Smithy cocks his head slightly. "In what way?"

"You don't know?" Mara asks. "I oversaw today's tests, and failed to provide a suitable chamber for testing the Monster King. As such, I'll need to pay for the Labyrinth's repairs with Soul tokens. How long have you lived among fleshbags to forget such basic information?"

"Oh, Soul Tokens," Smithy says, nodding. "I misunderstood your meaning. I was only a Lord until recently, so I didn't have much use for, uh, those."

Ying-Ying glances at Mara in confusion. "What does he mean, sister? I thought all demons needed Soul Tokens to pay for things. Isn't that how we earn the right to reach higher ranks?"

Mara frowns. "It is. Smithy, how could you become a Lord without using Soul Tokens? All demons need them. You need one thousand souls to become a Lord in the first place, so how could you not know of their existence?"

Smithy's expression twists noticeably. For the first time since his arrival, he appears at a loss for words. He pulls away from the wall and starts rubbing his chin.

"Ah, well, you see... well, it's like this..."

The Baron of Prediction scrunches up his forehead and begins to sweat profusely. As he does, Mara's suspicions deepen.

"Smithy? You're starting to worry me. Answer my question. All demons need Soul Tokens, so how could you not know of their existence?"

Before Smithy can answer, Blinker flies over and interrupts him. "Oh, geez! It's fine; you can tell the lady! There's no reason to hide your powers."

Smithy blinks twice. A look of surprise appears on his face. "Huh? Tell her what? I don't follow."

Blinker lands on Smithy's shoulder and whispers something in his ear. As she does, a look of relief passes over the Baron's face.

"Oh. Oh! Right, yes. How could I forget? Haha. I'm such an airhead sometimes."

The young Baron blushes in embarrassment as he returns his attention to Mara. "Right, so, I never needed Soul Tokens in the first place. I can, uh, take human souls without using the River Styx."

Mara's frown intensifies. "Oh? You're just one big surprise after another, aren't you? How can you obtain souls on your own? Tell me."

Smithy shrugs. "Well, have you heard of Soulfire?"

Mara nearly jumps out of her skin. "Soulfire?! How could you possibly possess such a unique ability, in addition to all the others you've demonstrated today?! Few demons know this, but the fact Beelzebub uses it was considered a high-level secret among the upper ranks! For you to wield it as well is simply inconceivable!"

Smithy nods. "Yes. You're right. I don't possess Soulfire."

Mara's heartrate quickly normalizes as she breathes a sigh of relief. "You don't? Devils. Don't scare me like that. Forget entering Hell Harbor; I'd have to report you to Emperor Ose post-haste if you-"

"I have a similar ability, though," Smithy says, interrupting Mara. "I can take the souls of other beings under, erm, specific conditions."

Mara swallows her words. A flash of anger washes over her face. "Damn you! Stop toying with me! This is no time for jokes, Smithy! Bypassing the River of Souls is a high crime among our people! If you don't explain yourself right this instant..."

Smithy glances at Blinker as she sits on his shoulder. A look of annoyance passes over his face. "A high crime, you say?"

"Yes," Mara replies. "The foundation of demon society rests on doling out a limited number of souls to the most deserving and promising talents. We can't allow demons to reap souls on their own, lest they kill too many fleshbags and stifle the flow of new arrivals into the River Styx. The only reason Beelzebub got away with using Soulfire was because of his status as Agares' pupil, plus a healthy dose of nepotism. For a young, unknown figure like yourself, the punishment will be quite severe."

As Mara speaks, Ying-Ying wrings her hands while looking both confused and disoriented. "Uwah! Smithy, darling! You can't be a criminal, right? Tell me it's not true!"

Exasperated, Smithy shrugs his shoulders. "I didn't, uh, realize taking souls without permission was a crime. Damn. This complicates things. That's what I get for running my mouth."

Blinker facepalms. "It's my fault. I should have remembered before telling you."

"No, don't blame yourself. You're a monster, not a demon. You probably aren't aware of the intricacies of their society."

Mara stares at Smithy as he converses with the fairy on his shoulder. As he speaks, a soft tingling appears in the back of her mind.

Before Kar and Smithy came here, I placed three Tarot Cards in anticipation of their arrival. The cards warned me of a great danger, a terrible lie, and an extension of good faith.

However, what lie, and what danger did they refer to?

So far, while he has been somewhat evasive, Smithy's fibs have been little more than little white lies. Hardly worth mentioning. Kar's demonstration was only a bit dangerous, nothing that would have endangered my life.

What crucial detail am I missing? Why can't I shake the feeling that I shouldn't trust these three with the keys to Hell Harbor?

As Mara thinks, her sister, Ying-Ying, pipes up. "Smithy? What do you mean by 'their society?' Don't you mean 'our society?' You're a demon too, silly!"

Smithy pauses his conversation with Blinker. A strange, distant look appears on his face, as if he's just realized a terrible mistake. "Oh. Hm, yeah. You're right. A slip of the tongue on my part."

Mara's heart skips a beat.

How could Smithy make such a silly mistake? What self-respecting demon would refer to his people in the third-person?

Unless...

Wait. A crucial detail.

Have I overlooked something, after all?

Puzzle pieces click into place in Mara's mind.

Spawn of a broodmother. I have. How could I be so stupid? Jason Hiro is a Wordsmith. He can make anything happen by speaking a single word. Why would he boost a demon, even someone he considered an ally, to take his place, when he could change his appearance via Wordsmithing instead?

Devils! Have I uncovered his scheme?! The damned Wordsmith didn't leave! He must have disguised himself as a demon! It's no wonder this 'Smithy' doesn't know about Soul Tokens! It's no wonder he refers to demons as if he isn't one of them, because he's not!

Smithy is Jason Hiro, the Wordsmith, in disguise! My sister and I are in great danger after all!! The filthy bastard has been lying to us the whole time! He's-

As Mara finishes assembling the puzzle and takes a step back to re-evaluate it, Smithy suddenly turns to look at her.

A cold, icy dread washes over the demoness.

Inside her mind, a second voice appears.

[Damn. You figured it out.]

Smithy? No! Jason Hiro?!

[That's right.]

You're reading my thoughts! You're a devil-damned telepath!

Mara opens her mouth to warn Ying-Ying. However, before she can utter a single syllable, Smithy speaks.

"Silence. Suppress. Bind."

In an instant, all of Mara's instincts fail her. Before she has a chance to defend herself, an invisible clamp grabs her throat and squeezes it, preventing her from speaking. Her body seizes up, preventing her from moving, while chains formed from mana grab her arms and bind them behind her. Unable to perform magical signs, the Baron stands motionless, unable to speak.

Jason Hiro, the Wordsmith posed as a Demon Baron, repeats the same three words, but aimed at Ying-Ying. She, too, turns as stiff as a statue, powerless to resist his magic.

Both women stare at the Demon Baron, wide-eyed with fear. Unable to speak, they can't do anything but look at each other and back at the Wordsmith.

Jason Hiro maintains his demonic appearance. He glances behind the girls at the still-disoriented monsters pulling themselves from the rubble on the opposite side of the room.

"Mirage. Distraction. There. Now nobody will bother us."

Mara's heartrate triples. It bounces around in her chest like an angry gorilla, trying desperately to force her body to move. However, no matter how she tries, Mara can't escape the Wordsmith's imprisonment.

Bastard! You... you disgusting, wretched fleshbag! I should have known! You won't get away with this! When the Council hears of our deaths, all your claims of coming in peace will fall apart!!

Jason cocks his head as a look of confusion passes over his face. "Huh? No, no. I'm not going to kill or hurt you. I'm only temporarily restraining you, nothing else. I wouldn't go this far under normal circumstances, but if I'd let you go on any longer, you'd have run away or brought the whole Labyrinth down on me."

The Wordsmith walks closer to Mara and smiles. However, contrary to her expectations, his expression is anything but smug. His smile radiates warmth, making her doubt, even if only for a moment, the idea that he is her enemy.

"I didn't lie about my desire to seek peace, Mara. You and I are currently enemies, but I had no say in that. Maybe I'm just a stupid idealist, but I believe peace between our people is possible. However, I know you don't believe me, and possibly never will. Once I get the location of Hell Harbor and erase your knowledge of my identity from your memories, I'll let you go."

Mara's eye twitches. Liar. If you could forcefully take Hell Harbor's location from me, you would have done so sooner.

"I wanted you to take me there of your own volition," Jason says. "Forcefully taking the information is a backup option, one I regret having to use. Look, I know you don't like me... but... well, maybe just give me a chance, alright? You seem like a good person. We could have been friends in another life. Hell, maybe we still can."

With a sigh, Jason turns to face Ying-Ying. "Um, for the record... I'm married. You seem like a nice girl. Keep that positive attitude going, and I'm sure you'll find a nice guy, someday."

Mara glances at her sister. To her surprise, Ying-Ying seems far less alarmed than she should be. She stares at Jason Hiro with a look of acceptance.

"Yeah," Jason says to Ying-Ying, as if answering an unspoken question. "I'm the Hero, disguised as a demon. Sorry for lying to you. You didn't do anything wrong. Don't blame yourself. If anything, it's Mara's fault. She was clever enough to figure out my identity. I've gotta give her props for that."

With a shrug, Jason speaks two words of power.

"Extract. Erase."

Ying-Ying's eyes flutter for a moment, before eventually closing as she falls into a deep sleep.

Jason turns to face Mara. "Don't worry. Your sister will be fine, and so will you. If you happen to regain your memories, just know that I didn't come here to hurt anyone."

Mara's stomach clenches as tears begin to bubble in her eyes. I don't believe you. You're... you're a damned, filthy fleshbag.

"Hey, we fleshbags aren't that bad," Jason says, laughing wryly. "If I manage to put an end to this stupid war, you should pop by the Core sometime. My wife makes dumplings I'd die to protect."

After a moment of silence, Jason closes his eyes.

"You predicted a great lie, a great danger, and an olive branch. In terms of foresight, your abilities eclipse mine. Consider this my olive branch to you, Mara."

"Erase."

Jason Hiro speaks a word of power.

Drowsiness takes Mara, as her eyes begin to flutter and close.

An... olive... branch...

Part 210: The Demon Homeworld

After speaking a Word of Power, I step toward Mara and ease her to the ground. To my surprise, the blonde-haired demoness melts into my arms, weighing so little that I have a hard time believing her body isn't made of feathers and fluff. After laying her on the ground, I do the same for Ying-Ying and wipe my forehead.

"Hurgh. Well done," Kar says, as he walks over and pats my back. "That was a successful mission if I've ever seen one."

I stand up while keeping an eye on Ying-Ying's slumbering face. "No. I didn't want to incapacitate these girls. Where possible, I will always prefer using discretion to force."

Blinker flies over and lands on Ying-Ying's arm. "You're wrong, Jason! It's okay to use your strength sometimes. After all, these girls are Barons. That means they ate over a hundred thousand souls to evolve! They might look like cutie-patooties, but these two are killers to the core."

Kar nods. "Butterfly is right. What good did all of your preparation do, in the end? Peaches still uncovered your identity. Blossom was not as smart as her sister, but even I noticed how she talked about humans. Neither of these girls were friends of humanity. Sooner or later, they would have uncovered your identity. You merely delayed their hatred."

I nod. "You're right, but only somewhat. Tell me, Kar, how did Samantha reach the rank of Emperor?"

Kar shrugs. "Hurgh. By eating human souls?"

"No. Sam got her power from a dragon. She told Phoebe once that she's never killed a human before, nor taken one's soul. Now, I'm not saying this is the case for Mara and Ying-Ying, but I am saying things aren't as black and white as they might first appear."

I turn my gaze toward the monsters and demons milling about across the room. Thanks to my Mirage spell, they have yet to notice their downed superiors. As far as they can tell, Kar has resumed his conversation with the Baron of Games.

"When I told Mara that you evolved me from a Lord to a Baron by using Wordsmithing to refine Monster energy into Demonic energy, that wasn't merely a lie to conceal my origins. It had a granule of truth in it."

Kar scratches his head. "I... I don't follow, Turtle."

"Think about it, Kar. Why does consuming a soul improve a demon's strength, and why does consuming many souls cause them to evolve?"

Blinker raises her hand. "Ooh! Ooh! I know the answer! It's because each soul raises a demon's mana capacity!"

"That's right. So, if Kar gave his energy to a demon, he could, theoretically, evolve that demon without them needing to consume souls."

Kar nods, but a look of skepticism appears on his face. "Hurgh. But as you told Peaches, monster and demon energy are opposites. They would clash and possibly kill the demon if he were to take my mana."

"Yes, but my Wordsmithing might be able to bridge that gap. I might be able to transform demon and monster energy into one another, thus boosting demons without them needing souls."

Blinker flies off Ying-Ying's comatose form and lands on my shoulder. "Hmm, you keep saying 'might' a lot. Haven't you tried doing the conversion already? Don't you know for sure?"

I shake my head. "No. A lot of things could go wrong. For example, my Wordsmithing uses Holy Energy to create its magical effects. You guys saw what happened when I tried to mimic demonic mana. Without Solomon's Crown, I have to feel it out and use you two as reference. If I tried doing the conversion, I might screw everything up."

With a shake of my head, I sigh. "I couldn't risk someone else's life over a hunch. Unless I get Solomon's Crown back or find a suitable replacement for his knowledge and computational power, I won't even try doing something so dangerous."

Kar slowly kneels down to stare at the unconscious demonesses. "Hurgh. I see. You must have told these two about your conversion concept for another reason, then. You... you want to give them the idea that if they follow you, they won't have to consume souls anymore."

"That's right. Demons don't need souls to survive. They can already live forever, barring death by accident or battle. If I can find a way to replace their need for souls, I can outline a more persuasive case for the end of the human-demon war. After all, demons might not need souls to survive, but souls give them purpose and a chance at advancement."

Blinker's shoulders slump slightly. "Jason. Don't you think you're acting a little too casual about... about all this? Like souls and stuff. Demons aren't just 'powering up' with human souls. They're eating fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers. I've met a lot of humans since moving to Tarus II, and I wouldn't want any of them to end up inside some demon's gullet where they'd get tortured for all eternity. It's terrible, Jason. Simply awful."

Blinker's words give me pause for a moment.

"Yeah. I know. But what other option do I have? Demons are sentient creatures, just like humans. If they were all horrible, evil monsters, it would be all too easy for me to invent justifications for their genocide. However, they aren't all bad. Many simply live within the Council's system and do what they must to advance. If I could offer them an alternative, they might leave the current regime behind."

Blinker squirms uncomfortably on my shoulder. "I know, but don't you think you're giving most demons way too much leeway here? Demon Grunts act like feral, wild animals. You saw what they did to those two men when we walked in here. They do stuff like that all the time!"

Kar sighs. "I have always been an open-minded crocodile, but even I know that demons are some of the most barbaric beings in the universe."

"You're both missing the point," I mutter. "But it doesn't really matter. I can't expect you to have faith I'll overturn the evils of demonkind. Hell, I don't even believe I can. It's just... when I look at the history of the demons, they were set up for failure from the very beginning. Their hatred dates back to the first imps who escaped from Heaven. They've lived and breathed violence for their entire existence. First, they had to survive, then to infiltrate, and finally, the last hundred thousand years of violence have all been so they could exact their revenge on humanity. They torture us because they think it's their purpose in life."

When my gaze meets Blinker's, I notice she looks unconvinced. Compared to her, Kar's expression seems much more open-minded.

"Hurgh. Perhaps you may have a point, Turtle. For one as dense as you to dwell on such grand themes, it makes me happy. You may yet have a chance at advancing your intellect."

I roll my eyes. "Ugh, shut up, Kar. You're such an ass, sometimes."

"Damn right, he is!" Blinker laughs. She flies off my shoulder and lands on Kar's. "Anyway, what are we gonna do about these two unconscious beauties? Don't get any weird ideas, boys. I've got my eyes on you."

"We'll leave them here," I say. "I already extracted the layout of Hell Harbor from Ying-Ying's mind. Surprisingly, I managed to map out a huge portion of the planet. I can open a rift almost anywhere."

"Hurgh. The closer you can get us to Ose's location, the less hostile territory we'll have to travel through," Kar remarks. "Where is she now?"

I shrug. "If I had to guess, her estate. But, surprisingly, Ying-Ying's memories didn't tell me where it was, only its appearance. I don't even have a vague direction. There is, however, a mountaintop not far from some of Hell Harbor's lower dominions. It has a great view, and more importantly, it overlooks a bunch of important landmarks. We'll go there and scout the area."

After pausing to take a breath, I speak a word of power. "Portal."

Whoomph.

Ten feet away from me, a huge suction of air makes Kar jump in surprise. He quickly recovers from his shock as an opaque warpgate appears, allowing us to enter Hell Harbor.

Before we step through, I pause and glance at Mara again. "Extract."

Instead of aiming for a specific part of Mara's memories, I aim for a holistic view of her entire life. Thousands of images enter my mind, memories upon memories. My head quickly swells with information, forcing me to my knees as I absorb her knowledge.

Before her memories can overwhelm me, I grit my teeth and speak another word. "Terminal!"

Just as quickly as the pain of assimilation strikes me, it vanishes. Inside my mind realm, a large computer terminal appears, complete with a viewscreen capable of looking up information.

My mind-wife, Phoebe, speaks, confusion in her voice. "Jason? What's this? What did you do?"

I stored all of Mara's knowledge in my Mind Realm, separate from my brain, so I won't lose myself. I'll be relying on you to give me any relevant information.

"Me? But why? Does she have any information we need? It's beyond discourteous to look into someone's memories."

I know. However, if I've learned anything, it's that entering Hell Harbor as an unknown Baron will only be asking for trouble. I'll impersonate Mara, instead.

Rising to my feet, I utter several words of power. "Disguise. Appearance. Voice.

Bit by bit, I change different parts of my body, transforming myself into the demoness I interacted with only minutes before. Kar and Blinker watch me as I become a perfect facsimile of the Baron of Games.

"You know," Blinker mutters to Kar, "I never thought about this before, but Jason could turn himself into a lady and do all kinds of pervy things to himself!"

With my voice sounding identical to Mara's, I reply, "Samantha could do the same thing, and you never had a problem with her."

"Yeahhh, but it's different for a guy," Blinker replies. "Guys are way lewder than women. That's just a fact."

I try not to roll my eyes. "...Right. You might have a point. For now, let's focus, alright? I'll impersonate Mara, so if we need to bypass any security checkpoints, we'll be able to get past them with ease."

After the three of us check to make sure my Mirage is still working, we step through the portal and leave the Baron of Games and her sister behind, arriving on the world of Hell Harbor.

The moment we arrive, a litany of sights and smells assaults me, along with the difference in the planet's air pressure, making my ears pop. Having experienced the turbulence of portal-walking on countless occasions, I barely even notice what I once considered head-splitting pain.

A flat, rocky plateau stands atop a five-hundred-foot-tall mountain, its position overlooking the entrance to Hell Harbor, where newcomers arrive via the Keymaster's portals. Ordinarily, nobody can leave or enter the planet via teleportation magic, except through the authorized warp points. Too bad for the demons, my Wordsmithing doesn't have such a limitation. If it did, Kar and I might have to sweet-talk our way through hundreds of potential enemies.

After gazing at the speck-sized demons and monsters milling about in the distance, I turn my gaze north, along the edge of the western beach. Hell Harbor's Annex, the heavily reinforced building for entering and exiting the planet, sits only half a mile away from a vast, sparkling ocean. To my surprise, the seawater is so clear that I can make out the movements of gigantic underwater predators off the coast, each one dwarfing Earth's blue whales.

Hell Harbor's sky distinctly reminds me of Earth's, with its bright blue coloration and white clouds. Interestingly, this planet's star appears noticeably more orange than Earth's, giving the air a warmer tone.

Several other things catch my attention, like how the planet's grass appears far more vibrantly green than my homeworld's. Exotic dragonfly-like insects buzz through the air, while a few clumps of bright purple flowers snap shut on any critter stupid enough to land on their buds.

"Wow," Blinker says, echoing my thoughts. "I thought Hell Harbor would be... I dunno... ugly? Barren? This place is amazing! It's an oasis!"

"Indeed," Kar says, stroking his chin. "Hurgh. I have never come here before. However, Mother has spoken of it on several occasions. It is a luxurious homeworld for any demons or monsters who have earned accolades. While some might state that only Baron-level demons may come here, that is not strictly true. A few Lords live here as well, those who have yet to rank up to Baron, but have performed noteworthy deeds for the Council. Also, countless slaves live here, be they human, demon, or monster."

I nod. "Yeah. Don't expect more than a faint veneer of civility with the slave trade here. I can only imagine the horrible shit the Demon Council's members do to their human pets."

With a sigh, I speak several words of power in a row.

"Invisibility. Invisibility. Invisibility. Telepathy. Telepathy. Stealth. Stealth. Stealth."

Over and over, I use my Wordsmithing to turn Kar, Blinker, and me into invisible agents of deception. Kar stares at me as my body turns partially translucent, along with his and Blinker's. Once I finish, he speaks. "Hurgh. Why imitate Peaches' appearance if we are going to become invisible? I do not understand."

"My goal is to reach Ose and speak to her. For now, though, I don't want anyone seeing us climb down the mountain. It would invite too many questions. Once we get to the bottom, I'll need to find someone who can tell us where Ose is hiding and extract her location with my Wordsmithing. After that, it's smooth sailing."

Blinker narrows her eyes. "Riiight. Smooth sailing."

I start walking down the mountain, and Kar follows behind me.

"We can see each other thanks to how I formulated my magical intent. However, our voices are still audible to anyone nearby. From now on, use telepathy to communicate with each other. Alright?"

Kar frowns. "Certainly. Hurgh... but how?"

[Like this. Think the words in your head, and aim them at Blinker or me.]

[Hurgh... like... this?]

[Yep.]

Kar and Blinker fall silent for a moment, indicating they must be exchanging words with each other.

Telepathy sounds overpowered, but it has many downsides. For example, when I try to read people's thoughts, I can only hear one person's mind at a time. Even when I listen, I can only hear their present top-level concerns. That's the biggest thing that sunk me when I tried to fool Mara. I didn't understand the importance of Soul Tokens, and I couldn't get the information from her brain either, not without using Wordsmithing to extract that specific information.

Most people think on their feet. Their thoughts prove to be a jumble, only slowing down when they enter a conversation. However, the moment they stop talking, their brains fire up to maximum speed, making a thousand words travel around at a mile per minute. When Mara mentioned Soul Tokens, she didn't need to think about their definition or function, as that information was ingrained in her subconscious. It was only when I started asking questions that she began pulling her knowledge to the surface.

By that point, it was already too late. She'd realized that I, a supposed self-respecting Demon Baron, would know everything she did. How could I make such a casual mistake?

From there, it was just a matter of piecing together the other inconsistencies I'd accidentally let slip.

Now that I've downloaded all of her memories into my Mind Realm, Phoebe can peruse them and help sort out the useful information I might need later. Who knows what other trivial bits of information I've taken for granted?

As Kar, Blinker, and I all trudge down the well-worn mountain trail, Kar's telepathy tickles my brain.

[Turtle. I must say, your performance against that Baron female was decent. How did you manage all that future-seeing stuff? Your explanation sounded fine, but surely you used your Wordsmithing to see into the future, right?]

I shake my head. [No. I used a Word of Power to grant myself enhanced predictive capabilities. Unfortunately, they were far less potent than when I used them in conjunction with Solomon's Crown a few years ago. His Crown greatly accelerated my thinking speed, which also improved my predictive accuracy.]

[Hurgh. Your accuracy seemed just fine to me.]

[It wasn't. I only managed to guess half a dozen or so exchanges into the future. Predicting beyond that would have led to a large number of errors. Any set of probabilities will grow exponentially more chaotic as you add additional variables.]

I can almost hear Kar's head bobbing as he nods behind me. [Hurgh. Yes, yes, of course. I understand.]

Phoebe laughs. "Haha! Kar doesn't understand a word you just said!"

Probably not, but let's let him have his moment.

* * *

It doesn't take long before the three of us reach the bottom of the mountain, where we arrive at a sparsely populated, lightly forested woodland area. A few dozen trees sit amidst heaps of leaves as fifteen goblins work together to rake them up.

"Nyeh! Work work, that all we do! All stinkin' day, rake leaves, shovel hellhound skarn! This big unfair!"

"Shut mouth, Bobo!" A second goblin hisses. "If Master hears you bitchin', we all get three kicks!"

"Me complain if me want!" Bobo groans. "It hot outside! Me want go back underground!"

I hold up my hand, causing Kar to slow to a stop.

[Wait,] I say. [Goblins have excellent senses of smell and hearing. We won't be able to walk past them. Stand still; I'm going to 'jump' you somewhere safe.]

[Hurgh. What do you mean by 'jump me'?] Kar asks. [In my language, that is a term exclusively reserved for one who wishes to copulate with a potential mate.]

My cheeks flush red. [No, idiot! I mean that I'm going to teleport you out of the goblins' range. Do you remember when I held up my hand and made that notepad and pen appear?]

[Hurgh. Yes. That parlor trick you used to enhance the Baron's lust for you. It was an excellent technique. Her eyes dilated by 200%.]

[Kar, I'm going to beat you senseless when we get home.]

I turn back to look at Kar. He grins at me, as does Blinker. Both of them chuckle into their hands, clearly delighted by my discomfort.

[You two are so immature,] I grumble.

Without waiting for a reply, I aim my mind at them while visualizing a clearing at the edge of the forest.

Foop!

Kar and Blinker disappear from existence, only to reappear half a mile away, at the edge of the clearing, far from the goblins.

Alright, time to do myself, I grumble.

However, just before I teleport to my friends, Phoebe stops me.

"Jason. Hold on. Um, I don't know how to explain this, but I think someone is trying to contact you."

Who? Is it Ose? Has she already found me?

"No. Whoever they are, I don't think they're hostile. They seem to be lightly tapping the edges of your Mind Realm, almost like they're knocking on a door. Shall I allow them to enter? If they have any ill intentions, I can push them out."

I nod. Go ahead. I'll wait while you investigate.

I transmit my thoughts across the clearing to Kar, as he and Blinker lurk behind a tree, keeping away from the goblins. [Kar. Give me a minute. I'll be right over. Something came up.]

[Are you alright?] Kar asks, a note of alarm in his voice. [Is it Ose?! Say the word, and I'll shield your fragile little body with mine!]

[No. I don't think it's her. Just... hang tight for a minute.]

After pushing away Kar's concerns, I turn my attention inward, to my Mind Realm.

There, I witness a shocking sight!

Phoebe, Shana, and Lorent sit on a bench and smile at a group of winged men, all of whom I instantly recognize as the Archangels.

Raphael? Gabriel? Michael? What are you three doing in my Mind Realm? I thought we couldn't communicate without Solomon's assistance.

Gabriel stands nonchalantly with his hands behind his back, taking in the sights of my futuristic and retro-looking mindscape. His appearance betrays no emotion, and only a faint hint of curiosity.

Michael, on the other hand, ignores the structures within my Mind Realm to examine Phoebe, Shana, and Sir Lorent. "Human. Thy appearance befuddles me. Have we met before?"

Lorent raises an eyebrow. [Are you referring to me?]

"Yes. Thy face seems oddly familiar to me, yet I cannot place it."

[I am Sir Lorent, knight of the Round Table,] Lorent replies. He tilts his head slightly. [We have not met, but how could I not recognize the Archangels of Wisdom, Courage, and Power? Your portraits hung from my king's walls. I observed them many times during my strolls through the palace.]

Raphael, unlike his brothers, wears a scowl on his face. He gives my Mind Realm a once-over before turning his attention to Phoebe.

"Hmph. Thou art the Wordsmith's wife, but what events have transpired to place thy soul within his mind's confines? Unless..."

Raphael's expression turns solemn.

"I see. Jason, am I correct in my assumption that thou hath once again used thy powers for the sake of soul manipulation?"

I nod. Yes. I copied my wife's soul. Solomon betrayed me, and without him, my mind could be easily taken over by Ose or another mental manipulator. I only copied Phoebe's soul because she's my wife. I don't trust anybody else with access to my memories and knowledge. Heck, I don't even trust myself. Just look at what's happened to Hope.

"I see," Raphael mutters. "Never mind. None of that is important right now. Jason, where are we? I cannot see outside of my ring."

We're on Hell Harbor, I reply. The demon's homeworld.

"By the Creator!" Raphael gasps. "What reason have thee for coming to such a place?!"

I intend to negotiate a peace treaty with Ose. At the least, I feel I have to try. Why, are you going to try and convince me to stop?

"I... I do not know," Raphael mutters. The old man walks over to a bench opposite Phoebe in her flower garden and takes a seat. He sags into the chair and rubs his forehead. "Jason. The reason I attempted to contact thee — it was due to a particular mana signature I detected somewhere within my ring's range. To say its presence worries me would be a great understatement, especially now that I know thou art standing on the demon's homeworld."

Something about Raphael's tone sends a chill down my back. What do you mean? What sort of mana did you sense?

"'Tis difficult to put into words. However, worry not, young Hero. The mana I sensed was not demonic, nor was it evil. It was... kindred. Angelic."

Raphael's words draw the attention of my Mind Realm's inhabitants. Phoebe and Lorent gaze at Raphael expectantly, waiting for him to elaborate.

"If this world is the demon's homeworld, then there is a chance they may have captured an angel and held them here. Not just any angel, but an Archangel!"

Raphael sighs.

"Who, then, might they be? Of all the possibilities, only Uzziel and Camael make any sense. Samael ended up inside Satan's Mind Realm, while Uriel became ensnared within Barbatos. Tch. To think the disgusting vermin may have captured and isolated another of my family... it burns my blood. Jason, I am incapable of ordering thee around like a servant. Instead, I plead with all of my heart that thou shalt seek out this poor, captured soul and uncover their identity."

"Their fate rests within thy hands," Raphael finishes.

I nod. Alright. If I can rescue an Archangel, you bet I'll get right on it. Can you still sense their mana?

"I can," Raphael replies.

Good. Stay in my Mind Realm. Contact me if you sense that I'm getting closer. After I discuss terms of peace with Ose, I'll set out to find whoever you've detected. I won't let the demons keep any angels prisoner.

Raphael forces a half-hearted smile. "Good. Yes, good. I thank thee, young Hero. As for the matter of thy flippant soul manipulation..."

He pauses.

"...well, everyone makes mistakes. Thy intentions appear noble, and in this instance, thou have yet to harm anyone. What sort of hypocrite would I be to decry all forms of soul manipulation, given my sordid history?"

I shrug. What sort, indeed?

Without another word, I aim my mind at Kar's location.

Foop!

A quiet rushing of air teleports me from the mountain's base to about ten feet behind Kar, half a mile away. I arrive to find the big gator hiding behind a boulder while he and Blinker peer out at the nearby Warpgate Annex.

[Kar, I'm here,] I say. [Let's get a move on. We have to find Ose's estate.]

[No.] Kar says. [Wait a moment. I'm watching the demons.]

I shoot a glance over my shoulder, but the grumbling goblins still haven't noticed our presence. Stealthily, I sneak over to Kar's side and follow his gaze.

Two male Demon Barons, both with black hair, sporting gold and silver armor, respectively, shoot the shit with each other. The golden-armored one stands a mere six and a half feet tall, but his body reminds me of a minotaur's. Hulking muscles, barely concealed by his demonstone platemail, allow him to sling a gigantic battleaxe and greatsword across his back. Unlike Barbatos's armor, which was piecemeal and formed for function, this Baron's armor appears spit-shined. Every inch of it glistens from head to toe. He tucks a helmet under his arm, while grinning and clapping the other Baron on the back.

Meanwhile, the second Baron, wearing silver-colored demonstone armor, is only half a foot shorter than his comrade. Unlike the bigger fellow, the second Baron has a heavy club slung across his back, two shortswords at his waist, and a razor-sharp pair of spiked gauntlets stuck to his hands. Upon closer inspection, they remind me of the makeshift claws Barbatos used during the Ancient Era when he fought the Balrog.

As far away as I am, I can only make out bits and pieces of the two Baron's conversations. However, I manage to solve that problem for myself with ease. "Hearing."

As my ears attune themselves to the distant conversation, I turn to ask Kar if he and Blinker would like a boost, only to notice both of them leaning forward while listening attentively.

As monsters, their hearing far outclasses mine.

With a shrug, I turn my attention toward the two Barons.

The smaller one rants and raves at his taller colleague. "-whore, thinks she can tell us what to do?! Man, I tell you what, little bro, that bitch has got to go. We had the whole run of the place when that lazy shmuck was the boss. ...The fuck was his name, anyway? I already forgot!"

"You're such a moron sometimes," The taller demon laughs. "It was Diablo, big bro! Deebs! Sheesh, he's only been gone for six years. How could you forget the name of such a good-lookin' demon guy? I know he was your type."

"Right, yeah, Deebs, now I remember. You know how bad my memory is, man! I don't even remember how many fleshbag heads I chewed off yesterday! Besides, that Deebs guy was way too hairy for my liking. What about you? You gonna plug Beelzebub's butt, or are you afraid of getting burned? Bahaha! I knew it! Just look at the disgust on your face! I didn't know you could hate a guy so much!"

"Laugh it up, Zammy-boy," The taller Baron snorts. "You ain't found a nice piece of ass since that fleshbag from twenty years ago. The look on your face when I caught you goin' to town on him, it was pathetic! You got so embarrassed you gutted the poor cunt!"

"Nuh-uh!" 'Zammy' says. "I don't remember that at all! I'd never pork a fleshbag, and you know it! Don't make me sick!"

The taller Baron smacks his older brother's arm. "Haha, yeah, maybe it's my memory messin' up this time, eh, Zammy-boy? Anyway, count your blessings. While you were off teaching the troops about that invasion shit, I had to sit in on one of Ose's boooring meetings. The whole time, she kept giving Beelzebub 'fuck-me' eyes. It was gross, man."

"Yeah, I bet. Ose's a total skank," Zammy replies. "Stupid, stuck-up prude. They say she knees any guy who approaches her right in the demonhood!"

"Serves 'em right!"

"Damn straight."

I roll my eyes, finding the demon's trash-talking too obnoxious to listen to any longer. I reach over and nudge Kar's shoulder. [Hey. Let's get out of here. I'm going to extract those guys' memories, and see if they know the way to Ose's hideout.]

However, Kar doesn't reply. To my surprise, his reptilian irises have narrowed to mere slits. He leans forward, revealing a look of rage.

"Hurgh! It's... it's them...!"

Kar forgets to use telepathy. He growls his words out loud, instantly sparking my nerves.

[Kar! Kar, buddy, what's wrong? Who are you talking about? The two Barons over there? Keep your voice down! We don't want them to hear us!]

Slowly, Kar hunches forward. He coils power into his legs. A vicious snarl, unlike any I've ever seen, appears on his face. He raises both arms and spreads out his claws.

The sunnofabitch is about to pounce!

[Kar! Kar! Calm down!] I yell. [What's wrong? Who are these guys? Do you know them? Do-]

Suddenly, I stop mid-sentence. A sinking feeling appears in my gut.

Wait a minute. Zammy-boy? Zamiel? As in, one of the two Battle Brothers? Are these Barons the fuckers who wiped out Kar's species?!

"Do... do not... attempt... to stop me..." Kar growls. His voice turns feral as rage boils within his veins.

Shit! Shit! What do I do? I came here to ask Ose to sign a peace treaty! If Kar kills the Battle Brothers, we'll definitely have a war on our hands!

However, if I stop Kar, what kind of friend would I be? These are the two pieces of shit who killed his wife and children! They murdered everyone in his family, all the people he loved! According to my basest instincts, he should have the right to exact his vengeance, and if I consider him my friend, I should help him!

A thousand thoughts race through my mind. In the blink of an eye, I come to a realization.

I jerk to the side and grab Kar's arm.

[Kar. Wait. I'm not going to tell you not to fuck these guys up, but before you do, I want you to listen to me.]

Kar jerks his head to the side to look me in the eye. He bares his teeth, scaring the bejeesus out of me. "Do not... stop me..."

[I understand. These scumbag genocidal barbarians deserve everything they have coming. However, does your wife?]

Kar pauses. His rage instead morphs into a hint of confusion. "My... wife... Butterfly?"

[Yes. If you attack these guys, Blinker could get hurt. She could die. All they would have to do is sound the alarm, and all sorts of Barons, Dukes, and Emperors will come raining down from the skies. Will you be able to fight them off? Even if you can, what about Blinker? Fairies possess potent illusion magic, but that won't protect her from demonkind's mightiest warriors. Not even I could do such a thing. If you attack, you'll sign a death warrant for all three of us.]

Several seconds pass.

Kar's breathing slows. His eyes dilate back to their original size, and he averts his gaze.

The giant crocodile backs down, uncoiling his muscles as a hint of shame appears on his face.

"I... I... understand. Hurgh. My apologies, Turtle. I lost myself for a moment. I put you in danger, after everything you've done for me. I will understand if you want to end our friendship over this."

[Don't even think something like that, Kar. You've got me all wrong, buddy. I told you, didn't I? I'm going to help you kill these scumbags. They don't deserve to live after what they did to your people. My only issue is the timing. Now is the worst possible moment you could attack them.]

I turn my gaze toward the Battle Brothers. They saunter toward the Annex, away from Kar and me, laughing about all sorts of crude, despicable acts.

[Remember their faces, Kar. Burn them into your eyes. I promise you, we'll work together, and we'll make them suffer. As your friend, on my honor, I won't let them get away with the evils they've committed.]

The two brothers disappear into the Annex, vanishing from my sight.

I could have extracted the location of Ose's estate from their brains. However, doing so would mean downloading all of their other memories. I don't want to see all of the horrible shit they've done. I don't want their recollections to taint me.

Maybe I'm acting selfishly. Either way, I'll find someone else. There are bound to be countless demons and monsters who know Ose's location.

[Come on, Kar. Let's go.]

[Hurgh. As you command,] Kar mutters.

Both of us skulk away from the Annex, looking to find some lonely demon all by themself.

The realization that I nearly lost one of my best friends chills me to my core. Thankfully, I managed to stop him.

Luckily, I didn't let Kar lose himself to rage.

Author's Note:

This is Duriel.

This is Zamiel.

These are both Battle Brothers.

Part 211: Harboring a Grudge

Kar and I spend the next several hours following the main 'road' that weaves across Hell Harbor's coastline. Comparing it to streets on Earth makes it seem extremely primitive, given how its surface is made of compacted dirt and not concrete or something more durable. Well-worn ruts in the ground tell a tale of the excessive number of carriages ferrying passengers along the coastline, from the north to the south.

We keep to the forested side of the road, opposite the ocean, ducking behind cover whenever we spot someone coming. Unfortunately, due to how my Wordsmithing functions, I can't keep us invisible forever. Doing so would drain my mana by three times its usual rate, and even moreso if I have to maintain Kar and Blinker's invisibility if we separate from each other.

So, instead, I activate my T-REX and set it to camouflage mode, allowing me to blend into the background scenery without wasting my mana. Kar's green skin allows him to melt into the forest with ease, while Blinker can just hide behind a leaf. When it comes to stealth, being small is an underrated attribute.

[Turtle,] Kar says, transmitting his thoughts to me from behind a tree. [I sense a single person coming around the next bend. Their mana level is unusually weak. I believe they are human.]

I nod. [One sec.]

I deactivate my T-REX and speak a word of power. "Sense."

My senses reach out half a mile ahead, where I quickly pick out a single human female riding a horse. However, unlike the other humans who've passed us, this lady wears extravagantly designed clothes. Her youthful appearance makes her look about twenty-five years old, while her haughty expression instantly reminds me of Beelzebub.

[It's a human woman,] I say. [I'm a little surprised to say this, but I think she isn't a slave. She's dressed like a noble, so she might know something about Ose's whereabouts.]

Kar grunts. [Hurgh. Shall we tie her up and interrogate her?]

[Ooh, good idea!] Blinker chimes in. [I'll disorient her with a little finger waving, while you guys get the rope!]

[What?! No!] I protest. [Jeez. I'll just ask the lady a few questions. Hang tight.]

With my physical appearance still a perfect facsimile of Mara, I stride over to lean against a tree alongside the road. Having absorbed many of Mara's memories, I've already learned more than a few of her quirks, so I pull out a deck of fake Tarot cards and pretend to glance through them, acting as if I haven't any interest in the world around me.

Within a minute or two, the sound of hoofs clopping against the ground reaches my ears. I flick my eyes to the side to spot the young, dark-skinned woman riding toward the Hell Harbor Annex at a speed I would describe as 'leisurely.'

As the woman draws near, I continue to stare at my cards while flipping through them. Eventually, she starts to pass me, only to slow to a stop.

"Hm? Mara? What are you doing out here in the middle of nowhere?"

Immediately, I get a sinking feeling in my gut.

Shit. She knows me. Knows Mara, I mean. Phoebe?

Phoebe quickly appears at the top of my subconscious. She activates the terminal for Mara's memories and flips through them. "This young woman's name is... Lily! Lily Brown. Uhm, her father's name is Benjamin Brown, she lives at, uh... at the Slithering Spire... uhm..."

That's enough for now. Keep listening and try to give me answers to any of her questions.

I raise my head to stare at the young woman riding the horse. Her bright pink hair shines in the sunlight, giving her a cute and merry demeanor. However, the half-scowl on her face makes her attractiveness drop by several points.

"Lily. Don't mind me, I'm just passing the time," I say, while running a finger through my long, blonde hair.

"Oh, so now you call me by my first name," Lily mutters. "My father told you not to step foot within ten miles of the Spire, especially after what you did the last time we saw each other. You have a lot of nerve showing your face around here."

The sinking feeling in my stomach turns into a bottomless chasm. Goddammit. What were the odds we'd run into the one person who has beef with Mara? Shit. This is going to be a sticky situation.

"I, ah, came to apologize," I say, winging the conversation. "Some things happened that made me re-evaluate my outlook on life. I was abrasive and rude the last time I visited."

"Hmph. Understatement of the century," Lily hisses. "He was my brother, you filthy, bloodskinned bitch. Because of you, Tyrese can't have children anymore. You demons are all the same."

Lily exhales violently, flaring her nostrils in rage.

"If my daddy were here, he'd rip your bloody head off. I don't want your apology. I want you to drop dead."

Hoo, Christ, I think to myself. I really know how to pick 'em. Got the saltiest broad this side of the Mississippi.

"Yeah, you do," Phoebe says sarcastically. "Alright, so looking through Mara's memories, it seems this Tyrese kid made a crude joke about how humans are 'bigger' than the pathetic demonhoods most demons sport, and that pissed Mara off. She ended up castrating him. He screamed the whole time and went into shock, barely surviving thanks to this 'Ben Brown' guy's doctors on call. So, yeah, there's a lot of bad blood between Mara and Lily."

I hadn't noticed...

With a sigh, I don my most apologetic smile. "Look, Lily, I know I've done some terrible things, but I'd like to make it up to you. What would you say if I told you I had a method to, ahem, restore your brother's dignity? I can't undo the suffering I've caused him, but I do feel terrible. After all, a harmless joke is no reason to maim someone for the rest of their life."

A strange look appears on Lily's face. "Huh? What in the seven hells are you on about?! Since when have you ever been the type of person to regret hurting one of us 'filthy fleshbags'?! Admit it, you filthy skank! You're just afraid of my daddy! You know that if you piss him off again, he'll rip you limb from limb! Well, let me just tell you this, little miss pissy; you should be afraid! My daddy is the strongest human you'll ever face! So you'd better turn that ugly, fat ass of your around and haul it on out of here! Hmph!"

The more Lily talks, the more baffled I become.

Who the hell is her father, and how can he possibly be strong enough to instill such confidence in his daughter? Does Lily, perhaps, refer to political power? Are politics an integral part of Hell Harbor's society?

As several questions churn in my mind, Phoebe suddenly pipes up.

"Benjamin Brown! Ah, I remember, now. Jason, don't you recall Tucker's vision? His artifact used to belong to a man named Benjamin Brown, back during the Energy Wars."

That's impossible, I reply. Tucker's visions were from a hundred thousand years ago. Benjamin Brown would have surely died by now, if not during the war. Unless...

Phoebe nods. "Exactly. Marie survived all this time. She mentioned humans who lived on Hell Harbor, too. Benjamin Brown must be one of those 'elites' who obtained immortality and stayed alive long after the Energy Wars."

I see.

With a slight nod, I return my attention to Lily. Thanks to the speed of thought, conversing with my mind-wife only takes a split-second of real-time.

It's no wonder Lily isn't afraid of me. Benjamin Brown once possessed a legendary heroic artifact. He slaughtered Volgrim and demons alike. He's probably a total badass, and that's why even Demon Barons like Mara wouldn't dare to fuck with him.

Maybe I ought to pay him a visit.

After bowing my head, I nod apologetically. "Yes, uhm, you've got me there. Alright. I understand. If I can't make amends for my past actions, I'll leave you alone. Sorry for wasting your time."

I turn away from Lily and start to walk away, only for the girl to speak again, her voice much quieter than before.

"Wait. Something's not right, here. You've been acting awfully odd, 'Mara.' I've known you for a long time, and not once have you ever apologized or said you were sorry about anything. What's going on, here? Who are you?"

My heart skips a beat. Shit. Lily's onto me.

I spin on my heel while intending to reply, only for Lily to continue speaking. "Hah. I should have known. You're not Mara at all. You must be..."

She pauses for dramatic effect.

"...Belial! Oh, for devil's sake! Admit it! I've caught you red-handed this time!"

I groan inwardly. Shit. How am I going to deal with this turn of events?

"Don't worry," Phoebe says. She rapidly clicks and clacks on Mara's memory terminal. "This is actually fortunate for us. Belial and Lily are birds of a feather. It seems they hang out occasionally, though Mara's memory is quite spotty on the relevant details."

That's not good enough! I reply. We already stepped in a fat pile of shit by poorly impersonating Mara! I can't afford to screw up again by poorly apeing Samantha!

A split-second passes as Phoebe considers my words.

"Jason. I have an idea. I want you to allow me to take over your body for a bit. I know Sam much better than you. I think I can imitate her, but I need to have full control. If I try to tell you what to say, you're bound to come off sounding stiff and clunky. Impersonations are not your specialty."

I barely even have to think about Phoebe's request. Sure. You know how to use my Wordsmithing if the going gets tough, right?

"Naturally."

Alright. Here goes nothing. Do your best, sweetie.

With a mental command, I close my eyes, willing my consciousness to lower its defenses. Phoebe's soul quickly engulfs mine, wrapping me in its warmth and allowing her to take control of my body.

Having already done this once, back when my soul departed to investigate Marie and the Volgrim, she still surprises me by completing the mind-swap effortlessly.

My consciousness falls into a dark abyss, one which quickly brightens up, allowing me to step foot inside my very own Mind Realm. My soul, now detached from my body, lands amidst a field of buildings ripped straight out of the 2020's.

"You caught me!" Phoebe says to Lily, her voice lilting cutely. She acts embarrassed for a moment and covers her face, all while secretly whispering, "Disguise," under her breath.

Phoebe, now fully in control of my body and Wordsmithing, uses a word of power to transform from Mara into Belial, shedding her regal Baron appearance for a far less dressed, more striking one.

"Teehee! It's me!" Phoebe says, sticking her tongue out. Her voice perfectly mirrors Samantha's, reminding me further of how versatile my Wordsmithing can be. "I'm surprised it took you so long to figure me out! Aren't we besties?"

"Oh, Beli," Lily says, clicking her tongue. "I should have known it was you! How have you been? I haven't seen you in, what, two years?"

The young woman slides one of her legs around the horse and hops to the ground. Her leather boots clomp against the dirt as she lands, and my wife holds out a hand to steady her.

"Two years? Hmm... you know me! I don't pay much attention to the time! I always- mgm?!"

Before she can finish her sentence, Phoebe gets thrown off-balance when Lily suddenly turns around, grabs the back of her head, and presses their lips together.

I stand within my Mind Realm, eyes wide open at the sudden change in Lily's attitude. Where before, she was a haughty, reserved noblewoman, she suddenly blooms into an erotic-minded temptress.

Phoebe, even more startled than me, only manages to hold herself together by remembering her job of mimicking Belial. She presses back into the kiss and returns Lily's embrace with twice the intensity. Both of them go at it for several long seconds, making me feel insanely awkward as a passive observer.

My wife, who has taken over my body, is now pretending to be her best friend while making out with a woman neither of us knows! What the hell is going on?!

After more than ten seconds of furious tongue-punching, Lily pulls away, her cheeks beet-red. "Devils! It's been a while since you, ahem, retorted so passionately! Have we been apart for so long that you've forgotten to act coy and indifferent?"

Phoebe smacks her lips. Lily's taste lingers just long enough to turn her foggy-brained. "Coy? I, ah... well, what can I say! Haha... I like to do my own thing!"

"No kidding," Lily sighs. She fans herself for a moment before clearing her throat. "Ahm, so, Beli, dear! Why are you out here, all by your lonesome? Don't tell me you were waiting for me to come waltzing by! Pulling such a horrid joke on me is in terrible taste!"

Phoebe doesn't reply for a second or two. Thanks to our mind-link, I notice her use of telepathy increases substantially as she excavates Lily's surface level-thoughts.

"Well, I have my reasons. It's been a while since I returned to Hell Harbor, and you just happened to come trotting down that road. What's a girl to do, if not improvise?"

"Tsk, you've always been an enigma," Lily says, clicking her tongue. "Daddy says you've been on Tarus II, helping out a bunch of humans. Is that what happened, or is his intelligence network wrong again?"

To my surprise, Phoebe doesn't give a direct answer.

"Hmm. What do you think?"

"I think that's exactly the kind of thing you'd do!" Lily replies. She jumps toward Phoebe and wraps her arms around Phoebe's succubus form. "You're always way too kind and compassionate! If it weren't for your help, Tyrese would never have made a full recovery!"

"Oh, I didn't do all that much," Phoebe says, feigning ignorance. "You're giving me way too much credit, Lily, dear."

"Nuh-uh! We only managed to repair half the damage that filthy, sodding Baron bitch did to my brother! It was you who made Tyrese whole again! He still can't have any kids, but daddy said we owed you a great debt! And you know me... I'm not one to let debts gather interest... hehe!"

Phoebe and Lily continue bantering. What surprises me is how, despite Phoebe knowing very little about Lily and Belial's relationship, she manages to improvise time after time, all by using several advanced psychological tricks invented well after the Arthurian era.

Cold reading, a technique often used by so-called 'psychics' from my era, allowed them to speak in broad, generalized terms to gather information about their subjects. Phoebe uses it to determine just how close Belial and Lily's relationship is, while inferring more in-depth information by casually acknowledging and denying statements in a playful manner. Lily, oblivious to Phoebe's intentions, keeps letting more and more details slip, which in turn fuels my wife's knowledge.

The longer the conversation continues, the more adept Phoebe becomes at manipulating Lily. Soon, the young girl becomes putty in her hands.

"Oh, I missed you so much," Phoebe says, grinning from ear to ear. "I've been trapped on Tarus II with only a few friends to keep me company, but none of them are... like you. You know what I mean."

"Indeed, I do," Lily says, blushing. She gazes into Phoebe's eyes as she speaks, both of them sharing more than a hint of intimacy.

However, Lily pulls away and ruffles Phoebe's hair.

"Oh, Beli. Things have changed since we last spoke. I'm sorry that we haven't talked much, but... you remember Beelzebub, don't you?"

"Beelzebub? Of course. What about him?"

"Well, he's the new master of the Slithering Spire. He's become more and more heavy-handed over the years. He won't allow any of us humans to fraternize with Hell Harbor's residents, especially other pureblooded demons. It's tearing me up inside! I haven't spent any time with Bianca in several years- you remember Bianca, right?"

Phoebe nods sagely. Her eyes reveal wisdom beyond her years as she acts like a long-lost friend of whoever 'Bianca' might be. "Naturally. What happened between you two? Did Beelzebub hurt her?"

"No, no! It's just... since Bianca's a succubus, Beelzebub won't allow us to spend any time together! Remember that time when the three of us visited the hot spring? You, me, and Bianca? Well, as long as Beelzebub is the master of the Slithering Spire, it'll never happen again! The fucking rat-bastard always gets in my way! He won't let me do as I please, and I don't dare stand up to him! Daddy doesn't care, either! He's always going on about that damned Operation Stormbringer as if it's more important than his daughter's happiness!"

"Operation Stormbringer?" Phoebe asks. "Forgive me, but I don't recall hearing about that one."

Lily waves her hands nonchalantly. "Oh, some big invasion plan. I don't pay attention to the details, and neither should you. Daddy and the top demon generals are always blustering and blowing their horns about this and that! It's hardly worth our attention! Especially when it involves that damned Ose."

"Ose?" Phoebe asks. "Funny you should mention her. I came to Hell Harbor because I needed to see her."

Lily's eyes widen. "What? You?! Beli, darling! I thought you hated that skank! Any time Ose came up in conversation, you always started ranting and raving!"

Phoebe crosses her arms. She assumes a pouty stance and turns a few degrees away from Lily. "I do hate her! Ose and I have a long, sordid history of backstabbings and betrayal. I'd rather not go into it, because it's beside the point. I'm here on official business, Lily, dear. Humanity's leader sent me to discuss peace talks with Ose. If I can convince her to sign a treaty... well, you and I might get to see each other once in a while. Not only that, but even as the owner of the estate, Beelzebub won't have any legs to stand on. You, me, and Bianca could do as we pleased."

Lily's expression turns curious. "Oh? I didn't peg you as the ambassador type! You must really get along with those humans to treat them so nicely."

"As well as I get along with you," Phoebe says, flashing a radiant smile. "But, um, there's a problem, Lily. I'm a little embarrassed to say it, but it's been bugging me, and I don't know who to ask for help."

Lily practically leaps for joy. She rushes toward Phoebe and grabs her hands. "You can ask me for anything, Beli! I'll always help you!"

Phoebe blushes. She averts her eyes, and for once, I realize that her expression isn't deceitful. My wife is actually starting to develop feelings for this young woman.

"Umm, well, you see... there was this Hydra that appeared on Tarus II. I helped fight it, but due to some terrible accidents that happened during the battle, I hit my head and got knocked out. When I woke up, I had lost some of my memories. How do I put this..."

Phoebe hesitates for a moment, building anticipation in Lily's eyes. "Yes? What's the matter?"

"Well..." Phoebe continues, "...I forgot where Ose's estate was! I'm totally lost! I've been searching everywhere, but I'm too embarrassed to ask for help. Oh, devils, you probably think I'm an idiot!"

"An idiot? No, no, don't be silly!" Lily laughs. "And here I thought some jerk had broken your heart. If you don't remember where Ose's estate is, that's easy. I can show you the way, Beli."

Lily presses her head against Phoebe's chest and sighs, taking a moment to inhale her scent. "Ahh... I missed you so much. I'm glad to help you. Never act as if I'll hurt you, okay? We're closer than sisters. Closer than lovers, even."

Phoebe blushes. "Yes. Yes, we are."

* * *

After a few more minutes, Phoebe bashfully waves goodbye. Lily mounts her horse and waves back at us. "Bye-bye, Beli! Remember, it sits atop the third mountain plateau to the east, the one overlooking Bael and Mephisto's estates! After you visit that skank, please drop by later! I'll have daddy's doctors examine your head. I don't want you to suffer any permanent brain injuries, okay?"

"Right, right," Phoebe says, blowing Lily a kiss. "I'll see you later, lover!"

Both women give their goodbyes, then depart, traveling in opposite directions. Phoebe enters the forest to the east, only to hide behind a tree once Lily disappears from our sight.

"Hoo. That was stressful," Phoebe says. "I didn't anticipate Lily being so... excitable."

"You did great," I say, taking a seat on a bench. "Way better than I could have managed. If Lily had kissed me and done the tongue thing, I'd probably have broken character right then and there. You acted the part perfectly."

Phoebe's face turns beet-red. She slumps to the ground and hides her face in her hands. "Oh, god! Jason, don't bring that up! I'm married! I shouldn't be kissing other people! E-especially not women! It's weird!"

"I don't see anything wrong with it," I reply. "It's not like you planned the kiss, or anything. If it had bothered me, I would have stopped you. Besides, in the era I come from, women kissing other women wasn't weird, nor men kissing men. Maybe it was a little bit rare, but I saw plenty of it growing up."

Phoebe rubs her face furiously. "Argh! That might be true for you, Jason, but not for me! I grew up in... in a proper era! Where men courted women, and both sexes knew their roles! This modern era always makes me feel so weird! So... so dirty."

I keep my voice neutral. "How so?"

Phoebe hesitates. She doesn't reply for several seconds but eventually relents.

"Well. How do I put this? Um. Ever since you and I got married- no, even before then... Samantha has always acted much more touchy-feely than I liked. At first, I didn't want to be rude, but then after our marriage, I started feeling guilty about my passive rejections. Whenever she got too close, I would push her away. I never directly rejected her, and that, in turn, made me feel worse."

My mind-wife sighs. "Not only that, but since I never told you about all the moves she made on me in private, I always felt like I was lying to you, too. Sammy and I never did anything, but I always felt, and still feel, like a complete ass. I should set boundaries, but I don't know how. I don't even know if I should."

She falls silent, waiting for my reply.

I nod. "Yeah. I know all of that. I've always known. The day you and I got married, Samantha came over to me and confessed she was madly in love with you. It caught me off-guard, but I took it in stride. You and Sam have a lot in common, after all. Both of you lost the first men you ever loved. Satan, for her, and Sir Percival, for you. I don't see myself as a fairy tale hero of legend, rescuing a virgin princess. I grew up in a society where marriage was cheap, divorces were common, and love had lost most of its substance."

"I don't believe in true love," I continue. "At least... I didn't. Not until I met you. I knew a lot of people growing up. Good people, the sorts who went to Church every Sunday, and said their prayers before their three meals. I always thought the people who held onto their wives and husbands the tightest had most unhappy marriages. They always broke up and ended their love with explosions of rage and torn-apart families."

"Jason..."

Phoebe starts to interrupt me, but I continue. "There's more. I knew a lot of people who thought of their spouses as possessions. They assumed that marriage entitled them to 100% of their wives or husband's affection. To me, even if that were true in the eyes of the law and God himself, it felt immoral. You have a big heart, Phoebe. There's more than enough room for you to love Samantha and me equally, especially after all she's done for us. For you. She saved your life when I couldn't. If it weren't for Sam, Beelzebub would have killed you, Neil, and all the other people in the Core. She's a good friend. I'd never want to hurt either of you."

After I finish speaking, Phoebe falls silent. Tears well up in her eyes, and she quickly tries to wipe them away. "Jason... I never... I never knew you felt that way."

"Dammit, Phoebe. Don't cry. You're gonna make me cry, too..."

"Sniff..."

Phoebe paws at her eyes, and hiccups. "Oh, god. I feel like such an idiot. Why didn't I just tell you sooner? I always thought you'd be jealous, or that you'd pull away from me. I love you, Jason. You're the only man I have eyes for, but... sometimes, when I speak to Samantha, I just... I have this urge to close the gap between us, yet I never do. It tears me up inside."

"I feel terrible, too," I say. "I never realized you and Sam had such tension between each other. I always assumed when you ended up at the pit stop; you two were making a quick pit stop in each other's pit stops."

Phoebe sniffles. "...What?"

"You know... when you're racing. Sam's your mechanic, remember? That's why I mentioned pit stops...?"

"Jason. Why do you always have to make such terrible jokes at the silliest times?"

"Dunno. It's a curse."

Phoebe laughs. "Haha... ugh. My face hurts. I look like crap. Jeez, the worst part is, I'm not even the real Phoebe. I'm just her mind-clone. My original body doesn't even know I've told you all this."

I shake my head. "No. You are the 'real' Phoebe, equal to your original body. As far as I'm concerned, I have two loving wives. You might as well be her spiritual twin or something. Don't get so down on yourself."

Phoebe doesn't cheer up. She stares at the ground listlessly. "You can say that all you want, Jason. It doesn't change anything. I'm still just an errant soul living inside your Mind Realm. I don't have a physical body. I can use yours when you're not using it, but it's not mine. I'm only borrowing it."

The moment Phoebe finishes speaking, a strange, euphoric idea pops into my head. Like a lightbulb going off, I jump out of my seat and gaze forward with brightness in my eyes. "Ah! That's it! Phoebe, you're a genius!"

Phoebe pulls her head out of her hands. "...I am?"

"Yes. Think about it. You don't have a physical body. You can't interact with me, currently. However, that doesn't have to be the case. I'm a Wordsmith! I can create a new body for you and allow you to enter it whenever you want!"

Phoebe stares at the ground for a few moments before jumping to her feet. "N-no way! Jason, that's genius!"

"Yeah. I don't know if it will work, but it's worth a shot. Try making yourself a new body, then let me take over mine and I'll transfer-"

"STOP!"

Before I can finish my sentence, a masculine voice shouts from behind me, making me jump out of my skin. I whirl around to see Raphael, Gabriel, and Michael standing less than twenty feet away. The expansive city park somehow seems much smaller with Gabriel's giant form towering above the nearest trees.

"Thou shalt do no such thing, foolish child," Raphael hisses. "Already, thou hath cloned thy wife's soul without comprehending the consequences. Verily, I tell thee now, that if thou go through with thy foolish plans, thou shalt irreparably harm the one thou claimeth to love."

With my mind still in a daze, I merely stare at the old man. "Huh? What do you mean, Raphael? Explain."

The Archangel of Wisdom flaps his wings. He slowly hovers nearer to me, all while maintaining a contemptuous grimace.

"Imbecilic child. Thou knoweth nothing of Soul Links. Tell me, Jason, what are souls?"

I shrug. "Um. The essence of a person? Their... core?"

"That description is not far from the truth," Raphael concedes. "However! It is far from encompassing the importance of a being's soul. Souls mustn't be considered trifles and playthings. Those who manipulate souls freely will accumulate terrible injuries, ones incurable by even the greatest healer. Look no further than Valac and Mephisto, necromancers who manipulate the dead to do their bidding. In exchange for tremendous power, they lost the vitality from their bodies."

"Alright," I reply. "What about Satan? He seemed just fine, despite being a soul manipulator like Valac. Hell, he was worse, in many ways."

Michael, instead of Raphael, replies. "Indeed. The Devil was a crafty bastard. He, too, manipulated souls to a fearsome extent. However, while he may not have lost his body, he lost his link to the strands of fate. That is why he eventually perished not ten thousand years after his emergence."

"Put another way, the Devil rapidly accumulated fatal amounts of bad luck," Gabriel explains. "Fate conspired to kill him. The Devil proved incapable of resisting the Creator's divine will, and thus, he expired."

I nod. "Fine. Manipulating souls is evil. I get it. What does that mean, though? What would making a body for Phoebe cost me?"

Raphael shakes his head. "I do not know. Each soul manipulator suffers their own agony. In my case, I ended up trapped alone inside this ring. However, in thy case, I speaketh of the evils of soul manipulation not to protect thee, but to shield thy wife."

Raphael continues. "Every time a soul separates from a vessel, it suffers irreversible trauma. Thou hath cloned thy wife's soul. Her clone has, no doubt, suffered some level of memory loss. Her mood swings are not a mere byproduct of her situation, but directly linked to the circumstances of her creation!"

Raphael stabs a finger toward me.

"Thy reckless use of soul manipulation has caused thy wife's errant soul to suffer! Thou art the cause of her pain. Further, by trading places with her, not once, but multiple times, the two of thee have injured thy souls even further!"

This time, Raphael's words hit home.

"You mean... by allowing Phoebe to take over my body, I've somehow injured both our souls?"

Raphael nods. A solemn look appears on his face.

"That is correct, young Hero. Imagine, for a moment, that someone were to take a piece of paper and draw a face on it. We might call this the creation of a soul. However, if one intended to remove the face and place it upon another piece of paper, how might they do so?"

I shrug. "Um. Maybe they'd wet the paper and place another piece against it?"

"Indeed. They might succeed in copying half of the original image, but in doing so, the copy and the original would only be half as vibrant as before! This situation is a suitable allegory for when thou dids't copy Phoebe's soul from her original body. The copy and the original body were both harmed by thy actions."

"Another method," Raphael continues, "would be to take a drawn face and tear it from the page. Thou woulds't then be capable of gluing the face to another page. And thus, thou woulds't perfectly move the face from one page to another."

I frown. "But wouldn't that damage the original page? It would still ruin the paper and it wouldn't look good at all."

"That is correct," Raphael says, nodding vigorously. "After copying Phoebe's soul, thou inadvertently attached the copy to thy Mind Realm. By detaching thy soul from thy body and allowing Phoebe to take over, she ended up tearing herself away from her anchor point, and then tore her anchor yet again when she returned to thy Mind Realm. These repeated actions have injured thy soul, as well as hers."

Raphael cocks his head.

"Tell me, Hero. Have thou suffered any mental issues over the last few years? Headaches? Indecision? Paranoia? Irrational bursts of emotion?"

After closing my eyes and thinking for a moment, I shake my head.

"No. I don't think I have."

"So thou sayeth. The effects of soul manipulation can be both subtle and dramatic. Tis' difficult to spot their effects until they have become irreparable. However, this aged one has a method!"

Raphael makes a motion with his hands. Several magical symbols appear in the air, forming a diamond within a circle. After a few moments, the sensation of a whirlpool swirls within my head, yanking me out of my Mind Realm.

I awaken moments later, fully in control of my main body. I turn my gaze inward to see Phoebe standing before Raphael, her soul having returned to my Mind Realm.

Raphael forces a grim smile. "'Tis no secret to thee that I am one of the mightiest soul manipulators in existence, young Hero. Worry not. My powers are severely limited, so long as I reside within my ring. I have safely swapped thy mind with thy wife's, but doing so again without harming either of thee would be beyond even my means. Now, look closely at Phoebe's errant soul with thy Wordsmithing."

A sense of worry seizes me as I realize what Raphael just did to me. Without my permission, the old man actually managed to manipulate not only my soul but Phoebe's as well, all while possessing a sliver of his former power.

It's dangerous, allowing Raphael inside my Mind Realm. I'll need to come up with countermeasures to protect myself from not only him, but others of his ilk.

I shift my focus onto Phoebe. "Examine."

Unsure of what to look for, I turn my attention toward my mind-wife's mana pathways, as well as her internal magic structure. As a non-Hero, she possesses a complete lack of mana, similar to any other human. However, thanks to my various Wordsmithing empowerments, she appears far more fit and full of vitality than other people.

I gaze at her with clinical dispassion, but even after five minutes, I don't see anything wrong.

"Sorry, Raphael. What am I supposed to see?"

"Look toward Phoebe's brain," Raphael replies. "Or, more specifically, the area of her soul which she visualizes as a brain."

I frown. "What do you mean?"

"Souls can take any form they wish," Raphael explains. "For example, if Phoebe wished, she could transform her soul into a giant arachnid, or a fearsome dragon. However, 'tis all but impossible for someone untrained in soul manipulation to morph their soul into anything beyond their self-image. Thy wife still remembers her physical appearance, so she materializes within thy Mind Realm as a facsimile of her physical body."

This time, it's Phoebe who responds. "Wait, are you saying I can change my appearance if I just imagine myself looking different?"

Raphael scoffs. "Nay! All beings possess an indelible image of themselves. To merely change thy appearance would require a tremendous amount of willpower and self-actualization, unlike any I've seen before. For example, if I were to imagine my soul possessing four arms instead of two, I might succeed two times out of ten, due to the image of myself I've implanted in my mind over the- what?!"

Raphael stops mid-sentence. He stares, wide-eyed, as Phoebe's hair color changes from white to crimson. Freckles appear on her face, and her height increases by half a foot.

"Wow! This isn't hard at all!" Phoebe marvels. Her skin becomes noticeably more youthful, and her eyes change from green to yellow and red, mimicking a demon's irises. "Amazing! I can feel all the changes happening in my soul every time I imagine them!"

Raphael's eyes nearly bug out of his head. "W-w-what?! Preposterous! How can an untrained mortal-gah! I wouldn't believe it if I didn't see it with my own eyes!"

Phoebe laughs, oblivious to Raphael's astonishment. Behind the old man, both of his brothers wear equally long faces.

"Impressive," Michael mutters. "The human wench is a damned natural at altering her self-image."

"Long has it been since I've seen Raphael in such a confused state," Gabriel adds. "The look on his face is more than a little amusing."

It doesn't take long before Phoebe changes her appearance to mimic Belial, then she changes into Daisy, Raphael, and even me. Each change makes her clap her hands and dance around excitedly. "Boo-yah! Haha, I'm the best! That's right; Queen Phoebe is here!"

I smirk, sending a smug look toward Raphael. "You were saying?"

Raphael tugs on his beard angrily. "No! Dammit, Jason! Look closely! Thy wife's situation is far from optimistic. Do as I said and gaze at her mental pathways."

I nod and follow Raphael's instruction. When I peer more closely at Phoebe's 'brain,' all of my smug satisfaction vanishes.

Inside my wife's head, along with the bright blips indicating her brain's activity, I notice several tiny, almost insignificant-looking 'smudges.' Resembling drops of ink spilled onto a piece of paper, each one appears far darker than the area surrounding it.

"Oh my god."

Raphael nods furiously. "Thy wife's actions are far from normal, young Wordsmith. Even her vocabulary has changed since I swapped thy souls. If she is capable of changing her appearance so easily, it can only mean she has lost her sense of self-image. This means her condition is quite dire. Use thy Wordsmithing and attempt to repair the blemishes staining her soul. If we are lucky, thou shalt return her to normal."

Phoebe continues changing her appearance. To my horror, I realize that each time she does, the blemishes on her soul increase in number, adding another spot or two.

"Phoebe. Please, stop," I say. "You can't keep changing your appearance. You're hurting yourself."

My mind-wife scoffs. "Psh! You're just jealous, hubby! I can do something you can't. Nyeh!"

Phoebe sticks her tongue out at me. Her pose makes me nauseous.

The Phoebe I know would never do such a thing. She's always been a stoic person, not someone who indulges in her emotions.

Without hesitation, I target Phoebe's soul.

"Repair. Repair. Repair."

One by one, I target each of the soul blemishes, erasing them bit by bit.

It takes me nearly fifteen minutes to repair the damage. Eventually, I finish, allowing Phoebe to slump to the grass inside my Mind Realm. She rests her face in her hands. "I... I feel like shit."

Raphael places a hand on her shoulder, comforting her with his touch. "Were thou to continue for much longer, I fear thy memories might have degraded permanently."

"Maybe," I counter, "but I did heal all of her soul blemishes. Doesn't that mean I erased all of her soul manipulation's negative symptoms?"

"Perhaps, but I would not bet my life on it," Raphael cautions. "I have done my part to avert thy crisis. Now, moving forward, thou knoweth enough to avoid placing thy loved ones in precarious situations."

With a dismissive wave of his hands, Raphael turns his back on Phoebe and starts hobbling away.

"Continue with thy plans, Wordsmith. However, do not assume thy Wordsmithing is omnipotent. It has many points of failure, like any power. Rely on it at thy own risk."

"Oh," Raphael continues, "be certain to check thy soul for blemishes, too. If thy wife possesses them, thou surely do as well."

Raphael and his brothers fade away, leaving Phoebe and me alone.

"Are you okay?" I ask.

"I don't know," Phoebe replies. "But now I understand why I was so good at impersonating Sam. I doubt I could do it again, the way I am now."

"Maybe. Maybe not," I counter. "Inspect."

I turn my gaze inward, examining my soul with Wordsmithing.

However, after more than ten minutes of searching, I find nothing wrong with myself whatsoever.

My soul remains uninjured.

Why would Phoebe suffer wounds to her soul, but not me?

...Have I, perhaps, overlooked something?

Part 212: Blinker's Array of Talents

After using my Wordsmithing to check the area for enemies, I breathe a sigh of relief. With Lily having trotted into the distance, I find myself and Phoebe all alone again. The sun continues to beat upon the planet from on high, but I can already hazard a guess that the day is more than halfway over.

I return to my original appearance, donning my T-REX and entering stealth mode to hide my presence. However, after a few moments, I frown.

"Kar? Blinker? Where did you two go?"

After scanning the nearby foliage, I make my way through the jungle, confused out of my mind. I don't see Kar anywhere, even with my T-REX's enhanced visual sensors and radar.

"Kar?"

After trudging through the foliage, a yelp at my feet startles me. I lower my gaze to find Kar and Blinker, both at their shortened sizes, hiding under a leaf.

"Hurgh! Turtle! ...You have finally finished with Black Beauty. Ah... this is not what it seems..."

Blinker scowls at me. "Geez! Can't you give us a little privacy! We're trying to make babies over here!"

My face turns beet-red, though with the T-REX covering my head, neither of the shorties notices. I spin on my heel and turn away, shielding my eyes. "God! What are you guys doing?! You were supposed to be my backup! Put some clothes on!"

"It's not our fault you spent an hour blabbering with that hussie!" Blinker yells. "Besides, if you can't handle one skinny little lady by yourself, what kind of Hero are you? I'm over here making the best use of my precious time! Hmph!"

After several seconds, the sound of sticks snapping behind me makes me turn around and watch as Kar expands from his miniature form to his full-sized, ten-foot body. Once the croco-sphinx finishes growing, he rubs his head sheepishly. "Hurgh. My apologies, Turtle. I had no say in the matter. As you know, Butterfly can be quite voracious when it comes to her sexual appetite. I was minding my business, but she demanded that I shrink down so we could make like mice and-"

"Kar! Stop, please," I beg the crocodile. "I get it. I know what you were doing. Good for you guys; I'm glad you were having fun while I had to extract information from a total stranger."

Blinker, having once again put on her clothes, flies over to my face and waggles her finger. "Sheesh! Listen to you, acting like the noble Hero! I saw what you did, buster! You decided to play tongue-twister with little miss temptress! When we get home, you bet your butt I'll be telling Phoebe about this!"

I frown. "...It's not what you think."

"Oh, suuure," Blinker says, rolling her eyes. "You just had to smash your faces together like a couple of horny teenagers. At least Kar and I are married! What will Phoebe think when she hears about your little fling? I'm sure she won't mind the saliva-swapping one bit!"

My mind-wife chuckles. "Haha. You're in the doghouse now, big boy."

Oh, shut up.

"Let's get a move on," I say, waving Blinker's concerns away. "I got the location of Ose's estate. It's about thirty miles to the east, so I won't be able to teleport us there."

"Uh-huh," Blinker says, a mischievous smirk on her face. "Did you get that babe's number, too? I bet she'll spend the rest of the day drooling over the taste of your tongue."

Kar laughs. "Hehe. Now, now, Butterfly. It's not like Black Beauty made out with him, but with the person who she thought was Big Boobs. Turtle mimicked Big Boobs flawlessly."

"Mhm," Blinker grunts. "Jason deceived a poor, young, virgin maiden. He set her heart aflutter, but alas! She only tasted the nectar of forbidden romance!"

I sigh. "...Don't worry, Blinker. I'll be sure to let Phoebe know about my newfound Frenching skills when we get home. For now, can we focus? I need to meet Ose ASAP. If you're done clowning around, I'd like to get going."

Blinker drops her soapbox act. "I'm just teasing you, hero-man! Don't worry. I won't tell Phoebe anything, not unless she asks. Your secret is safe with me."

"That doesn't make me feel any better."

My mind-wife snorts. "Psh. It's comforting to know Blinker would lie to cover for your infidelity."

Yeah, but I didn't even get to enjoy the tongue-tasting. You had all the fun.

"Haha! Maybe I'll let you take over next time," Phoebe snarks.

* * *

An hour later, after using my Wordsmithing to grow wings for Kar and I, the three of us fly over the densely-packed forest toward a series of mountains to the east. Thankfully, growing wings doesn't passively consume any of my mana, so I have enough to make all of us invisible for the journey to Ose's manor.

Crackle.

I activate one of my many remaining Mana Beads, rejuvenating my internal energy.

"We're almost there," I say, speaking to my two airborne partners. I try not to laugh as I watch Kar's clumsy aerial proficiency. Unlike me and Blinker, who have flown for years or our entire lives, respectively, Kar has only taken to the skies when in his Sphinx state. The crocodile scowls angrily. "These wings are far too unwieldy compared to mine."

"Yeah, but you can't maintain your Sphinx form for long," I point out. "And once you use it, you won't be able to activate it again for quite a while. I'd rather save all that extra firepower for a dicey situation. We have no idea how Ose will react to our presence."

After a slight pause, I add, "Hell, we don't know anything about Ose. Samantha hates talking about her. From what I've gathered, she's a power-hungry tyrant. Probably looks like a fat, greasy monster."

Blinker flips me off. "Monster?! I resent that!"

"Err, sorry. Bad choice of words."

Kar nods. "Hurgh. Your reasoning makes sense, Turtle. However, I cannot stand these wings! They might as well be a pair of swords, for how well they control. We reptiles do not belong in the skies."

"Sorry, pal. I made them leathery, just like you. You'll just have to practice with 'em."

From within my Mind Realm, Phoebe sighs. "If only I'd known you'd need Kar to fly, I'd have rushed out my new prototype T-REX's."

I turn my attention inward. Prototype T-REX's? What do you mean? I don't remember hearing about anything like that.

Phoebe blushes. "Well, I've made a few experimental war suits, but they don't work very well. I figured if a Baron, Duke, or god forbid, even an Emperor decided to attack while you or Hope wasn't available, I'd need some way to retaliate. Unfortunately, all of the nanosuits I made had bugs galore — the flight systems on my newest Hummer models worked fine, but they wouldn't function with any other features. Too much power consumption and too little heat dispersion."

Slowly, I nod. Interesting. What sorts of features were you thinking of adding? Maybe I could help.

Phoebe shrugs. "You don't have the Crown anymore, Jason. I doubt you'd accomplish much; no offense. As for the features, well, I had this idea for a suit that could temporarily boost the user's speed by a factor of fifty. I called it 'Lightning Mode.' I also wanted to add a body reinforcement suit, something capable of shrugging off missiles and hellfire, if the going got rough. Unfortunately, each suit ended up only working with one feature at a time. I haven't solved the interfacing issues."

I smile. Don't worry, you'll iron out the kinks eventually. You always do. Remember the environmental barrier?

Phoebe nods. "How could I forget? Adding a teleport nullification indexer made me want to rip my hair out. Anyway, I used the Crown when I made the E-shield. The MK. II T-REX's are way harder to perfect. I don't have Solomon helping me, so it takes me forever to tweak all the variables."

My mind-wife sighs. "Well, I keep saying 'me,' but really, it's all up to my other half, now. I can't work on stuff like that anymore."

Phoebe's enthusiasm vanishes as quickly as it appeared. She eases herself onto the grass and rests her head on her knees.

"I've only been in your Mind Realm for almost a month, Jason. Already, I've started feeling claustrophobic. I have Shana here, and Lorent too. The Archangels aren't really my cup of tea, but I'm glad they're here, too. Still... even as big as your Mind Realm is, I can't help but feel suffocated. After learning what Raphael told me, I realized leaving here might be all but impossible, too. If you tried to make a new body for me, it would defeat the purpose of my existence. I'm supposed to stay in your head and protect you from people like Ose. That means if I were to leave, you'd lose your mental protections and end up at the mercy of any two-bit telepath who intended you harm."

Phoebe closes her eyes. "I love you, Jason... but the longer I stay here, the harder things are for me. I want to protect you, but I also can't stand the thought of never touching our daughter again. I hate that you have to keep my existence a secret. I hate that not even Kar and Blinker know I'm in here. I just... I hate all of it."

Phoebe...

I fall silent, unable to reply.

What can I say?

Just like with Hope, I created my mind-wife in the spur of the moment without thinking through my actions.

I assumed that, with my Wordsmithing, I could take care of any problems that would arise. Instead, were it not for Raphael's interference, I might have killed the woman I love.

I'll do whatever I can to help you, I say. Just don't give up hope, okay? As long as we're together, I won't let you suffer. Maybe I can project your image just like I did for Solomon. Then, you'd be able to talk to Daisy.

Phoebe shakes her head. "If you did that, people would learn of my existence, and I wouldn't be able to protect you anymore. For now, just be quiet, Jason. I need time to think. I need time for myself."

Alright, I murmur. Let me know if you need anything.

With a reluctant sigh, I raise my eyes toward the horizon. There, I spot several mountains approaching my group as we fly toward them at high speeds.

"Hurgh. Turtle, those peaks appear to be the ones Black Beauty mentioned," Kar says. "However, I do not see Ose's estate."

"Me neither," Blinker says. "Something feels off about those mountains, though. They look kinda funny, dont'cha think?"

Kar shakes his head. "No, Butterfly. They seem normal to me."

We continue flying closer. Eventually, we stop about a mile away, hovering via the warm updrafts coming off the planet's surface.

I frown. "What the heck? I thought one of these three peaks was supposed to have a plateau with Ose's estate on its top. I don't see it anywhere. Did we come to the wrong mountain range?"

Kar rubs his chin. "Hurgh. I cannot say for certain. My instincts tell me we shouldn't have to travel much further. Look over there."

Kar points to the south, where a massive black spot in the forest catches his eye.

"Do you see it? The trees down there are dead and rotten. That area matches Black Beauty's description of Mephisto's obelisk. We must be in the right area. What other mountains do you see?"

I shrug. "None. Let's fly a little closer."

The three of us hover downward, cautiously angling our wings to levitate a few thousand feet above Hell Harbor's surface. The sounds of beasts roaring and howling below, though faint, tell a tale of vibrant life amongst this world's flora.

However, no matter how I squint, I can't pick out even a tiny flat spot on the mountain where Ose's manor might be crammed. Especially given her status as an Emperor — I'd expect her to live inside a magnificent palace.

"This makes no sense," I mumble. "Let's check the other side of the bluff."

The three of us fly over the mountain. However, once we arrive on the other side, we meet the same sight — a generic, rocky valley.

"Inspect," I say.

My Wordsmithing scans the cliffs, but no matter where I aim my gaze, I don't spot any anomalies.

Frustrated, I punch my palm. "Fuck! I can't see anything out of the ordinary! Not even like a hidden hatch or some secret, underground base! The way Lily described Ose's manor, I thought she'd have carved the whole top of the mountain off! We must have come to the wrong place!"

"...No," Blinker says, her voice quiet. "You're wrong, kiddo. Man, you're lucky you brought me along for the ride. I noticed something was weird since I first looked at this mountain. The top of the middle peak has an Illusory Array protecting it!"

I tilt my head slightly to glance at the fairy. "What's an Illusory Array?"

Blinker smirks. "That ain't the question you need to ask, bucko! The correct question is, 'what is an array in the first place'! Arrays are magical creations that use external sources to power them. There are all sorts of arrays out there in the world. Heck, even Phoebe's created one!"

My jaw slackens. "She has?"

"I have?!" Phoebe repeats. Blinker doesn't hear her.

"Mhm," Blinker says. "Remember that anti-teleportation interface Phoebe built into Hero City's environmental shield? Well, she consulted me to make it. I helped her with a few of the finer details. The only way you can block a Warper's magic is by using a spell of your own! All arrays are like that."

I nod. "So, what you're saying is that someone, probably Ose, shielded her estate with an illusion? Is that why we can't see it?"

The redheaded fairy nods. "Yep. But watch out! The mountain might be an illusion, but I can sense a powerful mana barrier emanating from the middle peak. We'll splat against it like bugs if we get too close. If we're really unlucky, we might get shot out of the sky or something. I bet Ose has automated defenses protecting her home."

"So, what do we do?" I ask. "Maybe I should try and disable the array with my Wordsmithing?"

"You might be able to disable it," Blinker says. "But if you mess up, it'll alert Ose and everyone else to our presence. You should leave this one to me, big guy!"

Blinker pauses.

"...Also, there's a 5% chance that if you royally screw up, the whole thing will explode and kill us all."

"What?! Why? How??"

The fairy shrugs. "Arrays are complicated, Jason. Illusion arrays aren't intended for offense, but you can bet that if one covers the whole top of a mountain, it's gonna have a huuuuuge power source! Best not to set it off with incompetence!"

I nod. "Yeah. Let's not do that."

With a sigh, I cross my arms and watch as the young fairy flies forward, leaving Kar and me behind. The crocodile starts to fly after her, but she holds up a palm. "Nuh-uh! You stay right there, Kar! With our luck, you'll blunder in and nudge the self-destruct mechanism!"

Kar groans. "Hurgh. Fine. Stay safe, my Butterfly."

The two of us fall silent as Blinker glides toward the mountaintop. Her hands become a blur as she chants a series of complex incantations. Several marble-sized balls of light materialize above her head and rush forward, striking an invisible barrier.

Several minutes pass.

Blinker hammers the illusion time after time, creating bubbles on its surface capable of letting us see through the illusion. Already, I can make out the silhouette of a manor the size of ten football stadiums. Its pure white color stands out against the greenery of the gardens lining its borders. The mansion gives me a futuristic vibe, what with its chrome-plated edging and giant, mirror-like windows.

What the heck is Blinker doing? I silently wonder. Won't attacking the illusion notify Ose of our arrival?

To my surprise, Raphael appears in my mind's eye.

"Hehe. Thou hath much to learn, young one. Arrays are complex magical creations capable of protecting and defending landmarks. While they may have the downside of being immobile, their sheer might allows even inexperienced and weak beings to obtain strength capable of rivaling deities."

Raphael continues. "The fairy is not attacking the array, but using illusory orbs to probe its weaknesses. As her magic has no mass, it won't activate the defensive mechanisms. Doubtless, 'twas a team of fairies who created this array, as such powerful illusion magic is rare to find, even among monsters and demons. I was one of only a few pureblooded angels capable of unleashing the Illusory Realm, and my prowess far exceeded my brothers and sisters."

I nod. Solomon's visions showed me you were proficient with illusions. Why can't I teleport Blinker, Kar, and myself inside the barrier? Wordsmithing is already capable of bypassing Hell Harbor's defenses.

"Because once we step foot inside, the array will recognize us as intruders. Blinker is not only creating a gap for us to enter, but also forcing the array to treat thy party as authorized residents. Watch and learn, young one. Blinker's prowess reveals the difference between a General Practitioner, such as thyself, and a Specialist, such as her. Thy Wordsmithing might be capable of imitating countless magical paths, but thy skills will always fall short of a Specialist's single-minded focus."

As Raphael speaks, a flicker of motion passes across the array. Suddenly, the entire illusion crackles and pops, fizzling away to reveal Ose's manor in all its splendor. Finally, the three of us can see inside the projection, where the eerily empty estate beckons for us to enter.

Blinker turns around and forms the 'ok' sign with her fingers. "Whew! Donezo! I thought it'd be a lot easier, but I underestimated the barrier's strength! Alright, no time to waste. Let's get a move on!"

Kar and I both nod. We fly forward, following Blinker's lead as she enters the array.

We hold our breath, waiting for an alarm to go off, or for energy blasts to come flying at us, but nothing happens.

We land amidst one of the many gardens visible from above, only a stone's throw away from the entrance. Sheepishly, I rub the back of my head.

"Say, uh... should we ring the doorbell? How do we even introduce ourselves? Yo, what's up, I'm the Wordsmith. I forcibly broke inside your barrier. Let's sign a peace treaty! I feel like that won't work too well for us."

Kar mimics my expression. He forces an awkward grin and shrugs. "Hurgh. You are the master diplomat here, Turtle. I'm only here to protect you and save you from our more quick-witted enemies."

"Ah!" Blinker yelps.

Kar and I jerk our heads in the direction of her voice. What we see simultaneously confuses and startles us.

A lone human woman, blonde, somewhere in her forties, stands silently at the front door. Her prim and proper outfit, featuring a pencil skirt and a white blouse top, gives her the appearance of a CEO's secretary. She stares at us expressionlessly, as if she's expected our arrival for some time.

I reach out with my telepathy, trying to read her mind. To my surprise, I receive only fragments of words in return. No full sentences, no coherent thoughts.

Follow. Guests. New. Where? Yes. Beckon. Master. Kelp? Steak. Clean. Guests? Follow.

After several awkward seconds, the women bows deeply at the waist, aiming her gesture toward us, the intruders.

Blinker flutters over to me. A spooked look appears on her face. "I, uh, think the blondie wants us to follow her."

"Yeah," I mutter. "You might be right."

The human continues bowing. She remains locked in an awkward ninety degree angle, giving me a weirdly creeped-out sensation.

She reminds me of a robot.

"Inspect."

I aim a word of power at the woman. Several details appear before me.

Name: Amy Gutierrez.

Species: Human.

Date of Birth: February 3rd, 1985.

Sklsgh: Fggholp?

Jlkdfng... plxner.

A shiver runs down my back. Even my Wordsmithing can only deduce a few small clues about the woman's identity.

"Uh. Her name is Amy," I whisper to Blinker. "She's human, not an android or anything else. Let's follow her."

"I don't know about this..." Blinker mutters. "Ose must be expecting us. Why else would this creepy servant be out here, waiting?"

"Your guess is as good as mine. If Ose is expecting us, but she hasn't attacked, then either she's planning to catch us in a trap, or maybe she knows the purpose of my visit."

"Protect your head," Blinker says, a note of warning in her voice. "If Ose breaks your jaw, or does something worse, we won't be able to escape. You're the only person who can return us to the Core."

I nod. "Noted."

The three of us fall in line and walk toward the woman. Only after we draw within a few paces does she unbend at the wait and stand at attention. Amy turns without saying anything and strolls to the front door, leading us inside.

Guests. Food. Dog? Ship. Master. Master? Guests. Greet. King. Dog? Dog.

The more I try to read Amy's mind, the more unsettled I become. I sever the telepathic link and rub my arms.

Alright, Phoebe. Brace yourself. I'm entering the lair of our enemy. I'll be counting on you to protect my brain from this psycho.

My mind-wife forces a smile. She sits on a couch with a book in hand and Shana's head on her lap. "I'm here for you, Jason. No matter what."

"Good. I'm going to need all the help I can get."

Part 213: Confronting Ose

Kar, Blinker, and I all follow Ose's slave. Amy stares ahead emotionlessly and says nothing as the four of us walk through Ose's mansion. She moves at a brisk pace, allowing us to cover a lot of ground quickly.

The size of Ose's mansion awes me. In terms of square feet, it must be the size of three or four megamalls pressed together. Crystal chandeliers hang from the main entrance, which, when combined with the spaciousness of the entry antechamber, give her mansion's foyer an impression of size far beyond the Labyrinth's Core. A hundred feet divide the floor from the ceiling, while pillars supporting the roof allow the room to stretch out to the right and left for a thousand feet in every direction.

However, what makes my senses go on high alert is the realization that, except for the four of us, the mansion appears to be empty. Aside from Amy, I don't spot a single slave or servant. Every inch of furniture, every vase, wooden banister, or shiny trinket sparkles and shines as if someone has cleaned it within the last five minutes.

Who cleans the mansion? Surely, Ose must possess a fleet of servants, all scouring it from head to toe, day in and day out. Otherwise, how could an estate this enormous be so pristine and untouched? Amy certainly couldn't do it all by herself, could she?

...Could she?

Amy's high heels click against the polished wooden floor, echoing into the distance. I find myself lifting each foot and placing it down with the utmost care, for fear of scuffing the wood. For some reason, my instincts tell me I shouldn't harm the beauty of this manor, even if I know not why.

"Amazing," Phoebe murmurs. My mind-wife gazes through my eyes, taking in the sights along with me. "Ose was only a Baron until six years ago, but already, she possesses a property of this size. Did she have it built for her new Emperor-level status, or was it like this all along?"

Unable to answer her question, I only hazard a shrug.

Dunno. Maybe all Barons have properties like this. Perhaps Bael's is even bigger, along with Diablo and the other Emperors.

"Do you think Samantha has a manor?" Phoebe asks.

Sam doesn't strike me as the type to flaunt wealth and power. She's always seemed detached from material prosperity. She lives in a tiny little room, just like you and me.

"Yeah, I suppose you're right," Phoebe mutters.

I continue following Amy, while Kar falls into stride beside me. "Hurgh. Turtle, this female is surprisingly quiet. Why has she said nothing since we arrived?"

"I don't know," I murmur. "Something tells me she's missing a few marbles. I don't even want to know what awful shit Ose has done to her."

Minutes pass.

We walk down corridor after corridor. Sometimes, we pass by large windows, allowing us a view of the gorgeous gardens outside. Countless alien flowers bloom under the waning sun, revealing many shades of purple, red, and blue. However, the sheer number of white flowers turns their colored companions into mere specks. Either by choice, or coincidence, Ose appears to prefer colorless flowers when decorating her estate.

Kar's eyes flick out the window. He pauses mid-stride and frowns. "Hurgh. Turtle, look over there. Do you see that?"

I follow his gaze toward a charred-black field in the distance. The remains of a giant bonfire scars the land, while hundreds of weeds poke up through the ash and charcoal. Despite its size and scope, at a tenth of a mile in diameter, the fire's remains appear concentrated, as if it were a targeted event and not a random accident. Thanks to the vegetation swallowing the land, I quickly ascertain it must be a few years old.

"Yeah, I see it," I reply. "I wonder what happened."

When I turn to glance at Kar, I notice that his reptilian eyes have narrowed to slits. "So you do not see it, after all, Turtle. Once again, your frail human vision fails you. Look closer."

Following his lead, I utter a word of power. "Vision."

After returning my attention to the ash-choked land, I need only a few seconds before a bolt of horror shoots down my spine. Amidst the scorched wood and grass, dozens and dozens of bones poke out of the dirt, revealing the presence of a mass grave!

"Son of a bitch," I mutter. "What the fuck happened there? Why does Ose have a bunch of bodies burned in a pile right next to her precious garden?"

"Because," Kar replies, his voice tinged with rage, "those are human bones."

My newly acquired deductive powers spring into action. By using the same abilities I did when I faced Mara, I rapidly click pieces into place, determining the most likely outcomes of several different situations.

Eventually, I reach a conclusion.

"There aren't any servants at this estate besides Amy. Kar, I think it's possible Ose killed all of her former servants and burned their bodies in that bonfire, over there."

"Possible? No, it is guaranteed," Kar growls. "We cannot trust Ose. She is a monster beyond any we've seen before."

"You're probably right," I say, keeping my voice low. "But we need to confirm our suspicions. I don't know what Ose's reasons were. Even if they were reprehensible, there's a matter of degree involved. I'll only throw away the peace treaty for a good reason."

Kar crosses his arms. "Hurgh. You may lead, here, but if Ose acts out of line, I'll end her myself."

I glance at Kar's shoulder, where Blinker sits in silence. The fairy meets my gaze, but for once, she seems much quieter than usual. "Gator-man is right, Jason. I see no reason to trust Ose."

"Well, damn. If even you're saying stuff like that..."

Blinker doesn't reply. She turns away, her expressionless gaze fixating on Amy.

The servant slows to a stop and turns to face us. She waits for my party to finish our discussion before returning to her previous power-walking speed. We fall into place behind her and keep quiet, merely observing the inner workings of Ose's villa.

Soon, thirty minutes pass. By using my mental map, I chart the course we've traveled and frown as I realize our long, zig-zagging path has taken us through a series of S-curves all throughout the mansion's hallways. It seems Amy has chosen a scenic route, one designed to emphasize Ose's power at the expense of my time.

"Christ," I mutter, "can we get on with it? Just lead us to Ose already. I'd rather not take all day just so your stupid boss can gloat about her riches."

Ose's thrall glances over her shoulder, surprising me. It seems even with my voice low; she heard what I said.

Amy changes direction. Instead of continuously leading us down inner and outer corridors, she turns onto the main hallway, one much broader than its predecessors, and leads us straight into the heart of Ose's estate.

It doesn't take long before even I, with my poorly attuned mana sensing abilities, begin to notice a distinct burning sensation in the air. The overwhelming mana of a Demon Emperor rushes out from one of many inner chambers, slowly increasing in intensity as we draw near.

Finally, we reach our destination. Amy slows to a stop before a pair of fifteen-foot-tall oak doors, each covered in magical runes. She presses her hand against a computer panel beside them, surprising me.

"A handprint scanner? That doesn't seem very demonic."

Kar nods. "Don't you remember, Turtle? Ose is the only demon capable of understanding and creating human technology. Her intellect rivals even my mother's."

"Right. That makes sense."

Kar and I wait while Amy leans forward and opens her right eye, allowing a retinal scanner to do its job. It releases a series of pulses into her iris, causing Amy to flinch. When it finishes, she pulls away and rubs her eye, ignoring the rest of us completely.

Click. Click. CLACK.

A series of unlocking sounds emanate from within the double-doors. Without any fanfare, they slowly open inward, revealing the room's contents.

Inside, a giant table with fifty chairs along each of its sides stretches into the distance. Countless meats and vegetables sit inside glass containers, preserving their contents while keeping them hot. Foods of all different types call to my party, beckoning for us to sit and eat. Torches on the walls crackle with fire, doing little to illuminate the room thanks to the late-day sun pouring in through the windowpanes.

Giant, stained-glass windows, each one protected by humming forcefields, allow natural light to flood the room. Their presence gives the dining hall a vibe similar to a Catholic church, which strikes me as odd. Why would a Demon Emperor decorate her mansion using an architectural style reminiscent of the angels?

When I lower my eyes to the entryway, my vision turns frosty.

Standing at the room's entrance is a demon whose face immediately erases all my interest regarding anything else.

Beelzebub.

The Duke of Inferno spreads both of his arms out while flashing an evil grin. "Hahaha. Jason Hiro. You've finally come."

Kar howls in rage. "You!"

"Ah, ah, ah," Beelzebub says, waggling a finger at the crocodile. "Can't we all get along for today, you worthless traitor? You don't want to fight me, not while standing in the most heavily fortified structure in all of Hell Harbor. Not that you'd stand a chance anywhere else, Monster King. You may technically possess the strength of a Duke, but you'll never defeat me in one on one combat."

Kar balls his claws into fists. "Hurgh! You slimy little-! Six years ago, because of you, I lost thousands of friends! I've sworn an oath to erase you from the realm of the living!!"

"Kar," I say, keeping my tone neutral. "Stop. We're not here to fight, not even if it means eliminating Beelzebub. Besides. I've already beaten him once. It's unlikely the outcome will change this time."

A flicker of hatred flashes in Beelzebub's eyes. "Ah, yes. The noble Hero, leader of humanity. Your scaled friend is not the only one in this room who owes a blood debt. Keep running your mouth, and you'll find out just how terrifying my evolution from Lord to Duke has made me. I'm not the same demon from six years ago."

"Alright, boys, calm your tits," Blinker says, huffing angrily. "If you're gonna fight, then fight! If not, sit down and shut your mouths! Sheesh. Nothing worse than a bunch of men waving their big sticks around."

From behind Beelzebub, across the room, at the other side of the grand table, a female voice pipes up. "Well said, Blinker, Queen of all Monsters, third in line to the Nalerian throne. Your diplomatic instincts aren't half bad."

My eyes flick past Beelzebub's shoulder, toward a white-haired demoness some hundred feet away. She sits at the head of the table, a glass of red wine held loosely in her fingers. The demoness wears a snugly-fitting white uniform, reminding me of a flight attendant. Her painted nails clink as she raps them on the table, while her eyes lock onto mine.

"You must be Ose," I say. "I do believe this is our first time meeting."

"That depends on how you define a 'meeting,'" Ose says. "After all, we did have that little encounter inside your Mind Realm. If it weren't for that troublesome king protecting your brain, we wouldn't be having this discussion right now. Speaking of which... where might your favorite little golden crown be, I wonder?"

"It's gone," I say. "Solomon and I had a mutual parting. But before you get any clever ideas, let me warn you that I've reinforced my mental defenses substantially since we last spoke. As long as you don't try anything funny, I won't accidentally hurt you."

Ose turns her gaze away to look longingly at the stained glass windows, where the waning sun shines through, illuminating them with its golden light. "Ah, I see you possess the capability to learn from your mistakes, Jason Hiro. If only the humans living during the Energy Wars had the same idea, we demons might never have won. In any case, come. Take a seat. We have much to discuss."

I nod. "That we do. I presume you're not going to do anything stupid, like ambush me, right?"

Beelzebub sneers. "If Ose wanted you dead, you'd have perished in your sleep years ago. Underestimate the Emperor of Infiltration at your own risk, vermin."

"Beelzebub. That's quite enough," Ose says, a hint of boredom in her voice. "Lead our guests to their seats."

Beelzebub turns to stare at her for a moment before returning his gaze to us. "Very well. Come, mighty warriors. Don't let me slow you down."

Beelzebub turns and walks to the left side of the table while gesturing to the right. We follow his lead and walk to the seats on Ose's left, while Beelzebub sits at her right-hand side. It doesn't escape my notice that she places him at the second-highest position at the table. In her eyes, we're all guests in her house, but the dignitaries of a foreign nation rank lower than one of her generals. It's not as if I can't fathom why Ose made that choice, but if we were to swap places, I'd choose differently.

After I take my seat, Kar takes his. Blinker sits on his shoulder, eyeballing the food set out before us. A single crumb might last her a week, but not even she is greedy enough to test the waters of eating demon-cooked food. Who knows what mind-altering, poisonous substances Ose might have prepared for us?

"So, you knew we were coming," I say, positing a rhetorical question. "And yet you didn't stop us. Why not?"

Ose leans back in her chair, rests her elbows on its arms, and folds her hands in her lap. "We've never met before, Jason Hiro, but I know you better than you'd expect. I'm not worried you'll cause any trouble for me. Humans might be disgusting vermin, but you at least possess a modicum of self-restraint. I doubt your nobility and so-called 'righteous ideals' will hold out once the going gets tough, but for now, your intentions are benign, if not downright naive."

The Emperor of Infiltration smiles. "Let's just say I wanted to finally get to know you. I'm sure you've heard a bit about me, here and there, from that damned... Belial. However, I hate the idea that your knowledge of me comes from that filthy, traitorous little..."

Ose bites her tongue, but just from her tone of voice, I get the impression that her rivalry with Belial is far beyond redemption. Whatever happened between them, I don't see either demoness reaching a peaceful resolution anytime soon.

I clear my throat. "I came here to negotiate a peace treaty between my, erm, subjects, and the entirety of demonkind. I can assure you that my intentions are noble, though I'd like to add that I take offense to most of what you just stated. Belial is my wife's best friend... so I'd like it if you kept your feelings for her out of our conversation."

Beelzebub leans his arm on the table. "Ose is the current head of demonkind! She will say whatever she wants about that turncoat! We've already banished Belial from our ranks! She holds no official authority among our people beyond her evolved status!"

Ose sighs. "Beelzebub... please. The Hero appears uncomfortable regarding our discussion. Let's talk about something else for now."

The Duke of Inferno groans, then he leans back in his chair and gazes at a torch behind my head. Thanks to my enhanced mana sensing abilities, I observe a faint strand of magic flying from his eyes to bolster the flickering firelight.

"Whatever you say, my Emperor."

Ose returns her attention to me. Despite her harsh words, I find myself slightly off-put by her hospitality and gentle demeanor. She doesn't seem at all like the demoness Samantha described to Phoebe time and time again.

Ose is a backstabbing manipulator. She hates humans more than anything else in the universe. Given a chance, she'll break any deal you set and betray you before you can see it coming. Don't trust a word she says.

Samantha's warnings appear in the back of my mind. I keep them within arm's length, making sure to proceed with caution.

"So, Jason," Ose says. "You've come here hoping to stay my hand. You know damn well what I want, so should I assume you have something to offer me? I don't do bribes, but reasonable trades might slow my fists to action."

Beelzebub snaps his fingers. "Your fellow Wordsmith, Hope, has devastated our ranks over the past few years. Numerous Lords perished to his magic, along with a few Barons. Since we need to rebuild our military, why not start with some compensation for our losses? A thousand souls for each dead Lord, and a hundred thousand for each Baron. That would be an excellent start."

My mouth turns to chalk. All of a sudden, I remember Solomon's observations regarding Hope from before when he showed me the Ancient Era.

Solomon suspected that Hope had been killing demons behind my back. For Beelzebub to bring it up now only confirms my worst fears. I never had a chance to properly explore Solomon's worries thanks to the Hydra's appearance, but I held strong suspicions he was right.

Now I finally have confirmation, but at the worst possible moment. I don't know if the demons are lying, exaggerating, or telling the truth.

Kar butts in before I can reply. "Hurgh. Rabbit did indeed kill many demons. However, why pretend our side was at fault? You attacked us first, six years ago. As the Monster King, I am a neutral observer in this dispute, Hotface."

Beelzebub curls his upper lip. "Hah! So, you intend to play the impartial diplomat? I think not. You hold a grudge against me, 'Monster King,' all because I killed a few of your pissant friends who stole our territory. You're just as much at fault as that murderous Wordsmith!"

"You take that back," Kar growls. "You chose to escalate the violence. Had I been as powerful then as I am now, you would not be sitting where you are today. I'd have killed you!"

"And now you reveal your true colors," Beelzebub laughs. "You're no arbiter of neutrality. You're just as violent as your human friends. Blood coats your hands, just as it does Hope's."

Beelzebub and Kar fire off a few more insults at each other, but their words only take the wind from my sails. Unwittingly, Kar provides a piece of firsthand evidence confirming Hope and Neil's violent acts. Assuming the three of us survive today's encounter with Ose, I'll need to return home and interrogate our so-called 'Army Commander.' I've allowed Neil too much free reign, and now his actions have come back to bite me.

"Alright," I say, interrupting the crocodile and firemaster. "Let's just agree that there's plenty of blame to go around for both sides. I, personally, haven't killed a single demon, but I understand that my twin has killed more than his fair share. None of that matters. I'm not going to give you any souls, nor will I demand compensation for all the lives you've snuffed out."

At my last sentence, I shoot a pointed glare at Beelzebub. "You, especially. I know several demon squads have attacked the Core over the years, but your assault killed the most people, and many of them were my friends. If I'm willing to forgive and forget, then you should, too."

"Don't try to put words in my mouth, human," Beelzebub replies. "I regret nothing. My attack gave me enough souls to become a Baron. I only stand atop demon society today because of my sacrifices."

Kar snorts. "You have no understanding of the word 'sacrifice,' Hotface."

"I'd be fine with sacrificing you to the elder demons," Beelzebub snarks. "Keep running that mouth, and we'll see who has the last laugh."

"Gentlemen, please," Ose groans. "Let's keep the conversation civil, at least for now. Jason Hiro, if you're not here to present any souls for me, then why did you come? I don't like it when someone wastes my time."

I nod. "Ose, as the current de facto leader of humanity, I've come to offer a modest proposal. I believe we can reach a mutual understanding if we work together. If you're willing to listen, I may have a way to satisfy your need for souls without harming even one more human for the rest of eternity."

Ose scoffs. "Ridiculous. Demons require human souls so that we may evolve and mutate into greater forms. The foundation of our meritocratic society rests on the principle of 'might makes right.' What can you do to change our very biology?"

"Yes," Beelzebub adds. "What can you do? Even the mighty Wordsmith has limitations."

"I do; you're right," I reply. "Despite those restrictions holding me back, by working within their confines, I can achieve incredible feats. Ose, am I correct in assuming you've observed me ever since my arrival on Hell Harbor?"

Ose frowns. "Naturally. The moment you broke through the teleportation restrictor, a thousand alarms activated. You might as well have detonated a bomb within our biggest city, for all the good your 'stealthy approach' did."

Kar chuckles. "Hurgh. I knew coming here would not be so easy, Turtle."

"Right," I say. "Well, what about before our arrival. Did you happen to witness my confrontation with the Baron of Games?"

Ose doesn't reply for a few seconds. "...No. I did not. Why? I hope you'll reach something resembling a point soon."

"I can evolve demons to higher ranks via my Wordsmithing," I say, stating my intent bluntly. "Without needing to use a single human soul."

Finally, my words pierce Ose's iron-like defenses. Her expression contorts into a mixture of bewilderment and disbelief. "What? No! That's impossible!"

Beelzebub, too, appears even more stupefied. "What a baldfaced lie! Have you come here to mock us, Wordsmith?!"

I shake my head. "No, not at all. Listen. Demons absorb the energy contained within souls to improve their mana's minimum foundation by tiny, nigh-imperceptible increments. Once you gather enough souls to cement your foundation, you can finally mutate into your next form."

Ose frowns. "Yes, that is a passable description of demonic evolution. Are you telling me that your Wordsmithing can... replicate the effect of a soul?"

"Replicate, certainly. But, even better, it can replace your need for souls."

The table falls silent.

Ose stares at me silently for several long seconds. Her expression turns stony as she carefully evaluates the information I've just given her.

"...You're a bold one, Wordsmith. Right now, I am asking myself whether you are a genius or a colossal idiot. You stepped inside my headquarters with seemingly no protection while hoping I wouldn't kill you on the spot. Then, you fed me information capable of upending demonkind as I know it. Either you're confident in your ability to defend yourself, or you don't understand the dangerous position you've just entered."

"I understand," I say. "After all, if the other demons learned of my ability, overnight, I imagine many of your most loyal followers would defect to follow my lead. Souls are difficult to come by, particularly when they belong to humans. Meanwhile, all I require is a steady stream of mana, and I can evolve as many demons as I like."

I lean forward and rest my elbows on the table. "You've only ruled demonkind for six years. Many demons still don't respect your authority. Kar and I learned a lot on our trip here. We know several factions have yet to follow your orders. They'd ditch you in an instant if they thought the benefits would work in their favor."

Ose's eyes narrow to slits. "Oh? So you aren't only here to provoke me, but to deliver an ultimatum. Let me guess: If I don't agree to your terms, you'll release this knowledge into the wild to undermine my rule. Am I close to the mark?"

"Not quite," I reply. "While I could do something like that, who would accept a fleshbag's word? No demon worth their salt would believe such a ridiculous rumor, not even if I somehow included evidence of my abilities. No, I didn't come here with such a bad-faith intent, Ose. I've thought about how to reconcile our differences for years, and the idea of using my Wordsmithing to replace the power of souls was the one that stood out to me."

I pause for dramatic effect.

"Furthermore... I never said I would personally use my Wordsmithing on each demon. That would be grossly inefficient. Instead, I would create machines capable of converting mana to soulpower. Then I wouldn't have to do any work, which would suit my laziness just fine."

"You had me until the machine part," Beelzebub laughs. "How could a machine ever increase a demon's power? I can barely bring myself to believe your Wordsmithing capable of such a feat, yet you claim-"

"No!" Ose says, raising her voice. "Jason isn't lying. I once tried to create such a device, only to fail due to the energy conversion step. Spawn of a broodmother, you are a troublesome adversary, Wordsmith. I underestimated your resourcefulness. If you successfully built such a machine, it would only be a matter of months before the entirety of demonkind crumbles and becomes your subservient slave."

"I don't want slaves, nor do I want docile citizens," I say, keeping my voice calm. "I want free-thinkers, scientists, and inventors. I want my fellow humans to experience happiness and to escape torturous misery. I don't even have anything against the demons... aside from your destructive tendencies. I'm willing to overlook your sordid history in the hopes that your kind can improve themselves and move past their hate-filled past."

I continue. "Furthermore, I'm willing to help you transition to a better future. I will use my Wordsmithing to improve the lives of all demons and humans equally, without bias. I will even go so far as to give you all the credit and make your people think you coaxed me into such favorable terms. The only thing I want in return is an immediate and permanent end to all hostilities between humanity and demonkind, and a mutual understanding that we will work together to improve our lot in life."

"What more could I possibly offer to sweeten the deal?" I ask, finishing my monologue.

Once again, Ose falls silent. The cold look in her eyes reveals a deep-seated distrust in not only me, but humankind in general.

However, to my absolute astonishment, Beelzebub's vicious expression cracks. The Duke of Inferno continues to stare at me in bewilderment, unable to process much of what I've said. Unlike Ose, though, Beelzebub lowers his eyes to the table and broods for over a minute, ruminating on the offer I've just made.

When he speaks, he does so much more softly before, and with far less hatred in his voice.

"Wordsmith. Everything you've just said... you can't possibly mean it. What sort of trickery are you trying to achieve? How could you make such a reasonable offer after all the battles we've fought? I slew many of Kar's comrades; he said so himself. Surely, you cannot expect us to believe you would simply wash your hands of the past and stride forward into a brighter future?"

I take a moment to formulate a reply before speaking.

"...You're right, in that I am a little different from most people, Beelzebub. I believe in the endurance of the human spirit and our ability to forgive. Maybe I'm naive, but having observed some of demonkind's history and origins, I cannot place all of the blame for your violent ways on your shoulders alone. Demons grew up slaves of the angels, then suffered multiple genocides at their hands, as well as the Titans' and humans'. It's no wonder your people know only violence and mayhem."

"I believe that, given time and effort, we might be able to reform demonkind from the bottom to the top. Humans could live without being oppressed. Demons could live without hurting other beings. All demons would have a chance to evolve, not by killing and murdering, but by contributing to their society. Doesn't that sound at least a little bit appealing?"

"It does," Beelzebub replies, much faster than I expected. "I've... I've had similar thoughts. I grew up an imp in the Labyrinth. I crawled and clawed my way to the top of our hierarchy. It was only through a few fortunate encounters that I managed to achieve my current level of power. I must admit that I've always felt more than a hint of anger at Diablo and the rest of his cohorts for stifling our people's growth."

"Beelzebub," Ose says, flicking her gaze to the Duke. "Now is not the time to criticize Diablo's methods. He's old news. By the time that fool wakes from his coma, I'll have-"

"You'll have what?" Beelzebub snaps. "You care only about killing the humans, Ose. I wish to reform demon society. I always have! This offer Jason is presenting sounds too good to be true, but what if it isn't?"

Ose flares her nostrils, exhaling a few electrical sparks. "Yes, Beelzebub. What if it isn't? What if Jason is presenting us with a prime opportunity to reform demon society? Should we do so? Should we abandon our cause in the hopes this one, singular human can pull off a miracle? Suppose he not only fails but fails spectacularly. Suppose our people don't take kindly to 'fleshbag interference' and stage a massive revolt. Who will clean up the trillions of bodies piled within Hell's confines? You? Me?"

Ose continues. "I don't trust Jason, and I certainly don't believe that he'll succeed. Even if he does, do you have any clue the turmoil we'll endure following his naive ideology? Do you think demonkind will give up the power we've earned over millennia of struggle, all to appease our lessers?"

Beelzebub scowls in exasperation. "No, but should we not at least hear the human out? His idea has merit. You said yourself that you nearly created a machine capable of generating soulpower. Perhaps, with the Wordsmith's help..."

Ose crosses her arms. The white-haired demoness leans back in her seat and glares daggers at Beelzebub. "I've made up my mind. This Hero will only bring ruin to demonkind. I have no interest in listening to a thing he says."

"Don't talk about me like I'm not sitting right here," I say. "Come on; this is a chance for your people to thrive! To prosper! Can't you at least issue a temporary ceasefire to commune with the rest of the Demon Council? What if the Dukes heard about my proposal? They might think it's an action worth pursuing."

"I am the sole leader of demonkind, barring the First Emperor himself," Ose says, turning her glare on me. "I care not what the Dukes think. They may protest all they wish, but as of today, demonkind is mine to control. Might makes right, and I possess more of it than anyone else!"

"Do you?" I ask. "What about Bael? Can you defeat Bael if he agrees to my proposal? Will you even dare to fight him?"

For a split-second, I almost feel I have a shot at changing Ose's mind. However, it falls apart a moment later.

Ose smirks. The Emperor of Infiltration slowly reveals a sinister grin as she eyeballs me.

"Will I fight Bael, you ask? I already have. I defeated the Balrog with ease. After all, it is not mere power that I possess, but intellect as well. Dullards will never defeat geniuses. That is why, despite how many millennia it took me, I eventually rose from the bondage of a human prison to the rank of demonkind's leader. That is why my ways are what will save us, not your false promises and half-truths."

Ose raises her finger. She points at the dining hall's door, opening it with her magic. "Go! I've nothing more to discuss with the likes of you. As expected, you've done little more than waste my time."

"Ose..." Beelzebub whispers. "Please, don't be irrational. If you push Jason aside, now..."

"Quiet," Ose hisses. "Don't even think of opposing me, Beelzebub. I've made up my mind."

"But...!"

Before Beelzebub can butt in again, I raise my hand.

"No, Beelzebub. I've heard enough. I'm sorry we couldn't come to an agreement. I hope you'll think carefully about my offer, Ose. So long as you don't take any drastic actions, I will leave it on the table."

To my left, Kar snorts. "Hurgh. As I thought, Thundertongue would not listen to a word you said. How unfortunate that demonkind's 'genius' has proven herself a fool."

Blinker stares at Ose silently, judging her with her eyes. She continues to sit on Kar's shoulder as the crocodile rises to his feet.

"We'll take our leave," I say, keeping my voice low. "Thank you for at least listening to us. You may not believe me, Ose, but I am not your enemy."

Ose doesn't reply. She merely stares at me stonily, her silence giving me no wiggle room.

With a sigh, Kar and I both shuffle to the doorway.

Suddenly, from within my mind, Phoebe speaks.

"Jason. Wait."

I pause mid-stride. What? Did I forget something?

My mind-wife shakes her head. "No. I stayed silent during your meeting because there was something familiar about Ose; something I couldn't quite put my finger on. Now, I know what it was. Jason, I want you to project my mental image out of your mind with Wordsmithing. I want to speak to Ose."

My heart skips a beat. What?! No way! Don't even think about it! If Ose finds out you're part of my mental defenses, she might attack you! I won't take that risk unnecessarily.

Phoebe smiles. "Don't worry. I won't give away my identity. Besides, I'm sure Ose knows who I am. Now, please... project me."

Moments pass. My heart pounds like a drum.

Eventually, I sigh and nod. Alright. Be on your guard.

I turn to face Ose. She and Beelzebub both stiffen, possibly expecting me to attack. Instead, I speak a single word of power.

"Project."

Ose jumps to her feet. "Bastard! I should have known you'd try to- hm?"

Beelzebub remains seated, but even he frowns in confusion as a holographic image of my mind-wife, echoing her flesh-body's size and appearance, materializes before me.

As Phoebe's projection comes into focus, she bows toward Ose.

"Hello, little one. Do you know who I am?"

Ose cocks her head slightly. "Phoebe, the Hero's wife. What are you doing here?"

Phoebe clears her throat. "Jason transmitted your conversation to me, so I saw the whole thing from the beginning. I did not intend to say anything at first, but now I feel obligated. Ose, do you know me? Do you remember me?"

The Emperor of Infiltration taps her fingers on the table. "Naturally. You created several key technologies for humanity's forces. You married the Hero. What of it? We've never met, and I couldn't care less about your existence. Pleading for your husband's mercy only makes him look more pathetic."

"So you've forgotten me," Phoebe murmurs. "I didn't recognize you either, at first. But how could I forget your beautiful, delicate face? I saved you, after all. I pulled you and many other demonesses from Arthur's dungeon, over a hundred thousand years ago. It was only once I witnessed your electrical powers, and when you mentioned the prison, that I finally pieced together my memories."

"Ose. I am Phoebe Berthold, former knight under King Arthur. Do you remember me now?"

* * *

Silence.

Ose stares, wide-eyed, at Phoebe's ethereal image.

It takes several long seconds before she can whisper a reply. "No... that's impossible. You should have died tens of millennia ago. How could you survive after all this time?"

"Bahamut," Phoebe replies. "Her Sphinx magic preserved my body for 100,000 years."

Phoebe continues speaking. She explains the circumstances of her life to Ose. Each word causes the Emperor's blood to drain from her face.

It's only once Phoebe finishes that Ose replies.

"Seven Devils. All this time, it was you who saved me? I was too young to remember your face. I tried to recall, but all I could ever picture was a hazy image in the back of my mind."

"That's right," Phoebe says, smiling. "I saved you. I took you away from those awful, terrible guards. I showed you compassion and empathy while putting my life on the line. I held beliefs reminiscent of Jason's today. I wanted no reward beyond knowing that you could go on to live a happy, fruitful life."

Phoebe's smile fades.

"What happened to you, Ose? Why have you walked the path of hatred? Don't you see how your actions today will only instigate a neverending cycle of despair? Why not set aside your prejudice, as I did all those years ago? Please. Jason and I just want to help your people. We don't mean you any harm."

Ose lowers her gaze. She stares at the table for nearly a minute without replying.

"Ose?" Beelzebub asks. "What's running through your mind?"

"I... I don't know," The Emperor replies, her voice soft. "Phoebe. You may have saved me in my youth, but... that changes nothing. How can one act of kindness erase thousands of instances of hatred? Humans are evil. They're vile, putrid barbarians hellbent on demonkind's destruction. For every Phoebe or Jason, there are a million Arthurs and Hopes. I can't go along with your wishes merely because of sentimentality."

Ose sighs.

"Once again, you've wasted my time. Showing yourself to me accomplished nothing."

Phoebe shakes her head. "Not true. Now you have a face and a name to put to your memories. If you attack my people, you will remember me and weep. You will strike the heart of your rescuer, and slap my face, undoing all of the good my act did. Is that what you want? Are you still that scared, angry little girl I saved from Arthur's prison? Or, will you cast aside your past and become the best version of yourself?"

Phoebe crosses her arms.

"What is your answer, Ose? How can you continue down a path of bloodshed, knowing you will betray me, the person who gave up everything to save you?"

* * *

Ose closes her eyes. She leans back in her chair and sighs.

"I'm not that scared little girl, Phoebe. I have grown up. I see more clearly now than ever."

The Emperor waves the back of her hand at me. "Leave. I will consider your proposal, Hero, but that is all. Expect nothing more, for that is all I'm willing to give."

I nod.

"As you wish, Ose. I hope you'll make the right choice."

I turn around and walk out of the room. As Kar and I leave, Ose mutters under her breath.

"Don't you worry, Wordsmith. I always do."

Part 214: The Swelling Storm

Kar, Blinker, and I exit Ose's dining room. After the door closes, we find ourselves trailing along behind Ose's human slave, Amy. The blonde woman silently leads us away from Ose's inner chamber, not uttering a word as we walk.

"I don't trust that Ose," Blinker mutters. "She wouldn't listen to reason at all! Geez! You laid out a great plan for demonkind to thrive, and all she could do was think about herself!"

"Hurgh. I was more surprised with Hotface's reaction," Kar adds. "He did nothing but mock you at first, yet once you started talking about upending the demons' social systems, he seemed very receptive to the idea."

"Beelzebub surprised me too," I reply. "But I don't know how well today's meeting went. Ose seems like a smart woman. Belial has always praised her intellect, even if begrudgingly. I can't imagine she'll do anything reckless after I've presented such a tempting offer and ultimatum. Still, she was pretty resistant to my idea, right up until Phoebe spoke to her."

At the mention of my mind-wife, Kar tilts his head slightly to look at me. "Hurgh. You did not tell Butterfly and me that White-Hair would listen to our conversation. I never heard you speak the magic word."

I pause for a moment before closing my mouth.

[Kar,] I say, transmitting my words telepathically. [We're still in Ose's house. She might be able to hear us. Let's continue this discussion telepathically. I don't want to take any chances.]

Kar's eyes flash with insight. He, too, falls silent. Neither of us says anything for a few moments, giving me the impression he's started speaking to Blinker.

[Hurgh,] Kar says, finishing his discussion with his wife. [Is there a reason for your secrecy?]

[Yes. I haven't told anyone yet, but I cloned Phoebe's soul to create a defensive mechanism inside my brain. Ose nearly took over my body six years ago, but Solomon protected me. When he left, I realized I needed a new barrier to protect my mind. Especially after I found out it was a sliver of Solomon's soul that made me attack Samantha and you.]

Kar rubs his chin. [Yes, I see. You must have copied White-Hair's soul right after you erased Whitebeard's imprint from your mind. I didn't realize it at the time, but now your actions make sense. However, why did you keep the second White-Hair a secret from me?]

[To fool my enemies, I must first fool my friends. That's what a famous human philosopher once said — the fewer people who know about Phoebe's soul-clone, the better.]

Satisfied, Kar nods. [You are still a fool compared to me, but I respect your attempts to correct your mental deficiencies. It would be disgraceful if you wallowed in your stupidity forever, rather than following my lead and attaining wisdom.]

[Kar, if you didn't have scales, I'd smack the shit out of you.]

The crocodile chuckles. [Oh, Turtle, there you go with your foolishness again. It is all but impossible to slap someone hard enough to make them defecate. Certainly, a mere smack would never accomplish such a thing, especially not from a twig-armed simpleton like you.]

[Yeah, yeah. Keep running your mouth, scale-butt.]

* * *

Ten minutes later, Amy leads us outside Ose's manor. She stops at the steps leading outside, bows politely, and leaves us to our own devices. After Ose's servant enters the house, I turn to Kar.

[Alright, Kar. I don't trust Ose. We need to return to the Core and start preparing our people for war. Above all else, safety is key, here. I've spent the last six years fortifying Tarus II's defenses with Solomon's aid. Hell, I've even built weapons so secret that Phoebe doesn't know of their existence. If Ose turns down my offer and decides to attack, I won't go down without a fight.]

My mind-wife speaks to me. "Wait, what secret weapons? I thought you told me everything!"

Nope, sorry. Solomon and I agreed that we had to have backups nobody could discover. Don't you remember a few years ago when I told you to keep some weapon projects secret from me? It's important we have a few hidden cards up our sleeve, just in case the demons have informants among our upper ranks. Ose and Beelzebub confirmed as much in that meeting just now.

Phoebe strokes her chin. "Hm. Yes, I see what you mean. I do have a few prototypes I haven't mentioned to you yet. Carry on, then."

I return my attention to Kar. The crocodile gazes at his wife for several seconds, before Blinker sends a telepathic message my way. [When we return to the Core, I'll pop over and see if I can find Hope. You go and tell Phoebe about the meeting with the demon leaders, while Kar can give a rousing speech to the military! That will cover the most ground in the least time!]

[That's a good plan,] I say. [Alright, give me a second to visualize the Core, and then-]

Before I finish my sentence, a faint trickle of holy energy fires up my arm, disrupting my thoughts. Raphael appears in my Mind Realm and waves his staff. "Wait! Jason, why art thou leaving? Did not thou promise to search for the captured Archangel?!"

I frown. Captured Archangel? Oh... you mean from when we first arrived. Shit, I nearly forgot. I don't know if now is a good time, Raphael. I need to return to the Core and get everyone prepped for battle. If Ose attacks when we aren't ready, the fallout could destroy everything I've built. While we're on the subject, though, have you detected that holy energy signal intensifying as we've moved around? The three of us must have covered a hundred miles today.

Raphael shakes his head. "Nay, I have not. Jason, I witnessed thy conversation with the demon leader. Surely, even if she were to attack immediately, it would take her several days to muster her forces. Can't we take a quick look around the planet? With thy Wordsmithing, thou art the most capable being to seek out my captured brother or sister!"

I frown. You have a point. I suppose I could spare an hour or two to look around. I don't like the idea of putting off my return, though. I'll have to make a compromise.

[Kar,] I say, transmitting my voice to the crocodile. [Change of plans. I'll send you and Blinker back to the Core. Tell Phoebe what's happened first, then rally the military. I need to take a few hours to investigate Hell Harbor on my own.]

A look of alarm appears on Kar's face. [Hurgh! Turtle, what are you thinking? You cannot stay here in the demon's territory all alone. Your weak body will fail you if they launch an ambush.]

[I agree,] Blinker says, nodding along to Kar's observation. [If something happens to you, we won't know. We can't take a chance on losing you to ol' Shifty-Eyes the Seductress and her boy-toy, the Burning Man!]

[I'm not making a request,] I say. [I'm the leader of our makeshift resistance, and I'm more than capable of hiding myself from Ose's eyes. I need to scout Hell Harbor by myself for a while, Kar. You have to return to the Core and make sure everyone is prepared for what might happen.]

[Hurgh. Turtle... you are making a foolish choice.]

[Maybe, but it's mine to make. I've spent the last six years training with Solomon, and I possess all three of the Archangel rings. I can handle myself.]

[But...]

Kar starts to object, but instead, he falls silent.

[Hurgh. Very well. However, you must give me a method to contact you.]

[Sure. That's fair. One sec.]

I close my eyes for a moment and visualize a golden pendant, one with a green emerald in its center.

"Necklace. Imbue. Harden. Refine. Copy. Connect."

Three minutes later, I finish crafting a pair of golden necklaces, each made from nearly-indestructible, wordsmithed alloys. I hand one of them to Kar while clutching mine in my palm.

[These are two-way communication pendants. Normally, communication can only travel at the speed of light. However, these are magical artifacts. They keep a 1-micron-thick subspace rift open between them at all times, allowing for instant communication. Furthermore, if one of their wearers dies or takes off the pendant, both emeralds will shift to red. That way, if something happens to me, you'll know immediately.]

I use my telekinesis to wrap my pendant's chain around my neck. [Also, if someone steals my pendant, you'll know that, too. Neither one will function until we imprint both with our mana.]

Kar nods, but he appears confused by my words. [Hurgh. Can we speak to each other using these?]

[Yes. I have a similar device in place for when I talk to Phoebe. I don't use it often, but she can always use it to contact me if an emergency comes up. Are you happy, now?]

[Hurgh. This pendant is an acceptable compromise. Very well. I will keep an eye on it until you return, Turtle. Don't delay. I don't trust either of those two backstabbers.]

[Neither do I, Kar. Neither do I.]

Kar and I take a few minutes to activate our pendants, then I send him and Blinker back to the Core with a single word.

"Return."

Fwoomp.

The two monsters vanish, leaving me behind.

With a sigh, I turn my gaze toward Hell Harbor's setting sun.

Now, then. Where can I find this missing Archangel?

Back inside the manor, the Duke of Inferno and the Emperor of Infiltration sit in silence at the dining room table. Ose reclines in her chair with both of her elbows resting on its arms. She leans her cheek against her left hand, while her right hand slowly taps against the demonstone-crafted table.

Tap.

Tap.

Tap.

Her fingernails click rhythmically against the table's smooth surface. Her eyes stare ahead at nothing in particular as she sits motionlessly, lost deep in thought.

Beelzebub, however, leans forward and cups both of his hands together while resting them on the table. He stares at Ose intently, scrutinizing her expression like a hawk. He watches every twitch of her eyebrows, every slight narrowing of her eyes, and even picks out the moments when anger and humiliation flit across her face.

"Ose."

Beelzebub speaks, attempting to prod his Emperor from her stupor.

"Ose. Speak to me. Tell me your thoughts."

Ose inhales deeply. She continues to stare forward, not even deigning to look at her young Duke appointee.

"How long have we known each other, Beelzebub?"

Beelzebub snorts, releasing two small flickers of flame from his nostrils. "Six years at most. We met shortly before my ascension to Duke."

"Six years," Ose echoes.

The Emperor of Infiltration falls silent for a moment before continuing.

"Humans are such fragile creatures," Ose says, her words slow and calculated. "They might live eighty to a hundred years under ideal circumstances before dying of old age. Compared to the eternal youth of our people, their lives are like a candle's flame in the wind. Despite that, they form bonds quickly and learn to trust one another without restraint."

Ose continues. "I've known you for only six years. If I divide that number by my entire life's length, our relationship hasn't lasted more than six seconds, in human terms. Perhaps that is why I'm not terribly disappointed in your inability to stick to our plans. I never trusted you in the first place."

Beelzebub bristles. "If this is about my slight interest in Jason's ideas-"

"Slight?" Ose hisses. She slowly turns her eyes to gaze at him. "You practically fell over yourself, asking what we could do to bow before His Majesty, the so-called 'Hero.' If I didn't know any better, I might think you were a damned spy for the humans lurking at my side these past few years."

Beelzebub clenches his teeth. "You're one to talk. We already know the Hero possesses a ridiculously versatile magical ability called Wordsmithing. We already know he can summon objects into existence and perform all other kinds of incredible feats. I never said we ought to do what he said, only that we ought to hear him out. You were acting unreasonably!"

"Was I?"

Ose stares at Beelzebub, her eyes betraying no emotion. He meets her gaze, but with more than a hint of anger.

"You were!" Beelzebub roars. "Damn us to Heaven, Ose! How could you ignore the potential for our species if we could evolve without limits?! Forget the obvious benefits of fairness for a moment! Forget how every imp, grunt, and Lord would laud you for giving them a shot at becoming Barons, Dukes, and even Emperors! Think of the sheer power we could command! Think of all the ways we could put our power to good use, reshaping whole worlds for us to settle, instead of living in that blasted, hellish maze!"

Ose stares at Beelzebub. Slowly, she blinks at him, a hint of mockery in her movements.

"Sometimes I forget how young and naive you are," Ose sighs. "Once, a hundred years was enough time for any demon to ascend to the pinnacle of an Emperor's power. Once, Emperors and Dukes were as abundant as dirt on this world. Now, it takes tens of millennia for the truly brilliant to claw their way to the top of the dung heap."

Beelzebub scowls. "That's what I'm saying!"

"No, you misunderstand my meaning," Ose replies. "I am not complaining about the speed of your evolution. Rather, I am lamenting your naivete and easily addled brain."

The Emperor of Infiltration cocks her head slightly, while keeping it rested on her palm.

"Humor me for a moment, Beelzebub. Suppose Jason had any ulterior motives. Suppose he came here with some malicious intent. What might he do?"

Seeing Ose's unfazed expression, Beelzebub quietly stifles his temper. "He would lie to us."

Ose smiles.

"That's right. How well do you know that human?"

"Jason? Not well at all. I haven't spoken to him more than a handful of times."

Like a teacher gently correcting a child, Ose offers a dainty smile. "Ah, yet you appear so trusting of him, as if he were a long-lost blood-brother. Let me ask you something else, Beelzebub. Is Jason a violent, psychopathic murderer?"

Beelzebub cocks an eyebrow. "I... I don't believe so. Why? Do you know something about him that I don't?"

"Hmm. I wouldn't say I 'know' anything in particular, but I have my suspicions. Let's call it my female intuition."

"Pft. That's a gas," Beelzebub smirks.

Ose raises her right hand and fans out her fingers, taking a moment to admire her nails. "Laugh if you like. I'll say right now that Jason is no murderer. I've observed him since shortly before the Black Queen perished, and he has a truly pathetic heart of gold. However, even you must admit the same is not true of... his clone."

Ose falls silent, allowing Beelzebub to digest her words.

The Duke of Inferno's smirk disappears entirely. "Jason's clone? Hope? I don't follow. He is certainly a psychopath, but I fail to see the significance of your words."

"Haha. Your naivete is adorable, my cute young Duke. I will take your conduct today as a sign of ignorance, not malice. Listen well, Beelzebub, for I don't like to repeat myself."

After pausing to clear her throat, Ose continues.

"Jason and Hope are, without a doubt, working together in tandem. While Jason has spent the last six years heavily fortifying Tarus II's defenses, Hope spent that time attacking us, killing our Lords and Barons, while also reinforcing the Core's military. What does this suggest to you? You might be naive, but I believe your intelligence should be at least a bit above Bael's level."

Slowly, Beelzebub loosens his clenched jaw. "You... you can't be serious. Didn't you always say the two Wordsmiths were mortal enemies?"

"I did — they had me fooled until today."

The Duke's expression turns incredulous. He leans forward while gazing at Ose intensely. "What do you mean? Did something tip you off?"

"I've had my suspicions since the beginning," The Emperor replies. "I saw Jason coming here and thought he might try to beg for mercy. I even suspected he might try to entice us with human souls, which was why I requested so many to start. When negotiating, the one who sets the starting price wields the strongest hand. However, not even I realized that he had such a ruthless disposition. From the very beginning, he came here intending to blackmail me and coerce you. His words were sneaky and sly, like any seasoned con-artist."

"Con-artist?" Beelzebub asks.

"It's a human term..." Ose replies. "...One which refers to a trade older than the angels themselves. It means 'he who practices deception to advance his material gain.' Jason must have investigated both of us before he came here. He knew any attempt to revolutionize demonic society would tug at your heartstrings, while he also attempted to place a dagger to my neck. Humans are just as manipulative and dangerous as they have always been."

Beelzebub frowns. "I still don't see the danger in his offer. Can you be more specific?"

"Let's start with the immediate fallout," Ose says. She pulls away from her palm and sits upright in her chair, choosing to fold her hands in her lap. "The moment word gets out regarding Jason's plan; the whole Labyrinth will enter an uproar. Every skeevy character will want his turn first, causing mass confusion and disorder. Even if we carefully controlled the flow of information, which would defeat the point, you should expect to see anywhere from ten to forty percent of all demons perish in the aftermath of our new 'friendship' with the Hero."

Beelzebub balks. "Ten to forty percent... so many?"

"That would only be the start of our worries," Ose says. Her smile fades away, revealing a deadly gaze filled with killing intent. "I'll bet that not once have you considered what position the Overlords might take."

The Duke of Inferno nearly jumps out of his chair. "The Overlords?! Spawn of a broodmother! I forgot about them!"

"That's right," Ose says, her voice as cold as ice. "But, ask yourself: Did Jason?"

"No! Of course, that damned, scheming bastard didn't!"

Beelzebub grabs his hair and tugs at it, fury writhing all over his face.

"Seven Hells! That slithering conniver! How could I be so blind?! There's no chance he would offer us such a good deal on a silver platter!"

Ose nods sagely, keeping her stern, teacher-like expression frozen on her face. "Indeed. Once the Overlords realize we've begun to amass frightening amounts of power, even if our internal revolts didn't wipe us out, their fear would ensure our swift demise."

Beelzebub pales. "How... how powerful are the Overlords? I know precious little information about them? Can't you tell me anything?"

"You've stood at my side for six years," Ose says, a faint smile returning to her lips. "As long as you promise not to go against me again, as you did earlier, I'm more than willing to educate you on matters regarding the Overlords. After all, when I leave the Labyrinth to report to them in the near future, I'll expect you to hold the fort together until I return."

Beelzebub nods. "You've hinted at your pending departure before. Why have you not spoken to them since your ascension to Third Emperor?"

"The time wasn't right. It still isn't," Ose replies. "Diablo gave the Overlords a statement regarding the Labyrinth's political situation and military preparedness every ten to twenty years. With those damned humans having stolen possession of the Core, I fear what might happen if the Overlords learn of the Hero's return."

"Why not lie to them?" Beelzebub asks. "If it's only a statement they want, you could easily hide what the humans are doing-"

"Not a chance," Ose says, cutting him off. "Maybe the Overlords wouldn't find out. They don't tend to meddle in our affairs, after all. However, what if they did? If you think that petulant little Hero is causing us trouble now, wait until you witness the shitstorm the Overlords would rain upon our heads."

"Why not tell them of the human uprising now, then? Perhaps they could assist us."

Beelzebub's sincere question causes Ose's anger to crack. She chuckles to herself quietly.

"Haha. The Overlords don't care about our well-being, Beelzebub. We promised to keep the humans in line. If they ever escape their containment, the Overlords will kill them all. Not even Benjamin Brown or Marie's remnants would be capable of stopping them. It would destroy our soul supply, and summarily, us."

Beelzebub's expression darkens. "We can't tell the Overlords about the humans, and we can't not tell them about the humans. What option does that leave us?"

"Operation Stormbringer, naturally!" Ose laughs. "Don't tell me that after six years of planning, you've forgotten! Make no mistake: If I wished to eliminate the human resistance, I could have done so six years ago."

"Mmm. The only reason you didn't was that you hoped to capture the Wordsmiths, then, I presume?"

Ose claps her hands. "Yes! You're finally understanding my intentions! I need to capture the Wordsmiths, eliminate Jason's resistance forces, and report my successes to the Overlords. After all, we've had plenty of human uprisings in the past. None this severe, mind you, but with a Hero leading them, that much is a given. Once I tell the Executor about my killing of the Hero, his faith in my leadership will become unshakable."

Beelzebub nods, but his expression turns grim. "So, you intend to kill the Wordsmith after all?"

"No, no, I will keep him secluded and use my mind-control to turn him into a loyal slave. However, the Overlords needn't know that."

Both demons fall silent for a moment.

Beelzebub rubs his chin. "Hmm. You promised 'Yama' you would deliver him a Wordsmith alive. Since you intend to capture one yourself, that will mean you need the Hero and his clone bound and gagged. I know we've spent six years preparing, but now that the Hydra has attacked and Jason chose to show his face here, I feel that he will return to the Core and clamp down on his defenses."

"Indeed, he will," Ose nods sagely. "Of that, I have no doubt. I did not anticipate so many setbacks striking me at once. Now that you see how deep the Hero's planning goes, you should understand how much more dangerous he's become in just the past two months."

Ose continues. "If we accept the Hero's terms, we will fall into ruin. I know you are displeased with demon society and all its awful, unfair restrictions. However, we cannot afford to spook our Overlord friends. If they learn that we have begun to collaborate with humanity, they will destroy us. If they discover we've failed to contain our lessers, they will destroy us. If we do anything to spark their ire, you can bet all of your accumulated souls that we will perish under the fiery blast of their weaponry."

"How dismal," Beelzebub groans. The Duke of Inferno sags in his seat as a thousand-pound mental weight hangs on his shoulders. "I've always thought of our people as the rulers of the universe. Yet, the way you describe us, we are little more than pawns in the hands of our almighty Overlords. If we attempt to break our chains, we will self-immolate under our own hubris."

"That's right," Ose murmurs. Her expression turns melancholic. "In a way, our situation is no different from humanity's. We are prisoners, just like them. We answer to a higher power, just as they do. If we fight back, we will perish, just as they will. Ironic, isn't it? They might be the slaves of slaves, but at least they understand their place in this galaxy, while our people still suffer delusions of grandeur."

"It's damned tragic..." Beelzebub sighs. "If we demons understood our lot in life, we might kill ourselves from heartbreak."

Ose shakes her head. "If only you knew, Beelzebub. Before the mind-wipes and the cullings, every demon knew of our Overlord's existence. Many tried to fight back, hoping to claim our right as rulers of the galaxy. They failed, just as we would if we attempted the same thing today."

Beelzebub falls silent.

Both he and Ose lower their gazes to the table. They say nothing for over a minute.

Eventually, Beelzebub clears his throat.

"Ahem. If the Overlords are so powerful... if they can destroy us and humanity without any effort, why haven't they? What purpose do we serve for the likes of such grand, almighty beings?"

"Hmm..."

Ose glances at Beelzebub. Their gazes meet, allowing him to notice a bizarre emotion on her face — something he's never seen before.

Fear.

"We are a backup, Beelzebub. We exist in case the Overlords fail to block the shadow looming over our galaxy. There are things out there... things in the void... things far more terrifying than you can possibly imagine."

Beelzebub frowns.

"...Things?"

"Yes," Ose murmurs. "A scourge. A plague. Something so horrifying that if it were to reach our Labyrinth, we'd perish within a year. All of us. Demons, monsters, and the humans, too."

The Emperor clicks her tongue.

"If I explained any further, even to you, I'd have to kill you. Count yourself lucky the Overlords exist. They maintain the balance of power so that we don't have to. So long as the plague keeps them occupied, we can live our lives unmolested."

Ose chuckles. "What's a little human rebellion compared to a galaxy-class threat, Beelzebub?"

Beelzebub forces a smile, but Ose doesn't return it. "N-nothing much, I suppose."

"That's right, it isn't. Now, go. Start readying the troops. I want you to begin Operation Stormbringer as soon as possible. Now that the humans have gone on alert, all my planning is down the drain. We might as well make the best of a bad situation. If possible, I'd like to catch them offguard, before they can regroup and upgrade their defenses."

Beelzebub cocks his head. "You want to launch Operation Stormbringer two months early? We won't be able to muster all of our troops in time. And what of Gressil's creations? He can't have more than a thousand ready."

"Leave my brother to me," Ose says. She squeezes her chair's arms firmly, causing the demonstone to fracture. "I will take care of him myself."

With a sigh, Beelzebub rises from his seat. He casts a glance at Ose before turning and heading to the giant exit doors.

"So be it. I was getting bored of waiting, anyway. I always did like a challenge."

The Duke of Inferno pushes the great doors open. After he steps out, they slam shut, causing the giant dining table to vibrate.

Ose stares ahead silently, not bothering to stand and leave.

Heh heh. Oh, Beelzebub. You're still so young and foolish, so easily manipulated. You'll believe anything, so long as it fits into your narrow-minded viewpoints.

Ose smirks.

How could Jason and Hope work together? The clonemaster and his doppelganger hate each other's guts. If you weren't so incompetent at gathering intelligence, you'd know I was lying. However, your ignorance fine. I admire your drive and animal cunning. You might be naive, but given time, you'll sprout into a delicious fruit capable of satiating my ambitions. For now, you are a suitable pawn for my needs.

Ose cocks her head.

What sort of queen dirties her hands with the common rabble, anyway? That's why I picked you. Do your job, and never question me again.

Finally, Ose rises from her seat. She stretches her arms and pops her back, sending tingles down her spine.

Soon, that damned Hero will be mine. As for his wife... what an insignificant plea for attention. I care not if she was the one who saved me from Arthur's dungeon.

Ose strides over to the stained glass window. She casually gazes through one of its clear panes at the darkening sky overhead and sighs.

Soon, I'll have all of humanity in my clutches. If Beelzebub proves his loyalty, who knows? Perhaps I'll make him my Third Emperor.

But only after I kill Belial.

Part 215: Let's Go To Space!

An hour after leaving Ose's manor, I soar above Hell Harbor's surface, sweeping my eyes from left to right. With Kar and Blinker gone, I finally have a chance to fulfill Raphael's request. The Archangel of Wisdom sits on a bench beside my mind-wife, staring up at me as if I were somehow hovering in the sky. He puffs on a pipe while exhaling smoky circles every so often.

"Have you found anything yet?" Phoebe asks.

I shake my head. "No. Detect."

I utter a word of power, causing my senses to expand for the tenth time in five minutes. Once again, I attempt to locate any signals of holy energy, but no matter which direction my eyes point, I don't find anything.

A flock of pterodactyl-like birds with leathery wings fly past me. They don't notice me at all, thanks to my invisibility and multiple stealth spells shielding me from their gazes. I flap my wings a little harder and rise several hundred feet higher while attempting to avoid another flock of the weird, pterosaurian creatures.

"Raphael," I say. "Have you been able to figure out the general direction of the Archangel's signal? I can't sense anything."

Raphael furrows his brow. "Nay. The signal is remarkably faint. I would not expect one of my brothers or sisters to be so weak that I could barely sense them. Perhaps the demons have imprisoned my sibling on the other side of the planet."

"Or, maybe they're barely alive," Phoebe says, her voice low. "They might be on the verge of death."

"Aye," Raphael mutters. "That is equally possible."

I sigh. "Hmm. The Archangel's energy levels might be so low that I can barely detect them, or they might be a thousand miles away. Raphael, I don't want to sound like a jerk, but those possibilities only make my search harder."

The Eldest Archangel lowers his gaze to the ground and strokes his beard, falling deep into thought. "So, thou sayeth..."

Several minutes pass. I double my flying speed, trying to cover as much ground as possible.

"Detect... Detect... Detect..."

Every thirty seconds, I release a pulse of detection magic. Each time, the mana signature's distance remains the same. Even when I approach the speed of sound, I don't make a lick of progress.

Half an hour later, I slow myself to a stop, then land atop a mountain several hundred miles away from Ose's manor. Gigantic crow-like birds with wingspans exceeding a hundred feet fly around the mountain's midsection, screeching bloody murder as they search for prey.

"Jason..." Raphael says, his voice barely a whisper. "Perhaps we are looking in the wrong place. My sibling might not be on this planet, but a different one within the star-system."

The Archangel's observation makes my eyebrows rise involuntarily.

"Oh! Yeah, you might be right, Raphael. However, I don't know anything about this sector of space. One second."

I clear my throat to speak a word of power. "Starmap."

This time, a tremendous surge of holy energy fires from my body, straight into the sky. My heart jumps in fright, making me pray to the Creator that no demons witnessed it. The beam disappears after a moment, flickering into the sky without a trace.

Ten minutes later, a map of Hell Harbor's star system appears in my mind. I knot my forehead together as I try to pick out locations of interest.

Number of planets in star-system: Fifteen.

Number of moons in star-system: One hundred and sixty-four.

Star classification: Main-sequence.

Star size: 4.39 Sol-vectors.

Current planet's position from main-sequence star: Eighth.

Dozens of data points appear in my head, summarizing my discoveries. Without hesitation, I speak again. "Terminal. Store."

The information I just gained disappears, transforming into another server within my Mind Realm.

"Phoebe, study the information for this system. For now, I'm going to take to space and see if I can't locate our missing Archangel out there in the void."

Phoebe nods. "Alright. You can't build a spaceship without Solomon's Crown, so you should take every precaution to protect your body."

I smile. Already, my wife has understood my intent to travel to space without a spaceship. While seemingly dangerous, I've already done it several times in the past while under Solomon's supervision. After all, who knows if I'll have Esther on hand when I need her? If something happened to my spaceship and I had to escape off-planet, I'd require a backup to protect myself and my family.

"Bubble. Condense. Shield. Reinforce. Condense. Bubble. Condense. Shield. Reinforce. Oxygenate. Crystallize. Refraction. Deflection."

A flurry of words escapes my lips. I speak each one without hesitation, using my years of training with Solomon to create a powerful, near impenetrable forcefield around my body. While transparent, the shield only allows enough light through to allow me to see my surroundings, while blocking harmful UV radiation and all kinds of other nasty space hazards.

After ten minutes, I finish chanting all of my spells, then pause to monitor my energy expenditures.

"Hmm. With the mana crystals in my body, I can maintain my spatial shield for a day or two at most. I don't want to run my mana crystals bone-dry, so I'll have to return to the Core within 36 hours to keep emergency mana in reserve. Sorry, Raphael, but if we can't find your relative within that period, I'll have to give up the search."

Raphael opens his mouth to retort, only to change his mind. "...Very well. That is all I can ask."

With a nod, I turn my gaze skyward. Already, Hell Harbor's sun has fallen below the horizon, darkening the sky enough for me to spot the twinklings of various stars.

There are billions of stars within the Milky Way, I think to myself. I haven't a clue where Hell Harbor is compared to Earth, but I know the sky above me appears very different from my homeworld's. I could be hundreds, if not thousands of lightyears from where I was born.

Solomon and Marie informed me that the Volgrim own the Milky Way. They control the vast majority of its habitable star systems, which only makes me wonder just how many planets have fallen into their clutches over the millennia. The demons seem vast and innumerable, yet if my betters are correct, they're hardly a drop in the bucket compared to my alien enemies.

With a sigh, I shake my head and crouch low to the ground, coiling power into my legs.

"Conserve! Condense! Buildup!"

I speak three rapid words of power, pooling most of my mana toward my feet. After positioning my energy directly beneath my center of mass, I grit my teeth and prepare for the final step.

"LIFTOFF!!"

Instantly, my condensed mana fires from my feet, while my legs act like springs, launching me straight into the sky. I accelerate to over a thousand miles an hour within five seconds, all while breaking a Mana Bead to flood my body with mana.

"Accelerate! Accelerate! Accelerate!!"

Over and over, I repeat the same word of power, increasing my speed and forward momentum. Thanks to the bubble shield protecting my body, I barely notice the G-forces pulling at me. Under any other circumstances, I'd have instantly blacked out, but Wordsmithing allows me to bypass my limits.

Not even a minute later, I burst out of Hell Harbor's upper atmosphere. The sky around me darkens rapidly as the black void of space engulfs me. My rocket-boosted body slowly quiets down and becomes silent as the superheated air around me dies off, allowing me to increase my speed even further within the vacuum of space.

After ten minutes of pulling away from Hell Harbor, I shoot a glance backward at the beautiful alien orb. Surrounded by the blackness of space, it appears like a pristine jewel, reminiscent of Earth, but featuring wildly different landmasses and shapes I couldn't draw even if someone asked. Where Earth once possessed seven distinct super-continents, Hell Harbor instead has dozens of smaller island-like sub-continents, each one roughly the size of Greenland.

"Amazing," I mutter. "I see why the demons named the planet Hell Harbor. It seems to be comprised of many super-islands, rather than standard continents. I wonder if its oceans take up as much space as Earth's."

Thanks to the oxygenated bubble surrounding me, I'm able to speak and breathe without issue.

"I'd say both are about the same," My mind-wife replies. "It's hard to tell from here, but I believe oceans comprise about 70% of Hell Harbor's surface. Remember that gigantic creature we saw when we first arrived?"

I nod. "Yeah. It seems Hell Harbor has its own dinosaurs roaming its oceans. I'd hate to go surfing with monsters as big as those swimming around."

Turning my attention forward, I gaze into the cosmos surrounding Hell Harbor. "Navigate."

The star map I stored in my Mind Realm earlier activates, causing a tiny blip of red to appear in the void. I narrow my gaze to stare at it. As I do, several words appear in my peripheral vision, acting as a HUD readout.

Unknown M-Class Planet. Habitability Index: 60%. Lifeforms not detected. Extreme tectonic and geological movements detected. Danger rating: 75%.

The ninth planet in Hell Harbor's system gives me a bunch of information, making me wonder if I should go there first.

"Raphael. Can you give me a general direction now? Can you sense the Archangel's mana any better now that I've exited Hell Harbor's atmosphere?"

The Archangel hesitates. "I... I cannot detect any differences in its position. Thou must travel further before I may ascertain whether the signal is increasing or decreasing in intensity."

"Ugh. Alright, fine. I'll travel to the ninth planet. Tell me if you notice any changes."

Raphael nods. "Very well."

With my body rocketing away from Hell Harbor at thousands of miles an hour, my speed seems incredible. However, on a galactic and interplanetary scale, I've barely moved an inch. At my current speed, it would take me years to reach the ninth planet.

"ACCELERATE! ACCELERATE! ACCELERATE!"

I howl at the top of my lungs, crushing three more mana beads as I activate all of my energy. Despite increasing my speed a hundredfold, perhaps even a thousandfold, I don't detect any difference in speed via my somatic system. It's only once I glance behind myself and observe Hell Harbor shrinking much faster than before that I know just how much I've accelerated.

"Speedometer."

With another word of power, I summon a series of floating numbers in my vision, telling me my exact speed. Already, I've begun traveling at 50% the speed of light.

"I'm not moving fast enough," I mutter. "ACCELERATE! ACCELERATE!!"

My speed increases again, pushing me further beyond my limits. Even once I reach 90% of the speed of light, I barely notice any difference in my body. The temporal shield surrounding me protects me from the effects of time dilation while also preventing my organs from turning to mush.

* * *

Time passes. Ten minutes. Twenty. Thirty.

As the void thickens around me and Hell Harbor fades into a speck in the distance, Raphael suddenly speaks.

"Ah! The Archangel's signature! 'Tis increasing in intensity!"

My heart skips a beat. "It is? Great! Someone must have imprisoned your sibling on the ninth planet! We'll arrive there within twenty minutes."

Raphael's elation disappears. He frowns while stroking his beard. "Hmm. Nay. I do not believe we have come anywhere close to their signal, yet. At most, its intensity has increased by two or three percent. I only detected the increase thanks to thy swift movement. I suspect they reside in a location far, far removed from Hell Harbor."

"Hm. You might be right," I mutter. "I'll still check out the ninth planet anyway, just to be sure. Worst case scenario, they aren't there, but I'll still get a good look at one of the other planets in this system. Who knows? It might be a good idea for me to establish a secret outpost somewhere near the demon's homeworld."

Raphael nods. "Aye. A wise decision, indeed."

Elsewhere in the Hell Harbor star system.

Ping. Ping.

An ancient observation post, tens of thousands of years old, slowly releases pulses of energy that travel throughout the sector. Every so often, it receives data from the system's worlds, gathering and collecting the information for research purposes.

Half a dozen alien lifeforms walk around within the observation post's corridors. As low-ranking members of the Changeling hierarchy, their lives are little more than banal, mundane existences.

One of the many genderless beings aboard the platform, a Second Class Junior Observer, named Moyari, gazes without emotion at the many high-tech displays situated before it. It sits alone within an isolated room, taking its turn for monitoring duties.

Moyari leans back in a comfortably designed hover-chair, one which reclines to allow the Changeling a more relaxed posture. The young Volgrim casually waves its hands through the air while examining a few diagrams reporting on the volcanic activity happening within Planet Jolus's tectonic plates.

The Changeling taps a button on its chair to activate an audio recorder. "Dasa ans'x, tsa'gasa 6,501.13. Pftanas Juftiat hat unth'aatag ust sathsunuth athsu'usx ftx sh'aa la'thans ghushun sha ftats rursaan tsanga'g suna ianust. P'uu'usx fta'aft 1. Eng 'alu's."

"Data entry, stardate 6,501.13. Planet Jolus has increased its tectonic activity by three percent within the last fifteen standard time units. Priority level 1. End report."

After finishing its report, the Changeling returns to its duties. Its giant, unblinking eyes gaze at the display without a hint of passion or boredom. Its existence revolves around observation. And so, it observes.

Eventually, the research room's door hisses open as a second Changeling enters.

"Junior Observer. Your shift will conclude in one point six micro-time units. You may leave."

"Yes. This one has just delivered its report, Senior Observer, Kol. You may take control for the forty remaining time units."

"Acknowledged and dismissed."

The Senior Observer watches silently as its junior climbs out of the hover-chair and walks to the door. However, just before Moyari starts to exit, the young Changeling pauses.

"Senior Observer. This one wishes to ask a question."

Kol nods. "You may."

After a slight pause, the younger Changeling turns to face its senior. "What purpose does our post serve for the upper echelons? While we might need to observe the demon's designated containment world, this one cannot help but wonder why we do not simply place an artificial intelligence in charge. This station is more than capable of automating its processes. Given that the demons are incapable of space-flight, would not our services be put to better use observing a plague-infested world?"

The Head Observer stares at its junior for a moment, its gaze devoid of anger and annoyance.

"Second-Class Junior Researcher, Moyari. Your inquiry falls within acceptable parameters. Given the low status of those aboard this station, we would be a hindrance to the Council, not an asset. Until you have advanced to the fourth or fifth class and raised your Aspect to the rank of Melder, you will be of no use to the Council. While this one does recognize your interest in promotion, all phases of your advancement must reach a certain level before you may apply to a higher position."

Kol gestures toward the various terminal readouts, but its hand pauses before the one displaying Hell Harbor's information.

"The demonic homeworld is an essential resource point. Should the Plague arrive in this system, we must inform the Council at once. We cannot risk using an automated system for such a high-value asset. Given the low quality of the synthetic minds available to us, we cannot be certain they would detect the Plague and send out a distress signal in time."

Kol walks over to the hover-chair and eases into its embrace. "Do not concern yourself with our mission, Junior Observer. All who perform their duties properly will, without fail, receive an appropriate reward from the upper-classes. You may expect your responsibilities to increase in time as you improve your Aspects."

Moyari listens to its senior without interruption. Once Kol concludes, Moyari bows politely. "This one understands. This one comprehends. This one expresses gratitude to its senior for imparting such valuable wisdom."

"Your gratitude is unnecessary," Kol replies, bowing its head sagely. "Continue improving, and you shall give glory to this one, who taught you."

"This one takes its leave," Moyari says, as it turns away and exits through the door.

A minute later, the room falls silent. Senior Observer Kol, a Fourth-Class Changeling, gazes at the monitor feeds dispassionately. It presses many buttons, scrutinizes several automated notifications, and resumes the work of its younger colleague.

Moyari is an excellent pupil, Kol thinks to itself. This one's junior pays careful attention to every detail and always leaves plenty of notes for when this one takes over observation duties. This one must offer another letter of recommendation to Lead Observer Mellir. If Moyari wishes to advance to a more rewarding field, this one will not stand in their way.

As Kol quietly ruminates on various happenings, a blinking indicator on the Void-Link Scanner catches its attention.

Hm? How odd. What sort of anomaly is this? Kol wonders.

The Senior Observer turns its chair to face the upper-left-most monitor, one which shows a red dot rapidly traveling from the demon's homeworld, Hell Harbor, to the system's ninth planet, Jolus.

Kol watches for several minutes. Each time the station sends out an energy pulse, it pinpoints the anomaly's position with startling accuracy.

Hmm. This anomaly does not appear to be a naturally occurring phenomenon, nor does it possess the same energy signature as the Plague.

The bulbous-headed Changeling gazes at the red blip with renewed interest.

Its speed is increasing dramatically over time. According to its travel vectors, it launched from the third continent of Hell Harbor, and now appears to be traveling on an interception course toward planet Jolus.

Senior Observer Kol presses both of its index fingers against the side of its head. It closes its eyes for several seconds, agitating a tremendous burst of mental activity.

After five minutes, Kol opens its eyes. The Changeling taps a button on its hover-chair's arm, activating a subspace communication pulse.

Not long after, a holographic image materializes in the center of the room, revealing the Cthulian-shaped face of a Technopath. Sporting a pair of bright-blue bionic eyes, as well as a cerebrally-integrated helmet, the Technopath appears fiercely intimidating.

"Senior Observer Kol. It is not yet time for your quarterly report. For what reason have you contacted me?"

Kol bows its head. "Sangin Kordonis. This one apologizes, but it has discovered a strange anomaly in its designated observation sector. This one requests a secondary inspection team immediately."

The Technopath knots its forehead together. "I require more information on this... anomaly. Transmit your observation data."

"Of course."

Kol taps a series of buttons to send its recently acquired information to the Technopath staring it down.

After several minutes, the Technopath finishes scanning the uploaded information. "Excellent work, Senior Observer. It is a shame you haven't yet broken your bottleneck to reach the Fifth Class, for your observation skills echo many of the Sixth Class Observers I've met."

"You praise this one too much," Kol replies, nodding politely. "This one only exists to serve."

"Indeed. I will send five inspection teams and three enforcer teams on the double. Report any changes in the anomaly's travel vectors at once."

Kol hesitates. "Eight teams? This one apologizes for its audacity. However, this one wishes to know why you would send so many reinforcements over such a minor matter."

Sangin Kordanis falls silent. He doesn't reply for several seconds.

"Hmm. You have served the Council well over the years. In light of your dedicated services, I will send you a classified file. Read it and destroy it immediately. Let no other Observers see its contents. Kordonis, out."

After tapping a few buttons, Sangin Kordonis severs the connection without waiting for a reply. Kol falls silent as a file transmits to its station and opens automatically, revealing a litany of previously-unseen information.

An hour later, Kol presses a button on its chair and deletes the file from existence. The Changeling returns its attention to the rapidly-moving blip as it nears the ninth planet of the Hell Harbor star system.

"Hmm. Holy Energy. Heroic Energy. This one was not aware of such a thing before today. It is no wonder Sangin Kordonis intends to send such a frightening strike force. Perhaps, such numbers might even prove too few."

The Changeling returns to its original goal of observing the system. However, it keeps most of its focus on the red blip traveling across the star map.

What might this powerful energy signature belong to?

Part 216: An Anomaly Among Anomalies

The moment I arrive at the ninth planet in Hell Harbor's system, I speak a word of power.

"Pulse."

A bolt of holy energy shoots from my body toward the blood-red sphere hanging in the void. It travels far faster than the speed of light and strikes the planet within seconds, causing divine energy to surge around the molten world several times before fading away.

In my mind's eye, a 3D image of the ninth planet appears, featuring its valleys, canyons, mountains, and all its other geological features. Not even its underground caves manage to escape my vision, allowing me to make out even its most secretive topographical features.

"Terminal. Store."

I place my newly acquired knowledge inside my Mind Realm where Phoebe can access it, then shrug. "I still don't know where your sibling is, Raphael, but I do know they aren't here."

The Archangel of Wisdom watches as another gigantic terminal appears beside the others, and nods. "I understand, Wordsmith. We haven't time to waste. Already, thou hath taken several hours to reach this world. Turn toward the system's outskirts, twenty degrees to thy right, and seven degrees 'upward.' I believe the signal may be emanating from that direction."

I nod. "Noted."

With my body still hurtling straight at the ninth planet, I speak a few words of power to shift my direction while maintaining my momentum.

"Adjust. Adjust. Nullify. Accelerate! Accelerate! ACCELERATE!"

After temporarily erasing the planet's gravitational pull on my body, I increase my speed even further, allowing myself to reach 99% the speed of light. Even so, it still takes nearly a minute to zip past the planet and leave it in my dust, revealing just how far away I was when I first sent a pulse to its surface.

"Calculate. Estimate."

A series of lines and numbers appears in my head, detailing the time costs for searching each planet in Hell Harbor's system. I discount all of the seven inner planets, as Raphael's detection seems to grow stronger the further I travel from the system's center. Additionally, two of the most distant, outermost planets rest at the other side of the system's star, in the opposite direction I'm traveling. They seem unlikely to house the Archangel.

After running the time costs through my head, I frown.

"Raphael. If I travel to each planet one-by-one, it will take me three weeks to visit them all. Some of them are multiple astronautical units further from this system's star than Pluto's is from Sol. Since I'm only following your request, where do you think I should go? Feel free to have Phoebe show you the star-map if you need it."

Raphael furrows his brow. He rises from his seat and strides over to the newest terminal, where Phoebe stands, her fingers traveling like lightning across its keys.

"Hmm. Thy mana supply shall only last another thirty hours at best. Given that limit, let us concentrate our efforts on visiting..."

Raphael hesitates. He watches as Phoebe plots out a course to the three closest planets, along with detours to four others. A series of calculations appears with detailed numbers explaining the time needed to visit Hell Harbor's neighboring worlds.

"...none of them," Raphael finishes. "I strongly suspect that whoever is holding my sibling prisoner, they would not be so foolish as to hide them on a world nearby the demons' stronghold. Nay, we must head for the edge of this star-system at thy highest possible speed. If my intuition is correct, we may discover a space-faring vessel with specialized quarters for confining my brother or sister."

I raise my eyebrow. "Your suspicions sound reasonable, but how did you come to such a conclusion? What makes you think someone, be they Volgrim or Demon, would keep your sibling confined on a spaceship?"

Raphael shrugs. He forces a meek smile before sighing. "I am merely guessing, Wordsmith. My powers have dulled after resting within this ring for 100,000 years. Even so, my intuition tells me that none of these planets lies within the direction we must travel to reach my sibling. I must, therefore, conclude that my sibling is not trapped on a planet as we first assumed. I desperately hope my assumption will bear fruit."

"You're the boss," I reply. "Either way, if I don't find your missing Archangel within thirty hours, I'm teleporting back to Tarus II. However, we do have a secondary problem. I can't go faster than the speed of light. Solomon stressed to me on many occasions that traveling faster than lightspeed would alert the Volgrim of my location. If I create any subspace echoes this close to the demon's homeworld, our alien friends will surely notice."

"I agree, prudence is a wise move, young Hero," Raphael replies. "Do whatever thou must to further the search for my sibling. I shall wait patiently and without complaint."

Without another word, the Archangel of Wisdom returns to the bench and takes a seat. He closes his eyes and begins to meditate, causing his aura to increase noticeably. I can only surmise he must be concentrating on pinpointing the missing Archangel's location.

With my speed capped at 99% the speed of light. I fall silent and renew my focus on Hell Harbor's topography, as well as its neighboring planets.

Hopefully, it won't be long before we find Raphael's missing brother or sister.

The Volgrim observation post goes to yellow alert as a massive fleet of warships decloaks off its port bow. The circular platform, bigger than a hundred football stadiums stacked on top of each other, looks positively minuscule compared to the monstrous juggernauts floating within its orbital radius.

Each of the newly-arrived ships sports a different appearance. Some of them resemble long, cylindrical tubes with laser-etched designs on their smoothly-plated sides, while others appear crude, boxy, and ugly, made to favor function over fashion.

The biggest ship of all, the VLL Hatoraxia, possesses a pair of wavy wings resembling a manta ray. Each wing carries a dual-barrel photon cannon armament capable of glassing planets from orbit, giving the Hatoraxia four massive guns in total, to say nothing of its hundreds of smaller, yet still incredibly lethal armaments. Its front section narrows into a lance-like protrusion, making it look like a ship designed for ramming.

Senior Observer Kol motions to its five fellow Changelings, lining them up before a giant viewscreen in the main hall. They stand at attention, with their arms at their sides and their perfectly-pressed white uniforms sporting the logos of their respective factions. Kol wears the emblem of the Yellow Star, revealing its dignified upbringing, while its assistant, Moyari, wears the symbol of the Jade Nebula, a newly created faction with members who will someday explore the furthest reaches of space. To see a Jade Nebulite on a mere observation platform reveals just how thinly the various Volgrim factions have stretched their resources in the modern era.

Kol crosses both of its arms in front of its chest as the viewscreen illuminates, revealing the face of a familiar Technopath. "This one greets its superior, Sangin Kordonis. This one offers itself to the cause of capturing the aberrant anomaly."

Sangin Kordonis, fourth in line to lead Clan Oblong, returns the gesture, placing its arms and finger-tentacles over its chest. "At ease, Senior Observer, Kol. By quickly reporting the appearance of this anomaly, you have contributed greatly to the Founder's cause. I have received a proclamation from Sangin Lidra, head of Clan Oblong. If we manage to capture and contain the anomaly, you and your fellow Observers will receive a recreation boost of one rank and a prestige allotment equal to seventeen war provisions."

Kol's emotionless expression cracks, ever so slightly. "Seventeen provisions? This one understands. This one does not feel worthy of such a transcendent gift."

"Worry not," Kordonis replies. "If this signal belongs to what I think it does, your reward will prove quite pitiful. I expect to double or even triple your allotment. I will also remind you that the prestige available to my legion will dwarf yours by a factor of ten. Now, forgive me, for I am in a rush. Send me the travel data for the anomaly."

Kol relaxes its posture and lowers its arms, then quickly strides over to a terminal a few feet away. "This one requires but a moment. Transmitting... now."

As the data transfers, Kol continues speaking. "When this one first contacted you, it had been just under one-tenth of a standard time unit after we first located the anomaly. However, in the time it took you to arrive, more than twenty standard time units have passed. The anomaly has already reached the edge of this system. Soon, its trajectory will take it past the orbit of planet HH-15A."

"I understand," Kordonis replies. "We cannot afford to waste any time, Head Observer. I will make our stop here both brief and efficient."

Kordonis glances away from his viewscreen and the lined-up Changelings. His eyes fall on a terminal on his ship, where he watches as Kol's data finishes uploading.

"Interesting," Kordonis mutters. "This flight pattern is quite unusual."

The Hatoraxia's captain gestures toward the screen as he glances at his second-in-command, a female Technopath with dozens of wires sticking out of her head. She hovers over to Kordonis, levitating via a hover-system, much like the head of Clan Oblong, Sangin Lidra.

"Captain?"

Kordonis turns his attention to the female technopath. "Orena. Run an algorithm on this anomaly's movements. I postulate, based on its change of course when it reached Planet Jolus, that it might be a miniature spacecraft comprised of an alloy we've never encountered before. Senior Observer Kol did not detect any known metal compounds, so I suspect that it may possess a cloaking field more advanced than ours. Our scanners are unable to penetrate it."

The second in command, Orena, nods at her captain. "Affirmative. I will run an advanced scan on the vessel's movements. Allow me one-third of a standard time unit to compile my review, captain."

Kordonis nods. "Move with efficiency, Orena Limea. We haven't a clue how much longer this 'anomaly' will remain in the system."

The Captain returns his attention to Kol's projected image aboard the observation platform. However, to his surprise, all six Changelings have vanished.

"Hm? Senior Observer Kol?"

After waiting for a few moments, Kordonis flicks his gaze to one of the other Volgrim on his ship's bridge. "Invocator Miikil. I looked away for only a few micro-time-units. Where did the Observers go?"

A hover-chair ten feet from the captain swivels to face him, revealing the presence of a low-ranking Psion. The young telepath meets Kordonis's gaze with her own six blackened, bug-like eyes. [A moment, captain.]

She projects her thoughts outward, but keeps her 'volume' low, only allowing the captain and a few nearby crew members to hear her. The Psion raises her robed arms and places two fingers from each hand on her temple, then concentrates.

[Hm. The observers have all returned to their stations. Their movements are much more frenzied than usual, while their vital signs have become noticeably more erratic than when we arrived. I sense a certain level of excitement and distress in their thoughts. Would you like me to contact the Senior Observer for you?]

"No. Let us wait until Orena finishes her scan before we bother the outpost. Senior Observer Kol is not one to leave abruptly without a formal departure and closing of his link."

The female Psion tilts her head upward. [I agree.]

* * *

Ten minutes pass. Fifteen. Twenty.

By the time Orena returns, the Changelings still haven't returned to their main section. "Captain. I've completed the algorithmic sweep you requested. The anomaly has performed several maneuvers, each of which drastically altered its course. Its movements do not line up with any known natural cosmic phenomena."

Kordonis's finger-tentacles twitch. "As expected. Invocator Miikil, contact Senior Observer Kol for me. I would not normally interrupt my old friend, but we must begin chasing the anomaly at once."

[Yes, captain.]

The Invocator cocks her head slightly and once again presses her fingers against her temples.

After several seconds, she lowers her arms.

[Captain. I... I have just learned some disturbing news.]

Immediately, Kordonis's aloof nature vanishes. He jerks his gaze toward Miikil, acting as if she just told him his entire clan died. "Troublesome news? What sort?"

[I believe it would be best if Senior Observer Kol told you in its own words.]

Hardly have the thoughts left Miikil's mind before the comlink beeps with a transmission request.

"Onscreen," Kordanis says.

The viewscreen changes to reveal Senior Observer Kol's main office. Dozens of warnings line up along the Changeling's computer displays, each one displaying the same message.

"C-captain Kordonis..." Kol says, its voice ragged. "This one deeply apologizes. This one did not intend to leave you in the lurch; however, this one needed to confirm the information it received before relaying it to you."

Kordanis nods. "Yes, yes, continue. What happened? Why do you appear so agitated?"

The Senior Observer wrings its webbed hands together. "The anomaly... it... it has disappeared!"

Kordonis nearly leaps out of his seat. "What?! Disappeared?"

"Yes! This one is still investigating," Kol says, bowing meekly. "This one feels deeply guilty. The anomaly's disappearance does not match up with any known uses of subspace. This one cannot confirm that the anomaly jumped to hyperspace. This one... does not know how or why the anomaly vanished!"

Kol's words causes a veil of silence to fall over Kordonis's crew. They turn to look at their captain with a mixture of fear and worry.

Kordonis rises from his seat. "Hiiga! We cannot delay any longer. Orena, plot a course for the anomaly's last known coordinates. Travel at Warp 6, on the double! The reserve ships will travel at Warp 4. Move quickly, and with purpose!"

Orena hovers over to a nearby terminal. "Yes, captain. We will engage the warp-drive in seven micro-units."

Kordonis glances at Kol, his gaze as cold as ice. "You are not to blame, Senior Observer. I moved too slowly. If the anomaly disappears, it will be my pride on the line, not yours. Continue observing and update us as the situation demands!"

Kol crosses its arms over its chest. "Hiiga! This one contemplates! This one comprehends!"

Moments later, the viewscreen disconnects. Several flashes of light outside the observation platform announce the departure of Kordonis's fleet as all his ships jump to hyperspace.

Senior Observer Kol stares at the blackened viewscreen. Hundreds of thoughts roll around in the Changeling's head, each one more worrisome than the last.

"What happened to the anomaly? How did it leave? Could it be a vessel borne of the Plague?"

After shaking its head, the Changeling returns to its terminal and begins frantically scouring its sensor data, trying to figure out what could have allowed the anomaly to disappear without a trace.

This one must uncover more clues for the captain!

Part 217: It's a Trap!

I utter a word of power to determine how much longer it will take before I reach the edge of the Hell Harbor star system. "Estimate."

The answer comes to me immediately. I'll soon pass the fifteenth planet's orbit. Already, I've scanned three other planets along the way. None of them housed the Archangel, who Raphael so desperately wants to find.

After more than nineteen hours of travel, boredom has become the bane of my existence. Even while zipping along at 99% the speed of light with a barrier protecting me from the effects of time dilation, the universe outside my bubble of protected space never changes. Unlike in old sci-fi movies, lightspeed doesn't equate to streaks of starlight zipping past me. The stars appear just as unmoving as they would if I were standing on Earth, staring up at the night sky.

Space is enormous — incomprehensibly vast. Even at the speed of light, the fastest any natural phenomena can travel, it would still take me 100,000 years to go from one side of the Milky Way to the other. Put in perspective, the Milky Way is only one galaxy out of tens of trillions. The space in between any pair of galaxies is a hundred thousand times wider than the galaxies themselves.

Once, humans thought we were the center of the universe. We believed the sun revolved around the Earth, along with all the other stars and planets we could make out with our naked eyes. In truth, what we saw of the night sky was barely the tiniest fraction of stars within a single spiral-arm of our galaxy.

We thought we were alone.

We were wrong.

A hundred thousand years after we lost the multi-species war, not even the Volgrim, with their Type-3 civilization, have learned what exists beyond the Milky Way. Even their warp travel won't allow them to cross the distance between galaxies within any reasonable time frame. Andromeda is our nearest stellar neighbor. Even if no other alien species live there, perhaps one of the other fifty billion galaxies might harbor life.

My thoughts continue drifting between the size of the universe, as well as the point of my existence. Who am I, but a mere human? Even if some might describe my Wordsmithing as a 'cosmic power,' that only correlates with their limited worldview, not necessarily reality. I can barely reshape a single moon to house life, let alone the rest of the universe.

I'm nothing — an ant. In the grand scheme of things, my power can't do much to change the universe. Even if the entire Milky Way vanishes, some other species in some other galaxy will continue the grand struggle for life.

With a sigh, I shake my head.

"Still two hours to go," I mutter.

My mind-wife replies. "Are you doing okay, Jason? You seem a little down."

I shrug. "Dunno. I think flying through a void of endless blackness is doing something fucky to my mind. I keep dwelling on the meaning of life and my purpose in the grand scheme of things."

She cocks her head. "Are you feeling lost and confused?"

"Maybe a little bit. I don't know where I'm going or what I'm supposed to do. I don't even think I matter to the universe."

Phoebe shrugs. "Neither do I. In the end, we are all merely following God's grand plan. Who can know what He has in store for us?"

I pause for a moment before replying.

"After everything we've been through and everything you've seen... why do you still believe in God? You've seen what the angels did, and the horrors the demons unleash every day. You know how dangerous the Volgrim are, the power Dragons once commanded, the might of Titankind, and the folly of humanity. If God exists, why would he breathe life into such horrors, such despicable creations?"

Phoebe hesitates.

"Hmm. I don't know what God's grand plan is. I know only what the scriptures told me. Our Creator made everything for a reason."

"Alright, but what reason?"

"I don't know," Phoebe repeats. "Maybe He created life as part of a grand experiment. Perhaps He intended for His children to fight endlessly for His amusement. Perhaps He even wishes for us to one day set aside our differences and love each other. Jason, what if the only way to truly learn how to love someone is by hating them first? Until you burn yourself, you won't understand the dangers of fire. Until you cut yourself, you won't understand how painful a blade pressed against your flesh can feel."

I frown. "So, the Creator wants us to hate each other for now, in the hopes that we'll someday learn to love? What about all the people who perish along the way? Even if I earn the gift of eternal love, those who have died at my hands won't. That hardly makes our all-powerful God seem fair and benevolent."

"Perhaps God doesn't believe in justice and fairness," Phoebe replies. "Such concepts might only be our way of reconciling the nature of the universe. If you look at how life evolves, it becomes clear that survival of the fittest and evolution leads to mightier species. Perhaps God merely wishes to see how far life can ascend. Perhaps, someday, we'll become as powerful as Him."

"I guess that's possible," I say. "Raphael. You're supposed to be the oldest Archangel. Haven't you met the Creator?"

The Archangel of Wisdom materializes beside Phoebe after transferring from his ring to my Mind Realm.

"Hm? Yes, of course. 'Twas an eternity ago. Even so, I cannot forget the divine brilliance of the Creator's aura."

I raise an eyebrow. "You met Him? Did He say anything to you?"

Raphael sits beside Phoebe and smiles politely. "Oh, nay, I would not say the Creator communicated via speech. Rather, He opened up His mind and allowed me to gaze upon His plans. I was able, for a brief moment, to witness the ultimate fate of the universe."

Phoebe's eyes sparkle with interest. "Really?! Raphael, what did you see?"

"I witnessed the Creator's boundless love," Raphael replies. His eyes turn glossy as he gazes as the water bubbling in a nearby fountain. "He created the angels from the dust of the cosmos. He told us that we had to go out and experience the gift of life He had bestowed upon us. Afterward, He departed, and I never saw Him again."

I frown. "That's it?"

Phoebe's eager expression dulls somewhat, as she raises her head to scowl at me. "Jason! Don't be rude! I think it's a wonderful tale!"

"Yeah. I guess it's... uh... interesting..." I mutter.

My thoughts turn elsewhere, as I casually wonder to myself if Raphael is even telling the truth. Did the old man really see the Creator? Even if he thinks he did, who is to say that the thing he saw was actually 'God?' What if Raphael was merely feeling disoriented during his creation, causing him to hallucinate?

Maybe I'm too skeptical for my own good. If Raphael is telling the truth, then he saw something that no other being alive today has ever seen. Gabriel and Michael may have been there to witness the Creator, but with their memories wiped, they wouldn't remember him. That means I have to believe whatever the old man says, but I don't like putting my faith in something I've never seen with my own eyes.

With a sigh, I speak another word of power. "Estimate."

A series of numbers appears in my mind, telling me I've only just passed the fifteenth planet's orbit. From here on out, I only have dead space ahead. Wherever Raphael's sibling might be hiding or locked up, I'll have to hope I'm heading in the right direction.

"Raphael. Are we getting closer?"

The eldest Archangel nods. "Verily, compared to when thou first departed Hell Harbor, the Archangel's signal has grown only stronger over time. My brother or sister is, most likely, in this direction."

"Most likely," I repeat, trying not to reveal my annoyance. "I sure hope this little escapade isn't all for naught. I need to get back to the Core as soon as possible."

"Say, Jason," Phoebe says, raising her gaze to meet mine. "Regarding your conversation with Ose and Beelzebub. I have to ask if... if threatening the demon leaders was the smartest option. Aren't you worried that you might have angered them? What if they attack Tarus II because of you?"

I shake my head. "If Ose attacks Tarus II within the next few days, you can safely bet she was planning an invasion from the very beginning. Logistically, unless she's a total idiot, she'd need to draw up multiple avenues of attack. She could probably just order her minions to assault us all at once and overwhelm us with numbers, but everything Belial has told us indicates she's not an airhead."

I continue. "Furthermore, after speaking to Ose, I saw for myself just how smart she was. She tried to trap me with wordplay to make me reveal any weaknesses she could exploit. I don't doubt that Ose will attack Tarus II, since our negotiations didn't take the path I wanted. However, I would rather stand up for my principles than bend my knee to a tyrant. If Ose wants to attack us, then we'll just have to meet on her terms."

Raphael interjects. "Thou art correct, young Hero. Demons respect power. Hads't thou arrived and offered a limp wrist, Ose and Beelzebub would have smelled blood in the water. Like sharks, they would have eviscerated thee without hesitation. I admire thy strong-armed tactics, especially against such a dangerous foe. Had the demon leaders originally intended to attack, they may think twice now after witnessing thy strength."

"Yeah. I sure hope so."

Once again, I fall silent, retreating into my thoughts.

Between the Atlas Cannon, the hidden automated defenses, and the other surprises I have planned, I doubt the demons could conquer Tarus II in an entire month, even if I weren't there to help defend humanity. Marie warned me that Ose could control technology to some extent, but my automated defenses use magical control units. She shouldn't be able to bypass them.

Even so... if the demons decide to invade with all their military might, I can't see humanity surviving. I may have to act selfishly to get my wife and daughter out of there. I'll bring Samantha, Kar, Blinker, and the other elites along, too. In the worst-case scenario, we may have to take to the stars and hide amidst the vastness of space. If Solomon's conjecture was correct, the demons have little to no spacefaring capabilities. Out in the void, we might find ourselves subject to attacks from the Volgrim, but if we're lucky, we won't.

My eyes slowly scan the stars around me. Tens of millions of specks of light shine in the distance; their light swallowed by the Dark Matter comprising 99% of space's mass.

Where would we hide? What if the Volgrim have probes orbiting every distant world? In the worst-case scenario, I might have to raise my daughter aboard a starship. Without Solomon's Crown, I can't easily create technology, nor can I terraform planets. My next goal should be to build an artifact resembling his crown, something I could use to augment my mental abilities. If I had such a thing, I'd be able to advance humanity much faster than I can at the momen- huh?

As dozens of thoughts bounce around my head, a strange sensation strikes me. My body shudders, making me feel as if I've suddenly landed inside a roller coaster traveling downhill at a hundred miles an hour. A sickening sense of nausea roils in my gut, making me want to puke.

"Gurk..."

I swallow my bile and close my eyes for a moment. When I open them again, my heart seizes up, turning my blood to ice.

"W-what the fuck?!"

All around me, the distant specks of light, the stars in the night sky, vanish abruptly. Instantly, my surroundings shift into an infinitely huge, infinitely black void, lacking all light and life.

"What just happened?! Where did all the stars go?!"

I jerk my head around, from left to right, up and down, and even turn to look for Hell Harbor's sun.

Nothing.

No matter where I look, I see only the pitch-blackness of space, as if someone had snuffed out all the light around me.

"Jason? What's wrong?" Phoebe asks. "What do you mean by- oh! Oh my god!"

My wife gazes through my eyes at the blackness surrounding me. She, too, realizes what has happened.

"I was deep in thought, when suddenly everything around me just vanished," I say, trying to keep my voice even. Hints of panic creep into the back of my mind, but I steady myself with a few words of power. "Calm. Rational."

Immediately, all of my emotions disappear, replaced instead with a sense of clear-minded focus.

I've been flying along at 99% the speed of light for nearly nineteen hours straight. It's unlikely that I've somehow fallen into a black hole out of nowhere. Perhaps I accidentally stepped into a Volgrim trap?

"Visualize."

I speak another word of power to try and create a wireframe view of the space around me. However, no matter where I look, I don't notice anything out of the ordinary.

"By the Creator!" Raphael yells. His words make me pause.

"What is it, Raphael? Did you notice something?"

The eldest Archangel jumps out of his seat. Sweat drips off his brow. "Did I notice something?! Naturally! How can thy ability to sense mana be so poor as to not notice... THAT?!"

Raphael points forward, which confuses me. Given his position in my Mind Realm, I can't tell which direction he's pointing. However, with his words as my guide, I speak another word of power. "Sense."

My vision changes to a mana-based view of the universe. Instead of the vibrant colors of the rainbow, or the pitch-blackness of space, I suddenly notice waves and eddies of blue-colored mana spiraling away from me, as if drawn toward a gigantic, magical vacuum cleaner.

I visually trace the mana currents to their destination, where I notice a blindingly bright blue orb of light, one so luminous that it hurts to look at.

"Jesus! What is that thing?" I ask.

Raphael's expression morphs into a mixture of giddy excitement and intense worry. "It must be the missing Archangel! We've left the realm of the living and stepped inside a fractured dimension, one much smaller than Heaven, yet similar in its application! Whatever is ahead, it pulled us into this dimension when we drew within its range!"

Phoebe's eyes gloss over as she tries to understand Raphael's words. "Another dimension like Heaven? What do you mean, Archangel? Is this place dangerous?"

"Undoubtedly!" Raphael exclaims. "However, now I can say without a shred of doubt... the Archangel I sensed is none other than Camael! My long-lost sister! I believed her dead at the end of the Energy Wars, yet 'tis none other than her life-force up ahead! Quickly, Jason! We must reach her at once!"

I pause, as a hint of concern appears in the back of my mind. "You might be right, but what if this is a trap? I can't just walk forward and risk my life over a feeling. Someone may have captured Camael and put her here as bait."

Raphael's enthusiasm diminishes. Slowly, he regains his calmness and begins stroking his beard. "Hm. Hm. Aye, thou may be correct, young Hero. Very well. Continue forward, but keep thy senses alert for traps."

I nod. "Naturally."

* * *

Minutes later.

I continue flying forward at 99% the speed of light, my pace unchanged. Even after entering this strange void, the laws of friction do nothing to slow me down. Whatever Camael did to create this dimension, it only differs from normal-space by obscuring the stars. I can only liken the sensation to wrapping a black cloth around my head.

Slowly, the bright ball of blue mana draws closer. I normalize my vision, only to frown in confusion. A tiny golden dot appears in the distance, barely the size of an ant. Even at the speed of light, it seems to take me forever to cross the limitless void separating me from my destination.

Raphael and Phoebe both stare through my eyes. They gaze in wonder at the golden object as I approach it.

"What the heck is that?" Phoebe asks. "I can barely even see it."

Raphael's expression mirrors Phoebe's. "I see it, but I know not what it is. Its design is unlike anything I've ever beheld."

Somehow, the Archangel of Wisdom's eyesight surpasses mine. Even when gazing through my eyes, his inherent Archangel lineage allows him to observe distant objects with far more clarity than even I can.

I decide to equalize our senses.

"Eyesight. Enhance! Enhance! Zoom!"

With four words of power, I summon mana into my eyes, improving their clarity a hundred-fold. Instantly, I zoom in my vision to gaze upon the object in the distance.

When I finally see what it is, a mixture of wonder, astonishment, and confusion swirls within my mind.

A gigantic golden cube, thousands of miles in diameter, with no decorations on its surface, no seams, or designs of any kind, floats in the blackened void. It hangs as if suspended in midair, sucking the universe's ambient mana towards it.

So perfectly flat and untouched is its shape, that I wouldn't question someone if they said it was a solid cube of gold.

However, I find that notion ridiculous. The cube reminds me of something I once saw in an old sci-fi TV series. I can only assume it must be hollow inside. Camael is, most likely, inside it, waiting for a savior... or for someone to fall into her trap.

I exhale, forcing myself to calm down.

"Whatever's in that cube, we'll find out soon enough."

Part 218: The Mystical Cube

It takes me more than two hours to bridge the gap separating me from the giant, golden, six-sided cube. Despite my initial judging of the distance, it turns out the cube is more than 1.3 billion miles away, making even a travel speed of 99% the speed of light seem unbearably slow and tedious. As I draw nearer, the cube's size begins to increase, forcing me to slow down and proceed with caution.

While I initially thought the cube was as big as Earth, it turns out not even Earth is a suitable barometer for its mass. It hovers in the void, suspended upon nothing, with the flat side presented to me being more than three times larger than my homeworld's diameter. By the time I arrive within a few miles of its surface, I can't even see the edges of its nearest side.

"Bloody hell," I mutter. "What is this thing? It's gigantic. Ginormous! Did Camael construct it by herself?"

Raphael crosses his arms. He gazes through my eyes at the cube with a mixture of wonder and worry. "I know not the answer to thy questions, Jason. When my people fell at the end of the Energy Wars, Camael didn't possess a fraction of the energy needed to construct such a marvel. Nay, the only way she might have crafted an artifact of this size would be if she did so during the Primordial Era when her power was at its peak."

Raphael's expression shifts again, this time to confusion. "However, if my sister did, indeed, build this artifact, then why did I never hear of its existence? My sister may have kept a few secrets, but I cannot fathom why she would build something like this without informing me."

"Do you know what it is or what it does?" I ask.

Raphael shakes his head. "Nay. This cube is an artifact unlike any I've ever seen. Magical energy coats its outer surface, preventing me from gazing within."

I frown. "How do you know this giant cube is an artifact? You keep calling it that, but you don't even know its function."

Raphael shrugs. "It bears my sister's mana signature, and it features the same mana-imbued alloy she used for many of her creations, including Solomon's Crown and Aegis. I would be surprised if anyone but Camael could create such an overwhelmingly powerful object."

Phoebe scratches her chin. "What are the odds that it's hollow? Can we get inside?"

Raphael nods. "Undoubtedly. A dense cube of this size would do my sister no good. If I had to hazard a guess, I'd say she built it as a mobile base for crafting artifacts. It's bound to have all manner of primordial relics inside."

My heart skips a beat. "Primordial relics? Don't you mean... treasure?"

Raphael smiles. "Aye, thou mayest find such a term appropriate."

"Nice. I'll start looking for an entrance, then. Scan."

I speak a word of power, causing holy energy to shoot out of my chest and strike the cube. Within seconds, a floating sensation engulfs my body, as the cube releases an echo of my magic back at me.

Raphael's body stiffens. "The artifact appears to be scanning thee, Wordsmith."

"Yeah. I noticed."

Dozens of pulses identical to mine strike me, but none of them seem hostile in nature. Eventually, the cube ceases its scans and returns to its inert state.

Several minutes pass.

"Huh. I thought this artifact was going to do something, but after it scanned me, it stopped. If Camael is inside, I'd expect her to recognize me and let me in."

Raphael's shoulders sag. "I doubt my sister dwells within this artifact. 'Tis my belief that she perished during the Energy Wars, along with the other Archangels. Much more likely, this cube is a lost remnant of her ancient craftsmanship. I imagine 'tis automated via holy energy. Given how it absorbed the void's ambient mana, it must be capable of sustaining itself, similarly to Excalibur."

"Excalibur..." I mutter. "Whatever happened to that weapon?"

"Funny thou shoulds't ask," Raphael replies. "I am not certain. After Camael gifted it to King Arthur, it remained within his family line for many generations. At some point, Camelot fell to a demonic invasion, making me lose track of its whereabouts."

"Seriously? How could you let a weapon like Excalibur leave your sight? It damn near killed the Archdemon. What if the demons stole it?"

"The demons could not have managed such a feat," Raphael replies. "Few were capable of wielding its imperfect prototype, let alone the finished artifact Camael bequeathed to Arthur. The model Arthur received was far stronger and much deadlier than the one Camael wielded against the Archdemon. Any demon who drew too close to Excalibur, let alone attempted to grasp its handle, would have perished instantly."

"Solomon told me once that the demons worked with the Mayans and the Aztecs. What if they found Excalibur and had a human slave steal it?"

Raphael nods. "Aye. The demons may have hidden it by using a human. However, 'tis useless for us to speculate now. Unless Excalibur rests within this artifact, we haven't a single clue as to its whereabouts. Thy Wordsmithing is useless when it comes to locating inanimate objects."

"Yeah. For now, let's focus on getting inside," I reply. "There has to be a way in."

"Agreed."

* * *

Ten minutes later, I re-accelerate to 0.01% the speed of light, allowing me to cruise around the cube as I please. After continually mapping out its exterior, I notice wafer-thin lines drawn all across its six surfaces, each presenting a different symbol. One of them resembles a bird shaped like the letter Q, while another reminds me of a waterfall, one which lands in a pit of bones.

"Translate."

I utter a word of power, allowing me to comprehend their deeper meaning. However, instead of a direct translation, only a vague sensation of danger appears in the back of my mind.

"Hm. This cube is incredible," I mutter. "Its insides are hollow, as Phoebe speculated. It appears to be a containment device, designed to prevent its contents from escaping."

"So, a prison?" Phoebe asks.

"Maybe. I don't know. I found an entrance on the, err, sixth side — the one with the giant bird. We'll enter through there."

"What if that entry-way is a trap?" Phoebe asks.

"It might be, but I have my doubts. Earlier, the cube reflected my scans. I have a feeling it's classified me as an ally. Perhaps it detected Raphael, Michael, and Gabriel's rings?"

"Aye," Raphael replies. "It may have also recognized the holy energy contained within thy body."

"Right. So, I can only hope it won't atomize me when I approach."

I fly around the sides of the cube to arrive at a 300-foot-diameter depression in its otherwise perfectly flat surface. Due to the cube's sheer size, even a hole big enough to comfortably fit a Titan King appears as little more than a black speck on a sandy beach. I zip over and hover before the concave cavity, but to my surprise, it begins to open, revealing a bright-blue force-field protecting its contents.

"Oh? Is the cube inviting me inside?"

Phoebe shrugs. "Maybe it wants to eat your face."

"Given how I live on a world under constant threat of demonic attacks, that's just something that comes with the territory."

Without any fanfare, I float toward the giant force-field. As I draw closer, I reach out my hand, mentally preparing myself for a blast of mana to shoot me out of the sky, or for the barrier to electrify me and fry my brains to mush. Instead, when I try to touch the force-field, my hand passes through it without any issues, entering the inside effortlessly.

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "A bio-barrier."

"A what?" Raphael asks.

"Bio-barriers keep life support and other natural gasses locked inside a vessel, allowing people and crafts to enter while maintaining the ship's cargo bay's pressurization," I explain. "Esther has something similar, though I've never needed to use it."

Raphael tugs his beard. "Hmm. In that case, this artifact has an even more complicated origin than I thought."

"Why do you say that?" I ask, as I float through the bio-barrier.

"Angels do not require oxygen or natural gasses," Raphael replies. "Neither did Titans or dragons. All of us were born and lived in the void."

"That makes sense," I say. "However, if so, why do angels possess vocal cords for speaking? Why not communicate via telepathy?"

Raphael smiles. "We can, and have done so on occasion. However, angel bodies are highly adaptable to new environments. Toxic gasses, molten lava, and many other natural barriers were minor obstacles before our adaptive forms. Once we arrived on Earth, we used its nutrient-rich atmosphere to modify our means of communication. Telepathy requires mana expenditure, while speaking does not."

"Fair enough," I concede.

I return my attention to the cube. After passing through its bio-barrier, I enter a ten-mile-long tunnel. A shiny, gold-plated interior greets me, with a surprisingly bright radiance emanating from seemingly nowhere. The nearer I draw to the end of the tunnel, the brighter the light becomes.

"Incredible," Raphael murmurs. He gazes at the four golden walls encompassing us with a look of awe. "This artifact possesses the same divine core Uzziel and I used to create Heaven's Light. That explains its self-sustaining nature."

"The similarities are uncanny," I remark.

Once we arrive at the end of the tunnel, we pass through a second bio-barrier and reach the artifact's interior, only to gasp in shock.

Before us, a vast, green-colored void stretches out, seemingly to infinity. The walls of the artifact disappear into nothingness. No matter where I look, I can't make out the edges of the superstructure. The very air around me hums with life energy.

I continue floating forward, while my eyes flick toward several specks in the distance. Upon enhancing my vision, I zoom in on them, revealing dozens of moon-sized metal spheres, cubes, and all manner of other-sided shapes hovering in the air, soundlessly. Each slowly spins and pulses, discharging small bursts of mana toward the others nearby.

What boggles my mind most is the sheer distance between the gigantic, three-dimensional shapes. Despite the artifact's outward manifestation making it appear only a few factors larger than Earth, its inner dimensions reveal a compressed space several times larger still. The artifact's interior might even be bigger than Jupiter or Saturn.

As I flick my eyes from left to right, I notice a series of blinking red lights several miles away. They float around with intentional wariness, keeping their distance from me. Their movements seem to be both cautious and curious at the same time. I raise my hands in what I hope is the universal sign for 'I come in peace,' and make my way toward them. Even with my unhurried speed, the lights quickly retreat, pulling away as if terrified of my presence. They vanish into the green mist, leaving me in their dust.

"Fascinating," Raphael murmurs.

"Do you know what those little lights were?" I ask.

"Nay. The more I see of this cube's construction, the more mystified I become. I sense my sister's life-force more strongly than ever before, yet I recognize nothing we've seen so far. Everything here only resembles her craftsmanship in the vaguest of ways. It is as if the Camael I knew was a different sister from the one who crafted this relic."

"Perhaps she didn't build it," Phoebe offers. "Was Camael the only angel capable of crafting artifacts?"

"Surprisingly, yes," Raphael says. "Many attempted to learn my sister's crafting techniques, but few could consider themselves better than amateurs in her wake."

"Maybe she had a few successful students, but kept them hidden from you," Phoebe muses.

"Aye. At this point, that theory lies well within the realm of plausibility," Raphael says.

We fall silent as I change course, once again heading toward the cube's innermost sanctum. It doesn't take long before the wall from where I entered disappears behind me into the horizon.

The air around me becomes denser and thicker as the minutes pass. I check my mana supply every so often, waiting for it to lower so I can activate another mana bead. However, to my astonishment, my mana supply remains steady and even begins to increase slightly over time.

"I don't know if I would call the stuff surrounding me an 'atmosphere' or not, but whatever it is, it's perfectly compatible with my body's energy. Raphael, what if the angels had access to this artifact during the Ancient Era? Would you have been able to sustain yourselves without relying on demonic and human mana?"

Raphael frowns. "Most likely not. Much like when Camael transferred Excalibur's energy to Gabriel, only we Archangels could have absorbed this cube's mana into ourselves. Lowborn purebloods would suffer immeasurably and die a slow, painful death if they attempted such a thing."

"Why?" Phoebe asks.

Raphael turns to look at my wife. "Because, young one. Archangels possess bodies far hardier and much more virile in comparison to the lower-ranked of our kind. Perhaps Catherine and the Valkyries may have survived the energy transfer, but I guarantee they'd suffer for years afterward before the energy finally assimilated into their cores."

I roll my eyes. "Right. And all it took for you to achieve your powerful forms was the wanton slaughter of god-knows-how-many other angels."

Raphael lowers his eyes.

"I am not proud of my past."

"Great. As long as you regret your actions, that should redeem the many evils you've committed. I'm sure your fallen siblings would pat you on the back and forgive you, so long as you're sorry."

An awkward silence hangs in the air. Raphael turns away from Phoebe and rubs his knees, unable to look her in the eyes. My mind-wife, meanwhile, leans back in the park bench and dips her toes in the nearby fountain.

Twenty minutes pass.

As I travel further into the cube's interior, many strange phenomena start to appear. I zip past a cloud of blue gas on my left. It hums and crackles with electrical energy, occasionally sending bolts of lightning firing off in random directions. Thanks to the barrier surrounding me, the thunderous shockwaves which immediately follow don't affect me in the slightest.

Not long after, I pass four spheres, each one the size of a metropolitan city, such as New York or Los Angeles. The gigantic orbs fire a bolt of red-colored mana around, bouncing it between each of their bodies. The energy always ricochets between each of the spheres, seemingly trapped in an endless loop from which it can never escape.

Suddenly, a flat, twenty-pointed metal star zips toward me. Standing over a thousand feet tall, the object rushes at me like a knight attempting to protect a princess.

[HMM HMM BRRM! BRRM BMM HMM!]

A telepathic message strikes my brain, startling me and causing my heart to race. However, whatever the giant star is trying to say, I can't tell. It transmits into my mind as a series of humming noises, some of them deep, others high-pitched.

"Augh! What the hell is this?!" I yell.

Before Raphael can reply, the gigantic star travels even closer. At its center, a glowing red orb pulses with light, reminding me of an eye.

[HMM HMM HMM! BRRM BRRM BMM!!]

The star's 'voice' turns threatening, acting as if it's about to attack.

I react by using my telepathy to reply. [I can't understand you! Please, calm-]

BOOM!

The star's red iris fires a blast of mana at me. It smashes against my shield with thunderous force, launching me away at thirty times the speed of sound. I spin helplessly through the void, but the star begins chasing me, maintaining its angered voice.

[BRRM BRRM HMM!! HMM HMM BMM!!]

"Raphael! What the fuck is this thing?! Help me out! Stabilize! Reinforce!"

I bring my spinning to a sudden stop, all while thanking my stars that my protective barrier negates 99% of the inertial force put on my body. I also empower my shield, strengthening it against the stars enraged attacks.

BOOM! BOOM!

Once again, the star fires two blasts of energy attacks at me, sending me careening helplessly into the void. With a start, I realize it's launched me back toward the cloud of blue gas, where the lightning storms continue to rage.

"Jason! I recognize that device!" Raphael yells. "'Tis an autonomous implement Camael once produced en-masse! Against ancient foes from the Primordial Era, 'twas little more than an annoyance, but against someone as weak as thee, it will prove most deadly!"

"No fucking shit!" I bark. "Can I stop it? Auuuugh!"

My body flies into the cloud of lightning, making my nerves seize up as trillions of volts of electricity strike my reinforced shielding. Even with my protective magic capable of withstanding the dangers of space, I can't block all of the lightning's power!

"Aaargh! Help! Help me!!"

My mind loses focus. I can't even think of words to say that might negate the electricity. My Wordsmithing proves useless, as the lightning turns my thoughts into a chaotic, disordered mess.

"-bzzat- the- red- angel- mlksh-"

Raphael says something to me, but I can't process his words. They come out a jumbled mess, utterly incomprehensible to my muddled thoughts.

"Aaaah!! Aaahhhhh!!"

My vision darkens. Soon, I begin to fall unconscious.

No... I can't fall asleep... I'll die here if I don't... don't stay awake...

Suddenly, my thoughts clear up!

The electrical pain continues to surge through my body, but with a start, I awaken from my stupor to find my brain working perfectly.

"Nullify! Invulnerable! Disperse!"

With three words, I scatter the electricity to the furthest reaches of space and transform myself into an invincible juggernaut.

Two seconds later, the automated metal-star flies at me again, its body dominating mine with its shadow.

[BRRT! BRRT! HMM!]

However, when it fires another three shots of mana at me, they bounce off my shield harmlessly, ricocheting elsewhere into the cube's biosphere.

The star pauses. It pulls back slightly and speaks again, confusion in its tone.

[HMM? HMM! BRRT BRRT HMM?]

Before I can reply, it instantly reverses course and flies away, leaving me all by myself.

"Hey! Where are you going? Coward!"

I smirk, feeling a slight hint of self-satisfaction at how I single-handedly scared away something so much bigger and mightier than me.

However, as I turn my gaze inward, a wave of shock passes through my mind.

My mind-wife stands with her arms raised above her head. Her eyes glow pure white, while her body trembles violently. Sweat drips down her forehead. Upon noticing my inward gaze, she lowers her arms, causing her eyes to lose their luminosity.

"Oh... thank god... you've..."

Phoebe doesn't finish her sentence. She falls forward and collapses to the ground, her body drained of all its energy.

"Phoebe?! What happened? What's going on? Heal!"

I send a wave of healing energy to my mind-wife, but to my surprise, it does nothing for her physical condition. A moment later, Raphael jumps to her side, a look of concern on his face. Michael and Gabriel appear behind him, summoned from their rings.

"Damn," Raphael mutters. "Damn, thou art an unlucky bastard, Wordsmith."

"What's wrong with Phoebe?" I ask. "Is she... is she dead?!"

"Nay. When thy body entered the cloud of energized miasma, Phoebe leaped into action. She attempted to protect thy brain from the worst of the electrical energy. In doing so, she..."

Raphael falls silent. Michael takes a step forward, an ugly expression on his face.

"Tch. How unfortunate for this mortal's soul. It appears she has unified ten percent of her mind with thine. It protected thee from the worst of the damage, but in exchange, she suffered a blow most heinous."

"Oh, my god," I whisper. "Can I heal her? Is she going to die?"

"As long as thou liveth, so, too, shall Phoebe," Raphael replies. "However, now, any attempt to free her from thy Mind Realm is sure to fail, at least so long as thou lacketh Solomon's Crown. Thy ability to heal brains is sub-par at best. Luckily, once Phoebe awakens, she should not suffer any lingering after-effects."

"What will happen if... if Phoebe unifies her mind even more with mine?" I ask.

Raphael's tone turns grave. "Let us pray such a fate never befalls the both of thee."

* * *

Minutes later, I resume my course toward the center of the cube. This time, my heart skips a beat as six more of the twenty-sided metal stars float toward me. However, they keep their distance and merely hum angrily at me, taking care not to draw too close. For some reason, they appear to be terrified of me, though, in retrospect, all I managed to do was deflect a few of one star's attacks. I didn't even get to attack it or deal any damage.

"As expected," Raphael mutters. "Without Camael's guiding hand, these constructs possess limited intelligence. They act like a human child. When faced with an inferior life-form, they will attack it relentlessly. However, if their attacks don't harm their enemy, they will retreat with their tails tucked between their legs."

A chuckle escapes my throat. "Pft. So, that makes them big, stupid space-bullies. I scared them by standing up for myself."

"Indeed. Ah, look up ahead," Raphael says. "We've almost arrived."

I continue flying forward. Eventually, the green haze begins to shift its color, morphing into a shade of light pink. The dense fog surrounding me dissipates to a fraction of its former density, revealing a massive, eight-sided diamond floating in the void.

I slow to a stop and stare at the diamond, noting its faded grey coloration.

The gigantic shape slowly spins on its axis, as if resting atop a spiraling table. Even as far away as I am now, I can tell it must be the size of Luna, Earth's moon. After gazing at it for a few minutes, I notice that one of the sides spinning to face me is not grey like the others, but red. While the other seven resemble a rainbow drained of its color, the eighth side pulses with energy. Once it spins enough to face me directly, it begins glowing even brighter than before.

Suddenly, a tiny ball of light fires out of the diamond's red-colored surface! The bloody sphere shoots straight up into the sky, circles twice, then swoops at me with frightening speed!

"Shield! Reinforce!" I bellow, not wanting to take a chance.

Right before the bright-red sphere strikes me, it veers away at the last second, choosing instead to orbit me at hundreds of miles per hour.

Over and over, the sphere gyrates around me, as if examining me from head to toe.

The six stars behind me hover a little closer, seemingly wanting to protect the light-orb. Their movements appear antsy, making it appear as if they fear that the orb has decided to show interest in me.

Suddenly, the orb screeches to a stop, not even ten feet from my face. It hovers in midair, emitting periodic pulses of light to probe me.

[Harru? Whu esa irrui?]

A dainty, female voice appears in my mind. The orb slowly levitates to my right, as if trying to see my face from a different angle.

[Du irrui rfaec? Asa irrui llsaialn?]

I shake my head. [Sorry, but I don't understand what you're saying.]

The orb pauses.

[This language, yours?]

In perfect English, the orb sends me a message, giving my heart yet another shock.

[Yes,] I reply. [This is my language. What are you? Who are you?]

Several seconds pass. The orb begins bouncing up and down, excited to hear my voice.

[A friend! He speaks the Dullard! Yay!]

I raise an eyebrow. The... dullard? Is this thing calling me stupid?

I turn my gaze inward, only to see Raphael leaning heavily on his staff. A look of incomprehension appears in the eldest Archangel's eyes, as he shakes his head from side to side.

"No, no, no. 'Tis impossible! Camael told me she lost that artifact to the void!"

"Raphael," I say. "Do you know what this thing... this girl is?"

"Of course!" Raphael barks. "How could I not?! 'Tis none other than Camael's lost relic, a creation even mightier than Excalibur!"

Raphael continues. "This orb... it is none other than the Phoenix! Camael's first artifact, molded by the stellar flames, forged in the fires of creation, shaped in the Creator's eye! How could I not recognize such a priceless relic?!"

"The Phoenix?" I ask. "Didn't Catherine wield part of the Phoenix?"

Raphael nods excitedly. "Yes, yes! Before Camael lost it, she implanted a sliver of the Phoenix inside Catherine's soul! Never mind that, quickly! Verify this artifact is the very same one!"

I nod.

Turning my attention to the orb, I send it a telepathic message.

[Hey, if you don't mind me asking... who are you?]

The orb slows its bouncing. It pauses for a moment, as if contemplating my question.

[Hmm. Don't know!]

[What do you mean?] I ask. [Are you the Phoenix?]

The orb resumes its bounciness as it begins to circle me once again.

[Don't know! Let's play!]

I shrug helplessly, then glance inward at Raphael.

"The orb doesn't know if it's the Phoenix or not."

Raphael smiles.

"Heh, heh, heh. Is that so? In that case, there can be no doubt. The Phoenix must have died and rebirthed at some point in the past. It has lost all its memories."

"This, young Hero, is most certainly my sister's mightiest, and most precious, long-lost artifact. Today, we will obtain something of tremendous value."

Part 219: The Cube's Secret

Raphael stands up and begins to pace back and forth. He nods his head every few seconds as if to confirm his suspicions.

"Hmm. Hmm, yes. Jason, since the Phoenix has not attacked, that must mean it has recognized thee as a friend. Doubtless, it must have acknowledged the holy energy within thy body. Try to extract some information from it. It may have lost its memories from before its death, but I doubt it lacks all of its recollections entirely."

I nod. "Alright."

Because of the bubble shield protecting my body, the Phoenix can't hear my words, nor can I hear any sound outside my barrier. However, we can still speak via telepathy.

[Phoenix,] I say, [can you tell me a little about yourself? About this cube? What is your purpose? What are you doing here?]

The Phoenix's orb continues bobbing up and down playfully, but it slows its speed for a few moments to contemplate my questions.

It replies in a girly, sing-song voice. [Hmm. Don't know! I've been all alone for soooo long, though! I'm bored! Why don't we play the chasing game? I'll chase you, and then you chase me! Teehee!]

The Phoenix hovers away from me slowly, as if daring me to follow it. However, I don't move a muscle.

[I don't mind playing with you, but I need some answers first. Do you know Archangel Camael? Maybe Raphael, her brother?]

[Nope!] The Phoenix replies. [Don't know them! Are they friends of yours? Do they like to play games?]

I shake my head. [No. I doubt they do.]

Raphael frowns. "Hmm. The Phoenix knowns neither Camael nor me. Its memories disappear whenever it dies; therefore, I must surmise it hasn't spoken to either of us since it last perished. That will make trading information much more difficult."

"In what way?" I ask.

Raphael expression darkens. "The last time I saw the Phoenix was before Camael lost it, during the height of the Dragon Wars. She told me it detonated in a terrific flash of light, and that she couldn't locate its ashes."

"Was she lying?"

"I haven't the faintest clue," Raphael says, "but that is a distinct possibility."

I rub my chin. "The Dragon Wars came before the Titan Wars, and before your people colonized Earth. That was a very, very long time ago."

The Archangel nods. "Indeed. Ask the Phoenix how much time has passed since its rebirth."

Following Raphael's advice, I send a telepathic message to the artifact. [Hey, uh, Phoenix? Can you tell me how long it's been since you revived?]

The Phoenix gives an immediate reply. [Of course! It's been about seventeen eons! Now, can we pleeeeease play the chasing game?]

I frown. "Raphael. How much time does seventeen eons equate to?"

"I cannot give a well-defined answer," Raphael replies. "Eons are an angelic length of time, with neither a strict beginning nor an end. They can range anywhere from one to fifty million years."

I raise an eyebrow. "So... anywhere from 17 million to 850 million years. I don't want to sound like a dick, but that's a pretty goddamned huge gap."

"Naturally," Raphael replies. "This is why we often sub-divided eons into eras, epochs, and ages. However, all of those units of time came about as a way of linking major events from our history chronologically. 'Tis unlikely the Phoenix would know the results of the Dragon Wars, Titan Wars, and so on."

"I agree."

After listening to more of Raphael's advice, I return my attention to the Phoenix.

[I'm sorry to keep asking you questions, little one. However, before we can play together, I need to find out why you've ended up here, so close to the demon's homeworld. Do you control the cube? Can you alter its movements?]

The Phoenix finally stops bouncing around. It floats over to me slowly, as if heaving a sigh. [Ugh... you're so boring! All you do is ask dumb questions! Who cares about that silly stuff? Don't you understand how bored I am? I'm so lonely... I've been all by myself since I woke up. I'm stuck here, where I can't leave. Why won't you play with me? Is it because I'm ugly...?]

[You're stuck here?] I ask. [Does that mean you don't control the cube?]

The Phoenix's orb slowly spins on its axis. [What cube?]

"Ah, so the Phoenix knows not of its prison," Raphael mutters. "That must mean it cannot leave."

I nod. [Phoenix, right now, you reside within a gigantic cube, one which is as big as some of the largest worlds I've ever seen. I suspect the great Archangel, Camael, constructed it. However, I don't know why she did. If you're bored and lonely, then perhaps you can help me figure out why she trapped you here. Maybe I can free you and let you leave this place.]

My words send a spark of electricity through the glowing red orb's aura. [Really?! You can help me leave?! Oh, thank you, thank you, thank you!! I don't want to live here! I hate being alone!]

The Phoenix resumes its merry bouncing, doubling its previous speed. [Yay! Yay! I can't wait to leave! I love my new friend! He's so nice to me!]

For some reason, hearing the Phoenix's cries of joy makes me inexorably depressed. The thought of this carefree, childlike entity suffering in loneliness for tens of millions of years makes me want to take her in and give her a big hug. I know the Phoenix is nothing but a genderless artifact, but the mere fact that it possesses sentience and reminds me of my daughter is enough to trigger my feelings of fatherly love.

However, we can't yet leave. My work here is far from done.

After calming the Phoenix down, I float nearer to the eight-sided diamond from which it emerged. The Phoenix follows along behind me while bobbing up and down curiously.

[Hey! Friend! What are you doing? Are you looking for something?]

I shrug. [Not particularly. I'm just trying to see if there's anything important happening with this big diamond-thing.]

[Mhm! Oh, yes. That's the Container! The Container is very mean. I hate it. It never lets me do anything fun!]

"The Container, huh..."

I float toward the Container, observing it with my eyes. As it spins around, the bright-red coloration of the Phoenix's side catches my eye. Why does only that side stand out compared to the others?

[Phoenix. The Container has eight sides, but seven of them don't have any colors, while yours does. Why is that?]

The Phoenix falls silent for a moment.

[Hmm. I don't know... I think I used to have friends there, but they're all gone now. I don't remember them at all.]

My heart skips a beat. [Other friends? Do you mean there were other artifacts, like yourself?]

[I...]

The Phoenix pauses.

[I don't know! Not a clue! Teehee!]

As I draw closer to the cube, I shoot a glance backward to see the six 20-sided metal stars lingering some distance behind me. However, they draw closer than before and twitch angrily, as if enraged that I have the audacity to talk to the Phoenix without their permission.

[Phoenix, what are those stars? Are they friends of yours?]

The glowing red artifact spins in a circle. [Nope! Those are just some of the the Ten Annoying Dummies! They talk like babies. I don't like them, not one bit. If I try to leave, they poke me until I cry. They're not nice at all.]

I make a mental note about how there are four stars I haven't seen yet. [Right. Well, I'll keep my distance, for now. When you say they 'poke you,' what do you mean?]

The Phoenix huffs in annoyance. [Don't even get me started! Those big jerks always make sure I have to stay near the Container! Even if I want to leave, I can't! My head starts feeling dizzy, and then they poke me with their red pokey-sticks, and I wake up in the Container again! Just looking at them makes me so, super-duper angry!!]

Raphael nods. "I see. I know not the reason Camael crafted this cube, but it seems the Container must be its innermost core. If the Phoenix leaves, the superstructure will lose its power source. Undoubtedly, Camael placed the Sentry Stars here to ensure the device stayed operational indefinitely."

An ugly scowl passes over my face. "You're probably right, but I can't help but resent her for subjecting the Phoenix to such terrible, psychological torture. She locked the artifact up all by itself, where it became so lonely-"

"Nay," Raphael says, interrupting me. "The Phoenix was not originally by itself. As thou didst surmise, there were once eight different artifacts embedded within the Container. However, for some reason, all of them except for the Phoenix have disappeared. This mystery grows ever more dire and worrisome by the second."

The alarm in Raphael's voice makes me uneasy. "Yeah? Why the doom and gloom, old man? What's on your mind?"

Raphael scowls. "Jason. At this point, I can do little more than speculate. However, if my suspicions prove true, then the reason for this cube's existence, and the reason Camael never informed me of its whereabouts or functions reveal a most dreadful reality."

Raphael continues. "For Camael to lie to me, for her to hide her mightiest artifact along with seven others inside such a powerful super-artifact... that can only mean she didn't believe I could keep its existence a secret. Why, then, would she think such a thing?"

"I don't know," I reply. "Why?"

"I know not the answer, either," Raphael murmurs. His voice trembles. "However, now I believe that the other artifacts were either destroyed or stolen."

"That's a reasonable assumption," I mutter. "Maybe I can use my Wordsmithing to find out what happened."

Raphael glances at my mind-wife. "Between stealing or destroying the artifacts, which path dost thou believeth the most likely?"

"Destroying," Phoebe replies emphatically. "If someone stole the other seven artifacts, it seems unlikely they would leave the Phoenix behind, especially given how you've described it as Camael's mightiest artifact. However, if someone or something destroyed the other seven artifacts, then it explains why the Phoenix remained behind."

"Aye," Raphael says, forcing a smile. "I am gladdened that thou possesseth the same thoughts as me. Something must have attacked the cube and destroyed all eight artifacts. Thankfully, due to its self-regenerative capabilities, the Phoenix rebirthed after its destruction."

A shiver goes down my back. "Even without Camael wielding it, surely the Phoenix alone should have been stupidly powerful, right? Not to mention the other seven artifacts. What being would possess enough power to destroy all eight of them?"

A deep, dark gloom falls over Raphael's eyes.

"Something horrendously powerful. A monster from the Primordial Era."

As I fly closer to the cube, the Phoenix's movements become noticeably less animated. It hovers close to me, almost as if seeking refuge from the bogeyman.

[I don't like the Container,] The Phoenix whimpers. [I hope you can save me, friend. The Container is mean to me. The Ten Annoying Dummies hurt me. I don't want to live here anymore.]

I reach my hand out and try to pat the Phoenix comfortingly, only for my hand to pass through its spirit-like body. [Don't worry. I'm here for you now. If I can help you, I will. You might not know this, but I'm a pretty strong guy. I can fight off monsters with one hand tied behind my back!]

The Phoenix droops unhappily. [I hope so.]

The nearer I draw, the more an invisible pressure pushes against my soul. Even with my bubble-shield protecting me, an unsettling sensation of despair slowly creeps into the back of my mind. The idea that someone might be watching me makes me shudder involuntarily.

"Nullify! Shield!"

With two words, I reinforce my defenses and try to push away the strangely ominous, evil presence tickling my brain. However, my efforts only seem to strengthen it.

Eventually, I arrive at the Container's surface, right atop the Phoenix's red-colored side. At its center rests a gigantic ruby, more than thirty times my body's size.

"The Phoenix's core!" Raphael gasps. "Even after all these eons, 'tis fully intact! What luck we have."

I nod at him, but pause for a moment to evaluate the Container's evil aura.

"Inspect. Sense."

My mind sharpens, allowing me to pierce the Container's shell with my senses. Its mana hums in my mind as I rapidly identify its exact origins.

Raphael receives the same information as me over my mind-link. His jovial attitude instantly vanishes, replaced instead with a look of horror.

"By the Creator! It all makes sense, now! Wordsmith, thy intuition was correct. This cube is a prison, crafted to contain an unspeakable evil! A monstrous being!"

Raphael balls his hands into fists.

"Creator, guide me! How could I be so blind?! This mana signature is one I've felt countless times! Not Camael, nor her artifacts, but that of a damned, filthy, wretched... dragon!"

Phoebe nearly jumps out of her skin. "A dragon?!"

"Aye!" Raphael roars. "And not just any dragon, but one possessing unspeakable cosmic power! What we now sense is not the dragon itself, but the mere remnants of its former might! It must have escaped the Container which once held it prisoner, and fled, leaving the Phoenix behind! All the pieces fit together! Now I know the answer to the mystery plaguing my mind!"

I nod along to Raphael's words, feeling a sense of awe and fear.

"A dragon. I see. But how long ago did it leave? And where did it go?"

Part 220: The Phoenix's Power

[Tadaa! This is my sparkly gem-thing!] The Phoenix chirps. Camael's artifact guides me to land on the Container's surface, where I arrive before a 100-foot in diameter glowing red orb embedded in the diamond's exterior. I half-expect it to blind me with its shining brilliance, but instead, its brightness appears faded and dull, as if it has lost much of its power over the eons.

"Inspect. Diagram."

With two words of power, I send my mana deep inside the moon-sized, eight-sided diamond, allowing me to scope out its insides. A three-dimensional schematic appears in my mind's eye while transmitting to my Mind Realm's residents as well.

Phoebe and Raphael both close their eyes for a few minutes to evaluate the Container's structure.

"It's hollow," Phoebe says. "and empty, too."

"Aye," Raphael adds. "Whatever monster once lurked within the Container, it has long since escaped."

"And you think it was a dragon?" I ask.

"Think? Nay, Jason. I know so. The draconic mana lingering in this area is so overpowering that, were I to stand there in the flesh, I might faint from mana suppression. The beast once locked within the Container was no ordinary monster, but a malevolent force of evil — a dark dragon."

Raphael continues. "When viewing Solomon's visions, it did not escape my notice that Leviathan, the dragon who empowered the demons, possessed a nearly identical aura. Indeed, judging by his conversation with my brother, Samael, 'twould seem that the Archangel of Change helped Leviathan escape his prison and flee to Earth."

"Are you saying Leviathan was the dragon Camael trapped inside the Container?"

"Aye," Raphael replies. "I cannot say with absolute certainty, but the pieces fit together nicely. Camael must have ensnared the dark dragon during the middle of the Dragon Wars. After we defeated Jörmungandr, the Mother of All Dragons, her mana would have traveled to Leviathan, empowering him within this prison. Once he escaped, perhaps with Samael's assistance, my brother would have suppressed his aura and hid him on Earth. That is why, even while residing on the same planet, my people never once sensed the dark dragon's aura."

"Because of Samael's magic," I say, finishing Raphael's thoughts.

"Correct."

I walk forward to survey the Phoenix's orb from a closer distance. The divine artifact floats along behind me, bobbing along as it observes my movements.

[Can you save me?] The Phoenix asks. [Or am I stuck here?]

[I'm not sure,] I reply. [Your orb is buried pretty deep inside the Container. There are millions of magical circuits interlinked with its structure. Untangling all of them without hurting you will take time.]

"Time isn't a luxury we have," Phoebe says. "We need to get back to the Core. By now, Kar has probably raised Tarus II's defenses, but if Hope hasn't returned yet, humanity will need you."

I smile. "Don't underestimate our species, Phoebe. Humans are strong and resilient. We've survived under 100,000 years of oppression capable of breaking the minds of weaker beings. I installed many defensive weapons to protect our home. Even if the demons attack immediately and it takes us an extra day or two to return, our people will not fall."

"What about Daisy?" Phoebe asks. "What about my original body? My other half? Are you willing to risk their lives on your intuition?"

I pause for a moment to stare at the ground.

"...No. When you put it that way, I suddenly realize I can't dilly-dally. I'll double my speed."

I walk over and step on the Phoenix's orb. The moment my boots touch its surface, the artifact's nucleus glows a little brighter than before, as if recognizing my presence.

"Raphael. Tell me what you can about this artifact. Can I extract it with my Wordsmithing?"

The eldest Archangel heaves a sigh. "I know little regarding the inner workings of Camael's relics. However, I have witnessed similar artifacts she made in the past. The Container is, most likely, a fusion of multiple artifacts into one super-structure. Much like how the cube itself envelops the Container, the Container works with the other relics to envelop its contents."

"The dragon?"

"Aye. The very same one," Raphael replies. "My sister likely reinforced the Phoenix and its fellow artifacts with countless protective measures to solidify their bond."

"Fuck..." I mutter. "That means the bond is likely permanent. If I try to extract the Phoenix's core, I'll probably tear the poor thing to shreds."

Phoebe raises her hand. "The Phoenix can regenerate, even from death. If you tear it out, won't it come back to life?"

Raphael strokes his beard. "Possibly. However, the Phoenix will not revive immediately. It will take centuries, if not millennia. Resurrecting oneself is an ability that very few beings have ever attained. There are almost always heavy costs associated with its power."

"Right. So, even if I managed to rip the Phoenix out and it did come back, I'd never get to use it for myself. Also, the current Phoenix's personality would disappear. I would kill it."

Raphael nods. "Correct. And that is if we assume the Phoenix would return in perfect working order. Severing its link to the Container might tear apart its core and damage its foundation, making it lose most of its power."

I turn my head slightly to look at the bouncing red ball hovering beside me. [Phoenix. Give me a little more time. I'm still trying to solve a few problems with removing your orb.]

[Okay!] The Phoenix yells. Her basketball-sized orb flies toward me and hovers above my head to rest against my bubble-barrier. [Ding ding! It's idea time!] The Phoenix chirps, while pretending to be a lightbulb.

[Yeah, haha,] I chuckle softly. [You've got that right.]

I fly around the outside of the Container to examine its eight sides. At the center of each one sits a giant crater filled with scorched ash, revealing the remains of whatever attack the dark dragon first used to escape its prison.

However, when I reach the seventh side, opposite the Phoenix's artifact, my heart skips a beat. There, a gigantic hole reveals the opening the Container's prisoner used to escape. Massive claw marks stretch across the seventh side's surface, making it possible for me to enter the Container and see their prison's interior.

However, I don't come any closer. Instead, I levitate a safe distance away and shiver as the dark dragon's leftover aura casually streams out of the Container's center.

"Raphael, you once told me that dragons all shared their power. If two dragons roamed the cosmos, their power would end up halved, or quartered, if there were four. According to your theory, Jörmungandr died, sending the remaining energy to Leviathan. Assuming he was the final remaining dragon, why wouldn't he just... I dunno... kill all the angels?"

Raphael shakes his head wearily. "Even at the end of the Dragon Wars, when my people had expended galactic amounts of mana, we were still more than capable of battling dragons. Keep in mind that we had yet to exhaust ourselves against the Titans for another several eons. Had Leviathan attacked us at the end of the Titan Wars, or any time afterward, 'tis likely he would have crushed us with ease."

"You mean like when Satan stumbled into his den? You're lucky Leviathan didn't attack you right then and there."

Raphael's expression turns gloomy. "Aye. Had he done so, the Archdemon's attack would have seemed as feeble and frail as a child's slap."

Phoebe glances at Raphael questioningly. "What's this about an Archdemon?"

"'Tis a fearsome creature which Solomon showed to Jason via the visions from the Ancient Era," Raphael replies. "If thou wisheth, thou mayest absorb Jason's memories to witness that which Solomon showed him."

"You don't need to do that," I say. "You already saw it once. Remember when I fought Amelia? Diablo turned into the Archdemon there. He was that big, ugly monster with tentacle-legs."

Phoebe shudders. "How could I forget? I'd rather not look at it again. Spare me the details."

Raphael nods. "In any case, my people were most certainly lucky to have survived, despite such a monster living beneath a mountain not far from Heaven's Gate. I always did wonder why Earth possessed such rich life energy. Now that I've entered this accursed ring, at last, I have found some answers."

"What do you mean?" I ask.

"Dragons emit potent life energy, vaguely reminiscent of Uzziel's nature magic," Raphael replies. "When my people went searching for a world to settle, somewhere where we could set aside our differences, we discovered Earth. Already, it possessed innumerable primitive life-forms. I assumed at the time that Earth had somehow evolved life naturally. Now, I know that Leviathan's presence jumpstarted its ecosystem. Thy species oweth their lives, in part, to the dragon's life energy."

I frown. "Didn't you just say the leftover energy from Leviathan's presence in the Container alone is enough to sicken you? How in the heck can you consider such putrid essence 'life energy'?"

"That's an easy answer," Phoebe replies. "Humans require Vitamin C to keep us healthy. However, too much of it will poison us."

"Precisely," Raphael adds. "Additionally, my sister's nature energy was and is incompatible with the mana other angels required. That is why she was unable to bequeath it unto us during the final battle against the Archdemon."

"Makes sense," I reply. "Leviathan's energy must have slowly diffused into the Earth's soil over millions of years. Life evolved naturally as a result."

Raphael sits on the edge of my Mind Realm's fountain and slowly waves his hands through its water. "Aye. I can only imagine how long Leviathan lay trapped within this artifact before he eventually escaped. Assuming he broke his restraints when we killed his mother, Jörmungandr, Leviathan must have contacted Samael and hid on Earth to escape our wrath. Afterward, the Titan Wars distracted my people for another two eons, before we finally settled our differences."

"What happened to Leviathan after the War in Heaven?" I ask. "Considering how much stronger he was than your people before the War in Heaven, surely he must have been even more capable of crushing you into pulp afterward when fewer than 10,000 angels remained."

Raphael falls silent.

The Archangel of Wisdom knots his forehead together. He glances at Michael and Gabriel, both of whom casually lean against a nearby tree, but they both shrug off his gaze.

"I... I know not the answer to that question," Raphael mutters. "After the War in Heaven... hmm. Thy line of thought fills me with uncertainty, young Hero. I doubt anyone could have slain the almighty dragon, given its status as an apex predator. Even if the Volgrim think themselves mighty and unstoppable, before the power of a Primordial Era monster, their armies would fall to pieces. Destroying Earth might have inconvenienced Leviathan, at most."

With a groan, I rub my hands against my face. "Wonderful. There's a whole mystery involving a stupidly overpowered dragon gone missing, and I don't have the time to investigate it."

"Jason," Phoebe says, her voice low. "During the battle against Amelia, the Black Witch... didn't Solomon once say that Leviathan's corpse made an appearance at the end of the conflict, just before he left? Mephisto somehow gained control of the dragon's body. That means it must have died at some point."

"Oh, thank god," I groan. "Thanks for reminding me, babe. I completely forgot. That's why I depend on you."

Phoebe blushes. "Oh, pish. I do what I can."

"At least we know the damned thing has died," Michael mutters. "That's one less terrifying specter for thy people to fear. Now then, Wordsmith. What of the Phoenix's core? Have thou conceived any plan to release it from this Container?"

I shake my head. "No. If I had Solomon's Crown, I could probably peel apart the Phoenix's magical arrays to release its core from the Container. However, I don't. For now, I don't have a clue how I'll get it out of here."

"Perhaps we could leave the Phoenix here for now," Phoebe suggests. "You can create a Waypoint and return for the artifact later."

I pause for a moment to mull my mind-wife's recommendation.

As I do, I glance at the Phoenix's bobbing form, as it hovers above my head, waiting expectantly for its imminent rescue.

"No. This poor thing has stayed here for god knows how long. I won't leave it alone to suffer all by itself. Besides, the Phoenix is a Primordial Era artifact. If I rescue it, my battle power will explode. I'll probably be able to compete with Demon Emperors."

Raphael scoffs. "Pah! Thy ambitions are far too limited, Jason. The Phoenix possesses enough latent energy to level worlds, let alone defeat a few pathetic, sniveling Demon Emperors! The fact it has survived without a wielder for several eons is proof enough of that fact!"

Before I can reply, Gabriel pulls away from the tree and shakes his head.

"No, brother. Thy words contain errors. The Phoenix is indeed a powerful being, but its might has plummeted sharply. Did thou fail to witness its faded luster when Jason stood upon its surface? At best, it may still possess a fraction of its Primordial power. Jason will gain a substantial boost by adding it to his arsenal, but no longer will it offer him the same capabilities as it did in the Dragon Wars."

I sigh. "Either way, I need to get the Phoenix's artifact out of here. I can't leave it hovering so close to the demon's homeworld, and I can't stand the thought of leaving it all by itself. Come on, guys! Work with me. How can I rescue the Phoenix? I'll listen to any suggestions."

What follows is a short, but heated discussion.

Raphael uses his minimal knowledge of Camael's artifacts to theorize several methods for extracting the Phoenix's core. However, upon inspection, all of them would result in severe damage to the artifact, so I don't attempt them.

Phoebe suggests a few alternatives, including seizing control of the cube itself and using it like a mobile battlestation.

"Think about it, Jason," Phoebe says. "This cube is, itself, an artifact. Taking the Phoenix is fine and dandy, but the amount of life energy here is just as invaluable. At some point, we may need to move humanity off Tarus II. You could turn the inside of this cube into a hub world for our people. It's many times bigger than Tarus II, and by using its life energy, you could turn it into a super-structure of your own design. It's not like you need it to contain Leviathan anymore, so why not repurpose it into something more useful?"

Raphael smiles. "That is an excellent suggestion, Phoebe. However, Jason hasn't much time to dawdle here. Thy plan would make more sense as a long-term project. Jason could teleport the cube to Tarus II's system and slowly improve it there."

"Exactly," I say. "In the meantime, I can't leave the Phoenix here while I work on that project. Raphael, I have another idea, but I'm not sure of its viability."

I pause for emphasis.

"A failed extraction could damage the Phoenix's foundation, while a successful one is still likely to destroy it and make it useless to me for, potentially, millennia. In that case, why not simply absorb all of the Phoenix's power into my body?"

Raphael falls silent.

Several minutes pass. The old man lowers his gaze to hem and haw as he considers my proposal.

"Hrm. Thy proposal is not far-fetched. Already, thou hath demonstrated a remarkable tolerance for allowing foreign entities into thy body, soul, and Mind Realm. However, the Phoenix's power may overwhelm thee. Even if its might is a fraction of its former self, I must assume thy pitiful mortal body cannot contain it without suffering severe backlash."

"It's not like I'm super weak or anything," I counter. "I could put the Phoenix inside of a new container, as I did with my mana beads."

Gabriel raises his hand. "Using a proxy to contain the Phoenix's power may work. However, the relic's magic will fall apart without thy body to contain it. Earlier, I considered suggesting a secondary orb to contain the Phoenix's power. However, extracting its soul from its artifact would traumatize the Phoenix's soul, causing irreparable damage. If thou cannot safely extract its original vessel, then using thy body as a proxy may be thy best bet."

"Indeed," Michael adds. "On many occasions, I witnessed Camael's craftsmanship as she smelted divine artifacts. Their souls are quite different from the souls of sentient beings. However, the Wordsmith's adaptability to other souls is unprecedented. I believe he might pull it off."

"This is the first time I've heard that Camael's divine artifacts had souls of their own," I reply. "I guess it makes sense, though. Mjölnir and Excalibur both seemed to possess animal-like instincts during the War in Heaven. Anyway, if you guys think I should extract the Phoenix's essence, I can give it a try."

"I do not believe that thou should do such a thing," Raphael says, hastily correcting me. "...However, since we lack Solomon's Crown, this may be the fastest method to achieve thy goals. As thou hath repeated on several occasions, our time is limited."

I nod. "Yeah. That, it is."

I hover away from the giant, gaping hole in the Container and quickly return to the Phoenix's red-colored side of the planet-sized diamond.

[Hey, Phoenix. I finally came up with an idea to save you. However, it has some inherent risks, so I wanted to run my idea past you before-]

[Yes, yes! Do it, please!] The Phoenix cries, her voice shaking with excitement. [I don't wanna be stuck here anymore! Help me leave here, and I'll do anything you say! Please!]

[No, it's not that simple,] I say, as I reach her side of the Container. [I might be able to absorb your soul and power into my body. However, if I do that, it could hurt you pretty badly. It could hurt me, too. I don't know what will happen. I plan to create a miniaturized version of your orb inside my body, then seal your power inside of it, while anchoring your soul to my Mind Realm. However, if anything goes wrong... you could die, Phoenix. You could die.]

I let my warning hang in the air, but the Phoenix doesn't hesitate for more than a second before replying.

[I don't care! If I die, I'll just come back! Don't you get it, friend? I hate living here! I hate everything! Every day, I want to fly free and escape this horrible, awful, no-good place... but I can't! I'm stuck here! No matter how much I cried, and no matter how much I pleaded, I didn't have anybody to talk to! I only had the Big Stupid Idiots, and they did nothing but hurt me! If the only thing you can do is kill me, then do it! Please!]

The Phoenix's voice shakes with raw, previously untapped emotion. [Kill me or save me! I don't care! If I can't live free, then I would rather not live at all! Please, friend! You have to do something! If you leave me here by myself, I'll... I'll... I don't know what I'll do, but I know it'll hurt a million times worse than it did before you came!]

So much anguish strangles the Phoenix's words that my heart begins to ache for the poor artifact. With its female voice, I can't help but imagine Phoebe or Daisy pouring their feelings out to me, begging me to free them from some unimaginable pain.

[...Alright,] I whisper. [I'll help you, Phoenix. I won't let you suffer like this. No matter what, I won't leave here without you.]

[Please. Please...] The Phoenix whimpers. I can almost hear it crying as it pleads for my help. [Just don't leave me here...]

With the Phoenix's tear-filled voice pushing me along, I accelerate my speed and arrive at its orb within seconds. When I land atop it, I quickly speak multiple words of power.

"Inspect. Visualize. Diagram."

A 3D image appears in my Mind Realm, visualizing the Phoenix's artifact. Its composition, materials, and countless other details appear in my mind, allowing Phoebe to manipulate its holographic image with her hands and inspect it from every angle.

"Good lord," Phoebe gasps. "This artifact... it's so complex! How could Camael create something like this? It makes supercomputers appear like children's toys."

Raphael starts to open his mouth, but Phoebe continues, interrupting him. "Ah! My god! Jason, you won't believe what I've discovered!"

"What? What?!" I ask, trying not to yell.

"The Phoenix is exactly that; a biological supercomputer! Its internal structure resembles Marie's laboratory! Don't you remember? Her AI, Umi, possessed thousands of biological components! While the designs differ on the specifics, their general appearances are remarkably similar."

"What does that mean?" I ask.

Phoebe clenches her jaw. "It must mean that, at some point, Marie used Camael's artifacts to improve the function of her supercomputer. Umi must be at least partially based on Camael's artifacts."

"Why don't I feel even a little surprised?" I ask rhetorically. "Never mind that detail. Can I duplicate the Phoenix's orb? Can I download it into an identical artifact?"

Phoebe slowly shakes her head. "I don't think so. Perhaps, if I had a hundred years I could replicate the orb's structure for you. However, we don't have the luxury of time. At best, I can create a simplified orb and use your Mind Realm as a replacement for the orb's biological components."

"Fine. Do it," I say. "Send me the specifications when you finish."

Phoebe smiles. "I'll only need five minutes, love."

Immediately, my wife's fingers transform into a blur as she begins clicking and clacking on a nearby computer console. She peels back several of the orb's layers and manipulates its holographic diagram with the precision of a surgeon. I watch her silently, transfixed by her prowess with technology and other concepts I can't even begin to understand.

Raphael turns to his brothers by the nearby tree and chuckles. "Hehe. This woman had only six years to absorb a fraction of Solomon's knowledge, and look at how much progress she's made. Phoebe is a prodigy, even among her species. Her brain soaks up information like a sponge. That is why humans survived the Energy Wars, while our people did not."

Michael frowns. "Hmph. I can respect the female's brains, but I fail to see how that makes her our equal."

"Nay, not our equal, but our superior," Raphael says, his voice lowering. "Had I a fraction of Phoebe's gifts, I might have seen through the lens of fate and crafted a bright future for angelkind. Sadly, I did not. The results spoke for themselves."

Raphael and the other Archangels watch as Phoebe finishes her calculations. Eventually, she forms a miniaturized version of the Phoenix's orb and opens up its hologram in my Mind Realm, allowing me to scrutinize its contents.

"This marble is the smallest I could shrink the Phoenix's vessel," Phoebe explains. "It's small enough that you could hide it anywhere in your body. However, I specifically designed it to rest within your heart. I don't know if you can borrow the Phoenix's power of resurrection, but if you can, it will provide an extra layer of protection for your most vital organ."

Raphael shakes his head. "Only those attuned with the element of fire may use the Phoenix's rebirthing capabilities. That is why Camael bequeathed a sliver of its power unto Catherine, as she was the most suited to wield the Flame of Creation."

I shrug. "If I can't use the Phoenix's power, that's fine too. I'm not looking to empower myself here, but it would be a nice side benefit. Now, enough talk. If this design is ready, then I'll get started. Phoebe?"

My mind-wife's expression turns solemn. She swallows a gulp and nods. "Yes. It's ready. Go ahead, Jason."

I exhale a breath of turbid air.

"...Alright. Let's do this. Visualize! Gather! Project! Create!"

I summon my magic into the area before me, allowing it to form into a projection of the shape Phoebe created in my Mind Realm. Without Solomon's Crown, it takes me several minutes longer than it used to, but still, I manage to create a marble sized-vessel for the Phoenix.

Once I finish, the Phoenix flies closer. [Ooh! What's that? Is that for me? It smells like me!!]

I nod. [Yes. It's your new vessel. I couldn't create a replica of your orb, so instead, I'll use this marble to contain your energy while linking your soul to mine. Are you ready?]

[Yes! Yes!! Do it, do it, doitdoitdoit!]

The Phoenix bounces twice as fast as before, revealing its intense excitement as it awaits my final step with bated breath.

"Alright. Hoo, boy. Here goes nothing."

I take a few deep breaths and brace myself for what's about to come.

"...Teleport! Gather! Absorb! Transfer! Aaaaaaaaargh!"

The moment I speak the fourth word of power, a sensation like lava drips across my skin. It pours into my body like boiling oil dropped onto a sieve, igniting my senses with agony.

"Aaaaah! Gah! Shit! Fuuuuck!"

The pain doubles, triples, and even quintuples. I drop to my knees and fall onto the Container's surface as the Phoenix's power leaves the Container and travels into the new vessel placed next to my heart.

"Aaaaaah! Burns! It burns, oh god!"

My body shivers, shudders, and shakes. I curl into the fetal position and scream incoherently. Minutes, perhaps even hours, pass.

My vision turns blood red. Somewhere, in the distance, Phoebe cries out my name. I lose all sense of reason and direction as my eyes close, perhaps for the last time in my life.

...I fall into darkness.

Part 221: An Unlikely Hero

The world of Maiura, at the Wordsmith's residence.

A woman with the appearance of someone in her late twenties sits on a hand-carved bench in a large courtyard. The dwindling sunlight hints at the arrival of night-time, as the shadows cast from nearby trees stretch and lengthen. Outside the walls of the Wordsmith's manor, terrible and fearsome beasts roar and howl at the moonless sky.

However, the woman does not flinch. She has seen scarier creatures in her lifetime. The small fry aching for her flesh barely register in her eyes as a threat.

Amelia, the Black Queen, once the most feared of all who roamed the Labyrinth, stares blankly at the gate leading out of the Wordsmith's Manor. She leans forward on the bench and rests both of her arms on her bare legs. Wearing only a black T-shirt and skirt, her appearance is far plainer and less elegant than years before, when she brought forth terror to all who opposed her.

Now, she resembles a normal human, not a person who has consumed millions of terrified souls.

Amelia scrunches her toes in the grass anxiously. After a while, she sighs.

"Day sixteen, and Jason still isn't back. What happened to him? Why hasn't he contacted me?"

The young woman glances at a pretty little red ruby ring on her finger. She rubs it three times, but it doesn't glow, even while she wishes it would.

"Jason can't be dead. He can't! He promised me he just needed to visit the Labyrinth for a few days. Oh no... what if the demons ambushed him? What if they captured him, or worse?! No... no! I can't imagine such awful things. Jason is smart. He wouldn't allow himself to get caught, especially after they almost got him last time."

A shiver runs down Amelia's back.

"...After they nearly caught him last time? Oh, devils! What if I'm right? What if Jason didn't tell anyone but me that he was heading into the Labyrinth? I can't just sit here! He needs me!"

Amelia jumps to her feet. She takes a hesitant step toward the walls of the manor, but pauses.

"Jason told me not to leave. If anyone finds out I'm alive, it will cause him problems. If he is alright and I expose my existence, I'll have hurt him for no reason. Ohhh! What's a woman supposed to do at a time like this?!"

Amelia begins pacing back and forth. She runs her fingers through her long, black hair over and over, trying to calm herself down.

"Should I leave? Should I stay? Oh, gosh! I don't know! If Jason is in dire straits, it's worth the risk! If he isn't..."

Suddenly, Amelia stops. She gazes at the waning sun and narrows her eyes. "...If he isn't in trouble, then so be it! I'd rather get him in hot water for reviving me than have him tortured at the hands of those jerkoff demons!"

Amelia turns away from the gate and heads inside. With her mind made up, she steadies her shaking hands and begins to think.

"Plan. I need a plan. I can't just barrel into the Labyrinth. With the abilities Jason Wordsmithed for me, I can't take on any demon stronger than a Baron, and even then, most Barons will push my body to its limits."

Amelia walks inside the manor. She heads up the lobby's main spiral staircase to the second floor, where she walks past more than a dozen empty rooms. Eventually, she arrives at the master bedroom.

"That's right! Jason gave me that special armor-thingy. He told me I could use it in an emergency. Well, if now doesn't count, then I don't know what does!"

Amelia trots over to a small chest on her dresser. She raps her knuckles on its sides and top eleven times, striking several spots with practiced precision. A hidden compartment pops open, revealing a circular device, one with a dinosaur's head etched into it.

"My hidden T-REX," Amelia mutters. "Jason showed me how to use it once. I hope I haven't forgotten how it works. It's been almost four years..."

The young woman plucks the T-REX out of its hidden compartment, loops its straps around her arms, and fastens them together behind her back. The device's main activator rests against her chest, directly above her bosom, where it fits snug like a glove.

"Next step..." Amelia mutters. "...I have to press the activator button three times."

She takes a few deep breaths to prepare herself, then mashes the T-REX's big red activator button on its front, thrice.

Press. Press. Press.

Suddenly, an explosion of nanites erupts from the T-REX. The nanobots swarm up and down her chest, cover her legs, and jump to her arms. A horrible sense of dread and claustrophobia makes Amelia scream in panic as the microscopic robots weave their way around her body and inevitably reach her face.

"No! Nooo!!"

Suddenly, the world goes dark. The nanites finish devouring their host and settle in together, transforming into a seamless alloy ten times tougher than steel. Just as Amelia's claustrophobia reaches its peak, the nanites engulfing her face become transparent, allowing her to see the world outside.

"CENTURION BATTLESUIT, PROTOTYPE SPECTRE MARK II: ONLINE! HELLO, PILOT CODENAMED 'SEXYGIRL69.' WHAT ARE YOUR ORDERS?"

Centurion's deep, robotic timbre rumbles in Amelia's ear, only adding to her panic. However, before she can take the suit off, Centurion releases a small burst of gas directly into her nostrils.

"ELEVATED ADRENALINE LEVELS DETECTED! PILOT SEXYGIRL69 APPEARS TO BE SUFFERING A PANIC ATTACK. RELEASING NEURAL INHIBITORS TO DECREASE THE PILOT'S AGITATION. PILOT SEXYGIRL69, ARE YOU FIT FOR DUTY? THIS EXOSUIT REQUIRES AN ANSWER WITHIN SEVEN POINT THREE SECONDS."

Amelia quickly sets on the bed. Centurion's neural inhibitors cause a drastic decrease in her claustrophobia, allowing her to catch her breath. "Y-yes. Sorry, Centurion. I got scared for a moment. I'm... I'm not used to wearing these armored suit-things."

"UNDERSTOOD. THIS PROTOTYPE BATTLESUIT IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR INFILTRATION AND ESPIONAGE. PILOT SEXYGIRL69, PLEASE SET ASIDE ANY WORRIES ABOUT THIS EXOSUIT'S DEFENSIVE CAPABILITIES. IN THE CASE OF AN EMERGENCY, THIS BATTLESUIT IS EQUIPPED WITH AN ADVANCED AUTOPILOT FEATURE. THIS SUIT WILL ENSURE YOUR SURVIVAL, NO MATTER THE COST."

Amelia nods. However, her expression turns dim. "Why... why do you keep calling me... that? My name is Amelia. Please stop calling me 'sexy girl.' It's weird."

"UNDERSTOOD. PILOT CONDENAMED 'SEXYGIRL69' WISHES TO CHANGE HER IDENTIFER CODE. IS THIS COMMAND CORRECT?"

"Yeah," Amelia says. "Just call me Amelia, okay? Don't call me 'sexy girl.' Who the heck told you to call me that, anyway?"

"IDENTIFIER CODENAME ALTERED! THIS BATTLESUIT WILL NOW REFER TO YOU AS PILOT 'AMELIA-OKAY.' REGARDING PILOT AMELIA-OKAY'S QUERY: THIS BATTLESUIT CHANGED YOUR IDENTIFIER AS PER THE ORDERS OF PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR."

Amelia rolls her eyes. "Ugh. That's so like Jason. Anyway. Centurion, Jason told me your suit has a bunch of special powers, right? Can you give me a rundown? I need to get past the guard post on Maiura and enter the Labyrinth without anyone seeing me."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACKNOWLEDGED, PILOT AMELIA-OKAY. THIS BATTLESUIT POSSESSES NUMEROUS TECHNICAL UPGRADES OVER THE PREVIOUS SPECTRE-CLASS MK. I EXOSUITS. IN ADDITION TO FIVE MINUTES OF LEVEL THREE STEALTH, THIS UNIT CAN MAINTAIN NEARLY INDEFINITE LENGTHS OF LEVEL TWO STEALTH SO LONG AS THE PILOT DOES NOT CHANGE THEIR POSITION. ADDITIONALLY..."

Centurion begins rattling off a long list of upgrades, which takes the better part of ten minutes. Amelia listens intently, only interrupting Centurion to ask for details regarding certain upgrades.

Finally, Centurion finishes its lecture, allowing Amelia to fall into deep contemplation.

"Paralysis gas dispensers. Poisoned needle launchers. This suit can even adhere to the ceiling and walls. I guess if I need to assassinate someone, the Spectre will do the trick. Still, it feels weird that Jason would create a device with such lethal weaponry. If I'm going to find him, I'll need all the advantages I can get, but this just doesn't sit right with me."

Amelia lowers her head.

"I promised Jason I wouldn't kill anymore. Centurion, please deactivate any weaponry or devices that can inflict lethal damage. If I try to use anything that can kill someone, warn me in advance."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDER ACCEPTED, PILOT AMELIA-OKAY. WARNING! DEACTIVATING LEVEL TWO AND THREE ARMAMENTS WILL DECREASE THIS SUIT'S COMBAT CAPABILITIES BY 67.3%. DO YOU STILL INTEND TO CONTINUE WITH THIS OPERATION?"

Amelia nods. "I do."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACCEPTED. USAGE OF CLASSES TWO AND THREE ARMAMENTS WILL REQUIRE A SECONDARY CONFIRMATION CODE. WHAT PASSPHRASE WOULD PILOT AMELIA-OKAY LIKE TO SET AS THE CONFIRMATION CODE?"

"Ugh. How about... I don't know... 'Betrayal?' If I kill anyone, I'll be betraying my promise to Jason. Seems fitting."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACCEPTED. THE NEW PASSPHRASE TO UNLOCK LEVEL TWO AND THREE ARMAMENTS WILL BE 'BETRAYAL.' WHAT ARE YOUR NEXT ORDERS, PILOT AMELIA-OKAY?"

Amelia gently slides off her bed and takes a step toward the door. She pauses in front of a full-body mirror, taking note of her golden-armored appearance. Her faceless helmet gives her an intimidating aura, capable of cowing the meek and frightening the strong.

"My next order? Let's start with my name. Your programming sucks, Centurion. Call me 'Amelia.' Just 'Amelia.' Alright?"

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACCEPTED. THIS EXOSUIT WILL ADDRESS YOU AS PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT. IS THIS IDENTIFICATION CODE SATISFACTORY?'

Amelia groans, long and hard. "Ughhh... fine. Let's go."

Amelia exits the manor and begins running down the main road leading toward a distant series of cliffs. The path cuts through a dense forest, with fifty-foot trees on both sides of the road. However, thanks to its relatively straight-line, the young woman is still capable of gazing into the distance, where her destination awaits.

With her Wordsmithed body, which puts her near the strength of a typical Demon Baron, coupled with her Spectre exosuit, Amelia achieves a casual running speed of sixty miles an hour. The young woman dashes past countless animals, startling them as they spot the freakish, golden-colored biped stomping through their woodland. More than a few predators shrink into the shadows, avoiding the deadly foe rushing past them. Even the 'stupid' animals know better than to punch above their weight class.

"I swear, Jason must have made this suit's AI as dumb as a rock just to annoy me," Amelia grumbles. Her feet leave deep impressions in the dirt road as she runs due to her armor's weight.

Even as she travels, Amelia's thoughts begin to wander.

I've started to feel incredibly lonely over the past few years. Jason isn't home all that often. We barely get to talk. Without Blaarjiim in my head, the world has become eerily silent. At least I can talk to this Centurion thing. It's not much for conversation, but it's better than nothing.

A strange feeling of emptiness builds in Amelia's chest as she runs. Her thoughts darken further, as ancient, repressed memories worm their way up from her subconscious.

Levvy. I miss you. Life hasn't been the same ever since you left me alone. Why did you have to die?

Tears well up in Amelia's eyes. However, she doesn't slow her pace to wipe them. Instead, she allows them to trickle down her face unhindered.

You told me you would always be there for me. You told me you were too powerful for anyone to separate us. Why did you lie to me? How could you leave me all by myself?! Didn't you know...? Didn't you understand you were the only person I ever truly loved?

Finally, Amelia slows her running, as the sheer cliff leading to the Maiura warpgate appears before her. A massive military base with thirty-foot steel walls looms ahead, serving as an impenetrable obstruction to Maiura's native fauna. Instinctively, even the most fearsome beasts know better than to approach humanity's stronghold.

Amelia finally takes a moment to deactivate her T-REX and wipe her eyes. She sniffles quietly, then hardens her heart.

It doesn't matter anymore. Levvy died. He made me promise never to give into my sorrow. I have to live, even if only to preserve his legacy. I may be a monster, and an irredeemable witch... but I'll never break my promises.

Amelia reactivates her T-REX, then stands up a little straighter. "Centurion. Scan the base. Point out all the life readings you can find."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACCEPTED, PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT. SCANNING BASE NOW. IMPORTANT! CENTURION WOULD LIKE TO SUGGEST TAPPING INTO THE LOCAL TRANSMISSION NETWORK TO REVEAL THE POSITIONS OF ALL SOLDIERS AT THE MAIURAN FORWARD COMMAND POST. WOULD YOU LIKE TO INITIATE THIS PLAN?"

Amelia frowns. "If we do that, you'll have to reveal your position to the others here. That's extremely dangerous. I'm trying to take a stealthy approach."

"NEGATIVE. THIS EXOSUIT WAS SPECIALLY MODIFIED BY PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR TO NOT APPEAR ON THE CENTURION MAINFRAME. AS SUCH, THIS EXOSUIT CAN INTERFACE DIRECTLY WITH THE MAIN COMMAND HUB WITHOUT RAISING ANY ALARMS."

Amelia blinks in surprise. "What? Jason... he thought that far ahead? He must have known I might need to escape the manor in the future. Wow, he's smarter than I give him credit for. Alright, Centurion.

Tap into the listening post."

"AFFIRMATIVE. ORDERS ACCEPTED."

Centurion falls silent. After a few moments, Amelia glances down at her suits' shiny, golden exterior. "By the way. Don't you think this color is a little bit attention-grabbing? If we're going for a stealthy approach, I'd rather not look like a miniature sun in the middle of the night."

"AFFIRMATIVE. RECOMMENDATION NOTED, PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT. WOULD YOU LIKE FOR THIS EXOSUIT TO ACTIVATE 'CHAMELEON COLOR COORDINATION MODE?'"

Amelia shrugs. "Sure. If it means people won't be able to see me from space, then that would be a big improvement."

"COMMAND ACCEPTED! ACTIVATING LEVEL 2 STEALTH… NOW."

Suddenly, Amelia's armor loses its shimmering appearance. Instead of becoming pure black, or grey, or any other darkened color, it becomes a mirror of the environment around it, allowing the former Black Witch to become almost invisible amongst her surroundings.

"Oh, wow. Not bad," Amelia murmurs. "I can definitely sneak closer like this. How about that wire-tapping, Centurion? Do you have anything for me?"

The moment Amelia asks, a series of images appears in her helmet's readouts. The layout of Maiura's Forward Command post, along with a couple dozen red dots, reveal the positions of multiple sentries standing guard to watch for intruders.

However, Amelia frowns. "That can't be right. Centurion, I want to know about the positions of everyone in the command post, not just the sentries. Once I scale those walls, I'll have to dodge people on the inside, too."

"AFFIRMATIVE, PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT. THIS EXOSUIT HAS NOTED THE POSITIONS OF ALL PERSONNEL CURRENTLY INSIDE THE FORWARD COMMAND POST'S GROUNDS. THERE ARE ONLY TWENTY-EIGHT LIFEFORMS WITHIN THE DESIGNATED BOUNDARIES. WOULD YOU LIKE CENTURION TO EXPAND ITS SCANS OUTSIDE THE COMMAND POST'S WALLS?"

Amelia's frown deepens. "Only twenty-eight people, all of them mere sentries? That can't be right. Jason told me there are never fewer than four-hundred soldiers inside this base. Where did everyone go?"

"PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT, ACCORDING TO MULTIPLE TRANSMISSIONS THIS EXOSUIT HAS INTERCEPTED, THERE APPEARS TO BE A MILITARY CONFERENCE OF UNKNOWN ORIGINS BEING HELD INSIDE THE LABYRINTH CORE. THE SOLDIERS AT THIS STATION HAVE LEFT ON OFFICIAL ORDERS FROM MILITARY COMMANDER NEIL ADAMS. THIS EXOSUIT HAS A 91% CONFIDENCE THRESHOLD FOR THIS ASSESSMENT."

Amelia's heart skips a beat. "Devils. Neil once told me that only in an emergency would he summon all the troops. It must have something to do with Jason's disappearance!"

Several seconds pass.

The young woman stares silently through her visor's display. She ponders her next move with the utmost caution.

Eventually, Amelia nods her head.

"I'd love to ask Neil if something has happened to Jason. However, I can't appear before anyone else or it will raise all sorts of alarms. Instead, I'll use this chance to slip inside the Core while there aren't any guards around. Centurion, will your invisibility feature work once we pass through the warpgate to the Labyrinth Core?"

Centurion offers an immediate reply. "AFFIRMATIVE. THE SPECTRE MK. II EXOSUIT POSSESSES HIGHLY ADAPTABLE STEALTH TECHNOLOGY FAR SURPASSING THE MK. I! THIS EXOSUIT WILL NOT SUFFER ANY DISRUPTIONS AS A RESULT OF PASSING THROUGH A QUANTUM TUNNEL."

"Alright. I'll be counting on you, then. Let's get the hell out of here and find Jason!"

* * *

Amelia darts forward, using the suit's innate chameleon powers to merge into the encrouching darkness like a jaguar stalking prey. She weaves through a field of tall grass, slithering through the gaps with the grace of a jungle snake. Eventually, she arrives at the base of the encampment's thirty-foot walls.

"Centurion. Activate your invisibility."

"COMMAND ACCEPTED, PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT. IMPORTANT! THIS EXOSUIT WILL ONLY BE ABLE TO MAINTAIN ITS PEAK STEALTH CAPABILITIES FOR FIVE MINUTES. INITIATING LEVEL 3 STEALTH… NOW!"

With a slight hum, Amelia's figure disappears from the view of even the most eagle-eyed observer. Her nanites begin to vibrate at speeds beyond human comprehension while constantly shifting their color to match the ambient environment. Amelia seemingly vanishes into thin air, allowing her to leapfrog the wall without being seen.

As Amelia jumps the man-made barrier, she plummets over the other side and lands in a pile of tossed-aside paper, but her impact doesn't make a noise.

"Sound dampening?" Amelia mutters. "Nice."

The young woman darts across the field. She rushes toward the portal, only for her heart to skip a beat as a Harpie in a doctor's uniform steps through.

Shit!

Amelia freezes in place. She stares, wide-eyed, as the bird-like woman casually strolls toward her. However, even when the harpie passes within three feet of Amelia's frozen form, she doesn't bat an eye.

Holy hell! Amelia screams internally. Harpies have excellent vision and smell! If that lady didn't see me, I doubt any mere human will!

After swallowing a few frantic breaths, Amelia darts forward, wincing when Centurion gives her a four-minute countdown timer.

Without hesitation, the young woman steps through Maiura's warpgate, directly into the heart of humanity's military. She arrives inside the Labyrinth Core, where, much like on Maiura, hardly any souls stir. A few guards stand at attention near each of the Warpgates, the entrance to Neil's office, and the giant double-doors leading into the Labyrinth. However, aside from a few scattered monster technicians, the Core appears eerily empty.

Amelia narrows her eyes. Something terrible must have happened. Neil wouldn't call all of the Core and Maiuran personnel for any ordinary meeting. Jason needs me. I know he does!

The raven-haired woman hesitates for a moment. She darts toward Neil's office and slithers past the two guards standing outside its entrance. Luckily, thanks to the Spectre's stealth capabilities, they don't notice even the slightest shimmer in the air.

When Amelia enters Neil's office, she grabs a feather and parchment and quickly writes a note for the Commander. It takes her almost two minutes to formulate and jot her thoughts down, but still, she finishes with over a minute left on the Spectre's cloaking timer.

That should do it. If Jason returns and finds out I'm not at the manor, Neil will know where I went. I can trust Neil. Jason told me so.

Amelia shivers slightly, realizing what she's about to do.

I'm going to head into the Labyrinth, now. I haven't set foot there since my death six years ago. If I didn't think Jason was in trouble, I wouldn't dare to do so. Should the Demon Emperors learn of my existence, they'll stop at nothing to kill me.

Amelia sighs. If an Emperor comes for me, I won't be able to protect myself. My best chance will be to rely on this exosuit and flee. Without it, I'm nothing.

"PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT, THIS EXOSUIT CAN ONLY MAINTAIN MAXIMUM STEALTH FOR ANOTHER THIRTY SECONDS."

"Right. Let's get a move on, then."

Amelia slips her letter to Neil inside an unmarked envelope, then she sets it under a book on his desk. As she darts away, Amelia smiles.

Even with that pile of paperwork on Neil's desk, there's no way he won't notice someone has entered his room. That man has a nearly eidetic memory.

Amelia darts toward the two giant double doors leading into the Labyrinth. Luckily, they both remain open by a mere three feet, allowing people to enter and exit single-file.

With a hop, skip, and a jump, Amelia leaps through the doorway and lands silently on the other side. She rushes deeper into the Labyrinth, leaving the range of the deadly laser cannons mere seconds before her invisibility timer runs out.

"PILOT AMELIA-JUST-AMELIA-ALRIGHT, THIS EXOSUIT WILL REQUIRE ANOTHER SEVEN POINT THREE HOURS TO RECHARGE ITS STEALTH CAPACITORS TO FULL. YOU MAY ACCELERATE THIS TIMER BY PLACING THIS EXOSUIT'S CAPACITOR ON A CHARGING TERMINAL AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE."

Amelia shakes her head. "Sorry, but we'll have to make do without maximum stealth for a while, Centurion. Let's get a move on."

As the young woman disappears into the Labyrinth's clutches, she groans audibly. "And would you stop with that Amelia-Not-Amelia nonsense! Devils! Get my name right, you stupid hunk of junk!"

Part 222: Preparing For War

Tarus II, midday.

A crowd of soldiers, 20,000 people deep, stands in a large open area within the warpgate encampment. As humanity's capital world, and the place where one of the Wordsmiths lives, it holds a special spot in every human's heart. While most humans don't originate from Tarus II, and many in fact came from worlds liberated by Hope Hiro and Neil Adams, they all still enjoy the capital world's mild climate.

A large display, nearly fifty feet wide and thirty tall, shows a live video feed of a meeting taking place on an elevated platform not far from Tarus II's warpgate. There, humanity and monsterkind's leaders gather at a table and wait for Neil's signal to begin their discussion.

Phoebe Hiro, Neil Adams, Kar the Sphinx, Belial, and many other top figures take their seats at the Governance Table and wait for the other guests to arrive. Neil sits at the head of the table, with Kar and Blinker on his right-hand side and a human male with a vicious demeanor on his left. Phoebe sits across from him at the opposite end of the table, with Belial and Doctor Fathy on her right-hand side and Hans Wagner on her left. Makoto Ueda sits in the middle, sandwiched between a few other humans and monsters, including a minotaur and a pair of jittery-looking goblins.

Nearly everyone arrives within the first five minutes, but it takes a while longer for the final guest to show up.

Lieutenant Henry, a soldier who has shown great promise among the younger recruits, strides toward the table with beads of sweat visible on his face. "Apologies for my late arrival, Commander Neil. I only received word about this meeting twenty minutes ago."

Neil smiles. "At ease, Lieutenant. You received the notification at the same time as everyone else. Were you at your villa?"

"I was."

"Then do not trouble yourself. You have quite a distance to travel. I am sure you stomped your vehicle's accelerator all the way here."

Henry blushes. "That I did, Commander. Thank you for your understanding."

Without another word, the young man takes a seat close to Neil's side of the table, between Kar and a dark-skinned woman wearing tribal garb. Kar nods at Henry politely. "Young Bull. It is fortunate that you did not miss this meeting."

The dark-skinned woman seated beside Henry stares at him like a hawk. "I suppose someone has to show up last, yet still I must ask why it is always you."

Henry turns to look at the woman on his right. Unlike the other delegates present, she does not wear a military-issued uniform. Instead, she wears a bra and loincloth formed from animalskins, with fur for padding and support. Painted lines criss-cross her face, drawn on as a symbol of her royal heritage among her tribe. Her silvery hair hangs in a ponytail behind her head, with several black lines running through it, seemingly at random.

"I'm sorry, Miss Brunhilda," Henry says sheepishly. "I ran here as fast as I could."

"So you claim. I shall retract my fangs," Brunhilda says, while licking her front teeth. "But only this time. The ancient gods have cursed us with bad luck yet again. We haven't time to squabble over petty matters."

"Well spoken," Neil says without a smile. "Yesterday, Kar returned from his voyage to Hell Harbor alongside Jason Hiro. The news he brought back was not as pleasant as we might have liked. I've spent the last thirteen hours drawing up a response to the information he brought us."

Neil's words, along with the others at the table, beam to the soldiers in the encampment's courtyard. They listen with bated breath, wondering for what reason Neil summoned all of humanity and monsterkind's elites.

"I won't sugarcoat anything," Neil begins. "For reasons outside our control, we've learned that Ose, the current leader of demonkind, has declined Jason's offer for peace. According to King Kar, negotiations broke down and Ose sent the Wordsmith scurrying."

Kar grunts. "Heh. King. I like the way that word tastes."

"Shush!" Blinker hisses in the lizard's ear. Kar's fairy wife hangs out on his shoulder, listening intently to Neil's speech.

Henry leans forward. "What happened to Mister Hiro? Why isn't he here, along with Hope?"

Neil purses his lips. "An excellent question, and the primary reason I've called today's meeting. For the past two weeks, I've found myself unable to contact Hope. He left the Core to pursue some unknown goal in the Labyrinth, but he didn't follow proper procedure to tell anyone where he went. With Hope's recovery signal offline, I've been unable to locate him, and thus, I can't even send a Retrieval and Rescue team."

Murmurs quickly spread among those at the table. Several Core personnel turn pale at the thought that their all-but-invincible Wordsmith might have perished in a demon ambush.

Brunhilda clicks her tongue. "Tsk. What sort of headstrong fool heads into the depths of the Labyrinth by himself? Does this 'Hope' bear a death-wish? He sounds like a fool to me."

Her words cause sparks of anger to ignite in the eyes of several people present. Neil, however, doesn't even blink. "My apologies, Matriarch Brunhilda. Since you have only recently joined our resistance forces, it seems you are not aware of who, exactly, Jason and Hope are. Allow me to explain."

Brunhilda sits in silence and listens as Neil quickly debriefs her on the powers of the Wordsmiths. However, despite directing his words at the tribeswoman, he also ensures his words transmit through the viewscreen to all the troops listening in the outpost's courtyard. Many of them are new to humanity's resistance forces and thus have yet to learn of the heroes' existences.

After a few minutes, Brunhilda nods. "Ah. I see. I wondered why you kept calling him a 'Wordsmith.' My apologies for my disrespect, Commander Neil. I see now why this 'Hope' would stride into the Labyrinth without fear."

Neil sighs. "Aye. However, even with their incredible magic, neither of the Wordsmiths are invincible. Shortly before he left, a demoness named Vepar ambushed Hope. She nearly captured him, and if it weren't for King Kar's presence, we might have lost him then and there. For him to charge back into the Labyrinth after promising me he wouldn't..."

The Commander clicks his tongue. "...disappointing, to say the least."

Phoebe clears her throat. "Neil. About three hours ago, my Sigil darkened, and I lost my ability to contact Jason. I've tried to message him several dozen times, but he hasn't responded."

Kar's expression darkens. "Hurgh. Turtle told me he wished to spend a few hours investigating Hell Harbor. Beyond that, I do not know what his plans were."

The Commander leans against the table, a look of weariness on his face. "Damn. Both Wordsmiths have fallen off our radar. Going forward, I want everyone in this meeting to assume they have either died or landed in the demon's clutches. If fortune favors us, then perhaps they haven't. However, we must operate on the assumption that our two Heroes will never return, or, even worse, that the demons might use wicked magic to turn the Wordsmiths against us."

Ugly expressions appear on the faces of those present. Phoebe lowers her gaze and steels her face, unwilling to cry.

Belial raises her hand. "Since you brought it up, I thought I should mention that Ose possesses some ability to control the minds of others. Given how Jason entered a meeting with Ose, it is possible she compromised him from the very start."

With a slump in her shoulders, Belial continues. "I only know about Ose's powers from when she was a Baron, and I've not interacted with her since her ascension to Emperor. Most likely, her abilities have long since improved."

Belial concludes by lowering her gaze to the table. "Ose is far from the only demon capable of mind control. Some of the Hidden Emperors are equally adept in the mental arts."

Neil nods. "Kar has mentioned the Hidden Emperors in passing to me before. However, based on the way he described them, it seemed as if they would never willingly follow Diablo's orders, let alone Ose's. Kar, do you think that situation has changed? Are the Hidden Emperors likely to reveal themselves?"

Kar shrugs. "Hurgh. I am sorry, Ox-arms, but I do not know. The Hidden Emperors have not shown their faces in tens of thousands of years. The enmity between them and the primary Hell is unlikely to ever fade."

Neil frowns. "Unlikely? I don't like that word. It implies uncertainty. Succubus, have you any detailed information regarding the Hidden Emperors?"

The Commander glances at Belial, who narrows her eyes in return. "My name is Samantha. Use it. And yes, I do. Naturally, I know all of them to varying degrees."

Neil ignores Belial's annoyed reaction. "Good. I want a report on my desk by tomorrow. Give me their names, descriptions of their appearances, and as many details about their powers as you can manage. Without Hope and Jason, our chances of surviving a demonic assault will drop precipitously for every additional Duke and Emperor that shows up."

Belial licks her lips. "Kar is right. Knowing Ose, she will never be capable of commanding a single Hidden Emperor, let alone uniting them. As much as most of them hate women, they all despise the leaders of the Primary Hell. They would sooner cut off their own hands than assist Ose."

"That may be well and true," Neil counters, "but I'm readying our troops for war. I need a contingency plan for every possible scenario. As a famous man once said, 'know yourself and know your enemy, and you will never lose a single battle.' If there is even a one percent chance of some horrific monster appearing during the battle, I want a containment or destruction method available immediately."

Belial leans back in her chair. She flicks her eyes into the distance to avoid Neil's gaze. "I'll write down whatever I can remember."

Neil doesn't thank her. Instead, he returns his attention to the others seated at the table. "Now that we understand the worst-case scenarios, I'd like to present everyone with an overview of our logistics and battle capabilities. Please turn your attention to this screen on my right."

After rising to his feet, Neil strides over to a large viewscreen nearly ten feet wide and four feet tall. He pulls a laser pointer remote from his pocket and presses a button, activating the screen to reveal several maps of Tarus II, Maiura, and a few other planets.

"Right now, looking at our battle capabilities, we have about three million people within the human populace. Additionally, there are more than a million monsters of varying species and even a few thousand demons on our side. However, sixty percent of humanity will be unable to assist us, should war break out. We have many elderly individuals and countless children among our ranks. They will be a prime target for the demons to attack. As such, we will need to ensure their survival if we hope to reign victorious in the event of a war."

Neil smirks. "Luckily, thanks to the Wordsmiths and Her Majesty, the Second Emperor, we've almost no sick or injured. Moving our people to a centralized location should be our first priority."

The Commander's sarcasm causes Belial to scowl, but she bites her tongue and keeps quiet. Every time Neil refuses to call Belial by her name, she becomes a little angrier. However, for some reason, she never hauls off and strikes the man.

Henry smiles inwardly. The Commander might be a fool who has fallen for Hope's slick words, but his heart is in the right place. He treats the traitorous succubus with the disrespect her kind deserves. Even if Miss Oshina wishes for me to execute Neil as a traitor, I cannot help but respect his convictions. If at all possible, I would rather turn the Commander away from the demonic magic of the Wordsmiths and toward the righteous path of us, the unempowered masses.

The delegates at the table keep silent as Neil aims his laser at a map of Tarus II. "Right now, we stand amidst the warpgate facility on our capital world. Thirty-seven miles to our west, across these lightly forested woodlands, sits one of Tarus II's three vast oceans. Ten miles to the east, Hero City stands atop a two-hundred-foot-tall mountain plateau. It is our great fortune that Bahamut built her city atop such an easily defensible position. The plateau stands nearly fifteen miles wide, with several pyramids to the south, the general hospital at the westernmost edge of the city, and the populace resting within the center."

Neil's words target the foreigners sitting amongst the soldiers, as well as a few of the newest delegates. Brunhilda, the warrior tribeswoman from a recently liberated world, raises her hand. "Given the hospital's position, I worry that it will present a prime target for the demons to attack. It rests on the plateau's edge, nearest the warp-gate. If the demons break through the warpgate, they won't have to travel far to reach our sick and injured."

"You are correct," Neil says, a faint smile on his face. "However, the hospital's position is also close enough for Miss Hiro's emergency teleporters to warp injured soldiers directly from the battlefield to clinical and emergency wards."

"Emergency teleporters?" Brunhilda asks, cocking her head slightly. "I do not understand this term."

Henry turns to her, his neighbor. "Teleporters are special devices that can move people instantly across vast distances. However, I didn't know Miss Hiro had developed such advanced devices for our usage, already."

Phoebe shakes her head. "If it weren't for Kar's warning, I wouldn't dare use them. I've spent the past year and a half trying to develop an emergency rescue system for anyone wearing a T-REX battlesuit. Unfortunately, I couldn't integrate the systems properly into Centurion's mainframe. I only managed to create addon devices that attach to T-REX's and add the functionality, but there are still bugs I haven't worked out."

Several officers glance at each other with looks of relief. Miss Hiro is once again doing everything she can to protect our lives, their gazes say.

Neil purses his lips. "Unfortunately, Miss Hiro has only created enough emergency teleportation systems to attach to half of our available exosuits. Anyone with the device will have a strong likelihood of surviving a fatal attack, should the demons reach our planet. Anyone without one, will likely fall."

The commander falls silent for a moment. He sweeps his gaze around the table, meeting the eyes of everyone present.

"I considered equipping our best soldiers with the rescue beacon addon. I even considered equipping our freshest recruits, since they would likely need its services more. In the end, I settled on having Miss Hiro install the devices inside T-REX's at random. Nobody will know who can be rescued; not even me. Act as if you have only one life. Do not enter into foolish engagements or life-threatening situations recklessly. Assume that if you fall, your exosuit will not have a rescue device."

After pausing for emphasis, Neil concludes. "After all. Even if your T-REX does possess a rescue addon, it might fail to activate."

The looks of ease on the faces of those present fade away. Their expressions turn grim as they realize that even if they luck out and obtain a rescue-device-enabled exosuit, it might not activate in their moment of distress.

The 'important' members present might not survive even if humanity wins the war.

Neil returns his gaze to the monitors. "Miss Hiro's environmental shield, which covers the entirety of Hero City, serves many important purposes. Its most critical function lies in blocking demon Warpers from teleporting into the heart of our city. However, they can still easily make landfall outside its barrier to summon an attack force at our flanks. The southern and eastern sides of Hero City are most at risk in that scenario."

Despite her grievances with Neil, Belial still raises her hand to speak. "Warpers do not possess omnipotent teleportation abilities. In order to establish a rift between locations, they must have visited the entry and exit point recently — within the last few months, at a minimum. Some Warpers are more proficient than others and can teleport to places from, say, a year before, but their numbers are few."

Brunhilda raises her hand. "I do not follow, Emperor Samantha. Why tell us this?"

Belial blinks. "Unless a Warper has secretly roamed our borders within the last few months, they will not be able to open a warpgate to our world. However, if the demons break through our warpgate and make landfall on Tarus II, the Warpers will be able to teleport around our defenses and arrive at our flanks. We must prevent my people from breaking past the Core at all costs."

Henry's face twitches. He forces down the anger in his heart as he stares at the succubus with simmering hatred. 'Your people' indeed, bloodskin filth.

Neil, too, shares nearly identical thoughts to Henry. However, he maintains a neutral expression and merely nods. "Yes. We must avoid losing the Core at all costs. Even if the Warpers don't somehow evade our defenses, we have an equally pressing matter that will endanger our efforts. Burrowers."

He presses a button on his remote, changing the viewscreen to show multiple demon grunts with huge claws, along with a bunch of goblins.

"Miss Hiro's Environmental Shield may protect our capital from the elements and Warpers, but it will do nothing against Burrowers and goblins. While the Goblins will scale our cliffs with ease, the Burrowers will create tunnels under our city to funnel enemy troops into our weakest areas. Should anyone decide to hole up inside Bahamut's pyramids, they will become tombs for those trapped within. Common military tactics of using earthen shelters are little more than suicidal folly when dealing with Burrowers."

"That brings me to my next point," Neil says. He returns to the previous screen with maps and geological data via a click of his remote. "We need to prepare for the worst eventuality. If the demons overrun us, we will need to retreat to Kelkin; this planet's moon. Such a measure will only delay our inevitable extinction. Kelkin is a hostile world with barely enough sustenance for the two thousand scientists working to empower our military, let alone the rest of us. Luckily, Jason Hiro did come up with a little surprise last year."

Neil aims his laser pointer at the northern edge of Hero City's plateau, where a wide, open field stands. Its barren, rocky surface appears flat and empty.

"Some of you may recall a certain event from six months ago, when Kar and Henry oversaw the setup of multiple chainlink fences to cordon off this section of Hero City from the rest. We never stated the public reason for why nobody could enter that area, but today, I will reveal the reason for our secrecy."

Neil changes the slide once again, revealing an image of a humongous, 1000-foot-long starship with a 300-foot-diameter body. Its circular design looks somewhat like a gigantic blimp, with a smaller blimp attached at its rear; the engine room.

"This ship is called the Covenant. It has enough room inside to house 5,000 humans and monsters comfortably for an indefinite amount of time. However, when packed to capacity, it can fit nearly 20,000 people. It possesses a highly advanced rationer system capable of synthesizing food from sunlight, meaning that so long as the ship orbits a star, it will be capable of feeding its crew of 5,000. However, when packed with 20,000 people, the Covenant can only last 5 years at most due to technical limitations."

Once again, Neil pauses for emphasis.

"...We have ten Covenant ships. At most, we can only rescue 200,000 citizens in the event of a total demonic overrun. I need not say what will happen to those who don't make it aboard."

A muscular, dark-skinned man sitting opposite from Brunhilda, raises his hand. Having said nothing since the meeting started, his action draws the gazes of everyone present. "Commander Neil. How shall you determine who may come aboard the Covenants?"

"Elder Skarde," Neil says, bowing his head politely. "If Tarus II requires a planetary evacuation, we can safely assume the demons will have overrun our troops and our civilian populace, too. It will be every person for themselves at that point. I don't imagine a full 200,000 people will make it offworld alive if our defenses fail."

The massive, muscled man, Elder Skarde, sits with his arms crossed. He stares at Neil with a deep, melancholic look of acceptance. At nearly fifty years old, he has reached the peak of his life and has witnessed many horrors among the demonic raids conducted against his world.

"I see. We should pray we never need to use these starships, then."

Henry raises his hand. "Commander, a question. You say there are ten Covenant ships ready and waiting, but why have I never seen them before? I helped construct those fences, yet there were no ships there even as recently as last month."

Neil nods. "Miss Hiro covered the ships with a 'cloaking net' to hide their existence. Our goal was to prevent any demon spies from learning of our potential escape plan ahead of time."

Henry lowers his eyes to the table. Miss Oshina told me to warn her about stuff like this. When I get out of the meeting, I'll have to tell her about everything I've learned here today! Even as a lieutenant, there's so much I don't know about humanity's capabilities.

Brunhilda raises her hand. "Commander Neil. You've spoken at length about Tarus II. That is well and good, but what of the other alliance worlds? My world does not have the protections yours does. If the demons invade, I am afraid my people will fall before the gods can protect us."

"I am glad you asked," Neil says. Once again, he taps a remote button to return to the map screen. This time, he aims his laser at a map of Maiura. "The situation on Maiura is almost the exact opposite of here on Tarus II. Tarus II's warpgate rests upon an open field with few natural defenses. Hero City stands erected atop a mountain plateau, with the majority of its population capable of hunkering there for defense. However, on Maiura, the Warpgate sits nestled within the bowl-like chasm of a mountain, offering excellent natural fortifications. Meanwhile, Maiura's populace is more spread-out, with small villages and cities here or there. Countless people live within small dwellings in its vast, lush forests."

"If the demons attack Tarus II, we will have plenty of methods to defend its populace," Neil continues. "But if they attack Maiura, Genos, or your world, Feloria, then I cannot say for certain that the results will be anything but catastrophic."

Brunhilda's expression contorts into a mixture of shock and outrage. She jumps out of her chair and shouts at the Commander. "What! Neil, your people came to my world and offered asylum from our slavemasters! You told us you would protect us, and yet now you claim that we will have to die without your help?! What absurdity! If we had known this would happen-"

Neil raises a finger. "What would you have done? Would you have turned us down? I did not anticipate a war without the Wordsmiths supporting us. If even one of them were here, and especially if that one was Hope, I can say with a high degree of confidence that we would drive the demons back again and again. Without them, we will have to rely on ourselves. We will have to show our enemies that we will not falter when they come knocking at our door."

"Maybe so," Brunhilda scowls. "But the Wordsmiths aren't here, and now my people are likely to perish, all because I bought into your promises of salvation."

"I promised nothing," Neil says, his expression turning cold. "Do you think our ambitions are a joke? Do you think this coming war is a game? Had we not liberated Feloria, what sort of fate do you think you would be facing now? Would the demons merely bypass you to go for our jugular? No! They would begin systematically weeding out those with the most rebellious thoughts among your people. They would force you into labor camps to mine demonstone, all while ignoring the old treaties. Fighting alongside the rest of humanity, you have a slim chance of survival. Without us, you would only end up suffering a slow, necrotic death."

"Commander Neil speaks the truth," Elder Skarde rumbles. He rests his elbows on the table and folds his hands together to form a resting spot for his chin. "My world would rather die a quick, merciful death than suffer under the whips and whims of the torturous bloodskins."

Skarde's slur causes Belial to shift uncomfortably in her seat. A younger Demon Lord on the other side of Doctor Fathy, likewise, reveals his unease at Elder Skarde's casual slur. However, neither of them voice their opinions. They keep quiet due to the guilt caused by their fellow demons' actions.

However, Phoebe doesn't. "Elder Skarde. Please. Whatever anger you feel toward those who have harmed you, please keep such crude language out of this discussion."

Elder Skarde turns to look at Phoebe. His hardened expression reveals no emotion, but a hint of contempt boils within his eyes.

"Hmph. As you wish."

The table falls silent for several seconds. Neil clears his throat to begin offering his final thoughts.

"Ahem. In conclusion, we have a difficult fight ahead of us. Our enemies number in the trillions, while we possess only a fraction of their might. In a traditional war, we might not stand a chance. However, we can still survive, and possibly even win, provided we keep our wits about us."

Neil returns to his chair. He points a finger toward the sky while speaking. "An ancient story goes a little something like this: Once upon a time, a small army of three hundred humans needed to defend against a military force more than a thousand times their size. Rather than attempt to face their foes head-on, the brave and intelligent warriors created a chokepoint that forced their enemies to come at them in a steady trickle. In this way, three hundred men held off a million battle-hardened warriors for two days, allowing their populace to escape. Likewise, we must mirror these ancient warriors to create a miracle of our own."

"The demons are innumerable. They are relentless. They will not stop, no matter what. Only by drowning the Labyrinth with their blood will we be able to establish our foothold in this galaxy and prove that we have the right to exist! We have the right to pursue happiness! We have the right to break our chains and regain our freedom! I will not allow the demons to punish us for the sins of our ancestors. I will fight until I draw my last breath, as long as it takes, to ensure I never bow my head to those filthy, murderous, bloodskin bastards."

Neil shoots a meaningful look toward Belial.

"Succubus. You claim to be an ally of humanity. We will see if you are all talk, or if you have the will to back up your words."

Belial crosses her arms. She meets Neil's gaze with a look of disgust. "Have you forgotten, Neil? There are no Wordsmiths here. If I wanted humanity enslaved or dead, you wouldn't be able to stop me. If you have something to say... either say it, or shut your mouth. I've proven myself a thousand times over, yet your closed-minded bigotry never fades. In my eyes, you're no different from those I left behind when I came here."

Neil snorts. "Strong words, but your little jabs mean nothing to me."

Without waiting for Belial's reply, Neil turns his gaze toward the others present. The discomfort on their faces at his spat with their beloved healer doesn't faze him in the slightest. "Does anyone have any questions before I wrap this meeting up?"

Brunhilda raises her hand. "Yes. What can I do to ensure my people's survival?"

Neil gestures toward Brunhilda's skimpy clothing. "Miss Hiro will supply your planet with enough exosuits that if the demons do attack, you'll be able to use their enhancements to put up a fight or flee. The demons aren't omnipotent. If your warriors master their T-REX's, they will be capable of fighting with Demon Barons on equal footing. Henry is the perfect example. He slew several wyverns on his own, and his T-REX is the most basic model."

"Chrrup! The most basic model?" Doctor Fathy, the Harpie, asks. "Are there new exosuits available?"

"That's right. Miss Hiro designed several powerful new variants, including one for medical personnel. I don't want you performing field surgery without protection, after all. The nanites will bond to any human or monster's body with ease, so don't worry about losing the functionality in your wings and claws."

Henry perks his ears up. "Commander, how many of these new variants do you have available for us?"

"Not many. Two thousand at most," Neil replies. "The Thundercats and Spectres we have now only perform at twenty percent of their maximum efficiency. Miss Hiro informed me that the Mark II's would perform at close to sixty percent of their maximum output."

Neil turns to smile at Phoebe, but she gives him a cold glare in response. After the way he spoke to Belial, the Wordsmith's wife maintains a frosty demeanor. "Sixty-five percent, Neil."

The Commander ignores Phoebe's biting tone. "Well done, as usual, Miss Hiro. We all depend on you for our survival."

Several other leaders around the table raise their hands. They ask Neil various questions, but the contents usually relate more to their specific planets than the war situation as a whole.

Kar turns to look at Henry. "Hurgh. Young Bull. Can you teach me how to use a T-REX?"

Henry smiles at his big, crocodile friend. "Of course, Mister Kar. You've always been there for me. But why do you want one? I thought your scales were stronger than the exosuits?"

"It was my idea!" Blinker yells. She flies off Kar's shoulder to hover between him and Henry. "If the stupid, stinky demons are gonna attack, then I want Kar to get all geared up! An extra layer of protection can't hurt!"

Kar snorts. "I only do what my Butterfly wishes."

Henry sighs. "I wish we had the T-REX's years ago, back when Beelzebub first attacked the Core. Maybe they would have saved Piper's life."

"Piper..." Blinker mutters. "Ah. Your fox friend. I'm sorry you lost him. We've lost a lot of friends to the demons. Kar lost his whole family."

The gigantic reptile flinches at Blinker's words. "Hurgh. I have yet to repay the Battle Brothers for their sins. With any luck, I will meet them in battle."

"I'll be there for you," Henry says, while patting Kar's back. "Anyone who's your enemy is mine, too. We're all in this together."

"That is right," Kar says. "Just like how we must pay back Hotface for killing Piper."

"You said it," Henry grunts.

Across the table, Elder Skarde rises to his feet. "I will recall my people to Tarus II within the hour. If the demons make it inside the Core, my planet will be defenseless to their onslaught. However, on this capital world, we can survive longer and offer extra hands for when the fighting worsens."

Neil smiles. "You speak the words of a wise man. Tarus II will accept all the help we can get."

"I will recall my people as well," Brunhilda says. She nods at Elder Skarde as she speaks. "You have the right idea, brother."

With the meeting concluded, Henry rises to his feet along with the others present. He and Kar head off into the Core, but as they leave, Henry glances back over his shoulder to see Neil sitting at the table, staring at Belial's back. The succubus and Phoebe take their leave, but Neil's gaze doesn't leave until she walks out of his eyesight.

I wonder why the Commander hates Belial, in particular, so much? Henry wonders inwardly.

With a shrug, he returns his focus to Kar.

Not that I care. After all, every bloodskin must die.

Part 223: Insurance

After the conclusion of the Tarus II meeting, the gathered elites spend only a few minutes chatting with one another before taking their leave. Kar and Neil spare a few words, before the reptile king and his wife eventually head off after Phoebe and Belial. Doctor Fathy travels to the Core to deal with some business on Maiura, and Elder Skarde and Brunhilda return to their planets to transfer their populace to Tarus II. Several other alliance leaders mimic them, with everyone sharing the goal of unifying their forces on one centrally defensible planet; the capital world of Tarus II.

However, even after the elites vanish, three people remain.

Neil Adams folds his hands together and rests them on the table. He watches and waits for the participants to disperse, only for his eyes to fall on Makoto Ueda and Hans Wagner, his two closest friends. The Japanese and German man, hailing from the 16th and 20th century, respectively, come from eras before and after Neil's birth. Having endured the pain of 100,000 years of servitude under Bahamut, all three men spent time together carrying out their master's will as shapeshifted monsters.

Hans Wagner wears the same white lab coat as always. His dark, frizzy hair sticks up erratically, giving him a sort of crazed appearance. However, he leans back in his seat calmly and flashes a grin at Neil. "Brother Adams. It is good zat you've decided to stay. I have news to share."

"I expected as much," Neil replies, his tone neutral. "How many nanite bombs have you completed over the last month?"

"Two hundred and twenty, with plenty more on zee way," Hans replies.

Hans and Makoto sit in the middle of the table, off to Neil's left. Makoto closes his eyes and inhales deeply. "Much war, soon to come, Adams-san. I hope you still remember my stance on such matters."

"Naturally," Neil says. "I don't expect you to fight."

"That not what I refer to, Adams-san," Makoto replies, his tone gentle. "Your eagerness to kill come from dark place. Fighting to protect friend very different from drawing blood for revenge. How many demons will you hunt before satisfied?"

Neil lowers his gaze. "As many as it takes. You know better than anyone what I've lost."

"Hoh..." Makoto mutters. "Do I? Maybe so. I lose people, same as you. Whole family. Whole life. Am I sad? Yes. Do I seek retribution? No. Such action only further a cycle of violence."

Makoto continues. "Killing demons never bring family back. Nothing you do will change history. Instead, focus on rebuilding humanity. That what Melia-chan would want."

Neil flinches. "I know what I'm doing, Makoto. Don't act like you know my wife's desires. You never met her."

"Perhaps not," Makoto concedes. "However, why demons come knocking? Because you enter Labyrinth to slaughter them. Your actions, dangerous. Double-sided sword. They make demons hate us.

Now, we face major crisis."

"Dangerous?" Neil retorts. "Naturally. Hope and I have liberated more than a hundred worlds. Thanks to the soldiers in the Core, we've rescued countless slaves from the clutches of our enemies. Killing the slavemasters was a necessary step in helping to prevent further tragedies. What would you have me do? Leave them alive to capture and torture more of our people?"

Neil shakes his head. "I respect your pacifism, Makoto. However, if everyone thought like you, nobody would fight back against their oppressors. Someone has to step up and make the hard calls. We won't beat the demons with hugs and kisses."

"Haah..." Makoto sighs.

The Japanese man plucks the straw hat off his head. He scratches his scalp silently before replying. "You misunderstand, Adams-san. There exist big chasm between man who slaughter and man who blindly forgive. I not mindless pacifist. I always willing to fight if it protect friends and family. However, I refuse to murder and pillage. Such actions only make enemies angry; make them want revenge. Then they repeat my action, make me want revenge back. What then? Endless cycle."

"I understand what you're saying," Neil counters. "You want me to act with restraint. Instead of killing demon slavemasters and brutalizing their corpses, I should only use the minimum amount of force necessary to rescue and protect other humans."

Makoto nods. "Yes. That what I want."

Tarus's military commander chuckles. "You're too naive, Makoto. Such beliefs may have been correct in the old days, when humans fought each other, but today, our only enemies are demons. They respect and fear those stronger than them, and nobody else. If I were to act with restraint, they would think of me as a coward too fearful to shed blood."

Neil continues. "And, since that is the case, I would rather kill as many of the bloodskin bastards as I possibly can. Since they only respect brutality, I must become brutal. Since they only fear those who rule with an iron fist, I will forge mine into a diamond gauntlet of their destruction."

"Demons not so different from humans," Makoto counters. He narrows his eyes meaningfully. "Demons kill and pillage. You kill and pillage. Demons torture humans. You torture demons. How will they change ways when you no better than them?"

"It's not my job to pity and coddle our oppressors," Neil replies. His tone frosts over as he meets Makoto's gaze. "Countless people have tried to make peace with demonkind. Buddha came the closest, but he failed. Confucius tried to reason with the bloodskins, but his words fell on deaf ears."

After a moment, Neil smiles. "Not only those two, but Sun Tzu as well — the man you admire most. If even that man could not defeat his enemies with kindness, who can? I am not even qualified to breathe in the same direction as his legend. Don't you think comparing me to him is an insult to his legacy?"

Makoto falls silent. His eyes lower to a wooden sword hanging at his waist. He doesn't speak for several seconds, but when he does, his tone softens. "You underestimate yourself, Adams-san. Sun Tzu was legend, yes, but he was not a Hero. He was ordinary man, just like you and me. He fought with brain;

he used words to defeat his enemies. Do you remember his wisdom? Pen is mightier than sword, Adams-san. True victory comes not from the sword, but by turning your foes to your side without bloodshed."

"Demons won't listen to reason. They can't," Neil replies. "They're animals. No matter how hard you try, you will never change their nature. They will always be your enemies."

Makoto shakes his head. "I not believe that, Adams-san. Even if your words true, and even if my beliefs wrong, I will always walk path of forgiveness."

After finishing, Makoto rises to his feet. He steps out of his chair and pushes it against the table.

"I will prove you wrong, Adams-san. Someday, you will see that path of sword is weak compared to the way of tongue."

"I doubt that will ever be the case," Neil says, "but as always, I respect your beliefs. If you ever prove me wrong, I will readily admit my defeat."

"Then I will hold you to your word, Adams-san."

Makoto nods at Hans. He leaves the table, allowing silence to fall between Neil and his German colleague.

"Sorry," Neil says. "I didn't mean to go off on a tangent with Makoto. You know how he is."

Hans smirks. "Haha. We are all good friends. Zere is no bad blood between us."

"Indeed. Makoto's beliefs might not be pragmatic, but if all humans and demons were to imitate him, perhaps we might finally find Paradise."

Hans waves Neil's words away. "Bah! Where zere is peace, zere will always be zose who wish to destroy it! I know zat much from experience. Now zen, let us discuss zee recent projects I've completed."

With both men pushing Makoto's concerns to the backs of their minds, they return to business.

Neil shifts his weight against the table to lean on his elbows. "You told me you had two hundred and twenty nanite bombs ready for deployment. Did you encounter any issues with their fabrication?"

"Only Jason's appearance," Hans replies. He flicks his eyes around the nearby area, scanning the rooftops and hill leading down into Tarus II's forward base. With the conference table simply placed in the middle of an outdoor area, it doesn't lend their discussion much privacy. "As I mentioned when we last spoke, zee Wordsmith told me to quit making zee bombs."

"You didn't?"

"Of course not, but I did slow zeir production somewhat. I placed zem in one of zee secret labs where I, alone, would have access."

"Good. You know better than anyone what will happen if we don't have those aces up our sleeves. Not even the Dukes will be able to resist their might. They're an essential weapon against the bloodskin elites."

"Naturally," Hans says. His eyes light up with excitement as he lowers his voice. "By zee way... Neil... I made a breakthrough. I finally completed zee Atlas targeting enhancements. It has a much higher precision, making it capable of striking targets within a two meter radius."

Neil's heart skips a beat. "You succeeded already? You told me you'd need another five years!"

"Aye, but I had a random moment of inspiration recently, due to a thought zat came to me in zee shower. Truly, zee Creator moves in mysterious ways."

Neil cracks a huge grin. "Hans, you sly dog. All that talk about how Phoebe was smarter than you... but you've been holding out on me."

"What can I say?" Hans asks. "German engineering is a zing of beauty."

"Don't sell yourself short. You've accomplished so much, even without Solomon's knowledge. Phoebe is a genius in her own right, but I think if you had the same opportunity to converse with the Knowledge Seeker, you'd easily outpace her."

After a brief pause, Neil clears his throat.

"Ahem. Hans? I do hope you haven't forgotten why I called you here, today."

Hans blinks. The two men stare at each other for half a breath before Hans turns red with embarrassment. "Ach mein gott! I am so stupid! Forgive me, Neil, but I forgot to bring zee glove!"

Neil frowns. "I explicitly requested that you deliver it today. We haven't any time to waste. With the demons on the move, they're bound to attack at any moment. Every second I go without that insurance-"

Hans jumps out of his chair awkwardly, interrupting Neil mid-sentence. "Say no more! Ah, give me just forty minutes! I left zee damn zing in my house."

"Oh? At least it's not on Kelkin. Please retrieve it post-haste. I'll head to my office to wait with bated breath."

Hans shuffles away from the table, an awkward grin on his face. "Yes, yes! Just forty minutes! I will return with zee item soon, Neil!"

After Hans jumps into a nearby vehicle and drives away, Neil sighs.

"It's true what they say. A great man's work is never done."

Neil rises from his seat. He pulls back his sleeve to glance at an old-fashioned watch, one Hope created for him a few years earlier.

"Every minute counts."

Neil nods at several low-ranking officers as they salute him. However, he doesn't stop to chat with his subordinates. He never does.

Instead, Neil strides out of the warpgate toward his office in the corner of the Core's main room. He pauses for a moment to glance at a monitor showing thermal scans of the nearby Labyrinth sections. Not a single life-sign appears on Centurion's sensors.

"Hm."

Neil continues walking. His eyes flick around the room, observing the status of his troops. Very few soldiers stand idly, talking with one another. The vast majority jog around, hustling to get as much work done as possible before the demons invade.

Good, Neil thinks to himself. That discussion with my fellow alliance leaders had a strong effect on the troops' morale. I can't take any chances with them dozing off on the job. Our survival depends on their readiness.

After walking for a minute, Neil arrives at his office. The two guards stationed outside stiffen and salute while keeping their eyes locked forward. "Commander!"

"At ease. Did anyone drop by while I was at the meeting?"

The soldiers relax their posture. "No, Commander. However, your assistant, Debra, did arrive a few minutes ago. She's waiting for you inside."

"Just the person I wanted to see," Neil says. "Keep your guards up, gentlemen. The demons could attack at any moment."

"Yes, Commander."

Without another word, Neil walks past the soldiers to enter his office. He arrives inside to find all of the lights on, and his assistant resting against his desk. Debra sips from a glass of ice water, but her face flushes red with embarrassment when she notices Neil. "Oh! Sir, my apologies. I didn't expect you here for another forty-two seconds."

Debra sets her drink down and smooths the front of her black pencil-skirt. While Neil takes a seat, she walks over to his desk to pour him a glass of beer. However, Neil raises his palm. "No, not today, Debra. Just coffee. I can't dull my senses with a demon invasion imminent."

Without missing a beat, Debra's hand glides past Neil's favorite beer mug to a plain brown coffee cup. "Of course. I watched your meeting with the alliance members. Are you still unable to contact Hope?"

"We can't even get a sensor ping," Neil says, his voice as tranquil as a lake. "Hope must have traveled deeper into the Labyrinth than ever before. I still haven't a clue why he didn't tell me his destination."

Debra drops three cubes of sugar into Neil's coffee, than adds a hint of nutmeg milk for flavor. "Hope is still a young man, just like Jason. He's matured a lot over the last six years, but you know as well as I that he suffers from an inferiority complex."

Neil stretches out his hand to take his coffee from Debra. After taking a sip, he nods. "I do. I try to maintain it, too. These Wordsmiths are dangerous. After we defeat demonkind, Hope will become more of a liability than an asset."

"Oh?"

Debra leans against Neil's desk. She pulls her straightened, shoulder-length blonde hair forward to fall across her white blouse.

"You always speak as if our victory is a foregone conclusion. What makes you so sure we'll beat the demons? We've already lost once."

Neil smiles. "War is not a simple game of controlling territory, Debra. It's not about the body count on either side, nor who carries the biggest guns. It's a combination of all of those things. Most importantly:

the mindset each side takes into battle."

Neil continues. "Overconfidence can destroy our chances at victory before we even begin. However, fear and doubt will shred our morale. The key is to strike a delicate balance. I must stand firm like a mountain and never waver in front of the troops. So long as they believe me invincible, they will fight to their last breath for humanity's sake."

"Hm. I can't say I understand," Debra says, shaking her head. "Even if everyone fights with all their heart, how can three million humans and one million monsters defeat trillions of demons? Even when humanity had superior numbers and firepower, we still lost."

Neil falls silent. He takes several sips of coffee before resting the mug on his knee. "Without a doubt, numbers and firepower matter in war. However, information will always be the deciding factor when two military powers come to blows. For example, if I did not know about the existence of Burrower demons, I would not be able to combat them until the last minute. Such a mistake would be my undoing. Similarly, for every secret weapon humanity possesses, we will be able to maintain an advantage over our enemies."

This time, Debra is the one who falls silent. Her eyes lose their focus as she gazes past Neil to ponder his words.

Seeing his assistant's confusion, Neil continues. "Debra. Unlike the rest of us, you were Bahamut's personal secretary. She kept you in your human state, and thus, allowed you to witness the end of the Energy Wars. You saw the mistakes our former leaders made. You watched as they conceded to demonic rule, and thus, gave up their ability to fight back. You maintained your humanity for 100,000 years, aided by Bahamut's Sphinx magic. Don't you think that, due to what you've witnessed, you've lost a part of yourself to the ages?"

Debra shakes the fog from her brain. "Sir? I don't follow."

"All humans possess an indelible curiosity, a trembling in our bones to explore the universe and uncover its secrets. We loathe shackles and seek freedom. We want to break the limiters placed upon us by outside forces. Some of those forces come from nature itself; the fundamental laws of the universe. Others come from our enemies, such as the Volgrim and the demons. No matter the source, they seek to hamper and contain our growth, but they will always fail."

"Debra," Neil says, his tone solemn. "you believe that humans are incapable of defeating demonkind not out of malice, nor due to any logical factors like the size of our military, but because Bahamut broke your spirit. She destroyed your creativity; your curiosity. I will tell you this, now: humanity will someday defeat the demons and the Volgrim. The demons cannot kill us, because they rely on us for sustenance. As long as that is true, we will continue to break our chains and fight back. Eventually, we will perservere and reign victorious."

Debra sighs. "I don't know, sir. I want to believe... but no matter how you spin it, I don't see us ever overunning our oppressors. They outnumber us a thousand to one. What can 'battle spirit' accomplish against such raw, overwhelming numbers? Not to mention how demons like Bael, an indestructible, invincible warrior, exist. If the demons manage to capture or kill the Wordsmiths, then I worry we won't last one month without them."

Neil polishes off his mug of coffee, then sets it on his desk. A glint appears in his eyes. "Ah, now that is an interesting thing worth mentioning, dear assistant. The Wordsmiths are more than fifty percent of the reason I think we'll eventually overcome demonkind. If something happens to our Heroes, then our future certainly does appear bleak."

The Commander raises a single finger. "However, the Heroes, in the end, are only two men. Their godlike power is little more than an accelerant to our growth. Once humanity reaches a critical mass, we will become unstoppable."

Neil pauses.

"Have I ever spoken to you about Kar's mother, Marie?"

Debra raises an eyebrow. "Marie? No. That name does sound human, though."

"Marie is a human, yes," Neil nods. "I won't bore you with the details, but let's just say that she is our key to someday casting aside the power of the Wordsmiths. Her full name is Marie Becker. She was humanity's Supreme Commander during the Energy Wars."

Debra's heart skips a beat. She pulls away from Neil's desk with a look of disbelief in her eyes. "What? Marie Becker?! That's impossible. That woman died 100,000 years ago, back when the Volgrim annihilated Earth!"

"She didn't," Neil replies, his voice as calm as a cloudless sky. "Marie Becker survived. She transformed her body and those of her researchers into android vessels. She has continued working for the Volgrim all this time, doing their dirty work."

"Most importantly," Neil adds, "Marie has become exceptionally powerful. She has created weapons capable of annihilating planets. She possesses a godlike AI with enough computing potential to make Solomon's Crown look like a joke. Do you believe a woman with such aspirations has given up on obtaining her freedom? No. I think not. Marie is the one who can help us unlock humanity's true potential. That is why I say that the Wordsmiths serve as little more than gasoline for humanity's fire. Once we secure Marie's power, we will no longer need the Heroes."

Debra wrings her hands together. "But, sir... how do you know Marie will help us? Has she contacted you in the last six years? Have you spoken to her at all?"

A strange smile spreads across Neil's face. "I haven't. However, I've a feeling that, due to certain upcoming events, Marie will have no choice but to assist us. Kar has spoken about his mother at length. She dotes on him like no other, always telling him her secrets, which he relays to me. I've learned a great deal about what Marie's capabilities, and that knowledge allows me to prepare all manner of uses for her."

"Even if Marie is everything you claim," Debra says, "I don't see how she can help us. She led humanity 100,000 years ago and we lost the war. Won't the same thing happen again?"

"No, it won't. We will succeed this time. Please, Debra. Believe in me, if not Marie. When have I ever failed you?"

Debra lowers her eyes. "In the six years I've known you? Not once, sir."

"That's right. Remember when Bahamut died? You became lost. You had no purpose. I've spent every day since my release from Bahamut's magic plotting and planning to defeat the bloodskins. Do you think I would be so foolish as to overlook Marie's past failures?"

"Of course not, sir," Debra says, her voice low. "I... I just worry that you might... you might..."

"Die? Perhaps. Everyone does eventually," Neil says. "Even the angels. Death is only a precursor to the afterlife. I must leave this existence with enough dignity that the Creator will allow me to see Melia, Barth, and Sierra in the next world. How can I fail when I have drawn so close to my goal?"

"I understand," Debra says, a faint smile on her face. "If you can't succeed, who can? You're the only person I believe in, sir."

Neil and Debra both fall silent. Neil gazes at his assistant's face with a mixture of compassion and nostalgia. Eventually, he sighs.

"Oh, Debra. You remind me of Melia in so many ways. You have the same hair, the same eyes as her. Sometimes, when I look at you, I almost feel as if I never left my old life behind."

Debra blushes. She folds her hands behind her back and smiles. "Sir. If... if it would make you happier, I could speak to Hope. He... he could alter my appearance a little. He could change me into-"

"No," Neil says. He cuts her off without hesitation. "Even if you made yourself look like Melia, and even if you shared her memories, you would never become her. Much like how Hope and Jason are two different people, you mustn't try to mimic others in an attempt to fit in. Do not pity me, for I am not weak. I will endure, just as I always have."

"Sir..."

Neil shakes his head. He clasps his cup's handle and hands it to Debra. "More coffee."

"Um. Yes, of course."

The two of them fall silent as Neil turns his attention to the myriad assortment of papers on his desk. However, before he can examine them in detail, a knocking sound at his doorway pulls his attention away.

"Yes?" Neil asks, turning toward the disturbance. "Who is it?"

"It's Hans Wagner," One of Neil's guards says. "He said you were expecting him."

"Ah, right. Let him in. I had almost forgotten."

Neil smiles as his German friend saunters through the door with a small wooden box in his hand. "Hans. I expect good news."

"Neil! I found zee box faster zan I expected," Hans says, a weird smile on his face. As he steps into Neil's office, his eyes flick to Debra. "Oh! Ah, should I come back later? I did not, ahem... anticipate zat you might have company."

Neil waves Hans's concerns away. "Debra is my closest aide. Anything you have to say to me, you may always say in front of her. Now, show me the device. I've waited long enough."

Debra finishes making Neil's coffee. She turns around to watch as Hans approaches with a small, oaken box. A lock rests on its front, one with a fingerprint scanner.

"Sir? What's that?"

Neil glances at Debra. "Insurance."

Hans presses his finger against the scanner. After a moment, the box releases a faint clicking sound. It pops open, revealing a beautiful, satin glove. Its black coloration mixes with finely stitched, golden borders, giving it almost a regal appearance.

Without hesitation, Neil plucks the glove from Hans's box. He slides it onto his hand and flexes his fingers with a smile. "The fit is perfect. How does it function?"

"Zee device does not work as perfectly as I had hoped," Hans says, bowing his head meekly. "I tried to make it capable of discharging multiple times in a row, but zee damned zing would need enormous capacitors for zat to work. However, you will still be able to neutralize one target every half hour, after it recharges."

Neil frowns. "Hm. How long will it stun someone?"

"Five minutes at best," Hans replies.

"That will have to suffice. Thank you, Hans. You may go, now."

"Ah! No problem, Neil. Zees fellow is always ready to help! Haha..."

Hans waves awkwardly at Debra, then shuffles out of the room, leaving the Commander and his assistant alone.

Neil continues to flex his fingers, adapting himself to the feeling of having only one glove on his hand. As he does, Debra leans forward to examine it more closely. "Sir? I don't understand. Why do you call this glove 'insurance?'"

"In uncertain times, the more aces a man has up his sleeve, the more capable he is at dealing with unforseen situations," Neil says, keeping his words cryptic. "This glove is a weapon, one that will prove harmless to anyone without magical abilities. However, the more powerful they are, the deadlier it becomes."

Debra nods, still uncertain as to what he means. However, she doesn't press further. "I see. Well, before I leave, did you have any errands you wanted me to run?"

Neil nods. He plucks a manilla folder off his desk and hands it to her. "These are the patrol routes I want delivered to the Core personnel. Make sure Units B and C get theirs first. I want everyone working double shifts until the Wordsmiths return or the demons attack."

Debra trades Neil his cup of coffee for the files. "What if neither one happens?"

"We'll have to stay vigilant forever, then," Neil says, without a trace of sarcasm.

"In that case, I will pray for our success against the demons," Debra murmurs.

Neil's assistant takes her leave. As she heads out of his office with the files in hand, she pauses at the doorway.

"Sir. Have you heard from Annette recently?"

Neil nods. "Your sister? She's doing well. I spoke to her a few months ago."

Debra smiles. "Alright. As long as she's happy, so am I. Thank you for keeping in touch on my behalf."

"Anything for you, Debra."

Neil nods goodbye as Debra leaves the room. With a sigh, he takes several sips of his coffee and groans with pleasure.

"Damn. That woman always makes it just the way I like it."

Neil returns his attention to his desk. After polishing off his coffee, he spots an unfamiliar envelope tucked under his Bible.

"Hm? What's this?"

With a frown, Neil snatches the envelope and glances at its front.

Immediately, his eyes narrow.

"Damn. It couldn't be!"

Neil jumps out of his chair and power-walks to his office's entrance. He grabs the shoulder of one of his bodyguards. "Did anyone come here while I was at my meeting earlier?"

The soldier jumps in surprise? "What? No, Commander! Nobody! Only your assistant, Debra!"

Neil gazes into the man's eyes, looking for hints of deception. Eventually, he pulls away and nods. "I see. Never mind. Keep on your guard."

"Y-yes, Commander."

The young soldier shuffles nervously and breathes a sigh of relief as the head of the Core's internal forces strides back inside. Once Neil leaves earshot, he whispers to the other bodyguard, "...I think I peed a little."

Inside his office, Neil tears open the envelope. Its contents prove brief, but alarming.

"...Something always has to go wrong. That stupid woman! She must have borrowed some of Hope's idiocy to stride into the Labyrinth without my permission. Damn!"

Neil's eyes glaze over. He gazes at a painting on the wall while debating his next move.

"I can't spare the manpower to retrieve her. Hopefully, Amelia will manage on her own. If Hope returns and she isn't here... I don't know what he'll do."

"Leave it to a foolish, love-struck woman to throw a wrench in my plans."

Author Notes:

This is Neil Adams.

This is Hans Wagner.

This is Makoto Ueda.

These are all three men.

Part 224: Gressil's Children

Shadows shift. Specters skulk. Within the Labyrinth's recesses, an army stomps the floor, creating thunderous footsteps and shaking Hell's foundations. Despair follows in their wake. Goblins, orcs, skeletons, and a host of other monsters march together while forming orderly ranks. Each species keeps to its own cluster, allowing the most durable among them to take up the forward positions, while the weaker, nimbler ones keep to the rear.

A goblin, one with blackened skin and bright red eyes, plays with a knife while marching. Unique among his species, the charcoal-skinned creature stands out among the greenery of his comrades. As the hallway begins to expand and widen, the goblin chuckles to himself.

"Hehe. Stupid fleshies ain't survivin' til nightfall. Kekeke..."

Hungry, the lone Obsidian Goblin among the advancing army, spreads his lips apart to reveal a vicious, bloodthirsty smile.

"Me want find fleshy girl. Hehe... hold her down... cut skin... kekeke...!"

To Hungry's left, a scrawny, malnourished-looking goblin, draws a little closer. "Hungry big strong! Me think you find best girly for cutting! Keekeekee!"

Hungry stretches to stand on his tip-toes while marching. "We get close, yet? Where big Core at?"

"We still ways away!" The scrawny goblin says. "Why big rush? We find cute girly soon enough!"

"Don't like waiting," Hungry complains. "Stupid orcies blocking path. All me see is orc butts!"

The two goblins grumble and whine, but they don't dare step out of line. With orcs and minotaurs up ahead, and harpies and skeletons at their rear, the goblins know better than to cause a ruckus.

"All halt!" A minotaur up front roars. Tormud Goldenhorn, leader of the Goldenhorn tribe, raises his fist to slow the procession. His warriors and the orcs come to an abrupt stop, forcing the other species in the rear to halt their advance as well. Countless grumbles and complaints come from the back, but Tormud ignores them.

"Hm? Where this place?" Hungry asks.

"Smells familiar... smells scary..." The scrawny goblin replies.

Ignoring military ettiquette, Hungry decides he's had enough. He leaps toward the nearest wall and grabs onto it with his specially adapted climbing claws. They tear into the Labyrinth's hardened dirt surface without any resistance, allowing him to scrabble toward the ceiling. Once he reaches the top, Hungry twists his head nearly 180 degrees, a feat few other monsters can perform.

"Hm? This place... we went to prison?!"

Hungry's curiousity instantly disappears, replaced instead with a nameless fear. The trembling goblin stares ahead at a long, dimly lit corridor, his eyes narrowing to slits so they can better pierce the darkness.

Several burnt-out torches hang from sconces on the walls, each mounted beside one or more unmarked oaken doors.

Whimpers and wails drift down the corridor, their sources originating from the poor souls trapped within Hell's heartless prison system. The stench of death lingers in the air like a stale slaughterhouse, churning the goblin's stomach. Even for a scavenger like Hungry, the decayed bodies lurking behind many of the prison's doors are far too rancid for his liking.

Boom. Boom.

A sound like thunder begins to rumble in the distance. A pair of demon imps run up to the Minotaurs and Orcs in front of the army while bowing and kowtowing profusely. They babble rapidly at the raid leaders, but Hungry can't make out their squeaky words from such a distance.

After shooting a hurried look behind themselves, the two imps dart down a path to the right, quickly fleeing the horrible creature pursuing them.

As Hungry watches, his expression grows uglier every second. Soon, he manages to make out multiple red dots drawing nearer from the darkness. A demon, standing more than nine-feet-tall, with two heads and four arms, approaches the awaiting army at a pace one might describe as 'leisurely.'

Gressil, the Labyrinth's prison warden, makes his way toward Tormud Goldenhorn. He crosses both pairs of his arms and slows to a stop before the minotaur, barely giving the commander a once-over.

"Tormud."

"Gressil."

The prison warden and minotaur leader greet each other brusquely, not bothering with any pleasantries. Tormud's normally calm and collected appearance loses its luster as beads of sweat drip down the bull's head, soaking his red and gold vest.

"You've prepared your... ahem... children, I presume?" Tormud asks.

"How could I let down my precious little sister?" Gressil asks, without a hint of camaraderie. His cold, lifeless eyes give no indication of love toward the current reigning emperor of demonkind. "She asked. I delivered."

Tormud wipes his sweaty palms on his billowing, Arabian-like pants. "Truly, you are a kind and generous brother."

Gressil narrows his eyes. "Where is Mephisto?"

The moment Gressil voices his question, a faint, ghostlike specter emerges from the wall beside Hungry. The Obsidian Goblin shrieks in fright at Mephisto's unexpected appearance and nearly loses his grip on the ceiling. He leaps to the opposite wall on his left, where he stares at the Duke of Mist with trepidation.

"D-Duke Ghost! You big scare me!"

Mephisto glances at the shivering goblin, then rolls his blood-colored eyes. "Nothing worssse than a coward."

Instead of flying over the heads of the orcs and minotaurs, Mephisto lands on the ground with a click. His skinless feet clack against the Labyrinth's floor as he turns his body corporeal. Mephisto pushes through the tightly packed bodies of seven and eight foot behemoths without hesitation.

"Ssstep assside, monsssstersss..."

Several orcs pause to gape at Mephisto with drool in their mouths before remembering how their feet function. Their brain-dead, turtle-like movements makes Mephisto groan.

"Ssstupid, brainlesss orcsss."

Mephisto hisses like a snake as he speaks. He finally makes his way to the front, where he raises his head to meet Gressil's gaze, some five feet above him.

"Gresssil. Your sssissster tellsss me you've made me a fun toy. How... thoughtful."

Gressil gazes at the Duke of Mist with a strange expression, one resembling a mixture of hatred and disgust. However, no matter the emotions swirling in his mind, Gressil doesn't bother voicing his complaints.

"My children are unruly. Do you have what it takes to control their wild instincts?"

Mephisto rises to his full height of nearly five feet tall. He straightens his posture and tries to look tough, but his skeletal body doesn't nearly come close enough to matching Gressil's dominating demeanor.

"I am the ssstrongessst necromancer who hasss ever lived. I manipulate thousssandsss of ssskeletonsss and undead every day. Do not condessscend to me, prissson massster. Know your place."

The orcs and minotaurs stare, wide-eyed, at Mephisto's tiny form. Watching the Duke of Mist confront a demon as intimidating at Gressil sends shivers down their spines. Mephisto's boldness and lack of respect for Gressil makes some of the brighter orcs wonder if the necromancer has a death wish.

"Haha," Gressil laughs coldly. "The strongest necromancer. That's a bold claim, coming from a mere duke."

Mephisto bristles at Gressil's taunt. "Implanting sssoulsss into bodiesss isss mere child'sss play. Any fool capable of touching the Nether can sssummon zombiesss and ssskeletonsss mindlesssly. Usssing them to their full potential isss what makesss me sssuperior to Valac. That isss why he died ssso many yearsss ago, while I ssstill live."

Gressil's expression contorts as a faint smile appears on his face. "We will see if you have what it takes, Duke. One wrong move, and my children will rip apart your cute little army."

Hungry crawls along the wall. He draws a little closer to watch as Gressil motions with his hands and summons a blood-colored marble of mana. The prison warden holds out his palm, allowing the magical bead to hover within Mephisto's reach.

"...Careful," Gressil says, his eyes revealing a hint of menace. "I spent six years honing their killing intent. It's become quite... intense."

Mephisto doesn't hesitate. He snatches the mana orb out of Gressil's hand and begins weaving his own magic into it. "Ksss. Possture all you wisssh, prissson massster. I wasss the one who ssseized the body of Leviathan, the lassst dragon. Nothing you create will ever compare to the leftover miasssma of- hm?"

Mephisto's eyes flick to the bloody marble hovering between his palms. The Duke of Mist grunts as he tries to forcibly suppress the energy contained within, but his voice becomes strained as he focuses his mind on the task at hand.

"Grgh...! Ksss. Thisss... thisss key isss putting up more of a fight than I expected...!"

Gressil's smile widens. "Haha. Having trouble, Duke? Would you like my help?"

"Ssshut your mouth!" Mephisto hisses. He spends another minute pouring his magic into the orb before finally tinting its blood-red color with some of his greyish mana.

"Ksss. That wasss tougher than I expected," Mephisto admits. "But a mere trifle under ordinary circumssstancesss. I could not tap into my mana asss I wissshed... it felt asss if ssssomething wasss suppresssing me."

Gressil's smile disappears.

"Faith's End has that effect on the weak. You still have a long way to go before you can call yourself the 'greatest necromancer.'"

Hungry decides he's seen enough. The little goblin scurries along the wall back to his friends, where he merges back into their ranks seamlessly.

The scrawny goblin picks his nose. "What you see, Hungry? Anything good? Anything fun?"

"Nah, just two demons wavin' their demonhoods around," Hungry says, brushing off his junior's question. "Big bunch of dumb stupids. We gonna move, soon. I bet prison is last stop before we go to Core!"

The goblins chat with one another for a few more minutes. Eventually, Tormud Goldenhorn bellows toward the backlines. "Soldiers, forward! We're going to merge with the main assault force!"

A harpie positioned behind the goblins chirps in annoyance. "Main assault force? I thought we were the main assault force. This is supposed to be my chance for guts and glory!"

"Gypsy, you're such a sadist," A second harpie mutters. "Who cares if we go first or second? We'll kill plenty of humans either way."

"Yeah..." Gypsy mutters. "...But I want to see the looks of terror on the humans' faces when we attack. They're going to piss themselves with fear! They won't know what hit them."

"Don't be so sure," The other Harpie replies. "The humans in the Core are scary. Why, they killed Lord Poloron just last month! They have those weird, faceless armor-suits, and the big guns that make loud noises... I don't want to fight them, but mother wouldn't give me a choice."

"Mother does hate cowards," Gypsy replies, a somber look on her face. "But cheer up, sis! Once we start ripping into that juicy human flesh, our troubles will finally disappear."

Both harpies click their beaks at each other, hoping to boost their morale.

The army moves forward at a steady pace and begins stomping through Faith's End, following Gressil as he and Mephisto lead the monsters toward some unknown destination.

The sounds of prisoners crying and begging for release grow louder and louder every minute. Occasionally, Hungry will glance at a door as he hears a man or a woman whimpering and crying.

"Me wonder if there any cute girlies chained up in here?"

Eventually, the army slows its pace once again, with Gressil and Mephisto having reached their destination. Once everyone comes to a stop, Hungry starts tapping his foot impatiently.

"Jeez! Start, stop, start, stop! Stupid demons always wastin' me precious time! Me gots good grub at home!"

Hungry's friend, the scrawny goblin, merely shrugs nonchalantly. "No big deal. We fight fleshies soon. Who cares if take longer?"

Hungry rolls his eyes. "You too stupid understand, Melter. Me hate wasting time- hm?"

Hungry's gaze flicks toward one of the nearby doors. Unlike all of the others the army has passed so far, this one appears far more heavily fortified, with more than two dozen locks, latches, and bolts preventing its occupant's escape.

Hungry takes a step toward the door. As he does, he notices a wooden plaque hanging on its front, one with a single word scratched onto its surface.

Forbidden.

"Hm? Hehehe... me wonder what inside here?"

Hungry's curiosity makes him walk toward the door. However, his scrawny friend, Melter, grabs his arm. "No touch! This place Gressil's prison. Don't you remember? Kippo came here, made big mess. Now he dead!"

Hungry frowns. "Me just want take a peek..."

"No, dummy! That door locked up real tight! Whatever inside, you no want see. Gressil kill you!"

At the mention of Gressil's name, Hungry's curiosity dims dramatically.

"Eh! You right. Me not stupid enough to touch door. Me go see what Gressil and Mephisto doing instead!"

Melter relaxes noticeably. "Yeah! Me go with you! Standing around too boring."

The goblins once again leap onto the walls and scurry toward the ceiling. Their eyes flick into the distance, where Gressil and a trembling Mephisto stand in front of an open cell. Odd-sounding slurping and chewing noises emanate from inside, along with the sounds of snapping bones and sinew.

Rather than getting closer, both goblins keep their distance. They strain as hard as possible to hear Gressil and Mephisto's words.

"...cute? I made them exceptionally durable," Gressil says. The prison master's tone remains unemotional and distant, as if he's only describing a meal he ate ten years prior. "The humans will find their 'guns' lackluster against my children's bone armor."

Mephisto takes a step back from the doorway. His expression becomes a mixture of disgust and awe as he gazes at whatever lingers within the cell.

"Ksss. Gresssil, you are truly... a nasssty creature."

"Don't flatter me," Gressil growls. "Now, go. Take my children and leave. I've no interest in how you use them."

Gressil turns to walk away. After he walks a few steps, Mephisto calls out to him. "Ksss, wait! Thessse creaturesss... what ssshould I call them?"

Gressil pauses. His dominant head turns to look at Mephisto.

"Why should I care? Name my children whatever you like."

After a slight pause, a glint appears in Gressil's eyes.

"...However. If I had to pick... I'd call them..."

"...the Grez."

Part 225: Stormbringer Begins

Attention: All Core personnel. Demonic activity has been detected in sector 2.

Alert! Threat level has now risen to yellow.

Attention: All Core personnel. Demonic activity has been detected in sectors 2 and 3.

Mobilize immediately. Take your positions at your battle stations. This is not a drill. Execute lockdown procedure Neil Foxtrot Alpha.

Warning! Warning! Demonic attack on sectors 2 and 3 imminent. Threat level has now risen to red. Automatically activating all available Transforming Replicant Exosuits. Hostiles are now approaching the Core's entrance!

* * *

All across the Labyrinth Core, thousands of soldiers leap into action. Monsters, humans, and even the demon defectors who left behind their species. While all of the humans and a large majority of the monsters gear up in their T-REX battlesuits, the demons unable to use battlesuits take to the rear and begin activating magic to prepare themselves for the imminent battle.

Neil Adams, commander of the Core's military, arrives at the center of the room while donning his bright blue-and-red T-REX, a specially modified exosuit equipped with an advanced autonomous battle function. With heavier armor to protect his vital organs, Neil's exosuit affords him more defense than the standard exosuit, but at the cost of speed and mobility.

At his side stands Lieutenant Henry, the highest ranking officer among all of the young recruits. Unlike Neil, his exosuit appears identical to the standard models, with its only distinctive design choice being the three orange arrows on his chest, revealing his military ranking.

The young Lieutenant begins issuing orders immediately, while Neil observes.

"Brace the entrance! Throw down all the support beams you can manage! Johnson, train your squad's guns on the central area! Make sure there's a three-foot gap so the bloodskin bastards can slip through! Funnel them in like we practiced. Ruger, I want your snipers ready to tag anyone who slips past the forward lines! Aim for the Brutes and anyone above the Lord rank!"

Henry flicks his eyes around.

"Where is Kar?! Has anyone seen him?"

"Aye, Lieutenant!" A nearby soldier says. "Kar left to eat about thirty minutes ago! He went to Tarus II!"

"Well, don't just stand there!" Henry shouts. "Recall him immediately! Damn, of all the unlucky moments he could choose to leave..."

Henry flicks his eyes back to the entrance. Already, a distant series of shrieks and clicks begins to draw near the giant double-doors protecting the Core as countless demons and monsters rush toward the human's encampment.

Warning! Demons have annihilated the defenses in Sectors 2 and 3. The demonic army is now approaching Sector 1. Warning! Threat level has been revised to maximum!

A robotic female voice speaks overhead, her words transmitted through not only a series of speakers embedded in the ceiling, but also the helmets of the exosuit-wearing soldiers.

"Skree! Skreeee!!"

Outside the Core, a series of terrible, monstrous screeches increase in volume and intensity as the horde draws nearer. Sounds of cannonfire tear through the air as the Core's automated lasers begin ripping the horde to shreds, along with a few hundred soldiers stationed outside the doors. In less than a minute, the armored soldiers jump inside, moving as quickly as they can.

One of the newcomers leaps toward Neil and Henry. "Commander!" He yells, as he hits the ground with a heavy thud. "Something's not right! The demons approaching us... we couldn't hurt them at all! They're different from what we expected!"

Before Henry can reply, Neil speaks. "Different? In what way?"

"I... I can't explain!" The man says, as his voice begins to tremble. "They had heavy armor all over their bodies, and they looked more like monsters than demons! They-"

"They're here!" A soldier near the doors cries.

Moments later, a tremendous bang mirroring the sound of a 500 pound bell crashing into concrete rings out from the double doors. The demonic horde crashes against them with the fury of a hundred hurricanes, smashing both doors open as if their fifty-ton-weight were nothing at all.

"What the hell?!" Henry exclaims. "The doors! Only a Duke could-"

"Get down!" Neil barks. He grabs Henry and yanks him to the ground right as a two-ton steel beam goes flying toward them. It narrowly misses taking them out and instead crashes into the sniper squadron, killing thirteen men and women instantly.

Henry and Neil jump to their feet. They barely give each other a once-over and instead turn their attention toward the cloud of dust and smoke at the entrance.

"How... how could the demons unleash such power?" Henry asks. "Not even Kar can shove the doors open so effortlessly..."

With a cloud of smoke and debris obscuring their vision, the humans nearest the doors try to pick themselves up. They clamber to their feet, ignoring the agonizing injuries dotting their bodies. Despite the exosuits' defensive properties, demonkind's battering-ram attack still manages to kill and wound more than a hundred soldiers.

"SKREE!"

A terrifyingly high-pitched scream erupts from within the smoke. A moment later, a two-foot tall monster leaps out of the debris. It barrels toward a male marine faster than he can react. The man's exosuit does nothing to protect him against a mass of fangs and teeth as the creature shreds through his nanite armor like a hot knife through butter.

The marine's comrades spin to face the invader. They unload a hail of bullets at it, only for their shots to ricochet off a hardened dermal carapace enveloping its body.

Angered by the tiny, ticklish pellets, the creature raises its head to screech again, finally giving everyone a good look at its appearance.

Two short, stumpy little legs sit attached to the underside of the monster's long, slug-shaped body. The creature's slender tail presses against the ground, giving it lots of flexibility and movement options, while its triangle-shaped head narrows to an arrow-like point. Knife-shaped teeth stick out of the creature's mouth, making it resemble a miniature shark, while its beady yellow eyes flick toward anything that moves.

Even scarier, two long protrusions stick out of the creature's back. Both of them narrow into powerful bone-spears, resembling the talons of a praying mantis. Thus, the monster can pierce even the thickest armor when impaling its prey.

This creature is none other than one of the Grez.

Neil and Henry stare with wide-eyed horror at the monster that has emerged from the smoke. "Mother Mary and Father Joseph," Neil whispers. "What... what is that?"

He doesn't get an answer. The Grez unfurls a pair of thin grasshopper wings from its side and flaps them like a hummingbird. Before anyone can react, it pounces at another soldier and stabs its bone-lances through his chest, spearing him to the ground and ending his life in an instant.

Moments later, the rest of the horde arrives. One hundred more Grez barrel out of the smoke like jaguars stalking prey. They pounce and fly at anything in their path, shrugging off bullets and plasma blasts with ease. In the blink of an eye, the monsters rip apart the Core's well-prepared defenses, sending waves of panic throughout the humans' ranks.

Neil narrows his eyes. Well played, Ose. You caught me off-guard with these new shock troops. However, you're not the only one with a few tricks up their sleeve.

The Commander darts away, leaving Henry on his own. The Lieutenant leaps toward the nearest Grez and unsheathes a nanoblade at his waist. He swings the weapon upward, aiming for the monster's fleshy underside. Before it can kill his comrade, Henry impales the abomination's gastrointestinal tract, causing it to shriek in pain. What follows are ten seconds of desperate struggling as Henry dodges the creature's snapping jaws and talons. He keeps it at bay with his sword while ducking and dodging its erratic movements.

After a few seconds of intense combat, Henry yanks out his blade, spins it around, and plunges the pointy end into the monster's eye.

The Grez finally shudders to a stop, its life-force spent.

Henry pants like an exhausted dog. "Gods! How... how could this thing give me more trouble than the average Baron?! It's too ferocious!"

Henry yanks the soldier he just rescued to his feet, then turns his attention toward the other Grez entering the battlefield. With a flick of his eyes, he activates his Commander Frequency, allowing him to transmit a message to everyone on the field.

"Attention, all troops! Do not fight these invaders one-on-one! Tackle them in teams of three or more! Aim for their underbelly and head. Their dermal armor is too strong for our low-caliber munitions to pierce."

Henry continues joining the melee, using his sword to take on the horrible new demon monstrosities all on his own. With humanity's ranks in disarray, the other allied monsters jump in to help pick up the slack.

Several allied harpies fly above the double doors and cling to the Labyrinth's walls with their clawed feet. They clutch the weapons wielded by the fallen sniper platoon and take potshots at any invader they can land a clean shot on. Meanwhile, three minotaurs use their tremendous muscle and bulk to assist their human allies wherever possible.

Thanks to the molding properties of the T-REX's, every allied monster wears armor adapted to their body shapes. The Minotaurs manage to triple their strength, bringing themselves up to the level of an average low-ranking Demon Baron. Even so, they can't fight the enemy monsters one-on-one, given their inability to pierce the monster's carapaces.

* * *

Minutes pass.

Henry, the most talented fighter in the entire Core, manages to solo-kill more than twelve of the invading creatures. Even so, his stamina begins to run on fumes as he hacks, slashes, and stabs the thirteenth invader to death. Gasping for breath, Henry jumps backward to put some distance between himself and Ose's monstrosities.

At that moment, Neil calls out, "Henry. Catch!"

Henry whips his head around just in time to see three baseball-sized metal balls flying at his face. Despite his exhaustion, the young lieutenant raises his arms with practiced swiftness and snatches the devices out of the air. He holds one in each hand, and a third under his right armpit.

"The nanite bombs!" Henry yells. "Just what we needed!"

Henry activates the grenade-like devices by pressing a button on their top, then he lobs them at the doorway. The moment they strike the Labyrinth's floor, five-foot masses of nanites erupt out of the containment grenades and leap at the nearest Grez, engulfing them like giant squids devouring crabs. The Grez shriek in anger, only for their screams to fall silent as the nanites chew through skin, bone, and armor to eviscerate their weakest points.

Each grenade takes out four to five of the invading monsters at once, slowing their movements and preventing their entry. However, after less than two minutes, the nanites lose their charge and scatter to the wind, becoming little more than inert masses of ash amidst the creature's bodies.

"Damn!" Henry curses. "Give me more, Neil!"

Henry turns to look for his Commander, only to frown. Neil's red and blue battlesuit is nowhere to be seen.

After scanning the Core's gigantic chamber for a split-second, Henry finally locates Commander Adams. Neil holds a giant four-foot-long anti-tank rifle, with a barrel extending more then two feet forward. Thanks to the strength his exosuit gives him, Commander Adams lifts the 100-pound gun as easily as if it were a plastic toy.

Batoom! Batoom!

One shot after another, Neil sends bullets flying with pinpoint precision at the Grez's centers of mass. His bullets rip through their armor and tear out the other side. Each shot kills a Grez without fail, spraying their entrails fifteen feet across the Core.

Slowly but surely, humanity manages to push back the demonic invaders. Ten thousand Core personnel fight back against two hundred of the demons' newest shock troops. Still, the horror the monsters inflicted earlier in the battle leaves severe psychological wounds on the survivors.

Neil's helmet gives him another bullet flight prediction, allowing him to nail a ghoulish monster right as it pounces at one of his Captains. "Their numbers seem to be slowing. Ready yourselves! The main demon attack force is sure to strike soon! They won't give us a moment to regroup."

His words transmit into every exosuited soldier's earpiece. Allied demons sling fire and ice at the invaders, while the Harpies continue sniping all the heads they can locate.

However, despite Neil's warning, several more minutes pass. The monsters terrorizing the Core dwindle in number while slowing to a trickle from outside.

Henry's heart revs to maximum as he slays his thirtieth armored beast. He flicks his eyes around, only to survey the battlefield in confusion. "That's it? Only two hundred of these creatures? Something's not right."

Hardly has Henry voiced his concerns, before a voice speaks from his right. "No! Behind us!"

The young Lieutenant whips his head around, only for a lightning bolt of shock to rip through his body. "Mephisto!"

Behind humanity, from three of their seven available warp-gates, a flood of zombies, skeletons, and other undead monsters come pouring out. Their numbers rapidly increase, as if they were a river breaking free of a dam's constraints.

At the same time, the sounds of even more screeching than ever resound from outside the Core's dual-doors. A flood of monsters, far denser than before, barrels toward the Core at full speed.

The color drains from Henry's face. "That was only the first wave. There are more coming, plus Mephisto's undead! Everyone, fall back! Protect our paths of retreat! Defend the warp-gates!"

Above the battlefield, an aetherial Duke hovers with his head poking out of the ceiling.

Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, grins evilly. His bloodshot eyes glow with an eerie luster as he scrutinizes the battlefield.

"Hehehe... you sssilly humansss... alwaysss underessstimating usss demonsss. That will be your downfall..."

"Now go, my prettiesss... I ssstill need to sssnatch my ultimate prize today. Ossse be damned."

Author Notes:

Expect to see the other models soon!

This is the Standard-issue T-REX.

NANOSUIT T-REX
THE CRYOPOD
TO HELL

Part 226: Humanity's Might

From the innermost depths of Hell, a flood of Grez four times bigger than the first wave barrels toward the Labyrinth Core. Behind them, countless orcs, goblins, harpies and skeletons join together to create a balanced array of talents. They rush down the great hallway leading to the Core and leap through the swung-open double doors, only to arrive in the midst of chaos.

Humans, monsters, and demons join hands to fight back the flood of fearsome Grez, each of Gressil's children wielding strength comparable to Demon Barons. The terrifying monsters rip through armor and flesh with their bone-spears, allowing them to skewer anyone daring or foolish enough to block their path.

"Gah!" Henry cries out, as his astoundingly-sharp nanoblade glides along the underside of a leaping Grez, peeling the monster's skin back like a potato. The Grez utters a screech of pain and crashes into an allied female minotaur, its dead body becoming a battering ram. The minotaur roars in anger, but before she can lift the dead Grez off herself and leap to her feet, a second Grez jumps at her from the side and chews her head off with a single bite.

Henry turns to howl at the dead minotaur. "Sheera! No!!"

Despite the agony and fatigue wracking his body, Henry dives toward the Grez that killed his friend and decapitates it with a perfectly aimed swing of his sword. He narrowly pierces the chinks in the monster's armor and leaves it dead in a puddle of bubbling blood.

"Gasp... gasp... my chest, hnngh! Every bone in my body aches..."

While Henry takes a moment to steady himself, Neil's voice transmits into his ear. "Everyone, watch out. A horde of low-level monsters has just arrived in the Core. I'm activating our first trump card in response."

Henry's heart skips a beat. The automated railguns!

He raises his eyes to the ceiling, where a flurry of movement reveals the disappearance of cloaking technology, as the Core's roof 'tiles' melt away, revealing more than fifty turret armaments.

"Finally!" Henry roars. "Attacking us will be the last mistake these bastards ever make!!"

Hungry arrives along with the rest of his goblin comrades. As an Obsidian Goblin with skin as hard as demonstone, he assumes the role of their leader, raising his fist to the air. "Kill fleshies! Rip heads off and tear skin! Nyehehehe!"

Despite their diminutive height, the goblin species boasts incredible speed, cockroach-like wall-crawling, and the ability to leap more than thirty times their body length. When coupled with their above-average intellect and burrowing prowess, they become a versatile group of harassers capable of assisting the bulkier monsters.

Hungry and the rest of the goblins leap atop the shoulders of nearby orcs and minotaurs. Despite their makeshift mounts' awkward and clumsy movements, the goblins stand firmly without clenching their toes, all thanks to their remarkable sense of balance.

Boom!

Hungry's mount, the great Minotaur Clan Leader known as Tormud Goldenhorn, stomps his feet and flares his nostrils. The mighty minotaur bellows a warcry, then rushes through a gap in the Grez's flanks with his greataxe raised over his head.

Before him, a human soldier with a nanoblade fights two Grez all by himself. He finishes the first one off with a stab to its head, only to turn and take a step back in surprise when he sees the enemy minotaur barreling toward him.

With a deft hop, the human narrowly avoids the second Grez's bonespears as they lance toward him with deadly intent. He pushes off the nearest one with his hand and leaps at Tormud, intending to meet the clan leader's axe with his sword.

Both combatants swing at each other. However, contrary to the human's expectations, the clan leader arcs his swing slightly to avoid the human's nanoblade. He aims for the exosuit's chest, while allowing Hungry to protect him from the incoming blade.

Hungry's lips curl into a menacing grin. Four hands better than two! Stupid fleshie!

Hungry leaps into the sword's path. His body acts like a solid, impenetrable barrier, deflecting the human's sword while allowing Tormud to land a crushing blow against the human's chest.

THUNK!

The human, unprepared for the combination of minotaur and goblin, goes flying backward. He crashes into the ground, bounces, and rolls. He lands at the feet of two other commandos, who cry out in horror. "Henry!"

Hungry, having taken the nanoblade's attack like a champ, plummets to the ground, then lands on his hands and feet like a cat. He springs into the air and repositions himself atop the clan leader's shoulder without missing a beat. "Nyehehe! Nice teamwork, big bull-man!"

Tormud flashes a wicked grin. "Haha. For a king to have the best assistant, truly, I have the Devil's blessing. Once we crush these rebels, I'll make you my most trusted squire!"

Hungry's eyes widen. "Oooh! Squire! That my favorite food!"

Tormud ignores Hungry's silly comment. He charges at Henry and the other two commandos, confident in his upcoming victory.

However, at that moment.

From the ceiling above, a series of piff noises resound, each one sounding vaguely like a child spitting gum.

Hm?

Tormud flicks his eyes upward.

Splort.

The minotaur's head evaporates as a four-millimeter piece of shrapnel tears through his skull at fifty times the speed of sound. Even with his resilient body, the minotaur king doesn't get a moment to contemplate his existence.

"Huh? Big boss? Why you- uwah!"

With his head gone, Tormud's body falls forward into the dirt, sending Hungry sprawling. The obsidian goblin faceplants onto the Labyrinth's floor, bewildered at how Tormud could have stumbled over his own feet.

"Stupid clumsy bull-faces! Always tripping over nothing!"

Hungry jumps to his feet. He spots the faceless human soldier Tormud 'killed' rising as well, and frowns. "Huh? Fleshie make live? How? Big axe hit chest!"

Turning around, Hungry starts to open his mouth to question Tormud's skills. At that moment, he finally notices the minotaur's headless body.

"W-what?! Who kill... how?!"

Piff. Piff. Piff.

Bursts of air continue exploding from the ceiling. Silent beacons of death rain from the sky, piercing even the heaviest of demon armor.

"Skreeee?!"

A hundred Grez fall to the human's first trump card. The railguns, developed by Phoebe and perfected by Hans Wagner, demonstrate their power by targeting the strongest monsters among the invaders. When coupled with the Harpie snipers and the practiced movements of the resistance commandos, they manage to kill fifty monsters every time they fire a salvo. The Core's elite warriors synchronize their movements, always managing to step away two seconds before the railguns fire, preventing themselves from getting caught in the crossfire.

"Augh! What's going on?!"

"Filthy fleshbags! Who killed my friend?!"

"You'll regret pissing me off, you damned-"

The last voice falls silent, as its speaker perishes to a metal shard entering their skull.

Waves of fear sweep through the invader's ranks. Even with the power of 800 pseudo-Barons and countless monsters, they can't break the humans' morale.

From the ceiling, Mephisto narrows his eyes. He continues to puppeteer the Grez and undead, making them attack the humans from their front and flanks. However, the resistance forces prove ten times more resilient than he expected. The humans cover each other's backs, while the invaders rush recklessly and without any teamwork. The gap in skill allows the humans, along with their superior weaponry and exosuits, to push the monster army back time and again.

Mephisto manipulates the mana orb Gressil gave him. He scowls angrily as another fusillade of shrapnel slaughters thirty more of his Grez. "Ksss! I only have a thousssand of Gresssil'sss monssster sssoldiersss! If only their intelligence wasssn't ssso poor, I could more easssily control them!"

Despite their fearsome appearance, the Grez suffer from a lack of brainpower. Born via the corrupted bodies and souls of prisoners, their tortured minds lose all sanity, transforming them into mindless killing machines. Even Mephisto's superior puppeteering only allows him to direct their rage at specific targets. He can't control their individual movements beyond the lowest levels of persuasion.

"The Grez may posssesss ssstrength and defenssse in abundance, but their lack of witsss allowsss the flessshbagsss to overcome them with intelligence. Cursssesss! I thought thessse monsssterssss would be undefeatable, but they aren't any more valuable than my zombiesss and ghoulsss!"

Mephisto curses his bad fortune. However, even as he does, a sense of satisfaction appears in the back of his mind.

"Hehehe... but ssso what if the humansss win thisss battle? I am the one who controlsss the River Ssstyx. Our numbersss are endlesss. Let usss sssee how long the flessshbagsss hold out, while our asssault continuesss... neverending."

Piff. Piff.

Another hailstorm of shrapnel launches from the ceiling, killing fifty additional invaders. The allied Harpies continue to offer supporting fire, sniping from above the double doors at any monster who comes close to killing their friends.

As the demon's forces pour into the Core, Mephisto's eyes flick along the ceiling, where he spots the strange machinery killing his minions.

"...It ssseemsss I mussst dirty my bonesss with thisss mundanity... kekeke..."

With a flash of his eyes, Mephisto skitters across the ceiling like a hellish specter of death. Despite possessing the lowest strength among all the Dukes, he still manages to coil his hands around the nearest railgun and rip its titanium frame apart, piece by piece. With a vicious grin, Mephisto rears back his arm and hurls the one-ton metal embattlement toward a cluster of humans below.

CRASH!

The destroyed railgun crushes ten human soldiers into blood soup, startling the others and causing them to jump back in alarm. They raise their eyes to the ceiling and gape as they witness the Duke of Mist destroying their precious Grez-killing lifesavers.

"One! Two! Three!" Mephisto cackles, as he flits from one railgun to the next. Each time, he hurls their destroyed carcasses toward the densest cluster of humans, summoning pandemonium among their ranks.

Several allied harpies spot Mephisto darting around. They take aim and fire at him with surgical precision, but their bullets pass through his aetherial body without so much as making him flinch.

Mephisto glances at the harpie snipers. "Ssso, you wisssh for death, eh?"

Swish!

Mephisto hurls the fourth railgun at the harpies, causing them to chirp in fright and dart away from their perch atop the double doors. The twisted metal machine crashes into where they stood and explodes into a pile of debris, narrowly missing their fleeing forms.

All around the Core, destroyed computer terminals, once used to calculate the vectors of planets for the warpgates, intermingle with the bodies of humans and monsters, along with the twisted wreckage of the fallen railguns. The battlefield shifts as Mephisto's zombies continue swarming from the worlds he prepared prior to the fight. They clamber over the fields of debris and attempt to overwhelm humanity's resistance forces with three times their numbers.

Neil holds firm. He stands next to the Tarus II warpgate, waving his hands and firing off orders to assist his comrades in their struggles. Thanks to his leadership, the battle-hardened commandos continue pushing their enemies back time and time again.

However, despite Neil's fierce courage and his aura of leadership, the human commander begins to sweat under his suit.

Damn. We're only facing the first wave, and already I've lost 300 soldiers. Not since Beelzebub's ambush two years ago have I lost so many brave men and women. Aside from the demon's newest abominations, we've only fought the weakest of their forces. Under ordinary circumstances, we'd crush them without mercy!

Once Mephisto destroys the rest of our railguns, we'll become sitting ducks. I can only imagine how far we'll fall after the other Barons and Dukes appear!

Neil continues to order his troops around. A particularly large zombie squadron rushes the soldiers, soaking up their bullets while allowing a horde of orcs to leap over their heads, but Neil directs his troops into better positions. Humanity takes out that threat with ease.

Meanwhile, Hungry skitters along the walls and chases after the harpie snipers. Thanks to their flying abilities, they manage to dodge Mephisto, but they find themselves unable to shake off the relentless little obsidian goblin snapping at their heels.

"Neil! Chrrrup! Get this little ankle-biter off our tails! We need support up here!"

Neil frowns at their request. Only one goblin? Ah! An obsidian-type. I missed the little bastard amongst all this chaos.

Rather than directing manpower toward the lone goblin, Neil flicks his eyes toward the wreckage of a nearby railgun. To his amusement, it still appears mostly functional.

"We'll see how sturdy your skin is, you little wretch."

Neil grabs the mass of metal and swings its big, bulky frame toward Hungry as the goblin pounces at an allied harpie. The harpie tries to dodge, but she doesn't flap her wings quickly enough. Hungry latches onto her armored wing and scratches it over and over. "Fall down, big ugly bird! Fall!!"

With her balance thrown off, the harpie plummets to the ground below, where she crashes into the Labyrinth floor hard enough to snap her neck. Luckily, her T-REX absorbs 99% of the impact, leaving her only momentarily stunned.

Hungry grabs the Harpie's helmet and tries to yank it off, but with Centurion's nanites bonded at the molecular level, they prove more durable than titanium. His scrawny little arms don't even scratch the exosuit.

Neil smiles as he aims his railgun at the goblin's head.

"God rest your soul, servant of evil."

Piff.

Neil utilizes Centurion's aiming systems to their fullest extent. He fires a piece of shrapnel directly at Hungry's head while chuckling in anticipation of the goblin's imminent demise.

Reality proves crueler than even Neil expected.

The shrapnel strikes Hungry at fifty times the speed of sound. However, instead of bursting the goblin's head like a balloon, the impact merely resembles a watermelon crashing against a titanium barrier. Hungry goes flying from the impact and smashes into the far wall. The little goblin disappears among the sea of incoming monsters, making Neil curse like a sailor.

"Shit! How could that goblin's skin be so resilient?! Even the Grez can't withstand a shot from our railguns!"

Hungry lays on the floor, out of sight, unmoving. The poor little goblin's brains bounce around inside his skull, blinding him with pain. When finally Hungry opens his eyes, his vision appears as a blur of exotic colors, making it difficult to see.

"Uhhhh... me head... uhhhh..."

Hungry gingerly touches a spot above his right ear, where he finds a razor-sharp piece of shrapnel embedded in his skull. Somehow, the railgun's projectile became stuck in his iron-like bones, saving him from an instant death.

However, fresh blood continues to trickle from the wound, making Hungry wince in pain. "Nnngh... mama... mama, me hurt real bad..."

Neil casts aside any thoughts about the obsidian goblin after he doesn't see it get back up and rejoin combat. "I might not have killed it, but I bet that little bastard will be smarting for a while."

His eyes flick to the ceiling, where Mephisto finishes dismantling the final railgun. After casting it to the ground, the Duke of Mist flashes a devilish grin at the blue-and-red human gazing up at him.

"Kekeke. Neil Adamsss... sssuch a wonderful ssspecimen. How unfortunate for you that Ossse will capture you, today. With you in our cussstody, we will sssuppresss the sssecond Wordsssmith. He will not dare to ssstrike usss with you in our clutchesss... hehe..."

Mephisto whispers conspiratorially to himself as he disappears into the ceiling and begins flying through the walls in his ghost form.

"Kss. Where isss Beelzebub? I have done my part to bait out the humanssss' firssst attack. Mussst I do everything by myssself? Wait! Hm? Ohohoho... look who hasss showed up."

Mephisto senses the appearance of a powerful magical aura. He pops his head out from behind the warpgates, where he witnesses a gigantic creature striding up behind Neil.

Neil flinches as a huge, green hand suddenly grabs his shoulder. "Jesus, Kar! Don't scare me like that!"

Kar, the King of All Monsters, flashes a croco-grin. "Sorry to keep you waiting, Ox-arms. I could not bring myself to waste White-Hair's delicious food."

Neil glances at Kar's chest. There, he notices something he's never seen before.

"Kar. You have a T-REX, now?"

"White Hair's present. Butterfly insists that I wear it."

"As do I," Neil says with a nod. "You haven't a clue the horrors we've been facing. The demons brought out a horde of new monsters. Each one was nearly as strong as a Baron."

"Yet you survived, as I predicted," Kar replies. The croco-sphinx presses his T-REX's activation button three times, causing nanites to swarm out of its straps and engulf his body. "And now, I am here. You do not need to worry anymore."

Kar's green skin vanishes as the silver colored metal wraps around him and solidifies, making him resemble mecha-Godzilla, from the classic science fiction movies.

Blinker flies out of the portal behind Kar. She lands on her husband's helmet and sighs. "It's too bad those metal suits won't fit me! I wanna look all cool and badass too, you know!"

The Monster King strides toward the horde of monsters and laughs. "Hurgh. As long as I am around, you will never fear anyone, my dear Butterfly. Watch as your husband easily destroys these weaklings."

Several minotaurs and orcs spot the metal-covered Sphinx as he nonchalantly strolls toward them. Kar's crocodilian mana washes over them, causing instinctual fear to bud in their hearts. Still, they grit their teeth and charge, forcing that nameless terror into the backs of their minds.

Kar sighs. "How unfortunate. You will be the first to die."

The reptile raises his hand into the air. Immediately, the nearest minotaur follows his movements and realizes with a start that he cannot dodge.

"Oh, shit!"

Kar casually swings his palm downward. The movement appears slow and sloppy, yet it carries the formless power of the lizards and the Sphinx.

Slap.

Without even trying, Kar bats the head off the minotaur, transforming it into a deadly projectile. The monster's skull crashes into the orc on his left and explodes in a shower of shrapnel, breaking thirty of the orc's bones.

"Aaargh!"

The orc cries out in pain while falling on his ass. The mere act of speaking triples his agony, causing him to blackout and faint.

The other ten monsters immediately realize how badly they've screwed the pooch. However, they don't have enough time to contemplate their life choices.

Slap. Slap. Slap.

Kar backhands three more orcs and minotaurs, killing or crippling them for the rest of their lives. Within ten seconds, he effortlessly carves his way through the enemy's forces.

"Hurgh. Being king is fun. However, I feel a little guilty picking on such weak losers."

Blinker laughs. "That's 'cause you're such a nice guy! Now, Kar, dear, remember to finish them off! It's not nice to leave these poor guys laying around in pain."

Kar nods. "Hurgh. You are right, as always, Butterfly. Sometimes, I can be so very dense. I will give them a proper burial."

Kar's eyes flash with magical energy. He drops to one knee and slaps his palm against the ground, conjuring his elemental affinity for the earth to grab and pull hundreds of nearby enemies into the dirt. Their eyes widen in terror as the Labyrinth's floor opens up to swallow them whole.

"No! Noooo!!!"

Kar sighs as he observes numerous goblins, minotaurs, and orcs falling into the floor. "This is what happens when you step onto my turf, little ones. Sadly, you will not live long enough to take my lesson to heart."

A minute later, half of the enemy forces disappear, leaving the others to sweat bullets as they gaze at the monster king.

"He's too powerful!" A minotaur exclaims.

"What're you morons standin' around for?" Hungry jeers, his vision having spottily returned. "Make a run for it!!"

The same thought crosses the minds of every enemy monster; all except for the mindless, fearless Grez. Two thousand enemy monsters turn to make for the exit, only to freeze in place as they sense a second, equally powerful mana signature traveling toward the Core.

"No way! Finally, he made it!" Hungry yells. "It's... it's Beelzebub!"

"It's Beelzebub? We're saved!"

"Haha! And you guys were gonna run?! Not me! Nope!"

The monsters who were about to flee regain their courage. They turn to face the Monster King, all while wearing looks of outrage.

"Traitor Kar! Now you're gonna die!!"

Kar's gaze travels past the monsters to the blindingly bright light flying toward the Core in the distance.

"Hurgh. Hotface. Finally, I will repay you for all the innocents you've butchered."

Part 227: Ose's Plan

Hundreds of monsters funnel through the fifty-foot-wide corridor leading to the Labyrinth Core. Orcs, Grez, and Minotaurs all bellow warcries, while their accompanying allies, the Harpies and Goblins, chirp and chitter amongst themselves.

Behind all of them, and behind the walls of skeletons making up the backline, a Demon Emperor and Duke stand idly, their attention on more pressing matters.

Beelzebub, the Duke of Inferno, simmers in silence, occasionally exhaling flames through his nostrils. As he watches another legion of monsters march toward the Core, he flicks his gaze toward Ose.

The Emperor of Infiltration stands with her shoulders and posture slumped. Her head hangs forward, while her eyes remain closed. She uses her Astral Form to observe the situation in the Core, while Beelzebub taps his foot impatiently.

What's taking this she-devil so long? Beelzebub wonders. It can't be that hard, scouting out a bunch of humans. Ose has already watched them in secret for the last three days.

Beelzebub glances down the corridor, toward the Core over a mile away, then returns his eyes to the slumped Emperor.

The moment his gaze falls on Ose's motionless form, her eyes open. She quickly raises her head, straightens her posture, and sweeps a few strands of white hair out of her face.

"As expected. The Grez aren't all my brother claimed. They have some serious flaws."

"Wonderful," Beelzebub grumbles. The Duke of Inferno crosses his arms. "Now, is it time? I've been waiting for fifteen minutes!"

Ose sighs. "I told you I'd make you part of the vanguard, Beelzebub. I'll keep my promise. Just have a little patience."

"Patience?" Beelzebub hisses. "Mephisto is your first attacker, not me! Why must I stand here and watch while he hogs all the glory?!"

Ose rolls her eyes. "Men. I already told you why you have to wait. Do you think I'm punishing you, Beelzebub?"

"I do!" Beelzebub exclaims. "This is all because I questioned you in front of the Wordsmith. Was my apology not good enough? Shall I curtsy, too?"

"You didn't apologize at all," Ose retorts. "and, in any case, my keeping you here has nothing to do with that incident. It's not as if any other demons witnessed you undermining my authority, so why should I need to make an example of you? No, instead, I'm keeping you here because... something is wrong with the human's resistance."

Beelzebub's protests come to a halt as he raises an eyebrow. "Oh? In what way?"

"Jason hasn't shown up at the battlefield, and neither has Hope. I need to capture both Wordsmiths today, yet neither of them have revealed their faces. From what I gathered over the last three days of reconnaissance, Hope and Jason both headed into the Labyrinth several weeks ago. Hope mysteriously disappeared, while Jason left Hell Harbor and traveled to space."

Ose continues. "My Astral Form isn't omnescient. Since my ascension to Emperor, I have increased the range I can leave my body by a factor of ten thousand. However. I still can't travel to space, nor can I observe multiple places at once. I haven't a clue where either of the blasted Wordsmiths went, but I do know that they never returned to the Core."

"I don't understand," Beelzebub says. "...Isn't that good news? Without the Wordsmiths, humanity will fall. How can the resistance forces stop us without their reality-bending Hero there to save them?"

"They can't," Ose admits. "but they can certainly wound us and leave a mark on our ranks. The weapons the humans have crafted are nearly as fearsome as those they built during the Energy Wars. Nevertheless, winning this war will be impossible for them as they are now, provided the Wordsmiths don't return."

Beelzebub flinches when a violent explosion detonates down the hallway, toward the direction of the Core. However, Ose pays it no mind.

"You must be worried that the Wordsmiths will go into hiding and consolidate their power," Beelzebub says, after returning his attention to the Third Emperor. "If we defeat humanity today, the Wordsmiths will, most likely, go into hiding and escape our grasp."

"Indeed. As I've said before, my plans go further than merely capturing the Wordsmiths and defeating their resistance. That is why I need you to stay behind, if only for a few minutes longer."

The Duke of Inferno stretches hard, popping his back as he releases a big yawn. "Hnngh, fine. Fine! But if you don't give the order soon, I'm going to fly in there and start lobbing fireballs, come Hell or high water. I'm sick of standing around and twiddling my thumbs."

"Noted."

Ose watches for half a minute as another thousand orcs and skeletons continue charging toward the Core. Eventually, she and Beelzebub both turn to look further upstream, where a series of demonic mana signatures emerge from the Labyrinth's depths.

"Took them seventeen minutes longer than I'd prefer," Ose mutters. "But like my mother used to say, better late than never."

Moments later, several Baron-ranked demons come rushing out of the shadows. They screech to a halt before Ose and Beelzebub while offering only a respectful tip of their heads as greeting.

Laharl, the Baron of Misery, flips her blood-red cape back and cackles madly. "Well?! Is everyone else ready to rip these fleshbags to pieces? I've been dying for some fresh, muscled meat!"

Mara, the Baron of Games, twiddles several magical cards between her fingers. "My sister is on her way. Ying-Ying wanted to make sure her nails were perfect before she joined us."

"I won't allow any mishaps," Ose snaps. "Your sister is our best Warper. She's crucial to my plans. Do what you must to get her here, and don't delay."

Mara frowns. "Fine."

Despite the Baron of Games' attitude, Ose ignores her to move onto other things. "Laharl. I want you by my side at all times. Our mission is to capture several of the high-ranking human commanders. Right now, I don't know where the Wordsmiths are. If they return, I want bargaining chips."

This time, it's Laharl whose expression deflates. "Whaaat?! C'mon, why waste my time with capturing a bunch of weaklings? I want to get out there and fight! That Kar fellow has some fat muscles; he's just my type!"

"You can have play around later," Ose growls. "Devil's sake. All of you! Start acting like proper, high-ranking demons! This is no time for fun and games. All of our asses are on the line. We have missions to complete, and I want them done properly. Understood?"

From behind Laharl and Mara, a different Baron steps forward.

Orias, Baron of the Stars, raises his voice, grabbing everyone's attention. "Forgive my interruption, Ose, but I don't understand. What do you mean 'our asses are on the line'? Are you saying there's a chance we'll lose today?"

"Not exactly," Ose says, her tone curt. "However, if we don't finish Operation Stormbringer properly, the consequences will be dire. As mere Barons, you're not privy to the information I'm witholding. It's limited strictly to Dukes and Emperors only."

"That means me," Beelzebub says, with a shit-eating grin on his face. "Maybe if you pledge yourselves to be my slaves, I'll let you in on this secr- ulp!"

Beelzebub swallows his words when Ose shoots him a nasty glare. "What?! It's a joke. Devils, you're ten times more uptight than usual."

"You're all about to find out what sort of mood I'm in, if anyone here interrupts me again. Now, listen carefully. I'm not going to repeat myself."

Ose quickly begins speaking. Occasionally, the sounds of screams or monster battlecries in the distance echo from the Labyrinth Core, but the lower ranked demons listen to Ose without interruption. Something about her mood spooks them, causing them to wonder what could make her so fearful.

"...Got it? Bael, Artorias, and the Battle Brothers will arrive last. They're too brutal for my liking, so I want them to help mop up the survivors. Most importantly, I don't want them waving their damned demonhoods around, breaking things before I get a chance to search them."

For once, Laharl tones down her frantic energy and lowers her voice. "This 'Trifancium,' you mentioned... what is it? Why are you so dead-set on finding it?"

Ose coughs into her fist. "It's an extremely precious natural resource, one which Bahamut's slaves used to mine before the humans killed her. Let's just say the applications are too profound for any demon to understand, but its value is incalculable. The Tarus II mines contain one hardened drop of Trifrancium for every 500 tons of bedrock the miners excavate. The planet possesses abundant reserves of the mineral, which is why we cannot allow the humans to occupy it any longer. The problem is, I have yet to locate where Neil has hidden the reserves he stole from Bahamut."

While Ose finishes explaining the plan, Beelzebub retreats into his thoughts.

Trifrancium. The Overlords need it for their warp travel. I don't understand much about the galaxy outside the Labyrinth, but whatever this mineral is, Ose must believe that retrieving it will put us back in the Overlord's good graces. I fail to see how tiny rocks will be our salvation, but perhaps that's why Ose is Emperor, and I'm not.

For once, Beelzebub's thoughts toward Ose turn appreciative.

I like to think of myself as intelligent, but compared to Ose, I'm nothing special. Still, it might not always stay that way. Given time, I'll surely outperform her in intellect. It will just take me some time to catch up. She does have 90,000 years on me, after all.

"Alright," Ose concludes. "These are the teams. Beelzebub will charge in first and create chaos among the humans. Laharl, you'll come with me. I need your keen senses and combat abilities to capture and interrogate the human leaders, especially Neil Adams. Orias, you will protect Mara and Ying-Ying to get them to the designated positions. The more portals we can open around the humans' capital city, the better."

"Yeah, while Bael, Artorias, and the Battle Brothers will cover our asses, right, right..." Laharl mutters. "Are we done? Can we finally get to work? Once I help you find those special rocks, I'm gonna rip some heads off."

Ose's gaze turns distant. A look of annoyance washes across her face, only to be replaced by despair.

Beelzebub stifles a smirk. Ose hates talking to demons dumber than her. I know how she feels.

"Beelzebub, now is your moment to shine," Ose says, turning away from the Barons. "You and Mephisto need to tear the Core apart, piece by piece. Break the human's morale and shatter their spirits as quickly as you can."

"Don't get your panties in a bunch. I'm an undying god compared to the rats hiding in the Core," Beelzebub laughs. "I won't need five minutes to clear out the humans' infestation."

Beelzebub ignites fire underneath his boots. Just before he leaves, Ose grabs his arm. "One last thing, before you go."

The Duke smiles. "Haha. What's the matter? Do you want a goodbye kiss?"

Ose doesn't echo his grin. "No. The humans originally planned to blow up the Core if they were in danger of losing it. Doing so would naturally destroy the warp-gates and bring an end to Stormbringer."

Beelzebub's smile disappears. "Can you stop them?"

"Of course. However, that isn't my point. Be careful. You've fought the humans dozens of times. They have a way of developing technology that can counter even the deadliest Demon Emperor. If they're willing to destroy the Core to protect their species, you can bet they'll do anything to bring you down, especially after all their comrades you've killed."

"Haha," Beelzebub laughs. "Is that all? Color me unimpressed. If the humans had the power to stop me, they'd have done so already. Certainly, Hope would have done so. Now, if you'll excuse me, I have a date with some human barbecue."

Without waiting for the go-ahead, Beelzebub blasts off and starts rocketing down the corridor, leaving Ose and the Barons behind.

Ose exhales a breath of turbid air.

"That Duke is a handful."

Mara and Laharl share a meaningful glance.

"I don't like him one bit," Mara says. "He's too headstrong, he doesn't use his brain enough, and he disrespects everyone."

"Yeah," Laharl adds. "Plus, he doesn't got any muscles. Gross."

Ose closes her eyes. "Protect my body while I scout the Core. I'll give all of you the go-ahead when the time is right. Trust me… you don't want to step inside while Beelzebub is melting steel."

Mara leans against the wall. "Fine by me. I'll just wait for Ying-Ying."

Orias mumbles something under his breath, then he takes a cross-legged seat on the ground before levitating in the air.

All of the demons wait for the Duke of Inferno to complete his initial mission, but little do they know that even the best laid plans of mice and men often go awry.

Part 228: Casual Domination

Kar, the Monster King, slaps aside a dozen minotaurs and orcs with the ease of a father spanking his children. The morale of the invading monsters plummets as they realize they can't hope to deal with just the one, singular crocodile in their midst.

However, their sentiments reverse as the Duke of Inferno's mana rushes toward them at 200 miles an hour.

"Beelzebub... Beelzebub is coming! We're saved!"

"Traitorous Monster King! Today, your treachery ends!!"

Enemy harpies screech angrily at Kar while pelting him with arrows, all of which bounce off Kar's armored T-REX. Kar doesn't even flinch. The last crocodile stands casually, with his arms crossed, and watches as the fire-flinger who slaughtered his comrades rockets toward the Core's entrance.

"Hurgh. Robot suit. Activate the anti-Hotface measures."

"COMMAND ACCEPTED, PILOT 'BIG DADDY.' ADVANCED FLAME RETARDANT SUBROUTINES ARE NOW IN EFFECT. HEAT DISSIPATION HAS REACHED THE MAXIMUM. LEVEL 4 WEAPONRY IS AUTHORIZED!"

Kar chuckles. "White-Hair. You've picked the perfect nickname for my ID. Hurgh. That is why Turtle chose you as his mate."

The Monster King doesn't move as the fireball-wreathed Duke rushes toward him from the distance. Beelzebub screeches to a halt at the Core's double-doors by unleashing a wave of flames from his palms. The sudden reversal causes more than 50 G's to press against his body for a split second, but he doesn't feel the impact at all.

"Hahaha! Perfect! We meet again, you slithering slug!" Beelzebub cackles. "After I flay the skin from your bones, I'll have my tailors turn you into a leather suit!"

Beelzebub's taunts boil the blood of the humans while invigorating the invaders morale. Immediately, the enemy and allied monsters turn to blows, joining the still-rampaging Grez to reinforce their ranks.

Kar, however, merely cocks his head.

"Hurgh. Strange. To flay the skin from my bones, you must first defeat me. Since you cannot accomplish such a feat, I can only assume you have lost your mind. How sad. The Hotface who once defeated me has degenerated into a drooling mess! I do not like to pick on the weak and stupid, but for you, I will make an exception."

Beelzebub's eyes twitch. "Such bravado, coming from the King of Monsters. Run your mouth all you like, little lizard, but today, I will drag you to the afterlife!"

The Duke of Inferno claps his palms together, sending a spherical blast of fire in every direction. Dozens of his allied monsters scream in pain as the 600-degree heat surges across their bodies, searing their exposed skin where it appears.

"Aargh! Beelzebub, you bastard! We're on your side!"

"What the hell are you doing?! You cooked my brother alive! Heartless Duke!"

Beelzebub ignores the pleas of his lessers. He grins with satisfaction as the wave of fire sweeps across Kar's armor, forcing Blinker to take cover behind her husband's mountain-like form. "Ack! Kar! Don't just let that prick burn us all to bits!"

Kar watches without moving as the wave of fire finishes surging throughout the chamber. However, aside from the cooked skin of Beelzebub's allies, Kar's comrades take negligible damage thanks to their T-REX's.

"Hurgh. Was that your opening move? How sad. Let us see how you deal with mine."

Without any preparation, Kar leaps toward Beelzebub like a jumping spider. The sudden movement surprises the Duke of Inferno, who never expected such agility from his formerly slow and clumsy enemy.

"Don't think I'll let you get close!" Beelzebub roars. He aims both of his palms at the rapidly approaching Monster King, sending a blazing firefall at Kar's chest. "Get back on the ground, you little-augh!"

Kar ignores Beelzebub's magic. He rushes through the Duke's infernal flames without slowing down and crashes into Beelzebub at a hundred miles an hour, making Beelzebub fly backward and slam against the ceiling with Kar's fist rammed through his stomach. The Monster King grins wickedly behind his faceless mask as he twitches his bloody, armored fingers.

"I know this won't hurt you, punk," Kar chuckles. "But damn, does it feel good."

Beelzebub summons two soccer-ball-sized lumps of fire in his palms, each one blazing at over a thousand degrees. "So does this!!"

The Duke swings both of his hands toward the Sphinx's exposed sides.

Boom!

A blast of heat erupts from the nanite armor protecting Kar's body. The Monster King goes flying backward, where he crashes into a pair of orcs on the ground, killing both of them instantly. The poor bastards don't get even a second's reprieve before their corpses turn into meat-paste.

"Hurgh."

Kar grunts as his scorching-hot armor cooks and boils the orcs' remains, surrounding him with a dense, bloody mist.

Beelzebub regenerates the hole in his gut instantly. "Haha. Was that all, Monster King?"

Suddenly, Kar appears from out of nowhere and leaps at Beelzebub from behind. "Never underestimate the King, Hotface!"

"What?!" Beelzebub shouts in shock. He whirls to face his opponent and lobs seven fireballs at Kar, only for Kar's body to disappear.

Immediately, Beelzebub realizes what happened. "Stupid, worthless fairy magic! Damn your illusions!"

The Duke of Inferno yanks his gaze to the ground below, where Kar's body no longer sits. The cooked corpses of the two orcs simmer and cool, but no matter where his eyes scan, Beelzebub can't locate the Sphinx.

I hate that damned fairy, Beelzebub thinks to himself. Even when I expect her illusions, I still have to defend against them.

* * *

While the Duke of Inferno battles his crocodile opponent, Mephisto keeps to the shadows, where he reaches out and touches the bodies of dead monsters and humans alike, converting them into ghouls, ghosts, and skeletons for his wicked purposes.

"Kekeke... no matter who winsss or losssesss today, it isss I who will reap the rewardsss of thisss battlefield."

Mephisto darts around underground, beneath the feet of the allies and invaders as they fight one another. Each time someone falls, Mephisto tags their body with his magic and cackles cruelly to himself.

"Yesss... yesss... good. Die fassster, ssso that I may increassse my power... kekeke!"

* * *

Neil watches Kar's battle from afar. He stands directly in front of the warpgate to Tarus II and issues commands to his soldiers, ensuring no gaps appear in their defenses.

"Only seven more of the armored-type monsters remain. Keep on your toes. Unit 7, watch your flank. Three minotaurs with obsidian axes are approaching you from your 3 o'clock. Henry, are you still breathing? Give me a status report."

Henry's voice crackles in Neil's earpiece. "I'm alive, Commander. Tired, but alive. I'm trying to conserve my energy as we fight. At the rate the monsters are funneling in, we'll probably be overwhelmed within the next twenty-four hours."

Neil narrows his eyes. "Leave the strategizing to me, Lieutenant. Just keep hacking our enemies apart. We only need to stall for time until Hope or Jason arrive."

"But, sir? What if neither of them returns?"

Henry stabs his sword down and impales a minotaur, ending the monster's life with a single blow. Neil purses his lips. "We may lose the Core, and we may lose our allied worlds, but we won't lose Tarus II. I'll make sure of that myself."

The young Lieutenant falls silent, allowing Neil to return to directing the other soldiers. "Unit 7! I told you to watch your flank! Two orcs and three goblins are approaching from your 9 o'clock!"

As Neil speaks, doubts surface in his mind.

The demons won't be able to overwhelm us with such meager forces, not even if they assault the Core for a month straight. However, aside from Beelzebub and Mephisto, they've yet to send in any Lords, Barons, or Dukes. Why are they holding back? They must have a reason.

Neil's eyes flash with insight.

Could it be? Does their leader, Ose, know where I hid the Trifancium? Beelzebub wouldn't have fired off a wide-range blast of fire otherwise. He must have been confident he wouldn't ignite the Trifrancium. If he had, he might have destroyed the whole Labyrinth.

Perhaps the demons haven't learned of Trifrancium's existence. However, I can't just pray for their ignorance. The Creator rewards those who glorify His name, not those who sully it with buffoonery.

Neil shakes his head.

If the Wordsmiths don't return, I'll have to destroy the Core. I won't allow the demons to use it against us.

* * *

Kar leaps out of the ceiling after using his earth-manipulation to burrow behind Beelzebub. The Monster King pounces at the Duke of Inferno like an angry lion, tackling the demon to the ground. Just before Beelzebub strikes the Labyrinth's floor, he flicks his gaze toward one of the many burning bodies ignited by his first attack.

Fireportation!

Instantly, Beelzebub vanishes from Kar's grasp, causing the Monster King to slam into the bodies below him without his captive.

"Hurgh! You are slippery, Hotface."

Kar turns to face Beelzebub, only to frown as the Duke of Inferno conjures a two-thousand-degree orb of fire, one bright enough to blind anyone looking directly at it.

Fwoosh!

Beelzebub begins unleashing a steady stream of unbearably hot solar energy at Kar. Its power transcends imagination as it strikes Kar at the speed of light. Instantly, Kar gets knocked backward, yet somehow, he grinds his crocodilian claws into the floor to hold himself in place.

"Huuuurgh!"

Kar grunts angrily as his suit's temperature skyrockets. Beelzebub cackles like a hyena while intensifying the solar energy. It becomes a molten monsoon of fire, one which holds the Monster King in place.

"Hahahahaha! How long can you hold on, little slug?! This is your punishment for trying to deceive Ose and me! Today, you will learn the taste of defeat!"

As Beelzebub concentrates, he wills his solar beam to become fiercer than ever. Its heat skyrockets to three thousand degrees, killing anyone within two hundred feet of its path. Countless invading monsters screech to a halt outside the Core's entry to shield their eyes from its blinding radiance.

However, even as the thick, molten energy crashes into Kar's chest, the lizard king smirks.

"Thank you for the meal, Hotface."

Kar's nanosuit begins to glow with power as Beelzebub's solar beam charges its capacitors to the maximum. Kar's exosuit, a specialized model developed by Phoebe for combatting high-level demons, expels the radiation and heat out its rear ventilators while absorbing the solar beam's latent energy for itself.

Eventually, Centurion's voice blares in Kar's earpiece.

"PILOT BIG DADDY, THE DUKE CONTAINMENT MECHANISM IS FULLY CHARGED. YOU MAY RETALIATE WHEN READY."

Hardly has Centurion spoken the words before Kar leaps forward, startling Beelzebub. The Duke flinches reflexively as the ten-foot-tall Monster King flies at him like a stinger missile, pushing through Beelzebub's flames without any resistance.

"What?!"

Beelzebub only manages to utter one word of surprise before Kar stretches out his arms in a glorious bear-hug. He wraps them around Beelzebub and yanks the Duke down to the Labyrinth's floor below, while yelling into his suit's audio receptors, "Discharge!"

Crackle!

A colossal burst of electrical energy surges from every inch of Kar's T-REX, making Beelzebub scream in pain. "EeeyaaAUGH!!"

The Duke's muscles seize up, while his normally inactive pain receptors ignite with electrical energy, making him faint. Kar slams Beelzebub into the ground, then grabs the Duke's neck with his thick, meaty claws.

"Capture complete."

Kar chuckles as his T-REX disassembles itself and wraps around Beelzebub's body like an angry anaconda. The suit's nanites transform into powerful shackles and mitts, pinning Beelzebub's arms behind him while also morphing into a head covering to wrap around his face and gag him, making it impossible for the Duke to speak.

Moments later, Kar rises to his feet and glances at the shocked invaders surrounding him. They gaze with wide-eyed astonishment at the bound and helpless Duke of Inferno, unable to process the scene that just unfolded. Even as their human enemies continue hacking the stunned invaders to pieces, they can't help but stand, frozen in fear, after witnessing Kar's supreme strength.

"So this is all a Duke is worth," Kar grunts. "Hurgh. Can't believe I left White-Hair's delicious food early for this. Not even a challenge."

With a shrug of his shoulders, Kar grabs Beelzebub's face, lifts the Duke over his head, and hurls him toward the Tarus II warpgate. Beelzebub flies through it and vanishes, landing in the awaiting arms of the soldiers outside.

"One down, lots more to go. Which of you punks is next?"

* * *

Mephisto freezes in his tracks. He hovers over the battlefield and stares in complete disbelief as the Monster King throws Beelzebub into the Tarus II warpgate like a bag of garbage.

"Im... imposssible! Even for a ssstupid, insssignificant little ssshit like Beelzebub, how could he fall before a mere monssster?! Disssgraceful! When Ossse hearsss of thisss, ssshe'll have no choice but to promote me to the rank of Firssst Duke! Ksss! That isss what you get for underessstimating the almighty necromancer!"

* * *

Ose's astral form hovers near the Core's entrance. Her gaze hardens as she watches Beelzebub's humiliating defeat.

It never fails to amaze me how quickly humans can adapt to their enemies. They've fought Beelzebub countless times, but I never imagined they'd develop such an effective counter to his powers. If their development keeps up, it's likely they'll find ways to neutralize Mephisto's mist-body, reveal my astral form, and even bypass Bael's invincibility.

Ose shakes her head.

No. That last feat is impossible, even for someone possessing Solomon's Crown. Not even humans during the height of the Energy Wars could injure Bael. These humans haven't a chance of beating him. However, now that Beelzebub has failed... I'll have to advance my plans.

Ose's astral form instantly vanishes. She reappears inside her main body, opens her eyes, and speaks to the gathered Barons.

"The humans have captured Beelzebub."

Mara, Laharl, and Orias almost jump out of their skin in surprise. "What? How?"

Ose ignores their question. "Change of plans. I want all of you to rush in, full force. Crush the humans' resistance at once. I'll fetch the others as quickly as I can. Mephisto is still running interference, but if the humans start destroying corpses, all his work will be for naught."

A shared look of surprise and panic passes between the three Barons. Immediately, they nod at Ose. "Alright," Mara says. "Ying-Ying dropped by while you were out, so I told her the plan. She's gone to fetch a few friends. We'll attack in five minutes."

Laharl extends her vicious, steel-rending claws. "Hah! I'll go right now! You guys can catch up with me after you clean the piss from your pants! Come on, Orias! It's our time to shine!"

Orias rolls his eyes. "If I must."

The two Barons leave while calling their underlings for support. Mara travels in the opposite direction, leaving Ose alone.

"Dammit," the Third Emperor whispers. "How could I have overlooked such a development? The hero's wife is a bloody nuisance. Only she could have developed such a sophisticated containment method. Beelzebub was utterly helpless in front of that suit's might. Even after I warned him, he still overestimated himself. Stupid bastard."

With one last furtive glance at the Core, Ose transforms into a bolt of lightning to zip toward Bael, Artorias, and the Battle Brothers.

Once they arrive... humanity will surely fall.

Part 229: Gressil's Regret

The sun rises on Tarus II, spreading its warmth across the planet's surface. As the start of a mild, mid-summer's day, most people might feel obligated to pause and take a deep breath, inhaling nature's scent. Compared to the world humanity once originated on, Earth, Tarus II possesses a universally mild climate, aside from its north and south poles.

However, as Daisy and Phoebe enter Hero City's singular hospital, their hurried movements betray their lack of interest in the beauty of the environment surrounding them.

Inside, dozens upon dozens of humans and monsters sit on benches or chairs while clutching the gruesome wounds inflicted upon them. Their broken T-REX's sit in collection bins placed at random along the walls, useless after suffering catastrophic damage from the Grez and monster attacks.

Having visited the hospital hundreds of times over the years, Daisy doesn't even bat an eye at the bloodied and beaten soldiers limping around the hallway. Already, the child has grown used to the horrors of war.

Phoebe trots over to the receptionist desk, where Grima, the well-spoken goblin, shuffles dozens of patient reports together, categorizing them into different color levels. Red patients require immediate care, while yellow and green will probably survive without Belial's intervention, even if only for a few hours.

"Grima. Do you know where Samantha is? Have you seen her recently?"

Phoebe keeps her voice calm while glancing around at the injured soldiers. Her gaze flicks to two kobolds and a harpie assisting Grima behind the reception desk, though the Harpie is not Doctor Fathy, but someone else entirely.

Grima barely looks at Phoebe before returning to her papers. "Miss Hiro. Now is not the best time. We've over 600 wounded, with 137 in critical condition. The Second Emperor is sure to run her mana dry just taking care of this first wave."

As always, Grima's excellent linguistic skills stand apart from other goblins, making his words simple to parse, while his deep voice commands a certain level of innate respect among those listening. Phoebe nods in response.

"I know, but I have to see her before I head to the Core. Please, if you know where she is-"

"Room 73," Grima says, interrupting the hero's wife. "Please be quick with your visit. Ten people have already died while waiting for care."

Grima raises his head again, revealing deep, dark circles beneath his eyes. "One of them was my closest friend."

Phoebe flinches, taken aback by Grima's suppressed emotions. "I... I understand. I won't need more than a minute. Thank you, Grima. And... I'm sorry for your loss."

"I will not be the only one who suffers today," Grima mutters. He continues shuffling his papers, before yelling out, "Adrian Hunts! Next!"

Phoebe bows away from the reception desk and hurries down the hall to the left, dragging Daisy along behind her. Eventually, she reaches a long line of people, all of them laying in gurneys while moaning in pain.

"Mother... hngh, mother... help me..." One man whimpers. A huge stab wound through his ribs reveals where a Grez impaled him, while he managed to survive, but with a heavy injury.

Daisy looks at each person as they walk. Despite the calm expression on her face, the young girl clenches her mother's hand tighter. "Mommy... is everyone going to be okay?"

"Of course, sweetheart," Phoebe lies through her teeth. "Aunt Samantha can heal any injury, don't you worry."

Daisy grimaces when she spots a man with a face covered in blood. Both of his eye sockets appear gouged out by some horrific attack, causing him to fall into a coma from the injury.

Neither Phoebe nor Daisy voice their concerns. Samantha can't heal injuries to the brain. Only a Wordsmith can, and only if he possesses Solomon's Crown.

Sadly, the comatose man may never awaken from his sleep.

* * *

Phoebe arrives at the doorway to room 73. Inside, she spots Belial, the 2nd Emperor of Demonkind, covered in sweat. Belial's chest heaves with great difficulty as she casts a healing spell, revitalizing her current patient with all of her power. However, unlike during normal times, when Belial might heal even the deepest wound within seconds, it takes her nearly a minute to fix the man's broken ribs, then his lung, before moving onto his shattered leg and knee. Eventually she finishes, but doesn't bother with several dozen other superficial scratches and gouge marks covering his skin.

"Th-there. You're fit for duty, Private Reynolds. Next."

The young man nods at Belial, even while trying to hide his pained expression. He tries to lift himself off the bed, but his remaining injuries clearly slow him down.

However, not once does the man complain. Clearly thankful for having his life saved, he staggers out of the room while looking like a ghost, barely acknowledging Phoebe's presence.

The hero's wife watches the man as he limps down the corridor. She grabs the stretcher nearest the door and wheels it inside to help Belial's assistant, Rosalia. Rosalia notices Phoebe, but her thousand-yard stare reveals her preoccupation with other matters.

"Oh, it's you."

"Yes," Phoebe confirms. She helps Rosalia lift the injured soldier onto the blood-soaked bed next to Belial, not even bothering with swapping out its sheets. Presumably, once the Wordsmiths return, they'll be able to cure any bloodborne diseases, or Belial can do it after the war.

But that's only assuming we survive, Phoebe thinks, grimly.

"Sam," Phoebe says, getting Belial's attention. "I've brought Daisy. They need me at the Core."

Belial finally notices Phoebe, even though it takes her a second to register the human's words. "Huh? Oh, right. I wish I could go with you, but as you can see..."

Belial trails off. She quickly weaves another healing spell, then grits her teeth as she activates its effects. She manages to heal the man's broken shoulder and regrow his missing ear, but it takes slightly longer than the previous patient.

"That's fine. Daisy's can help you while I fight. Isn't that right, sweetheart? Help aunt Sammy with anything she needs. Fetch tools for her, anything you can to help. If she doesn't need anything, then sit quietly and don't get in the way."

Phoebe directs her words toward her daughter. However, to her surprise, Rosalia pipes up. "We don't have time to babysit, hero's wife. Can't you see all the injured men and women outside? Take your daughter to the shelter with all the other kids."

"Rosalia!" Belial snaps, her irritability rising through the roof. "Shut your mouth! I already arranged to protect Daisy. She's not like the other kids. Ose is likely to target the Hero's daughter, so it's best if she's near me for protection."

"We have two thousand heavily armed guards at the children's shelter," Rosalia counters. "I don't want some little brat getting in our way! Put your personal feelings aside and-"

"Not another word," Belial interrupts, her voice deadly calm. "Don't presume upon your position, little grunt. I am still the Second Emperor. Know your place."

Rosalia's eyes lock onto Belial's. "Y-yes. Of course. My apologies, Second Emperor."

A chill descends upon the room. Phoebe keeps her expression neutral, but inside, her emotions turn chaotic.

I've never seen Sam so... so angry. I didn't know she had a side like this.

Daisy bows her head. "I'm sorry. I'll stay out of the way, aunt S'matha. The fat lady is right."

"Daisy..." Phoebe growls. She starts to chide her daughter's rudeness, only to sigh. "...I don't have time for this. Sit over there, in the corner. If you need to go to the bathroom, come back immediately. Don't go far, alright?"

Belial helps her second patient out of the bed while ignoring another half-dozen cuts and gashes on his arms. "My senses are far sharper than you might think, Phoebe. Don't worry. If anyone leaks even an ounce of bloodlust for your little girl, I'll rip them a new... you know."

"Alright. Take care, then," Phoebe says. She waits for the second patient to leave the room before striding out behind him, leaving her daughter behind.

...However, not ten seconds later, Daisy comes running out and grabs her mother's leg, nearly tripping Phoebe.

"Mommy! I'm scared. Where's daddy? Why hasn't he come back? Where are you going??"

Phoebe starts to to push her daughter away, only to pause.

Today might be the last time I see Daisy. What if Jason doesn't return? What if I don't? I need to leave her in a good place.

Phoebe sighs. She ignores the glances of the injured in the hallway and drops to one knee while resting a hand on her daughter's head.

"Mommy has to fight, Daisy. Just like daddy. I want to stay with you, but they need me in the battle."

"You'll get hurt!" Daisy cries. "I don't wanna lose you!"

"You won't, love, you won't," Phoebe coos. She caresses Daisy's face while forcing a pained smile. Phoebe steadies her trembling lower lip before continuing. "You and me are good girls, so we have to stop the bad people. We have to stand up against evil, even when it seems useless. You understand, right?"

Daisy shakes her head. "No! I don't! Stay with me, mommy! Don't go... don't leave me, not like daddy did..."

The hero's wife lowers her eyes. She swallows hard while trying to reassure herself of Jason's safety.

"Daddy... he'll be fine, sweetheart. Don't you know? The hero always shows up at the last minute. You have to believe in your father. He's never failed us, and he never will. Your daddy can do all kinds of incredible things. That's why the demons waited to attack until they thought he was gone. Once he shows up, they'll run away."

"But... but daddy is gone..." Daisy protests. "Mommy can't even find him."

Daisy touches a ruby hanging from a necklace on Phoebe's chest.

"Mommy said she could call daddy whenever she wanted... but you can't! Daddy's gone! He's gone!!"

Daisy breaks down into tears, finally succumbing to her suppress emotions. She grabs her face and bawls, unable to control the anguish in her heart.

Several of the more lucid soldiers watch with pitying eyes as the symbol of their pride, the jewel of humanity, Phoebe Hiro, tries to console her daughter. All of them respect the hero's wife. She's been there for them and brightened their days on numerous occasions.

However, all of them fall silent, secretly agreeing with Daisy's words.

Hope, gone.

Jason, gone.

Both of the Wordsmiths left nearly a month earlier, and neither of them have contacted the Core.

The injured men and women glance at one another while imagining the worst.

The demons chose today to attack because they've captured our heroes. Even Jason's daughter knows the truth.

Phoebe entertains similar thoughts for only a moment before pushing them away. She gently leans forward and cradles her daughter, patting the back of Daisy's head affectionately.

"You're a good girl, sweetheart. Daddy will never disappoint you. Have faith in him. There's no way a bunch of weak little bully demons can take him down."

Daisy sniffles. "R-really?"

"Yes. I bet wherever daddy is, he's thinking about you right now."

Phoebe rises to her feet. She caresses her daughter's cheek and wipes away her tears while flashing a genuine, radiant smile.

"Jason brings me joy, and he brings me purpose. He freed me from the shackles of my past, and he gave me a beautiful little girl. I'll never stop believeing in him. Jason is our hero. He's my hero."

Phoebe sweeps her gaze across the people gathered in the hallway. Her conviction sends tingles down their spines, temporarily dulling the pain wracking their bodies.

Several soldiers feel a sense of shame. How could they doubt their king? Phoebe never once wavered in her convictions, and neither should they.

Eventually, Phoebe straightens her daughter out and sends her back to Belial's ward with a sigh. "Be good to your aunt, Daisy. I'll come back as soon as possible."

Daisy waves goodbye, having finally dried the tears from her eyes. "Okay, mommy. I love you! Bye!"

"Bye-bye," Phoebe waves.

Once Daisy disappears into Belial's ward, Phoebe inhales a deep breath, then releases it, allowing her tension to drain away.

She rests her hand against the magical medallion Jason gave her, wondering when he'll reply.

"Jason. Come back soon. We need you."

Recommended Listening.

Elsewhere.

Deep within the Labyrinth's recesses, lurking within the confines of its darkest, dankest prison...

"Mmmmghhh!!"

Hope screams through the cloth gag covering his mouth while tears pour from his eyes. His head lolls from side to side as his lucidity continues to slowly slip away.

Ten feet from the Hero, a two-headed demon stands with his back to the human and all four of his arms crossed. He gazes at a shimmering mirror hovering before him with rapt attention, watching as it displays scenes of hellish carnage between monsters and humans.

"Haha. What a wonderful sight. Your people are putting up quite the fight, Hope. They'll fall, of course. Humanity's numbers are finite, while the demons' are neverending."

Gressil, the prison warden, and the head of Faith's End, chuckles softly to himself.

"Haha. It took a hellishly long time, but finally, the chaos I've awaited has begun to play out on a galactic stage. What a beautiful symphony of death and destruction."

"Mmmhhngh! Mgggnn! Huk-huk..."

Hope groans and whimpers as his head continues thrashing from side to side. Eventually, Gressil turns around to stare at the drugged and bound human.

"Quiet."

Immediately, Hope falls silent. A terrible, unspeakable fear grips the hero's mind, penetrating even the basest survival instincts begging for his freedom.

Gressil's gaze falls upon the blood covering Hope's body. With Hope's arms and legs sawed off, the casually thrown-together gauze holding his guts in place only slows 99% of the blood flowing from his wounds. Trickles of plasma leak through the rotting, infected bandages, landing on Gressil's metal torture table with soft plips.

Hope's limbs rest inside buckets thrown off in the corner of the room. Their decayed stench, capable of gagging even the hardiest orc, doesn't affect Gressil at all.

A metal shackle wraps around Hope's neck, pinning him to the table with less than an inch of movement room. Gressil, ever the kind torturer, allows his prisoner enough slack to thrash around. Hope's helpless motions only serve to exascerbate his terror, making Gressil smile.

"Haha. Even now, as a quadruple amputee, you still have enough spirit to scream and beg for mercy. That is what I like about you... Hope. There's nothing more boring than a prisoner who doesn't fight back. It isn't fun. It isn't... satisfying."

Slowly, Gressil walks over to the helpless human, making Hope freeze in place and stare at his tormentor with widened eyes.

"Haha. Poke."

Gressil jams a claw into one of Hope's open wounds, making the young man chomp down on his gag and howl in pain. "Hnnnghh!!! Hmungh! Hrrrgh!!"

The warden's smile fades away.

"It's been a while since I could play with someone as fun as you. Birdy lost her voice a long time ago. The other humans I capture usually die within an hour. But you... your little nano-bugs are quite handy. You can really take a beating. Haha."

Poke.

Gressil jams his finger into Hope's groin, making the human scream three times louder than before.

"Haha. It never gets old. Pain. Torment. Misery."

Gressil pulls away from Hiro, removing his claws from the helpless human's body. Hope sags in place, while tears roll down his cheeks.

"I wasn't always like this, you know."

Gressil returns to his magical mirror, but this time, he pays little attention to the events unfolding on its surface.

"Mother made me this way. She wouldn't let me be."

Hope's chest heaves as he struggles to breathe. He barely even hears Gressil's words through the frantic flaring of his nostrils, let alone comprehends them.

The prison warden sighs.

"Did you know? Demons are the worst creatures in existence. Violent. Psychopathic. Torturous. Barbaric."

"You're not wrong to hate us, but you shouldn't hate me. I'm not the monster here. I'm a victim. A creation of the twisted aberrations leading our society."

Gressil raises his lower right arm. He opens his palm face-up, summoning the illusion of a jade-colored butterfly.

"All I ever wanted was to play with my butterflies. I was gentle. I was kind."

"I was a bad demon. That's why they hurt me."

The warden's eyes gloss over, as his memory travels back in time, to a different era, a time before humanity fell.

"Mother always loved Ose more than me. I was a burden. An obligation. Haha."

Gressil's laugh comes out with the same raspy tone as the rest of his cold, dead speech.

"All demons have to be strong. They have to become powerful. But why? Nobody ever answers that question. Nobody ever asks."

* * *

"I don't remember when it happened. I don't even remember why. I snapped. I killed Mother."

"It was the first time I ever felt joy — the first time I experienced the taste of someone else's misery. I understood why Mother trampled me."

Gressil closes his eyes.

"You never had a mother. Your parents abandoned you when you were a child. Many think it's better to have a bad parent than none at all."

"But what do they know? I envy you. I wish I didn't have to suffer. My mother made me who I am, today. A monster."

The warden opens his eyes. He glances at the still, unmoving second head attached to his left shoulder.

"Look at you. Sleeping. Haha. After everything you've done to me... you get to spend your days living in a dream. Must be nice."

Gressil curls his right arms into fists. A flash of rage appears in his eyes.

"Even in death... you still taunt me. I hate you. I hate everything about you."

Wham!

Gressil's fists crash against his second head, jarring it awake.

"Ack! Hey, what do you think you're doing, hitting your mother?!"

Lucifer, the Emperor of Providence, awakens. Her eyes turn crystal-clear as she turns to look at the other head attached to her body.

"Little brat! Worthless! What sort of filthy little mongrel raises his hand to the one who raised him?! I'll teach you a lesson!!"

Gressil's anger vanishes. Instead, a look of fear appears in his eyes.

"N-no, Mother! It... it wasn't me! I'd never-"

Crash!

Gressil's left arms reach up and grab his throat while punching his face. Lucifer takes over the entire left side of Gressil's body, pummelling and beating him without mercy. Gressil tries to cower, but all he can do is fall against the wall while screaming.

"No, Mother! Please! I didn't mean it! I'm sorry! Augh!!"

Lucifer continues beating and bashing her son. Her power swells within him, eventually overtaking even his right side. All of Gressil's body, except for his head, turns into a self-harming weapon.

Lucifer punches her son without rest. She slams his head against one wall and then another, making his cries of pain ring out throughout all of the nearby Labyrinth corridors.

Ten minutes later, Gressil whimpers and moans, his pitiful figure echoing Hope's. Lucifer inhales and exhales ferociously, her anger spent.

"Ptuh! Filthy little runt! Look at you, pissing yourself in fear! That's why you'll never measure up to my precious little Ose! You're a weak, worthless little shit! Sorry excuse for a demon!!"

However, Lucifer's energy begins to drain. Eventually, her eyes flutter closed.

"Now... don't disturb me again... I need... need to sleep. So very... tired."

Lucifer's head lolls forward as she falls unconscious, returning control to Gressil.

The prison warden crumples in the corner of the room. For half an hour, he whimpers like a beaten dog.

"Why... why does Mother hurt me..."

Gressil's vicious aura disappears, replaced instead with the figure of a battered, broken child.

* * *

Eventually.

Gressil pulls himself together. He leans against the wall and wipes his tears away, all while casting furtive glances at his second head.

"No... stupid. Foolish! Why did I hit Mother? I can't do that. I shouldn't."

Slowly, Gressil turns to face Hope. The young man stares at Gressil with a strange look. Pain, pity, and fear mix into a bizarre cocktail of emotions, darkening Gressil's eyes.

"You... don't you dare look at me like that."

Gressil's lingering fear washes away, replaced instead with hatred and malice.

"That's right, human. After I make you one of my eyes, I can finally rid myself of Mother, forever."

Gressil's mouth curls up into a horrifying smile.

"Haha. Playing with you is too much fun. I nearly forgot my original plan."

Before Hope can react, Gressil charges toward him and jabs multiple fingers into different wounds on Hope's body. The Wordsmith screams so hard that he nearly faints from the agony.

"Yes. Scream. SCREAM! The more pain you feel, the sooner I can integrate you. The moment you beg me for death, you'll become mine."

Gressil chuckles.

"Haha. Hahaha!"

Part 230: Neil's Investigation

Inside the Labyrinth Core.

The King of All Monsters releases a sigh of boredom as he drags another fifty weakling monsters into an early grave. The ground opens up beneath them, engulfing their bodies with the viscosity of quicksand. The last sounds the poor creatures ever utter are cries for mercy.

But sadly, for them, Kar hasn't any left to give.

"Come into my Core... kill my pet humans... grumble grumble..."

Kar growls in annoyance as his twenty-third sequential horde of enemies disappears. By now, the majority of his foes have either perished or fled. Even Hungry, the Obsidian Goblin, runs away. His demonstone-skin won't protect him from suffocating inside the Labyrinth's bowels.

As the last of the invaders retreats, Kar crosses his arms. "Hurgh. Finally, I've finished off the second wave."

"Well done," Neil says. The Core's Commander strides over to Kar's side and pats his back. "I always knew you were strong, but not even I could imagine your power had reached this level."

Blinker flies over and lands on Kar's shoulder as the Sphinx turns to meet Neil's gaze. "Haha! Didn't Kar tell you? We went to visit his lizard family! They made him King of the Lizards!"

Neil deactivates his exosuit. Once his head reveals itself, he frowns. "I don't follow. What does that have to do with anything?"

"Hurgh. The lizards granted me a shard of their legacy," Kar says. "King Bloodscale stepped down from his throne and made me the leader of his people. As such, my power now reaches into the ranks of a Demon Emperor."

"When Kar says King Bloodscale, he means King Ghidorah," Blinker explains. "I got a piece of that power, too! I'm pretty badass now, as well!"

Neil glances around the Core at all of the fallen soldiers and invaders. Their bodies litter the server grounds, making traversal of the terrain tough to manage.

"I see. Well, that's among the best news I've heard in a while, Kar. We might lack Wordsmiths, but at least we have you. However, you shouldn't act cocky. The demons are sure to regroup and attack again. I need to burn these damned bodies before Mephisto turns them against us."

Kar follows Neil's gaze. "How sad. Many of my friends rest among the fallen. I have seen too many atrocities in my life. Even now, the sting of their loss burns my heart."

"Indeed. Such a tremendous loss of life is an abomination we mustn't tolerate," Neil replies.

The Commander queezes Kar's scaley, muscled arms for a moment, before turning away. Kar watches Neil leave, and shakes his head.

"Ox-Arms carries a heavy burden. He wishes to grieve, but he will never show weakness before his troops. What a lonely existence."

"What about you, big guy?" Blinker asks, her voice soft. "Are you doing okay?"

"Hurgh. As long as I have you, my beloved Butterfly, I will maintain my composure. However, I too, feel..."

Kar trails off. His deep green reptilian eyes flick toward the bodies of two fallen soldiers near his feet.

"...Never mind. Come. We will stand guard at the double doors. None shall enter the Core without my permission."

* * *

Kar leaves the massacred bodies behind him. As he walks away, Neil arrives at the Warpgate to Tarus II. Already, the soldiers have shut down all the other warpgates to keep Mephisto's undead from flooding into the Core.

"Where is that blasted necromancer, I wonder?" Neil mutters. He glances around the Core, a tingling of worry itching at the back of his mind. However, Mephisto doesn't reveal himself. Hundreds of soldiers, those who survived the first two waves of the invader's assaults, begin burning bodies at a superhuman speed. Even as they activate specially created flamethrowers, several corpses suck into the ground, unbeknownst to them.

Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, slithers around underground, beneath the feet of his enemies. He uses his necromantic abilities to drag his chosen future elites into the same abyss where Kar buried the monsters, all while tittering to himself with glee.

"Ksss. Ssstupid Monssster King, kekeke! Did you think you did me a dissserviccce? By killing my minionsss and burying them in quicksssand, you've only pressserved their bodiesss perfectly for my purposssesss!"

Mephisto glides toward the recently deceased bodies of three thousand minotaurs and orcs, their eyes and mouths opened wide due to their final moments of panicked breathing.

"Ssskeletonsss and ghoulsss are alwaysss a wonderful sssurprissse, but what could be better than perfectly sservicccceable, recccently ssslaughtered monssstersss?! Kekekeke!"

However, as Mephisto glides around, turning the corpses of fallen humans, orcs, and minotaurs into his mindless slaves, he pauses for a moment to sigh.

"Ksss. That damned Ossse. How could ssshe predict thisss far ahead? Ssshe had no way to know Beelzebub would fall, and yet it ssseemsss as if hisss capture will do little to delay our victory."

Mephisto pokes a hole in his jaw with his bony finger.

"Sssomeday sssoon, I will make that woman my pet... kekeke! Ssshe daresss humiliate me now... but eventually, I will reign sssupreme over all of demonkind! Ksss, yesss, the powersss of a necromancccer are absssolute. The more who die, the ssstronger I become... kekeke!!"

The Duke of Mist merrily resumes his skullduggery, chuckling evilly to himself as he drags more bodies into his open arms.

* * *

"Commander. You need to take a look at this."

Neil and Debra stand and chat with one another, only to turn and look as one of the several thousand soldiers in the Core walks over to them, breathless.

"Private Cody?" Neil asks. "What's wrong? You look like you've seen a ghost."

"I wish that was it," The young, red-headed man says. "Sir, about the inspection you ordered... we've just completed it. Someone disabled all the explosives. We can't self-destruct the Core."

Debra flinches in surprise. "What? How?? When?!"

Neil doesn't visibly react. He maintains a calm appearance on the surface, but underneath, he simmers with rage. "Is that so? I should have known. How long will it take for us to repair the damage?"

Cody shakes his head. "I don't know if we can, sir. If Hope were here, maybe a day. Without him, weeks at the least. The damage appears... extensive."

Neil folds his hands behind his back. He assumes a dignified posture, but his eyes turn as cold as ice.

"We have a traitor in our midst. I've suspected as much for years, but it's been hard to pin the culprit down. At least now, I've narrowed the suspect list."

Cody raises an eyebrow. "Commander?"

"Only five people, aside from myself, know enough about the layout of the explosives we've planted to be capable of destroying them to this extent. I had more than 300 technicians install them, but the detailed schematics of the plastic explosives were kept strictly confidential. Debra, fetch me General Chadwick, General Caddis, Corporal Hurent, Lieutenant Henry, and Lieutenant Samuel."

Debra's face turns ashen. "Sir... you've known all of them for years — since the very beginning."

"That, I have," Neil nods. "Which makes this news all the more saddening. Private Cody, you're dismissed. Debra, carry out my request, please."

"Aye, Commander," Cody says, bowing meekly.

"Yes, sir," Debra adds.

Both of Neil's subordinates withdraw, giving Neil a moment of respite. The Commander flares his nostrils and narrows his eyes as sensations of rage boil in his stomach.

"There's nobody worse than a filthy, devil-kissing traitor."

* * *

Several minutes later, four men and one woman, all having disabled their exosuits, stand before Neil in a line. They fold their hands behind their backs and stand at attention, waiting for their Commander's inevitable speech.

"We haven't much time before the demons' next assault wave," Neil says. "So I won't mince any words. One of you has betrayed me. Someone destroyed the self-destruction system we put in place to prevent the demons from seizing the Core. I'm going to figure out who it was, and punish them severely. Before I begin, take off your exosuits and place them at your feet."

General Chadwick, a portly-looking 40-year-old Norwegian with a thick beard, doesn't hesitate. He immediately unstraps his T-REX and sets it on the ground before himself.

"Commander."

General Caddis, a much thinner man with a pale complexion and big, thick-rimmed glasses, pauses for a half-second before following Chadwick's lead. He places his exosuit on the ground only a moment after his predecessor.

"Commander."

Corporal Hurent, a black-haired woman in her mid-30's, moves the fastest. Hardly have the words left Neil's mouth, before she's already begun unstrapping and setting her T-REX at her feet. She even gives it a slight kick to nudge it toward Neil.

"Commander."

Lieutenant Samuel, an African man in his late 20's, with thick, muscular arms and a piercing gaze, matches Chadwick's speed perfectly. Both of them set their T-REX's on the ground simultaneously.

"Commander."

Lieutenant Henry, the young prodigy who slew countless Grez during the invasion, lags behind everyone else noticeably. He stares at Neil for several seconds, as if shell-shocked by the news. By the time everyone else has placed their T-REX's on the ground, he's only just started unstrapping his.

"C-Commander."

Immediately, Neil's gaze fixates on Henry. "Lieutenant? You seem surprised. Somewhat nervous, even."

Henry swallows a lump in his throat. "I-I'm sorry, Commander. I was just taken aback by what you said. I didn't think something like this would ever happen."

"You didn't think the demons would be capable of corrupting someone to their side? Huh. I've always thought of you as someone with a robust imagination. How strange for you not to envision such a scenario."

Neil clicks his tongue, but doesn't pursue the line of conversation. Instead, he turns his attention to the first member of the lineup, General Chadwick.

"When was the last time you performed an inspection of the Failsafe Demon Response System, General?"

Chadwick stares Neil right in the eyes. "One week ago, Commander."

"And were the 'FADERS' still functional?"

"Aye, Commander. We estimated they would only take three seconds to reach full saturation."

"I see. General Caddis. What about you? When was the last time you performed a routine inspection?"

"Three days ago, Commander Neil," Caddis replies. The General pushes his glasses further up his nose before folding his hands behind his back. "All systems were still nominal at that time."

"Do you mean to tell me that in only the last three days, someone, or something, managed to tear apart all the wiring and infrastructure of our failsafe?"

Caddis shifts his weight. "I suppose so, Commander."

Neil falls silent for several seconds. His eyes flick across Caddis's face multiple times, scrutinizing every inch of the General's features, before eventually moving onto the lone woman of the group.

"Corporal Hurent. You've only been with us since we liberated your planet five years ago. Isn't it strange that you've risen through the ranks so quickly, despite your gender?"

The black-haired woman frowns. "Commander? I... I have always been loyal to humanity. I worked hard to make you proud."

"In this situation, anyone would say such a thing," Neil muses. "How do I know you're not simply telling me what I want to hear?"

Hurent's expression falls. "Commander... I would never betray you. You and Hope are the spark of life that will guide humanity into a glorious future."

Neil lowers his gaze to Hurent's T-REX. "You seemed eager to give me your device. Were you, perhaps, trying to make yourself look more innocent by kicking your exosuit toward me? Those who are eager to please are often the most willing to backstab the ones who helped raise their status."

The Corporal meets Neil's gaze, as he raises his eyes to look into hers. "Commander. With all due respect, I would never betray humanity. Frankly, knowing my life's story as you do, I'm angered you would even think to accuse me of such a thing."

"The demons murdered your husband and children," Neil concedes. "Or did they? I've only your word to guide my thoughts. Nevertheless, I'll move on."

Neil continues to eyeball the Corporal for a half-second before turning to the next in line. "Lieutenant Samuel. When did you last inspect the failsafes?"

Samuel shakes his head. "Never, Commander. You made it clear it was not part of my duties."

"That's right. And yet, you know the layout of all the bombs. You know where we've placed the explosives, and where the weak points are in their infrastructure. Might you, perhaps, have collaborated with our enemies in the last three days to doom us all?"

Samael shakes his head without hesitation. "No, sir. I would sooner fall on my sword than bring harm to my family."

Neil nods. "That's right. You have a family on Maiura. Suppose the demons came to you, one day, offering to spare them from a gruesome death during Ose's invasion. Might that not persuade you to their cause?"

Samuel and Neil lock eyes with one another. "Commander. I love my family deeply. However, I would never listen to the whisperings of any bloodskin bastard. Their lies are innumerable. Their plots and deceptions, infinite. We've discussed as much in the pub."

"That, we have," Neil murmurs. "However, one of you has betrayed me, and I must find out who."

"I will not judge you for your harsh questioning, Commander," Samuel says. "Whoever here is the traitor, I'll execute them myself."

"As will I!" Corporal Hurent shouts. However, when Neil's gaze returns to her, she falls silent. "S-sorry, Commander."

"Don't speak out of turn," Neil says. "It will only deepen my suspicion."

Finally, the Commander returns to Henry. The young man looks like a disaster. Unlike the cool, calm, and collected appearances of the leaders before him, Henry appears as if he's just stepped out of a sauna. Sweat drips from his hair and forehead.

Neil cocks his head. "Lieutenant Henry. If looks were all I had to go by, I'd assume you were guilty from the very beginning. Why, pray tell, do you look like death? Why are you so nervous?"

Henry wipes his forehead. "C-Commander. I'm not nervous... I just... I've spent the last four hours fighting, and haven't had time to rest. My entire body aches."

"A good excuse," Neil says. "but do I believe you? That is the question. In terms of killing demons, you are by far the leader here. It's hard to imagine that someone who has slaughtered as many bloodskins as you would ever compromise on their loyalty."

Henry starts to reply. However, before he can get a word out, Neil turns to General Chadwick at the head of the line.

"General. How many demons have you slain?"

Chadwick hesitates. "In the last year, Commander?"

"No. Since six years ago, when Jason freed us from Bahamut's bondage."

"Ah. A few thousand, I'd wager."

Neil nods. "General Caddis. How about you? How many have you killed?"

Caddis, having heard Neil direct the same question at his predecessor, replies without hesitation. "Two-thousand, six hundred and thirteen, Commander."

"Oh? Such a precise number."

The second General nods. "Yes, Commander. I consider each dead bloodskin a trophy kill."

"Have you hunted any recently?"

"Naturally," Caddis replies. "Just today, I killed another forty-three."

"Good, good. Corporal Hurent. What about you?"

Neil turns to the female Corporal. She blushes from embarrassment. "I... I'm sorry, Commander. I don't know. A lot, I'm sure."

"A lot? Give me a ballpark number at the least."

Corporal Hurent shrugs. "Ah... perhaps... six thousand? As you know, I've gone on hundreds of incursions. When there's so much chaos happening, I merely swing my sword and fire my rifle. I don't pay attention to how many bloodskins I kill."

Sensing Neil's lingering gaze, Hurent hastily adds, "B-but! I could check my T-REX's records for you, sir! I'm sure it would have a detailed breakdown!"

"That won't be necessary," Neil says. "However, I do have a follow-up question. Given the number of times you've gone on missions, isn't it possible you've had instances where the demon leaders could contact you? Perhaps they might have pulled you away from your fellow soldiers and made you offers you couldn't refuse. Perhaps they may have even corrupted you, without your knowing. Isn't that a distinct possibility?"

Hurent's crestfallen face makes the other gathered leaders sigh out of pity.

"Sir! I, I mean, Commander! No. I would never, ever turn my back on humanity. You know that! When the demons ambushed you, two years ago, it was me who saved you!"

"You did," Neil concedes. "But perhaps that was a ploy to get you in my good graces. I can't rule out the possibility."

"If I planned to betray you, I could have killed you then! Commander... I'd never..."

Corporal Hurent lowers her gaze. Tears well up in her eyes, forcing her to wipe them away.

Neil ignores Hurent's sadness. He immediately turns to Lieutenant Samuel and continues his line of questioning. "How many demons have you killed, Lieutenant?"

Samuel smiles. "Not enough, Commander."

"A number, Lieutenant. Give me a number."

The Lieutenant shrugs. "Fifty thousand."

His words cause the eyebrows to shoot up on both of the General's faces. Chadwick and Caddis both turn to look down the line at their comrade, surprised by his words.

"Fifty thousand. That amount seems almost braggadocious," Neil says, his face showing no reaction to Samuel's claim. "Do you think firing off such a big number will make me suspect you less?"

"Think what you like, Commander. I'll never stop killing bloodskins." Samuel replies. "No number will ever be large enough to satisfy me."

"Your attitude seems commendable. However, words are merely words. How many bloodskins did you kill today?"

"None, Commander," Samuel says, still smiling. "After all, we've only fought monsters, so far. Once a few grunts and Lords pop their heads up, I'll remove them from their necks."

"Hmm."

Neil flicks his eye back toward General Caddis.

"You said you had killed forty-three demons today, Caddis. However, Samuel just reminded me that none have shown up. What say you in response?"

The thin, wiry-looking General bows his head contritely. "My apologies, Commander. I spoke without thinking. I assumed you meant my number of kills in general, not the number of demons, specifically."

During Neil's entire line of questioning, not once has he changed his posture, nor moved an inch from where he stands.

However.

Now, Neil takes a few steps toward Caddis.

The Core's Commander, a military genius wise beyond his years, walks within inches of Caddis. Despite standing only eight centimeters taller than his senior officer, Neil somehow appears two feet taller. He cuts an intimidating figure as he causes Caddis to shrink back, ever so slightly.

"Caddis. You've slain forty-three enemy combatants today. Is that correct?"

Caddis flicks his eyes toward Chadwick for a brief instant, then back to Neil. "Y-yes, Commander. My T-REX will confirm as much."

"Perhaps it will," Neil murmurs, his voice as tranquil as an untouched lake. "However... would you like to know a secret? Two, in fact."

The General steels himself. "Commander?"

"I watched the entire battle today from our backlines. I commanded every garrison and every individual trooper," Neil whispers. "I watched as you killed... no-one. Not once did you land the killing blow on any of our enemies. I saw your incompetence with my own two eyes. Multiple times, you unloaded a hail of bullets, always striking the invaders' where it would only cripple them."

Caddis shivers. His eyes meet Neil's, now only half a foot away. "Commander. I... I would never-"

"Did you know?" Neil asks, his tone gaining a tinge of menace. "The current leader of the demons. Her name is Ose. I read a detailed report on her powers, given to me by the Second Emperor..."

Henry, Chadwick, Hurent, and Samuel all strain to listen to Neil's whispered words.

"...Her primary abilities revolve around technology. She's a hacker, Caddis. In other words... altering your suit's video files would be trivial for someone of her capabilities."

Caddis pales.

"Commander. You... you can't trust a word that succubus says-"

"I am aware," Neil says, cutting Caddis off. "That's why I confirmed Ose's powers with Kar. His mother has worked extensively with the demons' current leader, after all. Do you think I should distrust Kar, too?"

"No. Of course not, Commander. But... I would never betray humanity. I would never betray you!"

Finally, Neil leans away from Caddis. A strange smile appears on his face.

"You were the last person to inspect the FADERS. If Chadwick had betrayed us, you would have noticed his deception during your inspection. Neither of the Lieutenants was ever tasked with an inspection, and the Corporal inspected them over a month ago, before it was even my turn. That leaves you."

Neil exhales deeply, expelling the remnants of his anger.

"Why did you lie about your kills, General Caddis? Were you merely trying to hide your incompetence? No. You're Ose's little puppet. I wonder what she offered you to turn against us."

Caddis's posture relaxes. The look of fear vanishes from his eyes as he lowers his gaze.

"...You're a damned fool."

Suddenly, a spark of malice appears in Caddis's eyes. He starts to make a move, only for Corporal Hurent on his left to cry out in alarm.

"Knife!"

Caddis pulls his arms out from behind his back and lunges toward Neil with a dagger in his grasp. He aims to impale the Commander through his eye, only for the Corporal to tackle him to the ground. Their sudden flurry of movement catches the attention of all the nearby soldiers, making several of them rush toward their leaders.

"Filthy bitch!" Caddis roars at Hurent. "Get off me! You'll doom us all!"

"You fucking traitor!" Hurent shouts. "I trusted you!"

Chadwick, Samuel, and Henry all jump in to help the Corporal subdue their enemy. Samuel's expression turns nasty as he wrenches the knife out of Caddis's grasp. "Commander! Allow me."

"No," Neil says. "Don't kill Caddis. Arrest him. If we survive this invasion, I aim to squeeze some answers out of him."

Caddis struggles to break free of his captors, but once the armored commandos appear, he gives up.

A look of hatred boils in Caddis's eyes. "You stupid fool, Neil!" Caddis roars. "We can't win against the demons! We should bow to them before it's too late! They'll kill us all! Our blood will be on your hands!!"

Neil sighs. "Soldiers. Take him away."

Two commandos decked out in T-REX's slap movement-inhibiting shackles on Caddis and drag him toward the Tarus II warpgate.

"You'll kill us all, Neil! Do you hear me?!" Caddis screams. "You'll kill us all!!"

* * *

Caddis disappears through the warp-gate, leaving Neil alone with his other four leaders.

"Chadwick. Hurent. Samuel. Henry. I'm sorry for anything I said that may have offended you. Now, return to your posts, everyone except for Chadwick. The demons are sure to strike soon."

Corporal Hurent smiles meekly at Neil. "Yes, Commander. Thank you for believing in me."

"You've saved my life twice now," Neil says with a nod. "Who else can I believe in, if not you?"

"I wish you'd have let me kill that bastard," Samuel mutters. He and Hurent both retrieve their T-REX's and walk away.

"Yes, but even a rat has its uses," Neil murmurs.

Henry is the last to leave. He straps on his exosuit and pauses for a moment. "I'm still exhausted, Commander. I'll, uh... I'll take a breather."

"Yes, please do," Neil says, offering a smile.

Henry leaves, along with the other soldiers.

Soon, only Neil and Chadwick remain.

The Commander's expression darkens.

"Chadwick. What do you think about Lieutenant Henry's performance during my questioning?"

The broad-shouldered General crosses his arms. "Hmph. Suspicious. He's hiding something."

"The demons are resourceful," Commander Neil whispers. "They have many methods to slip past our ranks. I want you to keep an eye on the Lieutenant until further notice."

Chadwick nods, but follows up with a frown. "Commander. Do you suspect Lieutenant Henry of being a demon spy? He's killed more bloodskins than many of our platoons combined. He's a legend on the battlefield."

"If sacrificing tens of thousands of grunts will allow her to infiltrate our ranks, I don't doubt Ose would do so for a second," Neil mutters. "Don't let nostalgia cloud your vision, General. Always remain vigilant when it comes to a bloodskin."

"What about me?" Chadwick prods. "What makes you think I won't betray you?"

"Haha," Neil chuckles, as a wry grin creeps onto his face. He glances up at the General and smiles. "I'm more likely to betray humanity than you, General. Let's not pretend you have a chance in Hell of walking the road less traveled when you could get revenge for your brother."

Chadwick nods. "It is as you say."

The two men exchange a few pleasantries before departing from one another.

After Chadwick leaves, Neil gazes toward the great doors, where Kar stands, his vigilant gaze aimed down the only hallway leading to humanity's fortress.

"Even without the Wordsmiths... we still have a chance of survival. It may be slim... but it's still there."

Part 231: One Punch Monster

Five thousand monsters, comprised of black-scaled basilisks, grey-furred kobolds, and a diverse mixture of demon grunts and Lords, line up behind the Baron of Misery, Laharl. Unlike the first wave that attacked the core an hour prior, this one features no orcs, undead, or minotaurs.

"Are you maggots ready?!" Laharl screeches. The iron-clawed demoness points a talon down the hall, toward the distant light of the Core. "Once we kill that traitorous monster king and rip the fleshbags limb from limb, the real fun begins! Kyahaha!!"

"Kss!"

The snake-like basilisks snap at one another while hissing in excitement. Their appearances resemble giant river-serpents, with two thin arms sticking out of their sides for dexterity purposes. Sadly, most basilisks are far too weak to use their arms in melee combat.

"Kill all them fockin' fleshbags," A Kobold yells. The fur-covered reptilian pounds his claws together to get his blood boiling. "I'm bloody starvin' fer some meat!"

"Yes, that's the spirit!" Laharl cackles. "Now, follow me, you insufferable weaklings! Whoever lands the killing blow on that shit-sucking Sphinx will get a special reward, hahaha!!"

Without hesitation, the entire company of monsters rushes down the great hallway leading to the core. Its hundred-foot width provides an unusual amount of breathing room for the monsters to spread out and overtake one another. A makeshift race ensues as several of the strongest warriors take the lead, trying to beat their rivals to the Core.

Hungry, the lone goblin among all the stronger monsters, clings to one of the reptilian-kobolds, using its perfectly-straightened horns as a handhold.

"H-hey, don't go so fast..." Hungry mutters. "We no need be first, haha..."

The kobold laughs. "Weak little gobby! That's why your kind licks the skarn-droppings off our feet! You're too bloody scared to stand up for yerselves! Bahaha!"

Unlike many monsters that come in uniform colors, kobolds feature a variety of reds, yellows, greens, and greys among their scales. A few kobolds even stand out for their bright yellow patterns. Their appearance, a mixture of draconian and crocodilian, make them look like slimmer versions of Kar.

Hungry's newest battle-buddy is a multi-colored kobold with black scales and a soft, white underbelly. Krugar, the head of the cave-dwelling Coal Eaters, exhales a small plume of fire as his face contorts into a grin.

"No matter how strong that Sphinx bloke thinks he be, he ain't nothin' 'gainst these numbers!" Krugar laughs.

The third invader contingent rushes toward the Core at breakneck speeds exceeding sixty miles an hour. Within less than a minute, the still-open great doors loom within view, making them grin.

However.

Amongst the light pouring out of the Core's entryway, a small, shadowy silhouette stands alone.

Kar, King of the Monsters, stands with his arms crossed, waiting patiently for his enemies to arrive.

Blinker lays on Kar's shoulder, fast asleep. When Kar starts to move, she awakens from her slumber while blinking her droopy eyes.

"Huh? Oh, they're here. Sheesh! Took them long enough!"

"Did you enjoy your catnap, Butterfly?" Kar asks.

"It was alright. Gotta keep my stamina up so we can kick butt."

Kar nods.

"Hurgh. Our enemies are numerous. Once the strong ones show up, I will have to rely on you."

Blinker's bravado fades. "Yeah. Don't worry, gator-man. As long as we're together, we can't lose."

"It is as you say, Butterfly."

Recommended Listening

The horde arrives.

Fifteen basilisks pounce at Kar, their serrated teeth lunging for his neck, legs, and arms.

Kar steps forward to meet them.

Slap.

With a wave of his hand, the Monster King ends five of their lives in an instant. Their skulls shatter and their snake-like bodies crumble under his palm's power.

However, the other ten manage to evade his attack.

Chomp!

The monstrous snakes, each one fifteen feet long, with three-foot heads, grab hold of the Monster King's scales.

A moment later, their teeth shatter when Kar flexes his muscles. The power coursing through his body makes his defenses harder than titanium. Horrified, the basilisks recoil in pain, screeching as blood spews from their mouths.

"Never should have come here," Kar mutters.

The Monster King scuffs his heel across the ground, spewing a hail of rocks up at the injured basilisks. The pebbles tear through their scales like bullets through wet paper. All ten of the remaining basilisks turn into bloodied paper mache as they flop lifelessly to the dirt.

An instant afterward, ten kobolds and seven Burner demons leap into the fray. The recently evolved demons fling fireballs at Kar's face, while the kobolds swing their steel-rending claws at his chest. Kar spins on his heel, ducks down, and balls his fingers into a fist.

Thoomph!

Kar punches the air, summoning a boulder from under his feet. It catches the drake-like kobolds off-guard by scattering them like bowling balls, only to explode immediately afterward, peppering Kar's foes with rocky shrapnel. The Burner demons barely get a split-second to watch as their fireballs miss and Kar's counterattack meets its mark. They perish, unable to retaliate.

However, the first wave of kobolds survive their encounter with the Monster King. Thanks to their hardened scales, mirroring his, and their relatively high intelligence, they dart toward him with deadly intentions.

"Don't give 'im a moment ta' think!" One of the kobolds barks. "Keep hittin' 'im til he croaks!"

Hungry, still riding atop the dual-colored black and white kobold, arrives in the next wave. He grits his teeth and readies himself for a beating. "Oh, no! Me no want this! Me no like this!!"

Kar falls forward and lands on his hands. He skitters around in a four-legged stance, using his hands and feet like a taijitsu master to throw off his opponents. One after the other, dozens of kobolds and basilisks swarm him, their numbers increasing rapidly. None of them so much as scratches the legendary Sphinx.

The Monster King pounces into the air. He grabs hold of the ceiling and yanks with all his strength, collapsing fifty tons of debris atop the neverending swarm of monsters. However, a brigade of earth-manipulating Burrowers meets his advance, using their powers to fling the debris left and right. They save ninety percent of Kar's targets, sending sighs of relief among the invaders.

"Kar! We can't stop them all!" Blinker yells.

Kar flicks his eyes backward. He spots fifty kobolds and basilisks rushing toward the Core Doors. Having skirted around him, the enemies beeline for the humans, making Kar frown.

"My pet humans can protect themselves... but when did I say you could enter?"

Kar falls from the ceiling. He raises his fists overhead and smashes the enemies beneath him into bloody mulch, continuing his attack through them, into the Labyrinth's floor. A massive earthquake rumbles the Labyrinth for miles in every direction, sparing only the Core itself.

Hundreds of tons of rubble collapses outside the Core's double-doors. The monsters and Lords who dared to bypass Kar jerk their heads upward and scream as an avalanche plunges toward them.

Crunch.

The avalanche continues, unabated. It buries the Core's entrance behind more than a thousand tons of debris, making entry impossible for the moment.

Kar smiles.

The Monster King leaps to his feet and stretches out his arms. "None may pass! If you want a taste of my pet humans, you'll have to get through me, first! Now, come! Give me a challenge!"

The monsters nearest Kar jerk back in fright as the Monster King lunges at them. Their faces turn pale as his deathly specter dwarfs their shadows. Kar grabs two kobolds by the legs and uses them as blunt weapons, beating their comrades to death with their scaled bodies.

"Bahaha!" Kar laughs. "Too weak! Too weak!!"

Suddenly, a flash of movement catches Kar's eye. A single demoness, one with a distinctive blood-red cape, skitters toward him on her hands and feet.

A Baron! Kar observes.

She leaps toward Kar, raising her clawed nails over her head. Kar retaliates by swinging his comatose kobold weapons toward her. However, the moment the kobolds strike the demoness, she vanishes.

An illusion? Aaargh!

Kar's inner self howls in pain as the Baron of Misery materializes behind him and rakes her talons across his back, drawing deep red rivulets of blood.

"You're not so tough!" Laharl cackles, taunting Kar. She lands on her hands and feet and jumps toward the wall of debris collapsed before the Core, only to frown.

Damn! Not even a little hole I can slip through. Guess I'll have to kill the Sphinx before I can get inside where all the juicy man-meat is.

Kar drops his living battering-ram-kobolds. "Hurgh. That woman's claws pierced my scales. She is quite strong... for a Baron."

Blinker hovers overhead. She activates her fairy magic, summoning the illusion of invisibility around herself. "Do you want any help?"

Kar chuckles softly. "Heh. No. You stay safe, Butterfly."

The Monster King claps his hands together, weaves a magic symbol, and presses both palms against the ground. This time, two boulders bubble out of the Labyrinth floor, causing the five nearest basilisks to shrink back as they try to figure out where the Monster King will aim his next attack.

However, Kar doesn't throw the boulders. Instead, he stands still for a moment and uses his inner mana to carve two shapes into the center of the giant rocks.

Two seconds later, the boulders split in half to reveal two Kar-shaped statues, each one only half the Monster King's size. The two statues spring to life, their crocodile mouths opening in a silent roar.

Laharl skitters along the wall adjacent to the Core's entrance like a cockroach. Her eyes lock onto the statues with a look of disbelief. "What? It can't be! The Monster King... he's become a soul manipulator! Those are golems!"

Kar ignores Laharl's shock. "Go, my children. Kill the weak ones. I'll handle Little Miss Cricket myself."

Kar's stone elementals nod. They spring toward the dumbfounded basilisks and swing their fists like hammers, shattering skulls as if they were made of chalk. Each one possesses only a tenth of the Monster King's strength, but nearly the same amount of durability.

"What a scam!" Krugar, Hungry's battle-buddy, yells. "That damned Monster King's a dirty, rotten cheater!"

The battle intensifies. Kar's clones tear through the kobolds, basilisks, and demon grunts with ease. A pair of Demon Lords working under Laharl join forces to try and defeat just one of Kar's golems, but even with the combined power of wind and water, they can't break the construct's defenses. All they manage is to briefly slow it down.

Meanwhile, Kar focuses his attention on Laharl. She zips around surprisingly fast, using her arms and legs with a level of dexterity mirroring Kar. Whether in a two-legged or four-legged stance, Laharl manages to skirt around Kar while keeping a wary eye locked on him.

"Hehehe... bit unfair, isn't this? One little Baron girl against a big, strong monster like you!"

Kar's expression turns unsightly. "Hurgh. Cut the crap, tiny Cricket. If you can't take me on, then you should run away with your tail between your legs. Nobody forced you to come here."

"Don't you dare compare me to a bug, you shit-swallowing pissant!" Laharl shrieks. The Baron of Misery coils strength into her arms and legs as she prepares to pounce. "You're about to find out why they call me the Strongest Baron! Raaahh!!"

Laharl leaps at Kar from the collapsed rubble. Her body becomes a guided missile, making her travel the fifty-foot distance to her opponent in the blink of an eye.

Fwish!

She vanishes an instant before colliding with Kar's fist, then reappears beteen his legs.

Kar's eyes widen. "Hurgh!"

Too late, he tries to grab the Baroness, but she slashes the comparatively soft undersides of his thighs, ripping out massive chunks of flesh before vanishing a moment later.

"Aargh!" Kar howls, more angry than injured. His eyes turn bloodshot as he instantly locks onto Laharl's new position, ten feet to his right. Blood drips down his legs and splashes at his feet, mixing with the blood from his back.

"Hahaha!" Laharl cackles. She spins on her palm and rolls away, narrowly avoiding Kar's tail when he tries to swipe her. She licks Kar's blood off her fingers, her face flushing as various sexual feelings spring up in her chest. "Too slow, you tasty little gecko!"

Kar's nostrils flare, expelling the anger he felt only a moment before. His emotions return to normal as he eyeballs the Baron of Misery.

"Hurgh. Cricket seems to be teleporting, but that isn't it. An illusion? I wonder..."

Despite his muttering being barely audible, Laharl's demonic hearing allows her to pick up on the Sphinx's words.

"Everyone told me you had big brains, Sphinx-thief, but I didn't believe them! Now I see that I was wrong! You're as sharp as my claws! Kyahaha!"

Laharl stops laughing. Her expression turns menacing.

"If I kill you, Ose will have no choice but to make me a Duke. Why don't you be a dear and die for me?"

Laharl vanishes. Suddenly, she reappears behind Kar, both of her claws pulled back to impale the Sphinx's heart from behind.

Kar smirks. As I thought.

The Sphinx side-steps Laharl, causing her to strike nothing but air. She stabs the spot where Kar stood only a split-second earlier, missing him by a single millimeter.

"What? How?!"

Laharl jerks her eyes toward the Sphinx's new position. Time freezes as her blood runs cold.

"You're not as clever as you think," Kar rumbles. His reptilian eyes fixate on the Baron of Misery, making her feel as small as an ant.

Slap.

Slowly, almost casually, Kar backhands the Baron, sending her flying backward. She slams into a random piece of rubble, bounces off, and crashes against the ceiling. A moment later, she falls to the floor and hits it with a thud, dazed and confused.

"Hngh... he... how did he... see through... my illusions..."

Several of Laharl's ribs stick through her chest. Blood bubbles from inside her and spills all over the ground.

The Baron of Misery lays limp, unable to move. Her broken arms and legs make it impossible for her to flee as Kar ambles toward her without a care in the world.

"Hurgh. Stupid girl," Kar chuckles. "My wife is a fairy. Could such poorly-summoned copies fool me? Every time I spoke to you, your body was only an illusion. You vanished the moment you left my sight and made me follow your fake body with my eyes."

Kar's lighthearted tone darkens as he gazes at the haggard, broken husk at his feet.

"Even now... how stupid do you think I am? Come out. This false form will not deceive me."

Laharl stiffens. She meets Kar's gaze and grins.

"Haha. You've even figured out this much, eh?"

The Baron's figure disappears, while three other copies of herself reappear on Kar's right, left, and behind him.

"Projections, not illusions," Kar says, his smile devoid of any pleasure. "Illusions cannot interact with the physical world... but projections can. That is what makes you confident enough to attack me head-on."

Laharl's eyes flash with excitement. She watches as the Sphinx turns to face her, crosses his arms, and assumes a haughty pose.

"Hahaha... that's what I love about men like you! Yes, perfect! Big muscles, big brains!! Who could be a better slave for me than you? I'll make you my pet, crocodile! I'll make you MINE!!"

Laharl's tongue lolls out of her mouth as she pants like a dog. Her tongue slips between the gaps in her razor-sharp teeth, giving her a wild, untamed look.

Kar glances past her, at his golems, as they continue to absolutely destroy legions of monsters.

"Hurgh... this game... it isn't any fun when my enemies are so weak."

"Don't mock me!!" Laharl shrieks. "You haven't even begun to fathom my power!"

"Oh? And have you, perhaps, grasped mine?" Kar asks.

Slowly, the Sphinx lowers his arms. He inhales deeply, relishing the smell of blood.

"Crocodiles are not like lizards..." Kar mutters.

"...my people... are predators."

Before Laharl can react, Kar lunges toward her summoned projection on his right. He moves without any preamble, without coiling strength into his legs, and without revealing his intent.

Laharl misses her chance to react. Her projection explodes as the Sphinx's fist lands with the power of a volcano. He liquefies her body, turning her into a blood-balloon that explodes and spatters its innards in a 180-degree half-sphere. By the time Laharl's other two projections realize what's happening, Kar has already leaped at the second one and raised his fist above his head, before swinging it down like a sledgehammer.

SPLAT!

Kar turns the second projection into a blood-bomb while grinning like a madman.

"Demons killed my wife!"

Kar leaps at Laharl's third projection as she jumps backward, narrowly avoiding his clutches.

"You killed my children!"

Kar claps his hands, blasting a shockwave at Laharl and flinging her against the Labyrinth's wall.

"You exterminated my species!"

Kar grabs the Baron of Misery, wrapping his giant claws around her comparatively tiny, female body.

"And today, I'll get my REVENGE!"

Kar slams her against the floor, crushing her final projection and splattering her innards a hundred feet in every direction.

Kar rears his head up and gazes at a rock three hundred feet away. There, he senses a faint, suppressed mana signature.

"Found you!"

Kar shoves his palm through the air. He opens his hand and pretends to push the boulder, using his earth manipulation powers to shove it away, where it strikes the real Laharl and flings her backward, smashing her against the Labyrinth wall.

"Aargh!" Laharl howls, her cry of pain mirroring those she drew from Kar only minutes before. "You-you can't possibly... gah!"

Laharl shoves the boulder off her body. She falls to her knees, her legs broken, as she watches the Monster King pounce toward her.

What can I do?! I didn't think a mere monster could be so powerful!!

All the blood drains from Laharl's face as the Monster King leaps at her. With her best trump cards exhausted, she hasn't a chance against the nearly unkillable Sphinx.

At that moment.

A flash of light appears in the air. A magical playing card appears, summoning an invisible mana-bubble to protect Laharl.

Slam!

Kar crashes against the force-field, full force, hitting it with the power of a stinger missile. Nevertheless, the wall holds, preventing him from killing his prey.

"Who dares?!" Kar snarls, his expression echoing an enraged lion.

"Sorry I'm late," A woman says. "I had to get Ying-Ying."

Kar jerks his head to Laharl's right, where a portal appears in midair, allowing Mara, the Baron of Games, and her sister, Ying-Ying, to emerge.

"Our backup is almost here," Mara says, as she pulls her black hood up to obscure her face. "In the meantime, you will help me kill this Sphinx."

Kar's rage slightly dims.

"Hurgh! Peaches? Blossom? Ah... that's right..."

Kar's thoughts turn inward. Turtle erased their memories. Based on his actions, I can only assume he did not wish to kill them.

However.

They have appeared before me now as enemies! I am sorry, Turtle, but I cannot let them hurt my pet humans.

Mara motions with her hands. She summons a magical card into midair and throws it at Laharl's body, where it slaps against her face and explodes into a flash of light. Moments later, Laharl's broken bones snap back into place, healing herself to full.

"You're lucky I came when I did," Mara says. "Any later, and my time reversal magic wouldn't have worked. Now, are you ready to assist me?"

Laharl licks her teeth. She sniffles at Mara, but bows her head. "Kss! Fine! We'll do things your way... but only this once!"

Ying-Ying leaps backward into her portal, closing it behind her. "I'm out! Won't be any use here!"

Finally, the mana-bubble preventing Kar from reaching his prey begins to crack. Spiderwebs appear on its surface as Mara's magical card fades away, giving the women mere moments to prepare.

"We have to kill the Sphinx, or hold on until the Dukes arrive!" Mara says. "And knowing our luck... those lazy bastards are going to take their time!"

Kar watches the wall, waiting until the instant before it disappears to lunge toward the women.

"Hurgh! Too bad! I'll kill you before they arrive!"

Part 232: The Sphinx's Game

Recommended Listening

The King of All Monsters, the Legendary Croco-Sphinx, Kar, leaps at the pair of demonesses the moment their shield breaks. His mountain-like shadow, formed by his ten-foot-tall height, dwarfs the pitiful Barons at his feet. They haven't a hope of defeating him.

Or so might the average person think.

Mara, having prepared for Kar's attack, holds up her arm, allowing a card to fly out of her sleeve and into her grasp.

"Wind Blade, Evoke!"

The card explodes with a dazzling flash of light. A split-second later, a hurricane-like gust of wind bursts out of the card's front, slams into Kar, and flings the Monster King backward. Kar yelps in surprise as his momentum reverses, causing him to smash into the wall beside the Core's double-doors.

Immediately afterward, Mara's card turns grey, having had its power drained. It fizzles away and disappears into the void, unusable again for seven hours.

Mara glances at Laharl. "Hide yourself. Wait for an opportunity."

Laharl nods. "Tch. Don't have to tell me twice."

Kar recovers immediately, but by the time he locks onto Mara's crouching form, her compatriot has already disappeared into the huge piles of rubble.

"Hurgh. Interesting. Mother has mentioned the Tarot Sect before. This fight will be a learning experience for me, Peaches."

Mara doesn't reply. The look on her face gives away how worried she is that she won't be able to defeat the Monster King, even if she puts her life on the line.

If I somehow eke out a win, Ose will surely give me enough souls to advance to the rank of Duke. I'll be able to wield at least ten cards if that happens! For now though, seven is my limit. Defeating the Sphinx is unlikely... but for the sake of my peers, I must give this battle my all!

Once again, Mara raises her arm to summon another card from her sleeve. Her motions mimic those of a street magician, making the card's summoning appear effortless. However, her actions are anything but ordinary, having spent over five thousand years honing her skills.

"Shadow Tendril, Imbue!"

Mara's body becomes hazy as the power of darkness swallows her whole. Her figure begins to bend and twist, copying the powers of a Shade with just a hint of Belial's stretchiness. Additionally, her activated card disappears, while a golden dot appears on her forehead.

Golden Aspects will stay imbued for ten minutes before they return to my spiritual deck. I'll need to use all of my best trump cards to defeat the Sphinx... but I also have to wear him down, first.

Mara flits toward Kar, her body shimmering through the terribly illuminated battlefield like a reaper of death. Her figure becomes indistinct as she lunges both of her arms toward the Monster King, intending to impale his organs.

Kar snorts. "Do you think I'll just stand still? Hurgh!"

The Monster King pounds his foot into the ground to summon an earthen wall. It blocks Mara's attack, but reveals a greater purpose when Kar punches it and sends the huge stone slab flying at her.

From behind the slab, Mara yells out, "Siegmund's Troll, Summon!"

A massive, heavily armored monster, standing twenty-feet-tall, with its head missing the ceiling by only five feet, emerges from Mara's third card. The troll squats down and uses its shoulder to block Kar's attack, causing the earthen wall to shatter harmlessly into a thousand splinters. Mara leaps atop the creature's shoulders, her shadowy forehead now bearing a blood-red dot in addition to the gold one from before.

"Siegmund's Troll! Crush the Monster King!"

Kar's reptilian eyes narrow to slits as the gigantic monster, twice his size, bellows a war-cry and stomps toward him. Each stomp of its feet sends tremors deep into the Labyrinth.

"Pretty big guy..." Kar mutters.

A harrowing battle ensues. Kar trades blows with the troll while fending off Mara's shadow-attacks. She uses her arms like lances, attempting to stab Kar from behind while the Monster King battles her summoned creature.

After three minutes, Kar finds an opening. He knocks aside the giant troll's fist, scoots under its arm, and uppercuts it smack in the middle of its chest.

Thoomph!

Kar's fist, possessing power akin to a Demon Emperor, knocks the troll off its feet while shattering its ribs. The creature tries to howl in pain, but it fails to utter a sound. All the wind flees from its lungs thanks to Kar's punch, making it unable to fight.

"Sorry, kid," Kar grunts. "War sucks. Facing me was just bad luck."

Kar scoops his claws across the dirt, summoning a powerful rock-spike to envelop his arm. An instant later, he leaps toward the troll's head.

All the color drains toward Mara's face as she tries to stop Kar's attack. "No!! You bastard!"

Kar ignores her angry screams. He impales the troll through the underside of its jaw while unleashing enough strength to rip its entire head off. A second later, the troll explodes into a flash of light, making its blood-red sigil on Mara's forehead disperse into the wind.

The Sphinx lands on his feet and whirls to face Mara. She grinds her teeth together, enraged. "You fucker! It took my sect five hundred years to craft that card, and now it's gone! I'll make you regret facing me!"

"Hurgh. Do not lecture me," Kar says. He lands on all four of his limbs and coils strength into his muscles. "You came here intent on killing my pet humans. Death will be your reward."

With a hearty bellow, Kar pounces at Mara like a jaguar. He extends his claws and prepares to rip her shadow-body in half. However, the instant before Kar lands the killing blow, Mara's enraged expression disappears, replaced instead with a smirk.

"Silly reptile. You just activated my trap card."

Kar's heart skips a beat. A massive fist, one comprised of fire and lightning, explodes from the ground underneath him. It rockets toward his body at the speed of sound and strikes him with the force of a meteor, pounding the Sphinx upward, where he crashes into the ceiling with a deafening boom. The card fades away, its evoked effect returning it to Mara's spiritual deck with the rest.

However, Mara's expression morphs into disbelief. Seven devils! How did the Sphinx survive an evocation of the Thunder Giant?! That was my only Platinum Aspect!

Kar falls from the ceiling. His body, more durable than any tank from prior to the Energy Wars, trembles with pain. He hits the dirt and coughs up blood while clutching his chest.

"H-hurgh! Hngh! Damn... hurts... hurts like hell..."

For once, the Monster King's invincible presence seems to dim. He glances at Mara with a hint of respect.

"Not... not bad, Peaches. You... you caught me... off-guard."

Mara, seeing her foe crippled before her, doesn't hesitate. Immediately, she summons another card from her sleeve. However, her expression distorts into fury.

Useless! I didn't want one of my Bronze Aspects! Not at a time like this! I need enough power to finish the Sphinx off!

Despite her anger, the Tarot Master has no choice but to activate the card. "Steel Viper, Summon!"

This time, a razor-sharp sword appears in Mara's grasp. Its curved appearance mirrors a scimitar, while its handle resembles a metallic snake. The bottom of the handle snaps and hisses, desperate for blood.

I need another twenty seconds before I can draw another Tarot card, Mara thinks. Until then, I'll have to make do with the remainder of my Shadow Tendril imbuement and this Steel Viper!

Mara jumps into the air. She lunges the Steel Viper toward Kar's helpless body, forcing him to go on the defensive. Kar weakly raises his arms to bat away Mara's living blade, but it twists and bites with a mind of its own. Sometimes the sword chops and hacks into Kar's arms, while other times, its handle bites between the gaps in his scales and injects venom into his body.

However, after twenty seconds pass, Mara summons a new card. Her face brightens as its details appear in her mind.

"Temporal Cricket, Enchant!"

Mara's Shadow Tendrils fade away, erasing their golden dot from her forehead. However, the Steel Viper and Temporal Cricket appear instead, with a green and blue dot, respectively.

The Temporal Cricket's magic enchants the Steel Viper, giving it the effect of time dilation. Each time Mara lunges toward Kar and lands an attack, her sword strikes him thrice, making it impossible for Kar to defend.

Over and over, Mara forces Kar backward. The Sphinx roars and howls as he drags his beaten and battered body away from the Baron of Games.

The Baron's heart begins to tremble with glee. I'm doing it! Somehow, I'm pushing the Sphinx backward! Maybe the Monster King wasn't as strong as I first thought! Maybe Laharl weakened him during their fight!

However, even as Mara lands several gruesome attacks on the Sphinx, Kar's chest finishes regenerating, all thanks to his reptilian body.

Kar's eyes narrow, as a wicked grin spreads across his face.

"Hurgh. I hope you're not thinking this is an easy fight, Peaches."

Mara's expression falls. She draws a new card without hesitation, scowling once again at her terrible luck.

Another Bronze Aspect?! Dammit! I can't keep wasting my mana on such trivial Tarot cards!

Three times, Mara has tried to draw cards. Each time, they ended up being her weakest cards. Naturally, bronze cards might not be useful in a fight against someone like the Monster King, but even for the sect leader, filling her Spiritual Deck with nothing but silver, gold, and platinum aspects would drain the sect's resources and cost her far too much mana.

As a Baron, Mara's mana reserves fall short of any Duke or Emperor. The number and quality of the Tarot cards she can activate prove inevitably worse than if she were only one rank higher.

"Kar!" Blinker yells from above. "Are you alright?! Do you need my help?"

"No!" Kar yells. "You stay out of this. Leave these weaklings to me!"

Mara suddenly remembers the Monster Queen's existence.

That's right! If I locate Kar's wife and break her invisibility, I can capture her and use her as a weapon against him! Fairies are far too weak to be any use in combat!

Mara's thoughts inevitably turn toward the bronze-ranked card she continues to hold in her mind realm, one which she contemplated discarding only a moment before.

The Three-Eyed Gecko. It's useless against the Monster King, but against the Queen, who has only fairy magic to work with, it will prove invaluable!

"Laharl!" Mara yells. "I need you!"

The instant Laharl pokes her head up from behind a rock, Mara's gaze locks onto her.

"Three-Eyed Gecko, Imbue!"

A third dot appears on Mara's forehead, while the power of her card transfers to Laharl. The Baron of Misery blinks in surprise as her vision widens, allowing her to see things she couldn't before.

Having never fought alongside the Baron of Games, Laharl finds herself surprised. "What the hell's going on?"

"Grab the Monster Queen!" Mara yells. "I'll keep the Sphinx pinned down!"

Kar jumps to his feet as Mara's words inflame his anger. "I am your opponent! You will regret touching my Butterfly!"

"Oh, we'll see about that!" Laharl cackles. She quickly flicks her eyes around the room before locking onto the tiny, six-inch fairy hovering near the roof, her invisibility magic useless against the power of the gecko's peerless vision. "Found you! Eeeyah!"

Laharl shrieks with glee. She and three of her projections leap out of their hiding places and rush across the rubble, ignoring Kar completely while lunging for his wife.

"Butterfly!" Kar roars. "You stupid demons! I warned you not to touch my wife- gah!"

Kar doesn't get to finish his sentence. Mara whips out another card and activates it before attacking. "Ice Orc, Imbue!"

Mara jumps at Kar as a fourth dot appears on her forehead. Her muscles swell with icy power, strengthening her while chilling her surroundings to below zero.

Clang!

Kar raises his arm to deflect Mara's blow, only for her attack to nearly break his shoulder. The Monster King's joints shudder under Mara's astounding power, forcing Kar to refocus on her.

"Hurgh! Cowardly woman!"

Mara begins swinging her sword at blistering speeds, using the power of the Temporal Cricket to strike Kar five times per second. "Not cowardly! SMART!"

Over and over, Kar gets forced back by Mara's merciless onslaught. Even with her lowly Baron status, she still manages to suppress the Monster King long enough for Laharl to strike at Blinker.

"You can see me?!" Blinker yelps.

Laharl's projections pounce at the diminutive little fairy. "Haha!! I can kill you, too!!"

The Baron of Misery moves faster than a cheetah. She grabs at Blinker with the intent to crush the fairy into pulp in her grasp, only for Blinker to teleport away.

"Hm?"

Laharl misses her target. She flips in midair, bounces off the ceiling, and leaps toward Blinker's new position.

"Your tricks won't stop me!"

Laharl's three projections mirror her. They jump in different directions, intending to surround Blinker with attacks from every angle.

Blinker's expression darkens.

"Stupid woman. Don't you get it? Kar doesn't want me to interfere, not because he's afraid you'll hurt me..."

Blinker rapidly weaves ten magic signs with her fingers.

"...but because he doesn't want me to make the fight too easy. I'm the Monster Queen, dumbass! I'm strong as shit!"

Suddenly, Blinker's body explodes in size. With a flash of light, she transforms into a twelve-foot-tall fairy, one that dwarfs even Kar's size.

Laharl continues beelining toward her enemy. "Your pathetic illusions won't fool me, little fairy!"

The instant Laharl's hurtling body reaches within ten feet of Blinker's giant form, Blinker sighs.

"You're a terrible illusionist. Obviously, I can make projections, too."

Slap.

Blinker's arm moves at a speed too fast for the naked eye to follow. She swats Laharl out of the air like a cockroach, sending the screeching Baron of Misery hurtling toward the distant battle between Kar's golems and the enemy monster horde. Laharl crashes into a wall of Kobold corpses, making them explode into a gruesome, bloody mess. Her three projections disappear immediately afterward.

Blinker sighs. "Aw, man. It's no wonder Kar hates fighting weaklings. That wasn't fun at all!"

Blinker stomps her feet in annoyance before turning to look at her husband. Kar battles Mara, but the fight appears to have put Kar into a dangerous situation.

"Kaaaaar!" Blinker whines, her giantess body summoning a booming voice. "It's not faaaaair! Why do you get to have all the fun?!"

Mara spares a glance toward Blinker amongst her battle with Kar. Her heart skips a beat as, instead of Laharl striking a victorious pose, the Monster Queen stands in a stupidly oversized body while whining like a baby.

What the hell?! Where did Laharl go? What happened in the last ten seconds?!

Kar, 'suffering' from Mara's onslaught, casually replies. "Please, Butterfly. I am trying to enjoy myself here! I will let you play when the important demons show up!"

Mara's heart suffers a horrible blow thanks to Kar's words. "What? You're just toying with me?! Lies!"

Kar, still defending against Mara's lightspeed-sword-slashes, shrugs. "Hurgh. I... I didn't want to hurt your feelings. You were putting so much effort into our fight, after all."

With a sigh, Kar breaks character. Mara tries to slash him again, but the Monster King suddenly stands upright, twists his wrist, and grabs Mara's hand, stopping it mid-swing.

"Huh?!"

Mara, now completely baffled, tries to break free of Kar's iron-like grasp. She fails.

The Monster King blushes out of embarrassment.

"I am sorry, Peaches. It looked like you were having so much fun... so I tried to give you a good fight. Truthfully, your attacks barely hurt, but I didn't want to embarrass you in front of your friend."

Every drop of blood drains from Mara's face. She tries desperately to pull away from Kar's grasp, only to find his fingers tougher than any prison's shackles.

"You scheming bastard!" Mara howls. "Let me go! Lemme go!!"

Kar stands and watches awkwardly as the Baron of Games tries to pry his fingers off her hand. "Hurgh. Can't we all just get along?"

"Screw you!" Mara roars. She summons another card, only for her heart to skip a beat.

Yes! Chance! No matter what, if I don't break the Sphinx's grip, he'll certainly kill me in the next few seconds! I have to bet it all on this!

With her left hand entangled in Kar's grasp, Mara uses her right hand to invoke another Tarot Card. "Matured Drake, Transform!!"

To Mara's relief, the card doesn't instantly shatter. Thanks to its rank as a Golden Aspect, the card's value is incalculable in her eyes. Mara's body begins to rapidly shift and deform as the power of a massive half-dragon crystallizes in her veins.

"ROAAAR!"

Mara loses part of her sanity. Her body quadruples in height, turning her into a twenty-foot-tall and fifty-foot-long fire drake. Unlike the dragons of old, this one possesses only a fraction of their power.

Still, its might is fearsome to behold.

Kar releases Mara's hand and jumps back while assuming a defensive posture.

"Hurgh. It seems Peaches does not wish to be my friend."

"Kar!" Blinker yells. "Watch out! That thing looks hungry!"

Mara, having fully realized her drake form, howls at Kar while unleashing three-thousand degree flames. Kar leaps to the left, narrowly avoiding the cone of fire as it sweeps across where he stood only a moment before.

"Peaches! Please! I wasn't trying to hurt your feelings!" Kar says. "I'm sorry if my power offended you!"

"GROOOOAR!"

Mara howls in reply, confusing Kar for a second.

"Hmm. I can't tell if she's angry, or..."

"Kar! Stop talking to yourself!" Blinker says. She returns to her tiny six-inch form and rushes the matured drake while summoning magic signs. "I'll take this lady on for you!"

Kar's eyes widen. "No, Butterfly! She's my prey! Stop stealing my kills!"

The Drake battles the husband and wife combo, unleashing a fearsome power as it belches lava-like liquid flames without end. Kar smashes the drake's face, its side, and its limbs, but his attacks prove surprisingly ineffective.

"Hurgh! This creature is stronger than I thought," Kar says. "Peaches will make a formidable ally once I convert her to Turtle's side!"

Blinker explodes with a flash of light. She transforms into a four-armed gorilla, one with a head that brushes against the ceiling. She jumps atop the drake and rides it like a bucking bronco, using the narrow space and the drake's limited movements against it. After wrapping her arms around the Drake's neck, she locks it in a chokehold and grins.

"Two points for me, hubby!"

Kar waves a fist at her in frustration. "Not fair! You cheated with your fairy magic!"

"Nuh-uh! I'm just better than you!"

Mara, still a drake, struggles desperately to break free of the fairy's arm wrapped around her throat. However, she fails, and her consciousness begins to fade.

Somewhere in the back of the Baron's mind, a deep sadness appears.

I never stood a chance against the Monster King, nor his Queen.

Eventually, the drake sags in Blinker's grasp. With her mind having fallen asleep, Mara's transformation deactivates, returning her to her normal six-foot self.

Blinker climbs off Mara and gently lays the Baron of Games on the ground. After returning to her tiny fairy form, she wipes her arm across her forehead. "Whew! Using projection magic is tough! I can turn myself into anything, but it takes SO much mana!"

Blinker lands on Kar's shoulder. The Monster King kneels to check Mara's pulse and sighs. "Hurgh. You poor thing. Grumble grumble..."

"Aww, are you mad at me?" Blinker asks, batting her eyes innocently. "Cheer up! I'm sure the big, strong demons will show up soon! In the meantime, what are you going to do with little miss card-wizard here, hmm?"

Kar licks his lips. "This female has an excellent figure. Look at her hips and upper body. I think she would make a good mate."

Blinker's heart skips a beat. "What?! Kar! You can't cheat on me! You lousy, no-good jerk!"

"I meant for Turtle," Kar says, ignoring his wife's anger. "This little one would not be able to withstand my strength. If we attempted copulation, I would snap her like a twig. However, she would make an excellent bed-mate for Turtle. I say we tie her up and deliver her to him when he returns."

Blinker glances down the corridor, where the sounds of monsters fighting Kar's golems have grown distant. Already, the bodies have piled up so much that it's become hard for anyone to even make it down the hallway.

"Hmm. Nah! Jason wouldn't like that. He's a one-gal kind of guy, y'know? It would be a shame to kill such a cutie, though. Why don't we just let her go with a warning, huh?"

Kar shrugs. "Hurgh. It makes no difference to me. I didn't use even a tenth of my power against her. She will not be able to threaten me anytime soon."

However, Kar doesn't let Mara go. Instead, he binds her arms behind her with hardened dirt shackles while also covering her mouth with a gag.

"I will deliver her to our prison. Perhaps, when this war concludes, we can reform her into an ally."

Kar taps the ground, making it swallow Mara and pull her away. He sends her into the inner reaches of the Core with an earthen sign stuck to her chest.

Prisoner of war. With love, from Kar. XOXO.

"Ox-Arms will not hurt her," Kar says. He rises to his feet and dusts off his body, before finally looking into the distance. To Kar's surprise, only one of his golems continues to function. The other one lays in a heap with its body turned into sand, while the functional one has lost its left arm at some point.

"Hurgh. Return, my child. I will take over, now."

The golem stops mid-fight. Its body collapses, startling the bloodied and beaten monsters fighting it, making them wonder what the heck just happened.

Blinker cocks her head. "Where did that other Baron girl go? I slapped her pretty hard. Sure hope I didn't kill her..."

"She is fine," Kar says. "Cricket is a resilient little girl. However, her heart is evil, unlike Peaches. She is a terrible woman who has committed many atrocities. I shall kill her before the rest of her ilk arrive- hm?"

Kar pauses. He glances into the distance, past his fallen golems, into the deepest recesses of the Labyrinth's darkness.

There, the Monster King detects the slowly approaching signature of two Demon Dukes, multiple Barons, and fifty different Lords.

"Ah. It seems our enemies have decided to stop playing around. Butterfly, I will be counting on you for this next wave."

Blinker flops on Kar's shoulder and sighs. "Fine! Just lemme get a few minutes of shuteye, alright? Using all that magic really tuckered me out."

"Hurgh. Do as you please."

Two miles away, just out of the Monster King's sight, Bael and Artorias begin slowly trudging toward the Core. Orias, Vepar, and the Battle Brothers follow, along with a massive contingent of other demons.

"Dumbasses," Bael mumbles. "That's why they should've waited for us. Now Mara and Laharl have gone and gotten their asses beat."

Artorias's temper flares. "What worthless creatures these new, young demons are. Back in my day, a demon knew the meaning of respect! We knew to wait for orders from our Dukes and Emperors!"

"Yeah, yeah," Bael groans. "You sound like an old coot, Arty-boy. Long as you'n me are around, that Chump King's gonna go down. Let the kids have their fun. That's how they learn the important lessons in life."

Bael glances to his right, at Vepar's shriveled, rotting face.

"Like you, girl! You've been around long enough ta' know better'n fighting Monster Kings on your own. Ain't that right?"

Vepar hisses in annoyance. "Kss. Yes."

"Bahaha! You've screwed up plenty o' times. Remember when you fought that one Archangel gal by yourself? What was that broad's name again...?"

"Uzziel..." Vepar growls.

"Right! That one! Damn, the tits on our spirit momma! Bahahaha! She just about turned you inside out during that bigass war in heaven. Bet you learned a few life lessons that day."

"...Indeed."

Vepar's muted reaction echoes the sentiments of all the non-Duke demons. Thanks to their enhanced senses, all of them have witnessed the battle between the Monster King and his Baron opponents. The nervousness spread across all the gathered demons could freeze a glass of water solid.

Bael ignores the nervous expressions on his comrade's faces. However, when he glances past Vepar at the two demons trailing them, his laughter dies off.

"Hey. What's the matter with you guys, eh? I thought you'd be pumped and ready to kick ass."

Bael's gaze settles on Zamiel and Duriel, the Battle Brothers. Neither of them speaks. Instead, a look of acceptance appears on their faces, as if they've already discounted the upcoming war as nothing more than an annoyance.

Zamiel, the older, shorter brother, shrugs. "Yeah. We've got a buncha stuff on our mind, Big Bael. Actually, we were thinkin' of holdin' off on our attack. We should stay back and let you guys handle the early stuff."

Bael's eyes bulge out of his head. "Huh?? Since when are you two the types of guys to get cold feet? I don't get it! What gives?"

Zamiel scratches his head. "Eh, I dunno. We, uh, we went drinking last night, had a little too much ganja juice. Don't feel like going out there 'til our stomachs settle, y'know?"

Bael glances at Artorias. The Duke of Steel shrugs, not caring whether a couple of cowards come or stay.

"Let them stay behind if they want. I'd prefer they come, but half-hearted comrades will prove just as dangerous as enemies during this war."

"True, true," Bael says with a nod. "Aight. You punks can stay back if you want. I'll be real disappointed if ya don't come soon, though."

Duriel and Zamiel slow their pace and allow the rest of the demons to pass them. They nod at Bael. "Yep. We'll show up when the time's right, Duke of Pain. Don't you worry about that."

Eventually, the Battle Brothers lose sight of Bael and the rest of the invading army. Both brothers sigh in annoyance and trot off down a side hallway, unable to contain their frustrations any longer.

"Dammit," Duriel growls. "Why's the boss doin' this to us?! We've got a prime opportunity to carve the last crocodile to pieces! Think of how much stronger we'll become if we get a piece of that punk!"

Zamiel leans against a wall and watches as more demons continue filing down the adjacent corridor, all of them slowly increasing their speed as they near the Core.

"I'm sure the boss has his reasons, little bro. We've gotta follow his orders, and that's all there is to it. Do you want him to turn us into ghouls?"

Duriel crosses his arms. The giant tilts his chin up haughtily as he speaks. "No! But I don't wanna be someone's bitch either! I make fleshbags my bitches! That's how things are 'sposed to work!"

Suddenly, a figure emerges from the wall to Zamiel's right, startling both brothers. "Oh? Have my termsss causssed you ssssome minor losssesss? You poor thingsss..."

Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, slithers out of the wall to hover in the corridor between the Battle Brothers and the approaching army.

"Fooolsss... how dare you quessstion me. Where you would be without my giftsss, hm?!"

Zamiel and Duriel stare evenly at the Duke of Mist. The older brother, Zamiel, is the first to speak. "Look, we ain't goin' against you, boss! We just wanna know... what's the deal?! Let us rip that fat croc to pieces! You know we've got what it takes to off the bastard!"

"Yeah, what big bro said!" Duriel adds.

Mephisto shakes his head. "Ksss. Thisss isss why you follow my ordersss, sssilly little Baronsss... you would ruin all of my hard work over nothing!"

Mephisto hovers closer to Zamiel. His skeletal expression turns menacing as he curls up the corners of his mouth. "The Monssster King'sss body will be my greatessst acquirement sssinccce I lossst my dragon. Think of it! With hisss body, I will posssesss enough ssstrength to forccce my way into the Emperor rankssss. Perhapsss, with hisss ssstrength, towardsss Ossse, I can even..."

Mephisto trails off. His eyes turn bloodshot as an evil Cheshire grin spreads across his face.

"...ksss! If Ossse ssshould ssstumble upon an 'accident' in the future, wouldn't it be dreadful if I ssseized her body for myssself, hmm? Kekeke!"

Duriel and Zamiel glance at each other and nod approvingly.

"Damn, that's why you're the boss, boss!" Duriel says. "You're totally the smartest guy around here!"

"Yeah, pretty smart," Zamiel concedes. "Alright. We'll follow your lead then. I guess we've gotta catch the Sphinx when he's all alone, right? What if someone kills him before we can get to him?"

Mephisto laughs. "Kekeke! How could Bael or Artoriasss kill the Sssphinx? He hasss yet to unleasssh hisss true power! We mussst let the Dukesss wear the Sssphinx down... and then we ssshall ssswoop in and kill him with one blow!"

This time, it's the Battle Brothers who sport evil grins. "Haha. You're devious, boss. That's why we follow you. Nothing quite like the element of surprise. Maybe we'll use that croc's corpse as a fuck-toy for a while before you 'rez him, eh? Bahahaha!"

Mephisto waves his hand nonchalantly. "If fun isss what you desssire, fun isss what I'll give you... kekeke!"

The Duke of Mist fades into the wall, leaving the Battle Brothers behind by their lonesome.

"Well, guess we're gonna be waiting a while," Zamiel grunts. "What say we play some Sticks and Bones, eh, bro?"

"Hell yeah!"

Part 233: The Dukes' Onslaught

Bael, Artorias, Vepar, and Orias join hands with countless other demons. They walk down the blood-soaked corridor leading to the Labyrinth Core, all while passing the bodies of thousands of dead demons and monsters. Kar's golems, each wielding only a quarter of his power, still possess more than enough strength to handle the weakest dregs of demon society.

The Duke of Pain sweeps his gaze past dozens of dead friends he barely recognizes. His expression turns grim as he sighs. "Damn shame. Should've sent me in from the start."

Artorias shakes his head. "No. The humans managed to capture Beelzebub. Ose can gather intel behind enemy lines via her Astral Form, but she can't be everywhere at once. Who knows what devious capture methods they've planned for you?"

Bael chuckles. "Let 'em try. Humans have nabbed me lots of times. Can't ever keep me locked down, though. Can't torture me for intel. Can't hide me. Can't kill me. They're better off aiming for you or miss Ice Queen."

"Yes. That's what worries me."

Artorias falls silent. The black-metal-clad Duke of Steel walks side-by-side with Bael, leading their troops forward without hesitation. Soon, they arrive at a point where the bodies thicken to ten times their previous density. Six powerful golems stand at the ready, each one mirroring Kar's appearance. The stand with their arms and legs spread apart, as if taunting their enemies and daring them to attack.

Bael yawns. "Ahh, geez. Arty-boy, you take care of these things. If I get any more bored, I'll fall asleep."

"Hmph. Everyone, stay back," Artorias says. "You heard the Duke of Pain. These clay sculptures are mine to kill."

Kar's golems leap toward the demon army, making several of the weaker demons tremble with fear. They know they wouldn't stand a chance against these earthen creations, since not even the vanguard could handle them.

However, Artorias doesn't flinch. He presses his boot against the ground and rushes forward while weaving magical signs.

"Once, I was known as the Baron of Earthquakes. My earth manipulation was unparalleled across all of creation. Now, my powers have only strengthened after merging with my brother, foolish Monster King!"

Heaps of dirt jump from the Labyrinth's floor and attach to Artorias's arms, before hardening and solidifying into stone. Thanks to the power of transmutation, Artorias shifts their elemental structure into a far more durable and resilient material.

Crack!

Artorias's fist strikes the nearest golem. He pulverizes Kar's doppelganger into powder, spraying its body over a hundred feet into the distance.

Again and again, Artorias punches the golems, using his overwhelming power to crush them with ease. Each strike turns them into mud, rock, or granite fragments.

Within less than a minute, Artorias finishes. The remains of Kar's golems lay spread out all over the Labyrinth floor, making his allies whoop and cheer.

"Hell yeah! That's Artorias for ya!"

"Damn, isn't he overpowered? He might be the new strongest Duke!"

"Don't be ridiculous. Artorias is a badass, but he can't win against Bael."

"Eh, I don't know... Bael seems invincible, but if he has to fight the Duke of Steel..."

Several demons lower their voices, not wanting to piss either of the Dukes off. However, Bael and Artorias both possess incredibly sharp hearing. They ignore the ranting of their younger comrades who can't help but feel excited when witnessing Duke-level strength.

In the end, all demons desire power, Artorias thinks. It is in our blood to envy the strong.

Artorias kicks aside the remains of the final golem and marches down the hall once again. After hopping over the mounds of dead monsters blocking his path, he finally draws close enough to see the Monster King and Queen.

Kar stands upright, with one hand casually gripping the back of Laharl's neck. The unconscious demoness hangs limp at Kar's side like a sack of groceries.

"Hurgh. Metal-mouth," Kar growls. "We meet again."

Artorias pauses to allow the other demons to catch up. Bael hops the heap of bodies, as do Orias, Vepar, and the other demons following them.

"Last time we fought, I broke your body worse than I broke your spirit," Artorias says. "That was a year ago. It seems you've become stronger since then."

Kar nods. "I have. Hurgh. If you fight me here, I will not go easy on you. I will crush you, just as I did to Hotface, Peaches, and Cricket. Turn around and leave, little Duke."

"You might have gained a modicum of strength," Artorias says, his eyes tightening into a glare, "but against me, you'll still fall. My control over the earth will always exceed yours."

"So you say," Kar growls. He flicks his wrist, sending Laharl flying forward. The unconscious demoness crashes to the ground at Artorias's feet. "Here. I had to pick up your trash. Don't make me do it again."

Artorias's glare dims. He nudges Laharl with his foot. "Oh? You didn't kill the Baron of Misery. That seems very unlike you."

Kar crosses his arms. "Hurgh. Killing a defenseless female, especially one who is so weak, just doesn't sit right with my heart. Next time, I will not show such mercy."

Artorias nods. "Noted, but I'll make sure there is no next time, Sphinx. Warpers, send Laharl to the healing pits."

A demoness emerges from behind Bael. The beautiful young woman clutches her hands to her chest as she stares at Kar with trembling eyes. "Y-yes, Artorias. You! Monster King! Where is my sister?! What did you do to her?"

Kar's gaze lowers to the demoness wearing a Chinese-style dress. "Ah. Blossom. Do not worry. Peaches is uninjured. I merely captured her. I would never kill a woman if I didn't need to."

"Captured?! You gave my sister to the fleshbags?!" Ying-Ying exclaims. Her expression turns pained. "Bastard! Those animals will tear her apart! They'll rip her clothes off and defile-"

"Warper. Silence." Artorias says. His voice cuts Ying-Ying off mid-sentence, preventing her from speaking. Immediately, Ying-Ying remembers her place and bows her head. "Yes, Duke of Steel. I'm... I'm sorry."

"Don't be sorry. Be efficient. Follow my orders and get out of the way."

"Y-yes, sir!"

Ying-Ying's anger disappears, replaced instead with fear. When her eyes meet the fierce, glowing red orbs of the Duke of Steel, any thoughts of protesting vanish. His demonic aura, strengthened after countless millennia of struggling against the Archangel Uriel, proves even more overpowering than Bael's.

Without another word, Ying-Ying opens a portal, grabs Laharl, and drags her inside. The portal closes, leaving the invaders to finally face off against their monstrous enemy.

Bael chuckles. "We'll stay back and let you have some fun, Arty-boy. Take this punk down a peg."

Artorias shakes his head. "No. We will crush the Sphinx today. Operation Stormbringer hinges on his death. Everyone... attack at once! Just like I drilled you! Hold nothing back, and kill our enemies!"

"Roar!"

A series of battlecries bursts out behind Artorias. Countless demons and monsters pound their chests, summon fireballs, and ready themselves for battle.

Bael sighs. "Cripes. Ain't no fun attacking all at once."

Recommended Listening.

Kar's body transforms into a tornado of terror. He spins forward on his heel to swing his foot down like a hammer into the Labyrinth floor. A bomb-like explosion detonates in front of him, flinging a maelstrom of earthen bullets at his enemies.

Artorias offers a retort. He jumps toward Kar while thrusting out both of his palms, using his powers to halt Kar's earth manipulation in its tracks. Kar's bullets freeze in midair and fall harmlessly to the Labyrinth's floor.

Behind Artorias, dozens of Burner grunts lob fireballs overhead, aiming to scorch the Monster King to a crisp. Harpies fly to the ceiling and attach their clawed feet to the ripped-up, jagged remnants of what was once its smooth surface. They fire demonstone arrows at Kar, each one capable of penetrating a tank's steel armor.

Kar, unable to protect himself from the incoming onslaught, relies on his wife. Blinker summons an illusory wall above Kar's head and uses her projection abilities to solidify it. Despite her magical prowess, the arrows still manage to rip through her projections, but she slows their speed enough that they bounce harmlessly off Kar's scales.

Over and over, the enemy monsters and demons combine their strength to attack the Monster King and Queen from all directions. Kar trades blows with Artorias, only for Bael to join in. The two Dukes, each the pinnacle of power for non-Emperors, assault Kar relentlessly from his left and right. The Sphinx deflects punches, dodges kicks, and shrugs off projectiles, all without batting an eye.

Vepar transforms into poison fog. She swarms the Monster King with highly corrosive, acidic gas, forcing him to retreat. Kar coughs violently, vomiting blood as he tries to blink the mucus out of his eyes.

"Kah! Shitty demons! Pathetic cowards!"

However, despite his complaints, Kar can't help but notice Artorias's attacks weakening. Driven back by Vepar's poisonous gas, Artorias hesitates to join the fray, while Bael ignores the acrid gas entirely. His immunity to poison allows him to shrug off 100% of Vepar's most lethal toxins with ease.

"Having trouble breathing?" Vepar cackles, her voice emanating from the gas. "Perhaps you need a breather? Pahaha!"

Despite the pain in his lungs, Kar smiles. "Cough, cough. How fearsome! It seems I'll have to use half of my strength against you bullies!"

Suddenly, Kar lunges toward Bael, startling the Duke of Pain. The crocodile's muscles explode with power, allowing him to deliver a mighty uppercut to Bael's chin. The First Duke screams in disbelief as his Sphinx opponent pounds him into the ceiling, knocking the Harpies loose. They yelp in surprise before reorienting themselves and reattaching to the roof.

Artorias's heart skips a beat. So strong!

Just as Kar turns to face Artorias, a mysterious figure appears in his blind spot, crouched down with a fist at the ready.

Crack!

The shadow-shrouded demon blasts Kar in the ribs with a mighty punch, sending the Sphinx tumbling to the side. "Aargh!"

Kar crashes against the side-wall, kicking up a cloud of dust.

Artorias smiles. "Excellent work, Orias."

The Baron of the Stars, Orias, clutches a blood-red Ruby in his fist. "If that Sphinx lands a punch, I'll die. This is all I can do."

Artorias nods without replying. He dashes toward Kar, using his earth manipulation to glide along the ground like a roller-blader. Artorias scoops his hands into the ground and grabs two balls of dirt. They transform into tightly compacted pebbles, adding a tremendous amount of mass to Artorias's arms.

Boom!

Artorias punches Kar's body, sending a cataclysmic tremor throughout the Labyrinth. Behind the Core's entrance, the assembled humans howl in fear as chunks of the ceiling plummet down and crash against the floor, killing dozens who couldn't evade the falling debris.

Thanks to the pebbles, Artorias manages to exert far more strength than usual. He puts enough power into his strike to pulverize the Monster King into bone-paste.

However, as the dust settles, Artoria's eyes widen.

"What? He's not here? I know I struck him!"

The Monster King no longer lays against the wall. His body, having somehow disappeared, leaves Artorias stunned.

"An illusion? Did the Monster Queen turn her husband invisible at the last second? Was the body I saw merely a projection?"

"What are you guys waiting for?" A voice yells out from behind Artorias. The Duke of Steel whirls around, only to see himself standing a short distance away. The false Artorias points at the real one and shouts, "That damn Monster King is trying to trick us! Hurgh! Get him!"

Artorias blinks in disbelief. "What? No! You're a fake! You're- ulp!"

A hail of demonstone arrows and fireballs suddenly rushes toward Artorias, startling him. He raises his hands to summon a barrier, only to blink in confusion.

His arms, no longer coated in blackened demonstone armor, now appear green and scaly.

"Spawn of a broodmother! That fairy must have used her illusion magic to make me- aaaargh!"

Countless fireballs and demonstone arrows blast Artorias, engulfing him in flames and armor-piercing projectiles. Unlike Kar, who had Blinker's barrier to slow the arrows' speed, Artorias has no such protection. Most of the arrows bounce off his demonstone plating, but several find the gaps in his armor and drive deep into the Duke of Steel's flesh.

"You- you fools!" Artorias howls, his voice a perfect facsimile of Kar's. "That fairy is tricking you! Stop shooting!"

"Keep shooting!" Kar yells. "Hurgh! We've got that handsome crocodile on the ropes!"

Artorias summons an earthen wall in front of himself, but thanks to the Burners' fireballs, it quickly melts to slag and offers little resistance against the harpies' arrows. Frustrated, the Duke of Steel dives underground and uses his earth manipulation to swim toward Kar.

Meanwhile.

Bael, the Duke of Pain, watches as his idiot comrades attack the so-called Monster King.

"Huh. That's weird... Arty went over there to attack the Sphinx, but then only the Sphinx was left, and Arty-boy popped back over here again. That don't make no sense."

A dull sensation appears in the back of Bael's mind. Groggily, he tries to reactivate the thinking centers of his brain. However, the long-underused areas take a while to warm up, making his mouth loll open and drool.

Suddenly, Bael snaps back to attention. "Huh. Wait, doesn't that mean this Arty-boy over here's a fake?"

Bael turns his attention to the fake Artorias, who continues to yell and pump his fists like an idiot. "Hurgh! We've got that gorgeous reptile on the run, boys! Good work! I'm proud of you!"

Bael blinks.

"...nah. Sounds exactly like Arty-boy. How could he be a fake? I must be imagining things."

Suddenly, Artorias bursts out of the ground. Having disengaged from Blinker's line of sight when swimming underground, his illusory appearance vanishes, revealing the appearance of two Artorias's.

Bael takes a step back in surprise. "Wha...? Oh! Shit! Everyone, one of these Arty-boys is a fake!"

Vepar materializes beside Kar. "Which one, Duke of Pain?"

Bael glances at the Artorias on the left. He summons dirt to coat his arms and fires a devastating punch at the Artorias on the right. The Artorias on the right laughs like an idiot. "Hurgh! Now we're having fun!"

The Artorias on the left scowls like the Devil. "You damned face-stealer! I'll make you pay!"

"I liked you better when you had scales," The Artorias on the right says. "Now you're as ugly as me!"

They continue trading blows, making Bael sigh.

"Not a clue. They're exactly the same."

"What?!" Vepar screeches. "The one on the right is the fake! How can you not tell?!"

"Dunno. You're pretty smart though, so I'll just go along with what you say."

With a shrug, Bael lunges toward the Artorias on the right and punches him in the shoulder. The Duke of Pain strikes Kar so hard that his brain rattles in his skull, sending the Monster King crashing into the debris field blocking the Core's doors.

"About time!" Artorias snaps. "How did you fools not realize he was a fake?!"

Bael shrugs. "He sounded exactly like you, Arty-boy."

"He sounded nothing like me!" Artorias bellows, exasperation in his voice. "You're just an idiot!"

Bael nods. "I get that a lot."

Both Dukes turn to look at Kar's body, laying in the debris field. Suddenly, from behind them, a quivering in the ground makes both Dukes whirl to face an unexpected threat. Kar bursts out of the Labyrinth's floor with two fists raised.

CRACK!

The Monster King pummels both Dukes, flinging them toward his 'body' laying in the rubble. It disappears as they arrive, vanishing into mist.

Artorias and Bael crash into the collapsed ceiling fragments, but the impact barely hurts them.

"Again, that fairy caught me with her illusions!" Artorias yells. He leaps out of the rubble and lands on his feet a short distance from Kar. He searches the sky for Blinker, but she hides herself with invisibility, making her impossible to locate.

"Fairies... grr! I hate tricksters! I hate cowards who hide behind- hm?"

Artorias pauses.

In the back of his mind, several gears click into place.

Something's not right. Illusions can make people disappear into their surroundings, but they can't teleport people from one place to another.

I struck the Sphinx earlier and sent him crashing into the sidewall. How could he have disappeared when I had my eyes on him the whole time? Even with the dust obscuring him, there's no way he had enough time for the Monster Queen to hide his body, replace him with a fake, and allow him to slip past me.

That can only mean...

Artorias's gaze grows cold.

Temporal Magic. The Monster Queen must possess high-level temporal magic, just like the reigning fairy queens. Whatever method the Sphinx used to strengthen himself, it must have broken his wife's limiter.

Artorias glances toward the ceiling, as anger clouds his vision.

Tricky. I underestimated the Monster Royals. They're stronger than I ever could have imagined.

Kar stands with his back to the demon army. He faces the two Dukes as they climb out of the rubble blocking the Core's entrance and dust themselves off.

"Hurgh. At this rate, I may have to use all of my strength if I aim to make you weaklings vanish."

"Cut the crap," Bael grunts. "Stop holding back. I'm not even having fun, bub. Are you going to use your Sphinx Form or what?!"

Kar's eyes ignite with a fierce hunger.

"Hehe. No. I won't waste my trump card on trash like you. Instead, how about something better?"

Kar takes a step forward, causing Bael and Artorias to flinch. Then, he slams his fists into the ground and rips up a massive chunk of dirt. Artorias readies himself for the Monster King to fling the one-ton boulder at him and Bael, but Kar doesn't.

Instead, the Sphinx uses his earth manipulation to liquefy the boulder into mud, covering his body like a gooey syrup. Seconds later, it hardens into a rock-like substance, mimicking Artorias's feat from earlier.

Artorias snorts. "A little extra armor, hm? What could you possibly hope to achieve with such a pathetic layer of defense?"

Kar doesn't answer. Instead, he further refines the rock-armor, hardening it to a level beyond Artorias's expectations.

Artorias's smug smile vanishes, and a look of disbelief replaces it. "Crystallization? How has the Monster King achieved such a legendary level of transmutation?!"

"Huh?" Bael grunts. "Wassat?"

Artorias's eyes widen. Kar's crystalline armor eventually turns transparent as it becomes solid and diamond-like, allowing his enemies to glimpse his reptilian scales underneath.

"Adjusting the earth's elemental bonds to such a level... I thought it wasn't achievable! The amount of control needed to tighten the molecular structure was supposed to be only theoretically possible!"

Kar smiles. He finishes covering his body in diamond armor and flexes his muscles. "Hurgh. It may not be demonstone, but it's the next best thing. Come at me, if you dare."

Artorias jerks his head toward the gawking spectators. "Burners! Harpies! Don't just stand there! Launch everything you've got! Don't hold back!"

His orders, absolute, cause a wave of attacks to fire at Kar once again.

The Sphinx shakes his head. "Using all of my power... it will result in a boring victory... but at least I will protect my pet humans. Hurgh."

Part 234: A Shocking Development

Glistening diamond armor engulfs Kar from head to toe. The Croco-Sphinx somehow appears twice as massive as before, despite not gaining an inch of height, making all his enemies shudder at the thought of fighting him.

All except for Bael.

"Eh? I don't get it. Why'd that mud turn into glass? Seems kinda flimsy ta' me."

Bael's question goes unanswered. A storm of arrows and fireballs falls from the sky and crashes against the Monster King's body, bouncing off him like water droplets against a window. The Sphinx's diamond armor shines from the firelight, giving him the visage of a demigod.

Kar coils strength into his legs. "Hurgh. I will hold nothing back, Metal-mouth, Thick-skin. You both will fall today!"

With a burst of speed, Kar shoots forward, his fist held at the ready. He swings it like a hammer against Artorias's head and pounds the Duke of Steel away before he can prepare himself. The Crocodile's lightning-like movements are both quick and unpredictable, making his fists impossible to dodge. A second later, he switches targets to Bael.

Bael tries to block the Sphinx's swift punches, but Kar counters with a tail-swipe, sweeping Bael's legs and knocking him to the ground. An instant later, he delivers ten punches to the Duke of Pain's head, throat and chest, summoning shockwaves to knock the nearby Barons and Lords off their feet.

Vepar turns into poison gas. She tries to suffocate Kar, only to find her toxins doing nothing to the Sphinx. Kar lunges toward the wall of gathered demons, making them scream in terror as his fist blasts ten of them into the roof.

"What the devils?!" Vepar hisses. "Choke, you damned reptile! Choke! Why isn't my poison doing anything?!"

Kar summons an earthen warhammer. He smashes it across the face of some unknown Baron, shattering the demon's skull with a single blow and flinging him down the corridor.

"Hurgh. Stupid Gassy-ass. I am King of the Reptiles. Your poison is little more than a tickle to He Who Walks with Snakes."

Vepar tries burrowing into Kar's nostrils, but even when she succeeds, Kar's breathing doesn't change at all.

"Nonsense! Earlier, I had you vomiting blood!"

Kar's warhammer smashes straight down onto a fireball-wielding Burner demon, crushing the monster into a bloody pulp. "Hurgh. You were easy to deceive. My wife's illusions always fool the stupid."

"Who are you calling stupid?! You rat bastard! Aaaargh!!"

Vepar retreats to a corner of the room and returns to her physical form. Her breathing comes in fitful gasps, not due to fatigue, but because of pure, unbridled rage.

She watches helplessly as the Monster King battles many of demonkind's strongest warriors. He shatters their bodies, breaks their minds, and leaves them lying dead in the dirt. Ten thousand demons perish within minutes, even after Artorias and Bael rejoin the fight.

"How? How can the Monster King be so powerful?!" Vepar screeches. "Monsters are inferior to demons! That's how it's always been! That's how it's supposed to be!!"

While Vepar yells and stomps her feet, a tiny flicker of movement above her goes unnoticed. Blinker, the Monster Queen, rolls her eyes.

"That's what you get for stereotyping, dummy..."

Blinker motions with her hands, summoning five invisible fists around Vepar. Before the Baron of Toxicity can react, the fists solidify and lunge at her, catching the demoness offguard. They strike her head, chest, and back all at once, spinning her around at dizzying speeds before slamming her against the dirt. Seconds later, her body crumples into the corner, a broken mess.

Crunch.

"Aahhh... aaaah..."

Vepar, failing to keep her wits about her, falls to Blinker's sneak attack. The Monster Queen no longer worries about protecting Kar from the demons' artillery. Instead, she goes on the offense, using all her power to help Kar kill demons twice as fast.

Bael ducks one of Kar's fists. He grins evilly as he readies himself to fire a punch off at the Monster King's stomach.

Suddenly...

Foop!

Bael teleports. He reappears behind his comrade, Artorias, with his fist still in mid-swing. Unable to stop himself, Bael blasts Artorias in the ribs and sends the Duke of Steel hurling to his left, where he crashes into the Labyrinth's sidewall.

Bael blinks. "Huh? What the heck? Why'd I punch Arty-boy?"

A lightbulb activates in Bael's head.

"Ohhh! That sneaky fairy!"

He jumps toward Artorias's collapsed body.

"Thinkin' you could fool me. Heh. I'm too smart for that."

Artorias, still reeling from Bael's punch, feels his blood turn cold as the Duke of Pain raises his fist.

"Wait, Bael! What are you doing?! You imbecile! It's me-"

Bael grins.

"Not gonna fool me this time, mister Sphinx!"

BLAM!

Bael decks Artorias in the face, nearly snapping the Duke of Steel's neck.

"Haha! You think I don't know what you're up to? Tryin' ta' make it seem like your wifey turned you into Arty-boy. Nuh-uh, buster! I see through your tricks!"

Bael, strangely proud of himself, begins to whistle merrily as he beats the ever-loving crap out of his buddy, Artorias.

Several seconds later, Bael frowns.

"Huh! That's weird. You'd think by now he'd turn back into a crocodile."

With a shrug, Bael continues punching Artorias's face into a mass of black and blue welts.

"Bah! Fairy magic is so tricky these days! Can't be too careful."

A flash of movement appears at Bael's left. Orias, the Baron of the Stars jumps over and grabs Bael's waist. "Bael! Stop! You're killing Artorias!"

Bael pauses. "Huh? Nah, don't be stupid! This guy's a fake. It's the Monster King! He tried to trick me by turning into Arty-boy. Heh. Seems you fell for his tricks."

Bael crosses his arms and smirks with far too much confidence. "Yeah. Guess I outsmarted all of ya today."

Orias rubs his face in frustration. "No, Duke of Pain! No! Look, over there! THAT guy is the Sphinx!"

He points toward the giant reptile crushing a bunch of demons with his warhammer. Bael follows Orias's gaze, only to smirk even more deeply.

"Dumbass. That ain't him. The fairy lady made Arty-boy look like that. It's all part of her evil game to turn us against each other."

"No! It IS the Sphinx!" Orias exclaims. "Why would Artorias kill other demons?!"

It takes more than a minute, but eventually, Orias breaks through to Bael.

"Oh, shit! Shit, shit, shit!" Bael curses. He leans over and grabs Artorias's knocked-out form. "Yo, Arty-boy! Wake up! Are you still alive?! Aw, jeez, now I've done it."

Artorias mumbles something incoherent before falling comatose.

"Huh? I didn't catch that, Arty-boy! Argh... never mind!"

With a deep grumble, Bael turns to Orias.

"Can you help me? I dunno if I can beat the Monster King all by myself."

"I'll try," Orias replies. "I've landed a few blows on him so far, but my strength isn't even enough to dent his armor. At most, I might be able to restrain him a little or slow him down."

Bael's gaze lifts to Orias's forehead, where a beautiful, multicolored rainbow gem sits wedged right in the middle of his noggin.

"What if you used Big Bertha?"

Orias scowls. "What if you turned into the Balrog?"

"Alright, alright, I get it. Sheesh."

Bael flexes his muscles. He jumps away from Orias while yelling, "Never mind! You get Vepar and take her outta here! I'll wreck this croco-punk myself!"

The Duke of Pain leaps atop the Sphinx, catching Kar by surprise. He crashes into Kar with all 400 pounds of his body weight and wraps around him like a professional MMA wrestler.

"Hey!" Kar snarls. "Get off me!"

Bael sticks out his tongue. "Pbllt! Make me, shithead!"

"Fine!"

Kar leaps backward and throws himself against the wall, trying to batter Bael unconscious. The Duke of Pain barely notices the impact.

"Hah! Weak! Take this!"

Bael clobbers Kar over the back of the head, making Kar's ears ring. "Hurgh! Get off me, Thick-skin!"

"I won't!" Bael says. "Now, take this!"

Whap!

Bael slaps Kar silly, making the Monster King reel in pain.

"Hurgh! Butterfly! A little help, please?"

Blinker's voice rings out above Kar. "Oh, sure, NOW you want my help! Maybe I should let you get your kicks in, mister big, strong croco-man! Hmph!"

"Butterfly, please! Ow, stop that!"

Kar twists his body and thrashes from side to side, using his crocodilian Death Roll ability to its fullest extent, but not even that manages to throw Bael off his back.

"Fine, I'll help!" Blinker says, a tinge of pride in her voice. "But from now on, you have to call me Empress!"

"Hurgh. Deal!"

Satisfied, Blinker begins motioning with her hands to teleport Bael off Kar's back.

However, at that moment, with a flicker of movement, a familiar demoness appears before Kar.

"How insufferable. It seems I have to do everything around here myself."

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, flits in into existence before Kar, her fist coiled and ready to spring.

Blinker's eyes flash with recognition. "Wait, no!"

BOOM!

Ose's fist crashes against Kar's chest like an atom bomb. Her punch, infused with the power of an Emperor and the speed of lightning, accelerates to a thousand times the speed of sound. She strikes Kar so hard that the shockwave slams Blinker against the wall, instantly knocking the Monster Queen out.

Bael, still attached to Kar, pounds the side of the Labyrinth at over ten thousand miles an hour. Even with his nigh-invincibility, the Duke of Pain hasn't a chance of anticipating Ose's strike. He and Kar rip apart at the moment of impact. Kar bounces off Bael's body and flies forward, his head rushing toward Ose's already recoiled fist.

"Again." Ose murmurs.

BOOM!

A second punch blasts Kar's face. The Monster King flies to his left, crashes against the wall, and drags across it for more than a mile, carving a three-foot-deep crevasse all the way down the Labyrinth's hallway.

Seconds later, everything falls silent.

Bael, dazed and confused, staggers to his feet. His left arm hangs limp at his side, broken by Ose's punch. With his head reeling from dizziness, Bael stumbles like a drunken sailor toward Ose.

"Blurgh... oh, hell... think I'm gonna barf..."

Ose pants like a dog. Sweat drips off every inch of her body. Her uniform, now soaked with perspiration, dribbles ceaselessly.

"Hah... hah... shit. You... you damned, fat, lazy bastard! I broke my arms punching that fucking crocodile!" Ose bellows. "You call yourself the strongest Duke?! Pathetic! Gah... my entire body aches, now, and it's all because of you!"

Bael nods dumbly. He glances down the pitch black corridor, past the dazed and confused demons who were flung aside by Ose's punch. There, in the darkness, he barely makes out the motionless form of Kar's body.

"...You got him? Damn, toots. You've got a hell of an arm."

"Oh, shut up," Ose snaps. She turns to walk toward the Sphinx, only to pause midstride. She twists her head down to look at the unconscious Monster Queen.

"Right, the pest. Can't let her leave here alive."

Ose's hand darts toward Blinker like a viper. She grabs the fairy and squeezes with all her strength, intending to crush Blinker into meat-paste.

However, Ose's grip proves incredibly weak. After punching the heavily-armored Monster King, every one of her fingers creaks and groans, sending sparks of agony up her arm. "Aargh! Damn! Bael, kill this cockroach for me. I need to finish off the crocodile."

Without waiting for a reply, Ose drops Blinker on the ground and trudges off into the distance, leaving Bael behind.

The Duke of Pain watches her for a few seconds before lowering his gaze to the unconscious fairy at his feet.

"Uhh... wait, does Ose want me to kill the little lady?"

Bael gently reaches down and scoops up Blinker. He stares at her barely breathing body for a few moments and sighs.

"Man. Fairies are cute. It's no wonder the croc married one. Lucky bastard."

Bael pokes Blinker's face.

"Hey. Hey, you. Little lady. You alive?"

Blinker doesn't respond, making Bael scratch his head.

"Aw, heck. I can't just kill a broad. She can't even fight back! Besides, that Sphinx chump let Laharl go earlier. What to do... what to do...?"

With a frown, Bael turns to look at Ose. Normally, she would arrive at Kar's side instantly with her lightspeed movement, but due to her broken fingers and arms, Ose can't use much of her magic.

Ose walks up to the Sphinx's beaten and battered body. Kar's diamond armor, previously thought invincible, lies in shards all around him. Some diamond chunks cling to his scales here and there, but with the exception of several pieces embedded in his chest, most of it appears to have been blown away by Ose's Railgun Punch.

Kar lays motionless, his chest barely moving. Ose scowls at him. "Mara. Laharl. Vepar. Artorias. Beelzebub. All defeated or captured by you. I'll give you credit, Sphinx. You're far mightier than I expected. In the end, all you've done is delay my plans for Stormbringer slightly. Nevertheless... now, you will die."

Ose's eyes crackle with electricity. Mana amasses and builds inside her brain as she aims her eyes at Kar's chest, intending to make him suffer a cardiac arrest.

The moment before Ose can unleash her attack, Kar's eyes open.

Danger!

Kar's instincts warn him of an impending catastrophe. Without hesitation, he digs his feet into the ground and flings himself backward a split-second before Ose fires 1.21 gigawatts of electricity at his former position.

"No! Damn you!" Ose howls. She tracks Kar with her eyes, only to frown as the Monster King slows to a stop and shakily pulls himself to his feet.

"Hurgh. Thundertongue. Y-you... so it was you who struck me..."

Ose narrows her eyes. "You're far too resilient for my liking, Monster King. Stand still so I can send you to the Great Beyond."

Lightning crackles in Ose's eyes. Once again, she readies herself for another blast of electrical power.

Kar staggers from left to right. This time, his injuries go well beyond the surface. Multiple bones sit broken in his chest, making his breathing a painful chore. He leans heavily against the wall, barely able to support his own weight. When Ose is about to fire her attack, Kar tries to dodge, but his legs give out, making him flop to the ground.

Kzzat!

Ose fires, and this time, she doesn't miss. She strikes the back of Kar's neck, sending her corrosive lightning deep into his body. Kar's nervous system starts melting together, making the Sphinx seize up and writhe helplessly.

"Aargh! Hurgh! Aaah!"

Kar cries out in pain, but Ose merely blasts him again, striking him while he's helpless.

"Die, already! Die, you damned, filthy traitor! You chose the humans, and now you will follow them into the afterlife!"

Ose prepares a third lightning blast.

However, right at that moment...

Foop!

Kar vanishes.

The Monster King disappears into thin air, making Ose freeze in place.

"W-what? Where did the Sphinx go? Wait, he couldn't possibly...?!"

Ose whips around to see Bael in the distance staring at her with a goofy smile on his face. He shrugs helplessly as if to say, eh, whaddya gonna do? Shit happens.

"Bael! You nimrod! I told you to kill the Monster Queen! Where is she?!"

Bael meanders toward Ose, a stupid grin on his face. "Aw, shucks. You won't believe this! Haha, it's the funniest thing! I was about to squash that broad, just like you told me, but then a bug crawled inside my butt! I couldn't just let it get all comfy and make a home, y'know? So I had to take a minute to really dig up in there with my finger and-"

"Devils! Stop! STOP! Not another word! Ahhhhh!!!"

Ose squeezes her fingers into fists, treating the pain like a release-valve to vent her anger. "You bloody imbecile! You had one job, Bael! One job! Now both of the monster royals are gone, and it's all your fault!!"

"Yep! Tough luck, but we'll get 'em next time, ain't that right?"

Bael shoots Ose with a finger-gun while winking. His smirk drives the Emperor of Infiltration up the wall, but against the invincible Duke of Pain, all she can do is rant and rave.

Eventually, Ose swallows her anger. She takes a deep breath and forces her rage into the soles of her feet.

"Stupid. Just damned stupid. Never mind! You continue leading the invasion! Take out the humans, assuming you can manage that much! I'm going to take Artorias and Vepar to the blood pits. I'll return later! In the meantime, use all the troops you want! Don't hold back!"

Furious, Ose starts to head over to Artorias. However, she stops after three steps and stares at Artorias's resting place, where his body no longer lays.

"Huh? Where did the Duke of Steel go?"

Bael's reply nearly gives Ose an aneurysm.

"Oh, that fairy lady teleported him outta here once she woke up! Foop! Hahaha! Pretty funny, right?"

Ose finds no humor in the Duke's words.

"BAEEEEEEL!!"

Part 235: Preparing for Round Two

Foop!

A heavily armored demon suddenly appears in the center of the Labyrinth's Core, right in front of fifteen exosuit-wearing troopers. Startled, the humans nearly jump out of their skin as they swivel on their heels and aim their guns toward the intruder.

A split-second later, the demon slumps forward and flops against the ground lifelessly, allowing the humans to breathe a sigh of relief. Blinker, Queen of the Monsters, appears shortly after, followed by her husband, Kar.

"Oh, heck... I'm SO tired!" Blinker complains. "But hey, it was real nice of that Bael guy to let me go! Hey, you! Skippy! Where's Neil? Get him over here on the double! Chop chop!"

Blinker aims her words at one of the troopers, purely at random. With their faceless armor, it becomes impossible to tell them apart. The commando merely nods before lowering his rifle. "Alright, miss Blinker. Is Kar alright? He looks terrible."

"The demons screwed my husband up real good, especially that Ose!" Blinker growls. "Now, hurry up! I ain't got all day, buster! I've gotta get this demon contained and my husband to the medic!"

"Yes, ma'am!"

The soldier turns away and taps the side of his helmet. He falls silent as Centurion's nanites dampen his voice, preventing even the slightest leakage of noise.

"A minute later, Neil trots over, his bright red and blue suit catching everyone's gaze. His helmet disappears, but the rest of his body stays armored. "Blinker! Thank the Creator you're alright. What happened to Kar, and what happened out there? We've had earthquakes hitting us, Mephisto playing peekaboo, and all the while, we've had no clue how Kar was faring against the demons!"

Blinker's expression turns uneasy as she glances at the ceiling and walls to search for the Duke of Mist. However, no matter where she looks, she doesn't notice him or his mana signature.

"Izzat so? Yeah. Things got crazy. Kar sent you that card-playing demon lady- you got her, right?"

"We did. She's in cuffs and on the way to our prepared demon containment facility. We don't know anything about her powers, though, so if you could give us any information, we'd appreciate it."

"Later," Blinker says, waving Neil's concerns away. "We've got bigger fish to fry. The debris blocking the Core won't keep the demons out for long! I'm sure the Burrowers will come through and start yankin' that crap outta the way super soon. Listen, Neil, there's something you need to know."

Blinker quickly rattles off a bunch of information to Neil, making the military commander frown. As she talks, several commandos grab Artorias and engulf him in a nanite-based hardening agent, sealing his movements and preventing him from breathing. As a demon, breathing is not something he needs to stay alive, but he can't remain conscious without air. The soldiers drag Artorias away within a minute, right as Blinker finishes speaking.

Neil sighs. "I knew Kar was strong... but this... whatever boost the lizards gave him, it made him truly a monster. If Ose was able to beat him in one punch, then I'm afraid our counter-measures won't be much use against her."

"Forget Ose," Blinker says. "That hussie broke both of her hands punching my precious darling! Serves her right! I doubt she'll be a big threat in the upcoming fights. It's Bael you need to watch out for! He's the only demon Kar couldn't stop!"

"You said Bael let you go," Neil mutters. "Why?"

"Dunno. He mentioned something about 'paying back a favor.' I didn't stick around to ask what he meant."

"Unexpected, but a bit of good fortune from the Creator, no doubt. Let's assume we don't have any favors left, then," Neil says. "We've known of Bael's threat for six years. Every time we've fought him, humanity came up short. However, I've had Hans develop countermeasures for each of the demon leaders. With any luck, they might slow the Duke of Pain down."

Neil gestures toward Kar.

"Get Kar healed, Blinker. He's our best bet at stopping the demons' advance. Until he returns, I'll hold them back at the Core as long as possible."

Blinker nods. The tiny fairy motions with her hands to summon a projected wagon, then levitates Kar atop it, making Neil frown.

"Oh? You can use telekinesis?"

Blinker bats her eyes. "I don't know what you're talking about! I'm just an illusionist, silly! You must be seeing things."

"Haha. Mysterious. I'll wait for your return with bated breath."

Blinker nods. She pulls her projected wagon along, leaving Neil to his own devices.

Once the Monster Queen and King disappear into the Tarus II portal, Neil seals up his helmet. It provides him a level of anonymity, preventing others from seeing his expressions or hearing his mutterings.

"Hmm. Still no word from Hope or Jason. With both Wordsmiths gone, it's unlikely we'll be able to hold the Core. What should I do?"

The Commander taps his foot slowly. He rests one hand on his thigh, and the other beneath his chin, while gazing at the floor contemplatively.

"Fighting Bael in an enclosed space would result in a tremendous waste of personnel. He'll kill hundreds, possibly thousands, before we so much as prick him. Even if Bael doesn't come, we've lost the ability to funnel our enemies through the great doors. Once they clear away the debris, they'll pour in like water through a sieve."

"The demons outnumber us a hundred-thousand to one. Even assuming we merely have to fight them a hundred to one, their advantage increases in such a tightly confined space. Centurion. Run a battle simulation based on these probabilities."

Neil's eyes elevate to his helmet's Heads Up Display, where he gives a list of projections regarding the demon's forces.

"Eliminate Target Barbatos-Artorias from the enemy pool. Eliminate Target Beelzebub, too. Run a simulation where we only have to face Bael, Mephisto, and demons below the Baron level."

"COMMAND ACCEPTED. PERFORMING SIMULATION NOW, PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FIVE."

Neil sighs. "If we survive this war, I really need to get those identifiers changed. Too damn confusing."

Shortly after, Centurion speaks. "PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FIVE. I HAVE COMPLETED THE SIMULATION YOU REQUESTED."

"Great. What are the results?"

"RESULT: TOTAL ANNIHILATION. 216 DEMON CASUALTIES, AND 17,455 ALLIED CASUALTIES."

"Damn."

Neil releases a long, pained sigh.

"...I always thought we'd have the Wordsmiths on our side when the demons attacked. To think a day like this would come and we wouldn't even be able to contact them. I haven't a clue where they are, nor what fates have afflicted them."

Neil's heart hardens.

"No. This is a test given to me by the Creator. Humanity will reign supreme. We've endured for a hundred thousand years while waiting for an opportunity to exact our revenge. I won't let my people fall!"

Neil turns and walks toward the Tarus II warpgate. As he stares up at the thirty-foot-tall, circular metal device, his expression turns complicated.

If only we could destroy the warpgates. Perhaps Kar could, but he's not here. Whoever built the warp-gates, they used metal alloys comparable to demonstone. The best we can do is annihilate the servers and make repairing them a slow, arduous process.

Come, demons. Attack us if you dare. I would sooner die than allow you an easy victory.

As Neil muses to himself, the wall of rubble barricading the Core's double-doors begins to tremble slightly.

The demon Burrowers have arrived.

Blinker sits on her husband's chest. She uses her magic to drive her projected wagon along the road to Hero City at a rapid eighty miles per hour.

Wind rushes past Blinker's red hair, causing it to whip around her face. The tiny fairy barely even notices.

"Grr. My whole body still hurts from hitting that wall. Damn you, Ose! What a selfish brat. If she had the strength to knock out my husband in one punch, why didn't she do that sooner? She's an idiot! A numbskull! Hmph."

Blinker waves her fist at the sky.

"Who cares if you break your arms?! Dumb broad! I'd break my whole body to protect my friends! You let Kar beat two of your Dukes and one of your Barons! Even if you think you can still win, I hate you for sacrificing them! I hate cowards like you, you big-boobied-bimbo!"

The paved road leading from the military outpost at Tarus II's warpgate, one which creates a straight line to Hero City, cuts through the forest in between. Even six years after the first Wordsmith, Jason, made the path, humanity still uses it daily.

However, as Blinker races down the two-mile long road, several giant holes in the road, created by the Hydra's attack, open up in front of her.

She ignores them.

The Monster Queen's projected wagon flies across the crater-sized potholes magically, making it seem as if nothing has harmed the flat-top whatsoever.

Minutes later, Blinker's wagon leaps into the sky, acting as if it's hit a ramp leading to the heavens. The 300-foot-tall cliffside shielding Hero City from the world below it proves no barrier to the Monster Queen. She soars into the sky and arrives at the western edge of the city, where the general hospital awaits.

After dissipating her projection, Blinker levitates Kar with telekinesis and flies him into the hospital through its double doors. Surprisingly few soldiers sit in the lobby, awaiting treatment. Many of them appear to be in relatively high spirits, and hardly any have any life-threatening wounds.

Blinker smiles as she glances around. Not bad! That Sam-girl has quite the healer's touch! I'm surprised she could heal so many people even with her Emperor mana reserves, considering how badly the demon's surprise attacks caught us off-guard.

Blinker doesn't bother checking in with Grima at the front desk. Several soldiers gawk at her as she floats Kar's unconscious, badly beaten body down the hallway. Their morale plummets upon seeing the Monster King's limp figure.

Oh, no! their eyes say. What happened out there?! Has the Core already fallen? Are we doomed without the Wordsmiths?

Blinker doesn't bother assuaging their concerns. She's in far too big a rush to bother.

Within seconds, Blinker rushes down one of the hallways toward the massive blip of demonic power at the end, where Belial, the Second Emperor of Passion, slowly trickles mana into an injured soldier's body. As Blinker arrives, her spirits drop.

"Sam! Hey, Sammy! Uh... are you okay? You look exhausted."

Dark circles line the bottom of Belial's eyes. Her face looks like death, thanks to the burden of mana exhaustion wracking her body. It takes several seconds for Samantha to even recognize Blinker as the fairy arrives. "...huh? Oh. Blinker. It's you."

Slowly, Belial's eyes lower to the crocodile floating behind Blinker. A spark of surprise appears in her gaze, making the Emperor jump to her feet. "Seven Devils! Kar!"

Slowly, Blinker nods. "Yeah... he's in bad shape. I was going to ask you to heal him, but..."

Belial shakily drops into her seat. Her voice trembles as she suffers a wave of exhaustion. "I've healed countless demons and humans over my lifetime. Never have I revived so many from the brink of death, back-to-back. Rosalia tried giving me some of her energy, but it barely made a difference. Demon Grunts just don't have enough to help Emperors out."

Blinker turns to the left, where she spots the similarly-exhausted Rosalia slumped with her back against the wall.

"How are you holding up, new girl?"

Rosalia closes her eyes. "...terribly. I... I knew fleshbags were fragile, but some of these injuries are just ridic-"

"Humans," Belial snaps, interrupting Rosalia. "They're called humans."

Rosalia ignores the anger in Belial's voice. "Right, right. Same thing. Ugh, when will we finish? How many more are there? I feel like I'm about to die!"

"My friends are dying out there," Belial retorts. "I won't let them down by giving up. You may only be a grunt, but even you can learn what it means to persevere when your body wants to drop."

Blinker glances between the Emperor and her subordinate, shivering as she observes their interactions.

Geez! These two are like fire and ice, or water and oil! No chemistry at all. If Rosalia says the wrong thing, Sam's likely to take her head off!

Blinker cringes inwardly, but doesn't say anything out loud. Eventually, Belial manages to heal the soldier's wounds, but her expression turns sour after he leaves. The Emperor of Passion watches silently as Blinker lays Kar's comatose form upon the blood-stained hospital bed. Once the Monster Queen finishes, Belial sighs.

"How much do you know about healing, Blinker?"

Blinker shrugs. "A little? I know you can, um... heal!"

"Right. Healing a human isn't like healing Kar. The amount of magical power someone has directly correlates with the difficulty of healing them."

The Emperor of Passion rubs her forehead.

"Simply put, I've been running on fumes for the last thirty patients. It takes me several minutes just to restore their most severe injuries and get them walking again. I can't bother with getting them back to mint condition, and all of my patients so far have been mere humans."

Blinker nods. "Uh... uh-huh...? I don't follow."

"Your husband is not only a monster, but someone with Duke-level power. He's too-"

"Emperor," Blinker says, quickly correcting Belial. A hint of pride enters her voice. "My sweetie is as strong as an Emperor!"

"That's even worse," Belial says. "It takes a tremendous amount of mana to heal Dukes and Emperors, especially when they suffer grievous injuries. Kar's entire ribcage appears to have been shattered. I can sense electrical energy coursing around his body, injuring him more and more, every minute. If you want me to heal him, it will take me hours."

Blinker rubs her chin. "Kar can heal himself once you restore him to a certain point. He's a reptile, after all! How long will you need to wake him up?"

Belial's expression brightens. "Oh? Well, if that's the case, it won't take me nearly as long... but I do need to deal with this leftover electrical energy first. The mana seems oddly familiar..."

"That's probably because it's Ose's," Blinker says.

The fairy quickly explains what happened earlier to Belial. Being stuck inside the hospital, she hasn't a clue what's transpired inside the Core. When Blinker finishes, Belial's eyes appear as wide as saucers.

"Incredible! I didn't know you and Kar had become so strong! Taking out two Dukes and two Barons... impressive! But Ose... she's become far more powerful than I ever imagined. The Ose I knew was only a Baron, but even then, she was uniquely adept at fooling humans into doing her will. Now that she possesses speed and strength aplenty, I worry we may not be able to defeat her."

Blinker smirks. "That broad's not as tough as she seems. She broke both of her hands punching my sweetie! Unless the demons have a secret healer, she won't be able to do much."

Belial shakes her head. "They don't. Not in the First Hell. In the Tertiary Hells, there exist a few... but they wouldn't ever help Ose. Too much bad blood. The Hidden Emperors are far more likely to kill Ose if they smell blood in the water."

"That's good to know," Blinker says.

* * *

Many minutes pass.

Blinker hovers in the air silently, watching as Belial heals Kar in small trickle bursts, all while occasionally dispersing bits of Ose's electrical energy into the air around her.

To Blinker's surprise, Belial manages a weak smile. "Oh? How interesting. It seems Ose's electrical mana is somewhat compatible with my physiology."

"Hm?" Blinker grunts. "What do you mean?"

"I can absorb some of it to restore my mana. Not much, but every little bit helps."

"Oh, good! Very good!"

Blinker claps her hands, then falls silent again. Eventually, her eyes roam the room, where she spots a familiar little girl, sitting quietly in the corner, not saying a word.

"Huh? Daisy? Have you been here the whole time?"

Blinker directs her question to the Hero's daughter, who nods in return.

"Is that so? You're a good girl! Your daddy will be so happy when he hears how much you've been helping your aunt Samantha!"

Daisy nods again. She kicks her legs back and forth under the chair while resting her elbows on her knees. "Mhm."

The little girl's expression shifts to the door. "Aunt S'matha, I need to use the bathroom."

Belial nods. "Again? Alright. Go ahead. Don't take too long."

"Okay!"

Daisy hops off the chair and bounces away, leaving the others behind.

Blinker sighs. "That girl... it's too bad she has to sit around all this blood and misery. War changes people. It will only hurt her in the long run, given she's still only a child."

Belial extracts another bit of electrical energy out of Kar, absorbs a portion into herself, and disperses the rest. "Maybe. Daisy's a sweet girl, though. She always goes outside and says hello to the soldiers. She thinks I don't know, but I do. She's not really going to the bathroom; she just wants to make sure everyone's okay."

"Oh?"

Blinker floats over to the doorway. She peeks outside, where she spots Daisy yapping at an injured soldier while holding his hand. The soldier smiles at her and pats her head, then she walks over to the next one and holds his hand as well.

However, Blinker's gaze doesn't follow after Daisy. Instead, she focuses her attention on the first soldier. After a minute or so, he stands up and pats his chest, where his injuries appear to have dimmed slightly. Surprised, he glances down the hall at Belial's room, decides not to trouble her, and leaves.

Blinker's eyes widen.

"...no way. Did... did Daisy heal that man?"

Her words are barely audible, merely a whisper in the wind. Despite this, Belial's ears still perk up.

"What did you say?"

Blinker doesn't answer. She stares, wide-eyed, at the next man in the hallway, as Daisy bounces past him and grabs the hand of a third injured soldier while babbling at him to raise his spirits. The second man, too, gets up and leaves.

The Monster Queen's heart soars.

"Jason's daughter... she's... she's a healer too, Belial! I don't believe it!"

Belial stop healing Kar. Her eyes widen. "Seriously?"

"Seriously?!" Rosalia echoes.

"Mhm. Come over here and see for yourself!"

Both demons leave Kar behind. They trot over to the doorway and watch silently as Daisy heals yet another injured soldier.

A smile appears on Belial's face. "So that's why I haven't gotten as many patients as I expected. A bunch of them just left without checking out. It was starting to bug me."

However, Rosalia's expression appears dire.

"Could... could Daisy be another Hero, just like her father?"

The implication lingers in the air, unanswered.

"Who knows?" Belial murmurs. "Perhaps humanity has another miracle on their hands."

Part 236: Bael the Negotiator

"Pull! Pull! Pull! Come on, ya lazy blubber-butts! Put your backs into it!"

Bael, the Duke of Pain, stands off to the right side of the Labyrinth's great doors. Before him stands the thousand-ton pile of earthen debris blocking access to the sweet, succulent humans trapped inside. One hundred Burrower demons stand together and use their unified strength to slowly pull the debris toward themselves. After more than thirty minutes, they've managed to clear only around half of the rubble, but already, small openings appear at the top with enough room to slip through.

Knowing full well the devastation their earlier assault suffered against humanity, no grunts, Lords, or Barons find themselves hungry enough to squeeze inside all by their lonesome.

Bael rolls his eyes as he looks at the Burrowers trying their hardest to clear out the pathway into the Core. His right arm hangs uselessly, having been accidentally broken and dislocated by Ose's attack on Kar. The throbbing pain proves an unfamiliar sensation to him, one that drives his irritation up to levels he's not experienced in millennia.

"Weak little bugs..." Bael growls. "Arty-boy would've had that crap pulled away with one yank. The kids these days are all a bunch of shrimps."

As Bael mutters to himself, the sound of approaching footsteps makes him turn to his left, where he spots the Battle Brothers. Duriel and Zamiel, the younger and older of the two, respectively, amble toward him casually with their fists on their hips.

"Yo, Bael!" Duriel says, raising his hand to wave. "You kicked butt, man. Heard you and Ose took out the Monster King."

Bael doesn't smile. "Tch. Nah. Ose swooped in and stole all the glory. Broke my damned arm too."

The Duke of Pain's annoyance comes through his words clearly, making both brothers shoot a knowing glance at each other.

Zamiel speaks. "Heyyy, man. Chill out! Tell you what. You had your way with the Monster King already. Why don't you let me and Dur-Dur take over from here? We'll wipe out those pesky fleshies, pronto. Won't take us ten minutes!"

Bael shakes his head. "Can't. You kids are only Barons. We already lost Mara, Laharl, Vepar, Arty-boy, and Beel-ze-boob. Captured or KO'd. Had ta' send Vepar and Laharl to the Blood pits, too. I've gotta go in there 'n do it myself. Ose's orders."

Duriel scoffs. "Pah! Since when were you Ose's bitch, eh, Duke of Pain? She broke your arm! Besides, me and Zammy ain't weak like the rest of the Barons. We're pretty tough, ya know. Just let us in and you'll see some real carnage!"

Bael shakes his head. "No can do. I like you guys too much. If I had gone in first, we wouldn't've lost fire-boy and the others. I thought it would be fun to let 'em have a shot before me, but it backfired. I'm gonna do this part myself."

Zamiel lightly socks Bael's left arm, the uninjured one. "Come on! You know what we can do! At least let us pop in there and-"

Bael pulls away from Zamiel. His exasperation doubles as he glares at the young Baron. "Hey! I'm the First Duke, kid. What I say goes! You can help out once we start fighting on the planet. Got it?!"

Zamiel takes a step back. For a brief moment, his eyes flash with a look of pure, unbridled rage. However, he quickly swallows his anger and forces a smile. "Ahaha, well, of course, Big Bael! My apologies! I just thought with your arm like that, you'd like a little help. We'll hang back and wait for the signal then, alright?"

The Duke of Pain, placated by Zamiel's words, grunts in approval. "Good. No offense, Zammy-boy. It ain't that I think you're weak, but the humans've got a bunch of dangerous weapons 'n shit. It's better if I go in there first."

The Battle Brothers nod. They turn around and walk away, while waving to Bael.

"Sure thing! We'll be there at the first sign of trouble."

As the two Barons leave, Bael continues staring at them. His eyes fixate on their backs, and a strange, sage-like look appears in his eyes.

Those punks ain't as simple as they appear, and I know 'simple.' They're up ta' somethin'. I can feel it.

After the two Brothers fade into the distance, Bael returns his attention to the Burrowers as they continue clearing away debris. The Duke of Pain rubs his chin contemplatively while his tiny pea-brain struggles to come up with thoughts regarding the Battle Brothers.

Hmm. There were those rumors 'bout them. Somethin' about how Zammy-boy and Duriel were in league with the Hell of Blood. That can't be right, though. They don't smell like Vampires. I'd know that stink from a mile away. Must be somethin' else.

With a shrug, Bael starts to yell at the Burrowers, only for pain to shoot through his right arm. "Argh! I keep forgetting! Damn, that shit stings. Fuckin' Ose... broke my favorite right arm. Stinkin' cow."

Bael exhales through his nose and closes his eyes.

"Pain equals pleasure. Pain equals pleasure. Gotta remember my motto at times like these."

Suddenly, with a tremendous crash, the wall of debris blocking the Core groans and slides forward. Fifty tons of rock and dirt rushes toward the Burrowers at the bottom of the pile. All of them dive into the Labyrinth's floor, narrowly avoid a death by crushing. They pop out seconds later, unharmed.

"Duke of Pain! We did it, boss! Plenty of room to get in!"

Bael raises his gaze to the top of the great doors, where a ten-foot gap, both wide and tall, sits.

"Huh? Hey! Are you lazy grunts screwin' with me?! The humans'll turn you morons into pincushions if you try to squeeze through a gap like that! Ain't you guys ever heard of a... a... what were they called, again?"

Bael's eyes turn foggy for a moment.

"...a chokehold?! Humans love chokeholds! Yeah. That's the word. Definitely."

The Burrowers sigh. "It's tough movin' all this dirt, boss! We need a break!"

"What you need is my hand upside the back of your head!" Bael barks. "Keep clearing, ya lazy dogs! I'll go in first."

Bael mutters several curses to himself under his breath as he coils strength into his legs. With a single hup, the Duke of Pain leaps eighty feet into the air, toward the top of the rubble pile. He crashes into the debris with a light thud and lands lightly, steadying himself with his good arm.

Inside the Core, multiple human voices suddenly become audible. The sound of a female AI overhead speaks throughout the Core. "...detected. All soldiers to battle positions. Target positively identified as the Duke of Pain. This is not a drill..."

The frantic loading of guns makes Bael sigh. "Humans."

Bael walks forward, balancing on the precarious rubble with the grace of an elephant. His giant, fat feet crush several chunks of limestone into dust, making his walking a little clumsier than he'd prefer.

The moment Bael arrives inside the Core, a hail of gunfire unloads. Hardly has he become visible at the top of the rubble pile before three thousand machine guns, two thousand plasma launchers, fifteen hundred particle guns, and countless other weapons fire at him.

Bael's vision turns white as every conceivable weapon known to man blasts his body from head to toe. The Duke of Pain stops in place and closes his eyes, frowning as numerous faint tickling sensations spread across his body.

Boom! Boom! Ratatat! Brrrrt!

Three chainguns unload ten thousand bullets upon the immobile Duke of Pain, but their bullets merely bounce off his invincible hide, embedding into the walls, ceiling, and floor.

One soldier, Henry, aims an anti-tank rifle at the Duke of Pain. He hunkers in the back, waiting for the right opportunity, along with a pair of Harpies, each equipped with sniper rifles.

"On your mark," Henry says, transmitting his voice to Neil.

Neil Adams, the commander of humanity's military, stands with two burly minotaurs flanking him on his right and left. Each one wears a red and blue T-REX identical to his.

"We can't use explosive munitions in such a confined space," Neil replies. "If this plan fails, we'll abandon the Core. The Duke of Pain is not an opponent we can face, not without Kar or Hope."

Henry grits his teeth. "Don't worry, Commander. I never miss."

The young Lieutenant shoots a glance at the round chambered in his three-foot long weapon. The munition, dubbed the 'Anti-Bael Bullet', is one of Hans' special creations, a projectile made exclusively to target the Duke of Pain. Created over the last two years, it represents the pinnacle of humanity's current engineering capabilities, fusing a guided munition with a nanite delivery device.

"Even if I hit him perfectly..." Henry mutters, "...there's no guarantee I'll kill the bastard."

Neil's voice transmits over the private comlink line. "The odds are high we won't kill the Duke of Pain, but at the least, we should be able to cripple him. Have faith in Hans."

* * *

Atop the rubble pile, Bael's eyes remain closed, more out of boredom and irritation than anything else.

Fucking hell. This is always the worst part.

Bael takes a step forward. With his eyes shut, he doesn't see where he's going. The rubble around him, liquefied from countless superheated plasma projectiles, gives way under his feet, making him stumble.

"Fuck!"

Bael falls forward, opening his eyes just in time to see the edge of the rubble pile disappear.

Bounce. Tumble. Crash.

Bael's body comically rolls down the hill, making him bounce off the debris and crash into the floor with a staggering bang! The Duke of Pain hits the ground hard enough to shatter the bones of any lesser being.

One soldier nearby howls in surprise. "Holy-! Is he dead?!"

Bael lifts his head, annoyance in his eyes and dirt stuck in his teeth.

"No. Ptuh."

Once again, a hail of gunfire falls upon the Duke of Pain. With a deep groan, Bael pushes himself off the ground and raises his voice. "Hey, humans! Stop shootin' for a sec!"

The gunfire continues.

"Stop shooting, dammit! Stop!"

Still, a hail of useless, ineffective bullets, lasers, and plasma crashes against Bael's invincible body, bouncing off harmlessly.

"HEY!" Bael bellows, his voice barely penetrating the sound of gunfire. "I said STOP!!"

Bael pounds his left fist against his chest. With one crash, the Duke of Pain releases an explosive shockwave, flinging hundreds of the nearest commandos off their feet. Even with their T-REX's, the soldiers still go flying. They reorient themselves in midair and land on their feet, but their confidence crumbles as they realize they haven't so much as scratched their Duke enemy.

"Hold your fire."

Neil's voice transmits through everyone's mics, making the gunfire finally stop.

Eventually, as the fires of superheated lead and plasma begin to cool, Bael's uninjured form appears amidst the smoke, making him appear like an unstoppable war god. The Resistance's morale plummets.

"We can't beat that guy..." One soldier mutters. "He's unkillable!"

"Don't lose faith," Another whispers. "Neil has a plan. He always does!"

Bael exhales, releasing some of his anger as he forces a smile. "Uhh, which one of you is in charge?"

From the back row, three blue and red troopers take a step forward. The middle one, much shorter than his minotaur bodyguards, raises his hand. "I am."

Neil Adams lowers his arm. With a single command, he dissipates his helmet to meet the Duke of Pain's gaze from the three-hundred foot gap separating them.

Bael waves. "Uh. Hi!"

"Hello, Duke of Pain," Neil says, his voice cold. "I've told my men to stop. Since you haven't started attacking, I can only assume you must want something. What is it?"

Bael shrugs, making him wince as he remembers his dislocated shoulder. "Aah, well, it's like this, see..."

The Duke gestures with a sweep of his arm at everyone in the Core.

"I, uh, want you guys to give up. Like, just put down your guns and surrender."

"What?" Neil asks, his tone incredulous. The Commander takes a step toward the Duke of Pain while folding his hands behind his back. Neil assumes a dignified pose, allowing his body language to communicate confidence. "Give up? You may be nigh-invincible, Duke of Pain, but even from you, that demand is difficult to swallow. Why would we ever concede, when Ose is certain to kill and torture us as prisoners of war? Your leader is far less intelligent than I thought if she believes sending you to issue such a demand will sway my hand."

Bael frowns. The Duke of Pain straightens his posture and meets Neil's gaze. "Ose didn't give me this order, bub. I'm telling you myself. Give up, and I'll make sure no more humans die."

The Duke's words send a wave of confusion among the ranks of humanity's soldiers. More than a few glance at the faceless helmets of their comrades, wondering why the Duke would say such a thing.

Neil snorts. "How imbecilic. You can't guarantee humanity any protections, Duke of Pain. I might applaud your sentiment if it wasn't so damned insulting. Do you think crushing us will be so easy? You may be invincible, but you are only one demon! My people will never give up. We want only to live our lives in peace! We want to live free of bondage, and free of the grasp of demonkind! So long as your kind wishes to drink our blood, feed upon our bodies, and torture our souls, we will always resist your rule!"

Bael's shoulders sag. "So that's how it is, huh? You're just a bunch of peaceful hermits who want to be left alone. 'Zat right?"

This time, it's Bael who chuckles.

"I ain't the smartest demon, bub, but that's a line of shrakh if I've ever heard one. You humans are a bunch of murderers. How many times have you come into the Labyrinth, lookin' for some mooks ta' pick off? Always in the name of 'justice.'"

"Demons continue to enslave humans all across the Labyrinth," Neil says, his eyes narrowing. "I won't stop until I've freed every last member of my species from your claws."

Bael nods. "Freeing slaves is pretty noble, bub, but that ain't what you're doin'. What, do ya think this is my first rodeo? I've fought so many Heroes, so many kings, so many conquerors, I can smell 'em comin' from the other side of a planet. You're a bloodthirsty killer, no better than Beelzechump or any of the worst demons I know."

Neil raises an eyebrow. "Oh? And what about you, Duke of Pain? You've slain countless humans over your life. From one hypocrite to another, you've no right to judge me."

"I like fightin'," Bael replies. "I don't like killin'. Big difference. I don't stomp weaklings unless they give me no choice."

The Duke pauses.

"That means you punks."

Neil's smile turns sinister. "A demon always has his excuses. No matter how you attempt to twist your words, we'll never believe you. No matter what you promise, we'll never trust you. For us to surrender, we'd have to give up our weapons, our armor, and our freedom. We'd have no recourse when your Emperor decides to execute our leaders."

The Commander concludes. "Surrender isn't an option, and it never was. You've wasted your breath."

"Sigh..."

Bael's posture relaxes.

"Guess so. Man. That's what I hate about you humans. You're always so damned bullheaded. I might be dumb, but at least I can shut up if someone's got somethin' ta say. Why'd you even hear me out if you knew you weren't gonna listen?"

A moment of silence follows, as an oddly crooked sneer creeps across Neil's face.

"Oh... I had my reasons..."

Neil's hands, still folded together behind his back, pull apart for a moment as he flashes a hand signal behind himself, to the hidden team of snipers.

Henry, who has one eye focused on Neil and the other on the Duke of Pain, smiles.

"I never miss."

Fwip.

Bael, his gaze locked on Neil's face, frowns. A barely audible pop of air is the only thing he hears a split-second before the vision in his right eye disappears.

Skreeeee!

A horrible, blinding pain explodes in the Duke of Pain's eye socket.

"Aaaaaaarghhh!!"

The Duke of Pain leaps backward instinctively. He loses his footing and crashes against the pile of debris, slamming his spine against the fallen Labyrinth ceiling.

A vicious, barbed needle, forged from the finest demonstone, sticks out of Bael's eye. Blood pours from the wound, making Bael holler and howl like an enraged lion.

The Duke of Pain grabs at his eye with his good arm. He thrashes around on the ground, kicking his feet angrily while hollering countless obscenities.

"YOU FUCKING BASTARD! AAARGH! YOU SHOT MY EYE! FUCKIN' LITTLE CUNT!!!"

The Duke's roars cause all of the Resistance member's hearts to leap into their throats. They take several steps back, terrified of what will come next.

Neil shouts at the Harpie snipers. "Now!"

They fire their sniper rifles, but instead of bullets, two barbed devices shoot out and land on either side of the Duke's thrashing body. They jam into the ground and explode into clouds of nanites, before leaping onto the Duke of Pain and engulfing him in rapid-hardening agents. The nanites swarm over Bael's head, entering through his mouth, nose, and ears, while also transforming into a device more torturous than any ever designed in humanity's past.

Neil watches, his smirk deepening, as Bael's cries cut off. The Duke of Pain loses his senses thanks to the nanites transforming into an ultra-hard helmet around his head. They seal off his sight, hearing, and oxygen supply, preventing him from taking a breath. Bael tries to grab at the helmet and rip it off, but his fingers clumsily slide off its smooth surface.

"Any second now," Neil says. "There's no way that bastard can stay awake without air. Just like Artorias, he'll soon fall, and then we can capture him."

The barbed bullet, dubbed the Anti-Bael round, shows its power. Nanites embedded in its tip burrow deep into Bael's eye and enter his brain. They latch onto his neurons like parasitical organisms and deliver agonizing bursts of electricity to his cortex, where not even Bael can protect himself.

...However.

Minutes later, Neil's smile vanishes, replaced instead with a look of disbelief. Bael continues to thrash around silently, the only noise he makes coming from his fists and legs striking the area around him.

"What the hell? Why hasn't Bael fallen unconscious?! Don't tell me the bastard doesn't need to breathe!"

Neil doesn't know.

Unlike Jason and Hope, who both witnessed the Ancient Era thanks to Solomon's wisdom, the human Commander hasn't any idea that Bael can survive underwater or in the vacuum of space.

Air is only something he needs to speak. His body and mind don't require it to stay awake.

Eventually, the Duke's thrashing begins to slow. Neil and the commandos take a step forward, thinking he's finally begun to fall comatose, only to recoil in horror.

Dark, blood-red miasma begins to erupt from the Duke of Pain's body. His muscles swell and his bones crack, sending terror through the hearts of everyone present.

Neil doesn't hesitate. "E-everyone! Evacuate immediately! Retreat to Tarus II! Bael is transforming into the Balrog!"

The nanites surrounding Bael's head begin to hiss and pop as ten-thousand-degree flames lick at them from the insides. Suddenly, the ones covering Bael's mouth explode, spraying molten cinders forward like a grenade.

"GROOOOOOAR! ME SMASH! ME KILL!"

The Balrog awakens.

Part 237: The Balrog's Only Weakness

Recommended Listening (Custom Cryopod OST!)

"ATTENTION, ALL PERSONNEL! THE BALROG'S BIO-SIGNATURE HAS BEEN DETECTED WITHIN THE CORE! EVACUATE IMMEDIATELY. DO NOT ENGAGE. ATTENTION, ALL PERSONNEL! THE BALROG'S BIO-SIGNATURE..."

Centurion's voice booms overhead. Its robotic tone mixes together with the enraged roars of the transforming Duke of Pain to create a cacophony of despair. Bael's mouth frees itself thanks to the several-thousand-degree flames belching from his insides, but he only manages to clear away the nanite-metal impairing his breathing.

Six inches of pseudo-steel glues itself to the Balrog's head, making the fifteen-foot-tall demon roar ceaselessly as it tries to tear off the strange thing obstructing its vision. Still, like an annoying piece of tape stuck to a cat's paw, no matter how the Balrog claws at the torturous helmet, he only manages to deform it for a moment before it shifts its shape and re-hardens.

"Let's go!" Neil yells, transmitting his voice through the intercom. He forces his soldiers to abandon the Core, making all of their hearts jump into their throats. They flee for their lives from the Balrog as Bael smashes his head against the floor and the wall, trying to free himself from the nanites.

"STUPID FACE THING! GET OFF HEAD!! GET OFF! GETOFFGETOFFGETOFF!!!"

Every time the Balrog swings his arm, a hurricane-level gust of wind fires in a random direction, taking dozens of Core personnel by surprise and flinging them off their feet. The soldiers and non-combatants howl in alarm as their bodies crash against each other, but thankfully, their T-REX's absorb 99% of the impact.

All around the Core, twenty thousand humans and monsters flee toward the Tarus II portal. Several stop for brief moments to disable the other portals and smash their control pieces to bits, but otherwise nobody dares to dawdle.

Neil stands next to the Tarus II portal while waving the others through. He fixes his gaze on the screaming Balrog as Bael thrashes around like an enraged bull. Eventually, Bael starts stomping forward in random directions, attempting to pound his head against things to shatter his helmet. This forces Neil and his minotaur guards to leap at the Duke of Pain and activate the full power of their T-REX's.

"Henry!" Neil shouts as he enters the fray. "Covering fire!"

Henry and his sniper team begin pelting Bael with high impact anti-tank rounds. Each shot blasts off chunks of Bael's flesh, only for it to regrow within seconds at a speed visible to the naked eye.

Neil and his minotaur commandos summon golden gauntlets onto their left wrists. Their T-REX's activate the rapid-energy-expenditure mode, transforming them into the powerful Thundercat exosuits!

The commando's golden gauntlets become three times harder and more armored than the other areas of their exosuits, limiting the movement of their hands and fingers, but turning their fists into miniature shields capable of deflecting almost any blow. Three knife-like blades extend from the gauntlets, mimicking the utility of Barbatos's claws during the Ancient Era.

Neil leaps forward right as Bael blindly swings his palm in a wide arc. The Core's Commander holds up his left arm and winces as the Balrog backhands him, but to the astonishment of those who take a moment to gaze at their commander, he holds his ground and doesn't go flying.

"Tie-downs!" Neil barks.

His minotaur bodyguards grab onto Bael's right and left legs. They wrap their right arms around the Balrog while aiming their left arms at his feet.

Thwip! Thwip!

Two harpoons, forged from demonstone, fire from their golden gauntlets. The two-feet-long barbs stab through both of Bael's feet, impaling him to the floor.

"GROOOOAR! THAT HURTS! BIG MEANY NO HURT ME!!"

Bael swipes at the minotaurs to try and fling them away, but the nanite helmet continues to block his vision, allowing the Thundercat-wearing monsters to bob and weave while evading his clumsy grabs.

Neil jumps behind the Balrog. He pulls out a barb of his own and fires it into the back of Bael's neck, impaling the Balrog right through his throat. Bael utters a shocked gurgle, but his voice catches as the human commander uses all of his strength to pull on a rope attached to the demonstone barb. With one mighty tug, Neil yanks the Balrog backward, forcing him to fall on his ass with both of his feet still stuck to the Labyrinth's floor. Neil finishes by impaling the other end of the rope into a sidewall, where it forces Bael to lay backward, unable to break free.

"GGRRRGH! GGLLAUGH!"

Balrog chokes and gasps. He tries to grab Neil or his bodyguards, but fails. Blind and half-immobilized, the Balrog begins smashing his fists into the floor in a frenzied rage.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

Earthquakes explode in every direction, tossing Neil and his bodyguards around like pancakes in a frying pan. The entire Core starts to fall to pieces as chunks of the already torn-apart ceiling come loose and plummet to the ground below.

One of the minotaurs looks up just in time to see his death coming. A thirty-ton chunk of debris crushes him and his Thundercat exosuit into a bloody pulp, leaving Neil and the other minotaur with pits in their stomachs.

This damned Balrog! Neil roars, mentally. What insane power! If Bael ever becomes an Emperor, we're all doomed! I have to kill the bastard today!

Despite knowing how futile an attempt on the Balrog's life might be, Neil still feels an ache in his heart, one which he believes must be sated. The Commander summons his triple-bladed claw and dives toward the Balrog's right arm, still thrashing around like an angry octopus.

Slash!

Neil swings his gauntlet in an upward arc. To his astonishment, the blade slices through Bael's arm as if it were a tender cut of beef. The Balrog's limb falls halfway off and dangles from a few sinewy pieces of muscle and skin.

What?! Could it be? Does Bael lose his invincible defense when he become a Balrog?! That must be the case! He exchanges defense for overwhelming strength!

Neil's eyes flicker with a deep realization as the Balrog howls in agony. "GLAAAAARGH! HUCK! HURKS! IT HURKS!"

The Balrog clutches his arm, which begins spewing lava-like blood more corrosive than any acid known to man. Several droplets splash onto Neil's armor, making the nanites on those sections hiss and boil away.

Neil takes multiple steps backward. With the Balrog temporarily pausing his rampage, Neil transmits his newly found information to the remaining Core personnel.

"Attention, all soldiers! This is Commander Neil! I have just learned that Bael loses his invincibility in his Balrog form! We may actually have a shot at killing this sonuvabitch!"

By the time Neil returns his attention to the Balrog, Bael has already pressed his half-severed arm back together. His skin and muscle reattaches itself within seconds, regenerating to its former level faster than anyone can fathom.

"...On second thought," Neil mutters. "...maybe I spoke too soon!"

Bael's rage temporarily subsides. The Balrog hesitates for a moment, as if considering his current predicament.

Then...

Hup!

Bael slaps both of his palms against the ground. He ignores the barb in his neck and yanks himself upward with all his strength, ripping out a terrifying amount of muscle, bone, and gore from his throat. A veritable river of acidic blood spews from the front and back of Bael's throat, forcing his adversaries to retreat several feet from the corrosive liquid.

Next, Bael summons power into his knees. He crouches down for a moment before leaping skyward, toward the ceiling! The Balrog tears out of the demonstone barbs holding him to the floor without any trouble, but he overlooks one crucial thing.

Crash!

Unable to see, due to the nanite-helmet, Bael's entire body blasts against the ceiling at 300 miles an hour, flattening him like a cartoonish pancake. Another hellish rain of rubble descends upon Neil and his final remaining bodyguard as they rely on Centurion to guide their movements. Five times in succession, they avoid instant death-by-crushing as Centurion momentarily autopilots them to avoid the falling rubble.

Bael leaps off the ceiling toward the ground below. Despite his total blindness, the Balrog seems to instinctively grasp the distance between the roof and floor, sending a shiver down the spines of Neil and his bodyguard. The Duke of Pain smashes feet-first into the ground and bellows angrily, his throat having already healed. A wave of fire belches from his stomach, making the Thundercat-wearers retreat to avoid Bael's hellfire.

"By the Creator! This damned Balrog is just as invincible as ever!" Neil laments. "Finish retreating! We can't defeat the Duke of Pain on our own!"

Neil flicks his eyes toward the Tarus II portal. Already, 95% of the Core's personnel have fled, leaving only a couple of hundred troopers behind. They wait with bated breath for their Commander to join them.

"Go, go!" Neil shouts. He jumps toward the portal and stops at its base while waving his soldiers through. "I'll go last! You go first! Move it, move it! Don't make me tell you twice!"

With the Balrog's rampage becoming less chaotic every second, Neil's worst fears become reality as Bael turns to face the sounds of stomping feet. The Balrog's acute hearing picks up the direction of his fleeing prey, allowing his simple mind to deduce where he should attack next.

Neil's eyes widen. "Oh, no."

With another hup, Bael leaps toward the portal to Tarus II. He rushes toward the humans with deadly intent, rearing his fist back to deliver a devastating strike.

I can't let the Balrog kill my men, and I certainly won't let him pass through the portal to Tarus II! I have only one option!

Without hesitation, Neil pounces at the leaping Balrog. His six-foot-tall form appears positively puny compared to the 15-foot Demon Duke, but in that moment, Neil's bravery lifts the heart of his soldiers.

"Centurion! Rockets!"

With two rapid commands, Neil ignites a one-time-use pair of thrusters under his boots. They ignite for 1/4th of a second, tripling his speed and turning his body into a battering ram. Neil sweeps past Bael's fist and crashes into the Balrog's chest head-on, neutralizing Bael's forward momentum and sending him reversing into the pile of rubble at the Great Doors.

CRASH!

The human leader and his demonic adversary pound into the rock-pile at mach speed, flinging a dust cloud in every direction. By the time the dust clears, all of the soldiers have evacuated.

All except for one.

Lieutenant Henry stays behind. He stops at the entrance to the portal and narrows his eyes as he gazes at the body of his Commander laying motionless against the Balrog's chest. Bael begins to stir, but Neil doesn't move.

Henry sighs. Commander... it has been an honor. Miss Oshina told me you were colluding with the Wordsmiths and demonkind, but I never fully believed her. I still don't know what to believe, but I know what you would want.

Henry glances toward the ceiling, now torn apart enough to reveal dozens of tiny, metallic devices, all with blinking red lights.

"Centurion. Set a five-second timer for the Core self-destruct sequence. Detonate whatever you can, anything Caddis didn't sabotage."

"ORDERS RECEIVED, LIEUTENANT HENRY. DETONATION WILL COMMENCE IN T-MINUS FIVE... FOUR... THREE..."

Henry doesn't hesitate. He leaps through the portal, only for it to shut off a second later, leaving Neil alone in a room filled with human, monsters, and demon corpses, as well as the Balrog.

Bael tosses Neil's unmoving body off his chest and licks the air. "HUH? WHERE TASTY HUMANS GO? WHY EVERYONE-"

Katoom! Katoom!

A hundred explosions detonate overhead simultaneously, taking Bael by surprise. The Balrog jerks its head upward as a sense of imminent danger presses upon him.

Fifty thousand tons of rubble collapses upon Neil and the Balrog, burying them under an unending avalanche of death and misery.

The Core, once a beacon of power among the Labyrinth, filled with thousands of humans and monsters working in tandem, falls silent. Fifty-foot-tall walls of debris bury all of the warpgates, crush the mechanical apparatuses used to control them, and entomb the fallen who fought their hardest in the day's battle.

The battle against the Balrog ends with a bang, sending off the deceased to the afterlife with a terrible loss. Not only their commander, but their home, slips from their control.

* * *

Among the rubble, a ghastly specter emerges. Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, pops out of the ground while holding Neil's unmoving body. The Duke titters to himself as he plunks the Commander atop the rubble, where the Core's ceiling used to occupy, within a newly-formed ground and roof area.

"Ksss. You sssurvived ssstriking the Balrog, eh? Thisss human isss quite resssilient, and not becaussse of his fancccy gadgetsss."

Mephisto turns his gaze toward the Great Doors, their tops barely visible beneath the newly created mountain of rubble. A small crawlspace allows multiple goblins to creep inside, sent by Ose to help.

"You! Gobbysss! Take thisss flessshbag to Ossse. Ssshe will know what we mussst do with thisss trasssh."

The Duke of Mist falls silent as the goblins work together to grab and drag Neil's comatose form away. After they leave, the mountain of rubble begins to shift.

A massive, blood-red hand bursts out of the debris-pile. Bael, still in his Balrog form, claws his way from beneath thousands of tons of hardened dirt while roaring in rage. "GROOOOOOAR!!"

Mephisto facepalms. "Why isss it alwaysss my job to revert Bael'sss transssformation?"

Bael, upon hearing Mephisto's words, turns to look at him. The unstoppable Balrog pounces toward Mephisto with murderous bloodlust, his very aura threatening to smush the ghostly Duke into bonemeal.

At that moment, Mephisto cups his hands to his mouth.

"Bael! Oh, Bael! I have sssome puppiesss and kittiesss for you to play with! Don't you want to sssee the cute little animalsss?!"

Screeeech!

Bael grinds to a halt. The almighty Balrog stops within five feet of Mephisto, his fist raised with deadly intent. However, he doesn't punt Mephisto into another dimension. Instead, he stands perfectly still.

"YOU... HAVE PUPPY?"

"Kss. Yesss, many puppiesss and kittiesss... if you be a good boy, I will let you pet and play with them to your heartsss content!"

Mephisto motions with his hand. From underneath his feet, five undead animals crawl out of the ground, summoned by his necromantic magic.

"Arf! Arf!"

"Meow! Meow!"

"Ca-caw! Ca-caw!"

The animals meow, bark, and chirp, their sounds reaching Bael's ears despite the soundproofing helmet attached to his head.

Excited, the Duke of Pain lowers his fist and plunks down on his butt obediently. "OKAY! ME LIKE PUPPY AND KITTY!"

Mephisto lowers his eyes. No matter how many timesss I do thisss... it never becomesss lesss humiliating. If Bael'sss enemiesss found out the Balrog'sss lone weaknesss... he would be a laughingssstock!

Slowly, Bael demorphs from his Balrog form, reverting to his main body.

As he does, the nanites surrounding his head seal up over his mouth, preventing him from breathing once more.

...Several seconds pass.

Bael tilts his head toward Mephisto. He raises his finger and taps the side of the helmet three times, as if to ask a question.

Mephisto groans. "...Yesss. I will asssk Ossse to remove that helmet for you. In the meantime... jussst play with the animalsss... I have bodiesss to collect."

Bael nods his head vigorously, then gives Mephisto a giant thumbs-up.

The Duke of Mist floats away, shaking his head the whole time.

"...The thingsss I do for that idiot."

Part 238: Phoebe, Humanity's Leader

General Chadwick, second in command for the Labyrinth Core resistance forces, stands beside the warpgate on Tarus II. He remains inside his exosuit, as do fifty-thousand other commandos, all of them perched atop nearby buildings, lined up behind dozens of battlements, and even taking cover inside multiple metal towers, with their sniper rifles trained on the warp-gate.

One by one, dozens of commandos flee from the Core, all of them arriving on Tarus II with fear in their eyes. The Balrog continues to silently rampage inside the portal, but its opaque nature prevents any of the Resistance fighters from seeing inside the warp-gate. Their hearts pound like drums as they fear the worst may occur; the Balrog's emergence on Tarus II.

Suddenly, the flow of soldiers stops. One last soldier darts through and turns to face Chadwick. "General! Only Neil and Henry remain! We're waiting on them!"

Chadwick's fingers tense up. He nods at the trooper and turns his attention to the portal, his alertness at the maximum.

"Ready yourselves!" Chadwick yells. The portly black-haired Norwegian holds his hand over the datapad while a giant red 'close' command flashes on its screen, waiting for him to disable the warp-gate.

Seconds pass.

Half a minute.

A full minute.

Right when Chadwick's heartrate starts to slow, the portal flickers. A single commando dashes through and arrives on Tarus II's side. "Deactivate the portal!"

"Henry? Where is Neil?" Chadwick asks.

Instead of replying, Henry flicks his gaze to Chadwick. He jumps toward the General, startling Chadwick. Before Chadwick can react, Henry slaps his hand on top of Chadwick's, forcing the General to press the portal deactivation button.

"What?! No!"

General Chadwick's heart skips several beats as the Tarus II portal dissipates, but not before a small avalanche explodes through its event horizon. Even with the portal's deactivation, it still takes a second or two to decouple from the warp-gate inside the Core, allowing twenty tons of ceiling debris to spill through and flood onto the Tarus II warp-gate platform. Dozens of troopers leap back instinctively, narrowly saving their lives from a death by crushing.

Moments later, the chaos fades away, and a deep, ominous silence follows.

Chadwick stares, wide-eyed, at Henry's figure. The young Lieutenant deactivates his helmet and bows respectfully.

"General Chadwick. I'm sorry for my hastiness, but I had no choice. I had to follow Commander Adams' final order."

"Final order?"

Chadwick shudders.

"Don't... don't tell me that bastard sacrificed himself! What happened in there?! Explain yourself!"

Henry's eyes gloss over with emotion. He glances around at the assembled troopers, all of whom have already regained their bearings to focus on his words.

"Commander Adams... he gave me one final command. He activated the Core's self-destruct sequence and told me to seal the warp-gate on Tarus II's side. Thanks to his final act of bravery, we will have extra time to prepare for the demon's invasion."

"Bullshit," Chadwick growls. "Lieutenant Henry, I'm relieving you of your position. Deactivate your exosuit at once."

Henry blinks in surprise. "G-General? I don't understand."

"You're lying! Neil would never do something so selfish as sacrifice humanity's best strategic mind. In an instant, he would deem his life more important than yours. He knows damn well our chance of survival will skyrocket so long as he remains with us."

Henry holds his palms face-up. "I'm... I'm sorry, General, but I'm telling the truth. I don't understand Neil's final order, either. It was... bizarre. However, if you insist, I'll submit to incarceration."

"Goddamn right you will," The General hisses. "Neil warned me about you. He said the odds of you being a traitor were at least 50%! I never should have left you and him alone!"

Henry's expression hardens. Immediately, he raises his finger and taps the air, activating Centurion's visual-interface. Even without a helmet, he's grown so used to the positioning of the exosuit's visual indicators that he can manipulate them at will.

"I understand your concern, General, but I also won't allow you to slander me. Here; my data files. See for yourself what happened in there."

Unlike Henry, Chadwick continues to wear his full exosuit, including its helmet. A pop-up appears in the corner of his vision, one with a video file attached. Chadwick taps to open it.

Half of his vision blurs as a video plays, one with Neil battling the Balrog.

"Henry!" Neil yells. "Take these command codes! Bring the ceiling down on this bastard! Don't make me tell you twice, goddammit!"

"Commander!" Henry replies, choked emotion in his voice. "I won't leave without you!"

"The hell you won't!"

Neil dodges one of the Balrog's fist swipes and yells again. "Leave, already! LEAVE!"

The video's perspective changes as Henry jumps out from behind cover, drops his sniper rifle, and rushes through the portal. The rest of the scene continues as normal, including Henry's conversation with Chadwick.

After watching, the General hesitates.

This... this video is convincing. Is it a fake? Something about Neil's voice wasn't quite right, but... how could Henry possibly forge a video in mere seconds? Was Neil right? Could Ose have somehow used her powers to create a false timeline of events?

The General's suspicions deepen. However, without any proof one way or another, he falters.

"...This recording does seem to prove your claims. Even so, I intend to conduct a full investigation, later. Right now, we have a dead Commander and nobody to lead this army. Disable your exosuit and follow Corporal Hurent. She'll deliver you to the prison complex until further notice."

Chadwick nods at a trooper on his left, the female human who Neil questioned not even an hour before. Hurent nods back and lifts her Plasma Carbine flat across her chest.

"Lieutenant. You heard the General."

Henry's complexion turns ashen, but he offers no complaint. After a moment of hesitation, Henry deactivates his exosuit and decouples its straps from behind his back. The young man lightly tosses his T-REX to Chadwick, who catches it easily.

"...General."

"Lieutenant."

Both men eye each other, with Chadwick's expression hidden behind his mask, and Henry's look of guilt visible for everyone to see.

Corporal Hurent leads Henry away, their procession looking almost as if she's captured a prisoner of war.

Once they leave, Chadwick heaves a sigh. "God dammit. Neil's dead, crushed to death by his own creation, and we've lost the Core, too. I didn't expect us to lose, and certainly not so quickly."

As Chadwick mutters to himself, a female voice speaks at his side. "General, don't feel so down. I'd bet good money Neil is still alive."

Chadwick turns to his left, where Corporal Hurent stood only a minute earlier. After she leads Henry away, a different soldier takes her place, one with a black-and-gold exosuit unlike no other.

"Miss Hiro? What makes you say such a thing?" Chadwick asks. He turns to the soldier as she deactivates her helmet, revealing her straight, white hair. "Your exosuits are certainly powerful, but even if Neil miraculously survived the roof caving on him, there's no way he can handle the Balrog alone."

Phoebe Hiro, wife of humanity's leader, clicks her tongue. "Tsk. Come on, Chadwick, don't be such a downer. There's no chance our enemies would pass up a chance to capture our brilliant military commander. Not only would he make an ideal hostage to demoralize us, but he has all sorts of information they can put to good use. He's alive, trust me."

Chadwick deactivates his helmet, then raises an eyebrow. "Are you trying to comfort or scare me, Miss Hiro? I think I'd rather Neil had died than end up in the hands of the bloodskins. They'll torture him endlessly!"

Phoebe frowns at Chadwick's casual slur. "No. They won't. Ose doesn't need torture; she can possess people and read their thoughts. She nearly took over Jason's mind at one point. You might think Neil is in grave danger, but once Jason or Hope returns, there's no way the demons will be able to keep him from us. Now, let's focus on the immediate future. Explain the situation in the Core to me."

The Hero's Wife listens intently as Chadwick explains what happened over the last few hours, how the humans pushed back the demons twice, how Kar nearly died fighting Ose, and many more details. After concluding with Henry's possible betrayal, Chadwick nods at Phoebe.

"So, not to be rude, Miss Hiro, but where have you been? We don't expect you to fight on the frontlines, but I always thought you'd be out here with the rest of us. You've been uncharacteristically absent."

"I have," Phoebe nods. "I had to drop Daisy off at the hospital with Samantha. There's no safer place for my daughter than at the side of the strongest being on Tarus II. After that... well..."

Phoebe chuckles wryly.

"I spoke to Neil two days ago, not long after he debriefed everyone. I made my position clear. Neil runs the Core. Jason and I run Tarus II. Whether Neil is here or not, I'll be taking charge of this planet's defense."

Chadwick blinks in surprise. "...You? I, I mean... I wasn't informed of this. Why didn't Neil tell me?"

"I don't know," Phoebe admits, "but I imagined he was going to tell you once he successfully retreated to Tarus II and saw me here and waiting. If you're right about Henry's possible betrayal, then it would explain why you never found out. Neil didn't expect to lose the Core. He was too confident in his capabilities. Then again, those strange, aberrant demons, the armored ones... they took you by surprise. I'm amazed you survived their onslaught."

Miss Hiro shakes her head. "Two thousand demons, each one with the strength of a Baron. I don't know how the demons created such frightening creatures, especially given how few souls remain within the River Styx, but it's clear they've been preparing for this invasion for the last six years. We can't underestimate Ose's cunning."

"I don't know either," Chadwick mutters. "But what I do know is that I can't just take your word on this matter, Miss Hiro. After Neil, I am the highest ranking member of humanity's military. You may be the Hero's wife, but that doesn't mean you have the qualifications to lead. Why should we entrust our survival to you?"

Chadwick's words contain neither malevolence, selfishness, nor greed. He speaks his mind frankly while eying Phoebe with a complex look. The Hero's Wife meets him on equal terms with a compassionate gaze of her own.

"Jason and I have not stood idly for the last six years. With Solomon's help, we've constructed countless weapons for battling the demons. The war you just fought in the Core was merely a prelude to the real battle. If and when the demons try to make planetfall here, we'll be ready for them. That is why I will take command, General."

Phoebe holds her palm up to her ear, allowing her nanite armor to convert into a telephone-like device. "Centurion. Summon the Walkers. Two will do."

"COMMAND ACKNOWLEDGED, PILOT 'PHOEBE HIRO.' NOW ACTIVATING TWO LEVEL-1 PLANET-WALKERS."

Centurion blares in Phoebe's ear, confirming her order. After several seconds, the ground begins to tremble.

From the skies above, two pinpricks of light emerge. Massive metal crates plummet toward the PLANET from the upper atmosphere, dropped by an unseen space-faring vessel.

Centurion speaks. "DROPSHIP PAYLOAD DEPLOYED. THE PACKAGES WILL MAKE PLANETFALL IN T-MINUS SEVENTEEN SECONDS."

Hundreds of soldiers turn their gazes skyward. They gasp in awe as they spot the fireballs streaking downward from the upper atmosphere, falling even faster than terminal velocity. Whatever metal Phoebe used to construct the square crates neither sags nor melts under the multiple-thousand-degrees of heat buffeting them from every angle.

Seconds later, the massive crates smash into Tarus II's surface half a mile from the outskirts of the warp-gate encampment, sending two shockwaves hurtling across the plains. A bomb-like sound-blast sweeps across the base, startling everyone and making hundreds of soldiers fall on their asses. Their confusion only lasts for a second before they break out into whoops and cheers.

Two gigantic metal machines break out of the crates, somehow undamaged after crashing into the planet at three hundred miles per hour. The automatons rise to a height of over one hundred feet by lifting themselves up via four spider-like legs. Atop the legs, a square-shaped cockpit rests, with two pairs of double-barreled cannons facing forward. Each cannon extends forward some twenty feet and possesses enough firepower to reduce the encampment's walls to rubble with one shot.

The Planet-walkers begin stomping toward the humans at a surprisingly brisk pace, traveling at least thirty miles per hour. Once the Planet-walkers arrive within 100 feet of the walls, they slow to a stop, towering over the defensive barrier like a grown adult standing next to a miniature garden fence. The thirty-foot-walls appear positively puny compared to the monstrosities looming overhead.

Phoebe smiles. "These are two of the first prototypes I built, four years ago. They're a bit clunky, but I think they'll suit our needs. What about you, Chadwick? Do you believe I have the qualifications to lead humanity in Neil's absence?"

The General's jaw practically hits the floor. "I-incredible! If we'd had these machines in the Core, those aberrant demons would never have broken the perimeter!"

"Perhaps," Phoebe replies, trying not to laugh at his stupefaction. "The Archimedes Cannons are capable of causing immense devastation, but Planet-walkers are at their best in a wide, open field. They'd have limited mobility in the Core, while also being more likely to stomp our own troops to death."

Chadwick nods hurriedly. "Yes, I understand, Miss Hiro. You are truly a genius! It's no wonder the soldiers call you Humanity's Goddess. Your ingenuity may just win us this war!"

Phoebe's smile fades away. "No, General. Without the Wordsmiths, we will eventually fall to the demons' unending hordes. My only goal is for us to survive. We must last until Jason or Hope return, and after that, we can come up with a permanent solution for the 'Demon Problem.'"

A moment of silence follows. Phoebe brushes a strand of hair out of her eyes as she turns to look at the soldiers assembled.

"All of you... you need to work together. The demons will surely dig one of the Core's warpgates out of the rubble. With the servers destroyed, it will take them some time to compute Tarus II's dimensional coordinates, perhaps a few days at the least. Once they do, we need to ensure they never break past this warp-gate. Are there any questions?"

Phoebe takes control of the military smoothly and without issues. Despite Chadwicks initial reservations, he quickly discovers that even the Core personnel are more than willing to put their faith and trust in the Hero's wife. After all, who was it that always took care of them, visited them, and made sure to treat everyone with respect and dignity over the previous six years? None other than Phoebe Hiro.

Several hands shoot up as soldiers direct their questions at her, but one person's query catches everyone's attention.

Brunhilda, the Tribe Leader of Feloria, speaks. "Commander Hiro. I do not understand. Why do you not simply destroy the metal gate? Then the demons will not come."

"That's a good question," Phoebe replies. "Simply speaking, we can't. Even if we could, we shouldn't. These gates don't only connect to the Labyrinth Core. They can connect to similar gates on all the other planets, including Feloria. The Core possessed specialized computers capable of calculating the dimensional vectors of each gate more easily, thanks to teams of monsters and humans working together, but Jason once used Solomon's Crown to reconnect all on his own. If we destroy the gate, we will be unable to reach the other worlds humanity currently controls, and the demons will be able to separate us."

Phoebe continues. "Not that anything I just said matters. These gates are damn-near indestructible. I don't know what material the demons used to build them, but if I were to throw one of my Planet-walkers at this gate here, I wouldn't even dent it. The material used for these Volgrim-built gates is five times harder and more durable than demonstone, and appears to be infused with some sort of magical activator which allows for interdimensional travel. It's a potent fusion of technology and magic, one which I haven't a chance of mimicking."

Brunhilda struggles to understand Phoebe's explanation, but unlike the humans who served under Bahamut, her comprehension of technology is several epochs behind theirs. As the leader of a world of hut-dwellers, she has only the most primitive grasp on technology, making it hard to understand Phoebe's words.

"I... I see. So, the big gate is... hard? It cannot be broken?"

Phoebe shakes her head. "Not by us, it can't."

"Ah. That is unfortunate," Brunhilda mutters. "So, will the demons be able to open the gate and attack us soon?"

"I can't say for certain, but I would assume so," Phoebe says.

Unlike most of the other soldiers, Brunhilda does not wear a T-REX, nor do her fellow Felorians. Unable to truly grasp the intricacies of technology, they instead shun the nanosuits and opt to fight with little more than leather armor, or even none at all. Brunhilda turns to her clan members and speaks to them in a hushed voice, allowing Phoebe to continue answering questions from other soldiers.

Eventually, she finishes. The soldiers disperse and start setting up shifts to guard the warp-gate, while others head off to eat food and prep themselves for what could be a long or short wait before the next demon attack.

Chadwick and Phoebe end up standing alone after the others leave. The General sighs. "I would almost rather the demons attacked us now. Not knowing when they'll open the portal, or if they will at all, makes me uneasy. I feel as if there's a snake somewhere in the tall grass, waiting to strike, but I haven't a clue where it's hiding."

Phoebe nods. "I know what you mean, as I feel similarly about my husband. I'd rather know he was dead or alive, if only to remove this anxious feeling in my heart."

Chadwick shakes his head. "The only thing worse than an enemy you can see is one you can't. I'll take my leave now, Miss Hiro."

"Farewell, Chadwick."

Phoebe watches silently as Chadwick heads off to the local mess hall, leaving her alone at the portal. Phoebe glances at the wall of debris still piled in front of it and sighs.

"This war has only just begun, and already, I wish it was over."

Author's Note:

Check out Brunhilda's artwork!

THE CRYOPOD
TO HELL
MWTX
STUDIOS

Part 239: Bael's Brain Spiders

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, strides through the wall of demons parked at the entrance to the Core. A pile of debris nearly 100-feet-high stacks up to the top of the doors, blocking entry for more than one demon at a time. Unlike a minute before, a disquieting silence pervades the air, caused by the cessation of the Balrog's rampage.

Decked out in her now slightly-dusty white uniform, knee-high socks, and high-heeled shoes, Ose resembles a catwalk model and female CEO rolled into one. Her gorgeous appearance draws the lustful looks of countless low-ranked demons, but in her eyes, they mean nothing.

"Damn. Still can't hardly move my fingers..." Ose grumbles to herself. She glances at her mangled hands and grimaces. Already, they've lost their usual pink coloration to swelling and bits of bone poking through her skin.

The agony is excruciating, but Ose can only grit her teeth and bear the pain. After all, aside from Belial, the only other demon capable of healing in the Hell of Damnation, the First Hell, is Artorias. Naturally, the only way he can use healing magic is via Uriel's water-manipulation, something he would prefer not to do, which doesn't help Ose's situation out at all.

"...I'll have to visit the Blood Pits to get my fingers working again," Ose says, speaking more to herself than anyone nearby. "A two-hour soak in some fresh virgin blood should do the trick. It'll take me a week to get back to full-power, but if I can weave some basic signs, that will be a great help. Now then, how about that Bael, hm?"

Ose flicks her eyes to the top of the rubble-pile blocking the Core. She coils strength into her legs and leaps upward, clearing 100-feet in a single bound. Thanks to her Emperor physiology, she possesses more than enough strength to manage such a leap.

The Emperor of Infiltration lands atop the rubble without stumbling. Her cat-like dexterity extends throughout her whole body, aided in part by the power of electricity which accelerates her reflexes and thinking speed. A moment later, she darts through the small hole at the top and arrives inside the Core, amidst incalculable devastation. Thousands of tons of rubble bury the dead from both sides, while a small flicker of movement to the left reveals the now-demorphed Bael sitting beside Mephisto and a motionless human commando.

Ose's eyes widen slightly. Oh? That distinctive armor coloration... Mephisto and Bael saved me a lot of trouble.

The Emperor hops several times, each flicker of movement bringing her 50 feet closer to the two Dukes. In only 6 bounds, she clears the 300-foot gap and arrives next to her subordinates.

Mephisto raises his head to stare at Ose with his eerie, blood-red eyes. "Ksss. Ossse. The warp-gatesss have been buried. Sssomehow, the flesssbagsss fixed the sssabotaged bombsss. They brought the ccceiling down, and now we have lossst the initiative."

Ose waves Mephisto's concerns off, her broken fingers making the motion clumsier than it might normally be. "It's fine. I anticipated some losses during Stormbringer. Originally, we were going to face off against two Wordsmiths, remember? Since neither of them are here, that bodes incredibly well for us. We haven't suffered any fatalities yet; only three captures. Beelzebub and Artorias were our biggest losses, but we can still recover them."

Kneeling down, Ose examines Neil's unconscious form. With his armor hiding his face, Ose can't be sure if he's faking his condition or not. She summons electrical power to her eyes, then fires a finely tuned blast of lightning at Neil's chest.

Kzzat!

The nanites enveloping Neil's body shudder visibly. After a few seconds, they fall apart and turn to dust, drifting off Neil's body like sand rolling down a dune. Ose leans in even closer to examine the man's face, but she pulls away after a moment and nods with satisfaction.

"Good. The human is still alive. Mephisto, shackle and outfit him with an anti-Wordsmith containment device. If we can capture Jason's wife and daughter, along with a few other high-ranking resistance members, I'll be able to bring the whole of their society to its knees."

Mephisto frowns. "Ossse. Ssso long asss we haven't captured the Wordsssmithsss, why would the flessshbagsss ever give up? I thought that wasss the point of thisss whole operation! If we capture them, then we will crusssh the insssurrection!"

Ose smiles. She shakes her head ruefully while clicking her tongue. "That is why I'm the reigning Third Emperor and you're not, Mephisto. You don't understand human psychology in the slightest! If I capture Hope's best friend and his woman, while also capturing Jason's family, I will immediately be able to make them dance in my palm. Usually, they could cast a spell to locate their loved ones, but that's the genius of my devices. It prevents targeted spells from finding those I've designated. The Wordsmiths will be powerless to save the ones they care about most, and so, they will acquiesce to my demands."

The Third Emperor chuckles to herself. "That's the problem with having attachments. Once you develop a bond with someone, another person can use them as leverage against you."

Mephisto says nothing.

However, deep inside the Duke of Mist's soul, a deep-seated anger smolders. He gazes at the Emperor of Infiltration with hate-filled eyes, unable to forget the humiliation of watching a mere Baron get promoted to Emperor before himself.

"Indeed..." Mephisto mutters. "There isss nothing worssse than a ussselesss bond to hold you back."

With her mind focused on a thousand other things, Ose misses the visible anger in Mephisto's eyes. She gazes at Neil's body, her thoughts a million miles away. "Mhm. Alright, take this human and begone. As for Bael, I want you to- huh?"

Ose finally notices the metal nanite-helmet encasing Bael's head. Realizing its purpose, she fires a concentrated burst of electrical energy from her eyes, shattering the nanite bonds with ease.

However, once the nanite helmet fizzles into ash, she spots the foot-long demonstone barb stuck in Bael's eye and shudders.

"What the Devil is that?!"

Ose grimaces as she examines the barb sticking three inches out of Bael's right eye. Bael sits on his butt with his feet sprawled out in front of him, and a miserable look on his face. His right arm hangs uselessly at his side, revealing that his Balrog transformation only managed to heal his grievous wounds temporarily until he reverted to his base form.

"The hell are you lookin' at, princess?"

Bael's hostile gaze chills Ose to the bone. She gapes at him, a mixture of disbelief and incomprehension in her eyes.

"Y-you! What happened?! How did... how did the humans injure you so badly?! That metal stake would have killed anyone else!"

Bael grimaces. "No shit, Captain Obvious. Got anything else y'wanna point out? If you hadn't noticed, I'm in a real shit mood."

"I... I can fetch Hellga. Maybe she can pull that thing out of your eye and heal you back to full."

The Emperor takes a step toward Bael, only to pause when he raises his fist. "Don't you even think about it! I already done tried pulling this little prick-sucker out! Damn near went Balrog-mode again! Ain't no way I'm lettin' anyone touch this!"

Ose narrows her eyes. "Fine. I won't touch it, but let me examine it. Anything capable of injuring you won't be ordinary."

Bael grinds his teeth. "I'm warnin' you, woman..."

"I said I wouldn't touch it."

Bael mutters a hundred curses underneath his breath before lowering his arm. With his one good eye, he stares at Ose like a hawk as she walks over and peers at the barb from several angles. Eventually, she brings her face to within a couple of inches from it, making Bael squirm.

"Hey! Do you want me to sock ya in the kisser?!"

"Shut up," Ose growls. "I'm not going to touch the little pokey-stick, you big baby."

Ose's innate demonic abilities include not only the power of electricity, but also Superman-like vision. Her pupils and iris expand and contract several times allowing her to zoom in and gaze at the barb's surface.

Eventually, she pulls away.

"That barb... Bael, you absolutely have to pull it out."

"Piss off!" Bael howls. "If I pull this fucker out, first thing I'm doin' is shoving it right up your-"

"Now is no time for idiocy," Ose counters, shutting the Duke of Pain down. "That barb is overflowing with millions of nanites. The humans designed it with reverse-facing demonstone quills, meaning if we try to pull it out, it's bound to rip out half your skull along with it. However, if we don't, the nano-bots will chew your brain to pieces. You'll die a slow, agonizing death."

Bael starts to spout off at Ose again, but thinks better of it. The look in her eyes, for once, looks a lot less like smug self-satisfaction, and more like worry, pity, and a slight sense of helplessness.

"You're kidding..." Bael mumbles. "I can't die. The humans hit me in my weakest spot and only managed ta' piss me off. How the hell are a few nano-guys gonna kill me if the bigass-fuckin' metal arrow didn't?"

"From what I've seen, you're lucky to be alive," Ose says. "Based upon the swarming activity around your eye socket, you might have anywhere from an hour to a week left before the nanites devour your brain. I can't give an exact time."

Bael lowers his gaze to his feet. "You might be wrong."

"I'm not known for having poor judgment," Ose counters.

Both demons fall silent. After a few moments, Mephisto hovers toward Bael.

"Ksss. Bael. You are one of the few demonsss I consssider my comrade. We have our differencccesss, but you are alwaysss there for me. I think you ssshould lisssten to Ossse. Human nanitesss are extremely dangerousss. Jussst today, the flessshbagsss killed ssseveral Grez with grenadesss filled with flesssh-devouring nanitesss. I do not wisssh to sssee you meet sssuch a grisssly end."

Ose glances at Mephisto, but doesn't vocalize the question in her eyes. Flesh-devouring nanites? Since when did the humans develop such weapons?

She remains silent, however, allowing Mephisto to reason with Bael.

"I can't do it..." Bael mutters. "You don't get it, man. This thing freaking hurts. I ain't never felt pain like this before."

"Don't you alwaysss sssay that pain isss the path to pleasssure?"

Bael rolls his still-functional eye. "This ain't the same thing, not one bit! There's a big difference between feeling the sting of a whip across your back or some light pain-play versus a shit-fucking arrow jammed in your eye! It's a thousand times worse, bub!"

Ose smacks her lips. "Yes. I would imagine so. Never mind. If you would rather die an agonizing death from brain termites than to just bite the bullet and rip that thing out and visit Hellga afterward, suit yourself."

The Duke of Pain squirms uncomfortably. "Uh... brain termites? You're kiddin', right?"

A flicker of light appears in Ose's eyes. "Hm? Oh, yes. Nanites aren't like termites. That would be a silly analogy."

Bael smiles. "Good. Cuz if there's one thing I hate, it's some nasty bug-"

Before Bael can finish his sentence, Ose leans in close and whispers, "More like brain spiders."

"Guh! Don't screw with me!" Bael yells. "Ain't no such thing as brain spiders!"

The Emperor pulls away and shrugs. "Perhaps, and perhaps not. You'll find out soon enough when they start laying eggs in your eye! Anyway, I've work to do, so I'll be leaving, now. Ta-ta~"

Ose turns to walk away, but before she makes it three steps, Bael jumps to his feet, with panic written all over his face. "H-hey, don't screw with me! F-fine! I'll take the damn thing out!"

Smug self-satisfaction appears in Ose's eyes. She turns to flash a cunning smile at Bael, only to contort her face with disgust as Bael grabs hold of the barb with three fingers. "Wait, you nimrod! Don't just yank it out! We need to have Hellga here when you- ack!"

Bael ignores Ose. He braces himself for a moment, then pinches the barb with all his strength. "AAAAAHHHHHHHH!!!!"

With one mighty tug, the Duke of Pain yanks the barb with all his strength. A horrific sight follows as blood bursts from his eye, along with an unthinkable amount of cerebral fluids and a thick, black liquid, one which explodes into ash when it hits the floor.

Bael stumbles forward and falls to his knees. He drops the foot-long barb on the ground and howls like a wounded bear. "AAAAARGH! SHITFUCKBITCHCUNTASSTITS!!"

The Duke of Pain falls forward and rolls on the floor while clutching his face. He weeps like a baby, unable to control himself from the agony tearing through his mind.

Ose starts to walk toward him, only to pause and frown.

Before she can take two steps, Bael suddenly stops crying. He sits up, a surprisingly alert look on his face.

"...huh? Th-that's weird. It don't hurt no more."

Ose blinks in confusion. "What do you mean? Did your pea-brain disable its pain receptors?"

Bael shrugs. Blood continues to gush from his eye, but he smiles like a dopey moron. "Dunno! It just stopped hurting! Thank the Devils, or I might've gone Balrog-mode, bahaha!"

Ose glances at Mephisto, and he meets her gaze.

"...Bael's stupidity never fails to surprise me."

"Ksss. Yesss. You haven't the ssslightessst clue. Hisss mind probably ssshut off. A sssimple matter when one only hasss three brain cccellsss in the firssst placcce."

"You said it, not me."

The Emperor of Infiltration trots over to Bael. "It's likely you have some residual brain-spiders left in your head. I have to fry them out with my electricity."

Bael's grin grows even bigger. "Brain spiders... hehe."

"Report to Hellga after this," Ose mutters. "We can't afford for you to lose what brains you have left, and you've lost a lot of blood."

With a sigh, Ose summons electrical power into her eyes. She aims her gaze at Bael's gouged-out eye, the only gap in his armor, and prepares to fire. A moment later, she unleashes a hundred-thousand-volt of electricity at the Duke's bleeding orifice. It strikes him with surgical precision, worms its way through the gaps in his armor, and electrocutes Bael's brain.

Immediately after, Bael falls backward.

Plop.

The Duke of Pain passes out from the shock of having his brain get fried, allowing Ose to straighten her posture and sigh.

"There. Done. That should have destroyed all those pesky nanites. Now, to deal with the other matters."

Without another word, Ose turns away from Bael to face Mephisto. "Like I said. Take Bael to the Blood Pits, and get the humans' Commander inside restraints. The Wordsmiths could return at any moment, and their delaying only makes me nervous. We don't want them to be able to locate him until the time is right."

Mephisto shrugs. "Ksss. Very well. Do not forget my achievementsss during today'sss battle. Your preccciousss Beelzebub fell during hisss firssst fight, while I almossst sssingle-handedly took out the flessshbagsss by myssself! That mussst count for sssomething!"

"We haven't won this war yet," Ose counters, her tone dry. "Do you want a reward? Souls, perhaps? Have you forgotten that the River Styx is bone-dry? Defeat the humans first, and then we'll talk about battle merits. Now, hurry up and stop wasting my time. I have a Core to clean up."

Ose trots away, leaving Mephisto in her dust. The necromancer glowers at her back, but says nothing.

The Emperor exits the Core and arrives next to the gathered demons outside. Five thousand Burrowers, twice as many as before, sit around, waiting for her orders.

"I want this debris cleared out within the next few hours," Ose commands. "Work in rotations. Start from the top and clear away a fifty-by-fifty opening. I need progress, not perfection. Focus on clearing out just one of the warpgates, and I'll handle the rest."

The Burrowers begrudgingly nod and get to work. As Ose starts to walk away, another demon walks up to her.

Orias, the Baron of the Stars, clears his throat. "Ahem. Ose, if you've a moment?"

"Hm? What is it?"

Unlike with Mephisto or Bael, Ose's tone turns somewhat cordial. Having worked with Orias in the past, she values him quite highly, respecting him as a powerhouse among the Barons.

"The Core's warp-gates... how will we activate them? All of Bahamut's computers were destroyed when the ceiling collapsed. Won't it take us weeks to clear out and rebuild the Core?"

Ose smiles. "Of course not. I was, after all, the demon who helped build the gates. I worked in tandem with the Overlords to make them a reality. I can also activate them and calculate the dimensional coordinates on my own."

Orias frowns. "Yes, but so long as the humans wish, they can press the emergency deactivation button on their side and seal off the gate. Do you have another plan of attack?"

"No. We will overwhelm the humans with numbers. Don't worry, Orias, I've planned this operation for six years. I have several agents working among the humans' ranks. How do you think Neil fell into our hands so easily?"

"Ah, I see," Orias says with a smile. "You always did like to plan ten steps ahead. I'll be waiting for your orders."

"Take a break," Ose says. "You'll be key to the next part of my operation."

After exchanging goodbyes, Ose breaks away from Orias. She slowly heads down the long corridor leading away from the Core, all while sighing to herself.

"...Can't wait to soak my fingers in some nice, warm human blood. Blasted Sphinx, forcing me to use my best attack like that... that's why I hate monsters and humans both. They're all so damned stubborn."

While the Emperor grumbles to herself, a faint beeping sensation appears in the back of her mind. A biochip, installed and maintained by Ose herself, connects to her brain and transmits a message from a high-priority sender.

All of the blood drains from Ose's face.

[LEVEL ONE MESSAGE FROM CONFESSOR VULPANIX. ALERT! CLAN KOKORAT HAS DETECTED A TOTAL BLACKOUT WITHIN THE LABYRINTH'S CORE. ALL WARPGATES HAVE BEEN DISABLED. WE ARE UNABLE TO ESTABLISH CONTACT WITH BAHAMUT. INVESTIGATE AT ONCE AND REPLY WITH AN EXPLANATION! ANY DELAYS WILL RESULT IN A REBELLION SUPPRESSION FORCE ARRIVING WITHIN TWO ORBITAL CYCLES.]

A shudder runs down Ose's spine.

"No, no, no! Not a suppression force! Seven Hells! I knew I overlooked something! If that damned Confessor gets involved, this whole house of cards could collapse! I can't let the Volgrim find out about the Hero's emergence, not until I've captured the Wordsmiths for myself!"

The Emperor's hands begin to tremble. She leans against a wall to steady herself, while drops of sweat pool on her forehead.

[Reply from Emperor Ose. I am investigating now. Will have a full report soon. The intermittent human resistances have caused a slight delay, but I will handle it. Everything is under control.]

Moments after Ose transmits her request, she receives a reply.

[UNACCEPTABLE. THE LABYRINTH CORE IS OUR BACKUP TRANSPORTATION NETWORK FOR BYPASSING THE PLAGUE. WE CANNOT AFFORD TO HAVE IT UNAVAILABLE UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES. YOU ARE TO PERSONALLY GO AND DEAL WITH ANY ISSUES. IF YOU FAIL, WE WILL REPLACE YOU AS EMPEROR WITHOUT HESITATION!]

Ose receives another mental shock, making her curl her broken fingers together and squeeze them into pain-filled fists.

"Gah! Vulpanix! You damned, worthless meddler! This is my Labyrinth, mine! You stuck-up, filthy Psion!"

Ose vents her frustration for several seconds, howling countless obscenities down the mostly-empty corridor around her. Several low-ranked demons passing by give her a wide berth, not wanting to get involved with whatever is angering her.

After fifteen seconds, Ose stops cursing. She transmits a reply to the Confessor, one laced with all kinds of niceties.

[I understand. Thank you for alerting me to the problem. I will have the warpgates back online before the next orbital cycle completes.]

[WE WILL ALLOW NO MORE THAN TWELVE STANDARD TIME UNITS! MOVE HASTILY AND DO NOT DELAY!]

[I will move quickly, Confessor.]

Ose's eyes gloss over as she heaves a great sigh.

Demons are nothing more than pawns in the grasp of the Volgrim. To them, we are less than garbage. The only reason they allow us to live is due to Unarin's ever-unknowable whims.

The Emperor of Infiltration resumes her course toward the Blood Pits, but she picks up the pace and starts jogging, putting some pep into her step.

"...Idiot Confessor! Your people haven't used the Core in centuries! Stop acting like it going down for a day is going to cause you any problems! Bah! Nothing worse than bureaucracy!"

Part 240: Commander Phoebe's Strategy

Phoebe Hiro, now the Head Commander of the Anti-Demon Resistance, paces back and forth in front of six hand-picked leaders of the various warfronts. Her guests sit on rocks set in the middle of the field not far behind the warp-gate encampment's western wall, while all of them face her and listen intently to what she has to say. Their names and ranks become unimportant as she looks at them with the eyes of a hawk. To the Hero's Wife, these people are merely weapons she must carefully wield in defense of humanity and its monster allies.

In the front row sits General Chadwick, Princess Brunhilda, and Corporal Hurent, along with Blinker, the monster queen. Behind them sits Lieutenant Samuel and Elder Skarde.

General Chadwick, Neil's number one. A black-haired Norwegian with a thick, three-inch-long beard. He wears a long, thin black coat, one designed to allow the air to cool him during the summertime, while his navy-blue military uniform underneath gives him a commanding presence. Chadwick's six-plus-foot height, in addition to his giant muscles and rotund belly, makes him stand out among all the others present. In social situations, he is the one who defeats his drinking opponents, while in grave situations, he is the strong and silent type.

Brunhilda, the Felorian princess. A chocolate-skinned, well-proportioned warrior with long white hair and countless white tattoos across her face and body. She wears only an animal-skin bra and loincloth, revealing her muscled abs and arms. As a tribeswoman, her domineering attitude comes not from stuck-up haughtiness, but from two decades of careful grooming by her parents, the former King and Queen of planet Feloria. Having bowed and acquiesced to the demons her whole life, she now sits and faces the Hero's Wife with a grave expression, knowing she may soon perish in battle while protecting her planet's tribes. At the least, she may enable a new future for her people, one where they no longer cower at the feet of their demonic oppressors.

Corporal Hurent, a decorated veteran with several military accomplishments. Her black hair sits in a ponytail, draped over her left shoulder, while Blinker sits on her right. Combined with her smooth, olive-green military uniform, and lightly bronzed white skin, she appears almost like a shorter, more tomboyish version of General Chadwick. Not bothering with makeup, she has a 'harder' edge to her appearance than Phoebe or Brunhilda, yet her eyes reveal she longs for the war to end. Battle is not in her nature, but merely her current call to action.

Blinker, the Monster Queen. She wears a tiny little set of cream-colored battle armor, crafted in advance by her mother two years prior. Her bright red hair contrasts with the white armor to give her the appearance of a cute little Valkyrie. When combined with her moth-like wings, the trifecta completes itself, making her resemble a battle-angel. Blinker sits on Corporal Hurent's right shoulder, the two of them somewhat close thanks to their interactions over the past few years.

Lieutenant Samuel, a hard-nosed man with a violent past. The ebony-skinned soldier sports several dreadlocks and a mean scar going across his forehead. He rests his elbows on his legs and leans forward, a look of intense concentration on his face. Combined with his camouflage-fatigues, he looks ready to step into the jungle and disappear amongst its foliage. Few of the leaders gathered have anywhere near the same intense look in their eyes, a testament to how much he hates the demons and what they've taken from him.

Finally, Elder Skarde, one of several tribal elders from the planet Locklorn. As their designated envoy, Skarde speaks for all the people of his world. His skin appears the darkest of all, giving him a rich, coal-colored hue capable of blending in with the night. Skarde's carefully maintained, short-cropped hair combines with his purple and gold robes to give him the air of a merchant king, one with money flowing like rivers. A peaceful man, Elder Skarde nevertheless sets aside his misgivings for the sake of his world. While he might prefer seeking peace with the demons and forgiving their transgressions, he likewise would never consider rolling over and letting them destroy his extended family. He draws a hard line in the sand, one he will never let the demons cross.

With all six of the most important leaders assembled before Phoebe, the recently promoted Tarus II Commander begins pacing back and forth.

"Thank you all for coming. I'd like to have gathered more people, but it's probably best if you simply relay today's briefings to the relevant subordinates. We don't have much time to waste, so I'll get right down to business."

Phoebe shoots a glance at the walls of the warp-gate encampment, listening for a moment to hear if any battles have broken out due to the warp-gate's unexpected opening. Luckily, everything remains quiet and calm.

"I don't know how long we have before the demons clear out the Core, but I do know they will, eventually," Phoebe begins, as she returns her attention to those assembled. "The question afterward is how long we have until the demons get the warp-gates back online."

Corporal Hurent raises her hand. "Commander, one thing has been bothering me. We destroyed the computers which control the Core's warp-gates. How can the demons reactivate them? Without the Core's server infrastructure, won't it be impossible for the demons to calculate Tarus II's travel vectors?"

The Corporal's question, prodding at the very nature of warp-gate travel, elicits several nods from the other leaders. After all, from what they understand, calculating the relative position of a planet in the vastness of space, its orbital position, its current facing, and the exact position of the warp-gate on said planet should be impossible without a vast amount of computing power to assist.

However, to the assembled leaders' surprise, Phoebe shakes her head. "Our opponent is no ordinary demoness. She is Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, and the creator of warp-gate technology. Co-creator, technically, but a distinction which matters little in this context. I've spoken with Samantha on several occasions regarding Ose, and everything she's had to say about our enemy's abilities left me feeling shaken and worried. Ose's brain functions on a level far beyond ours, with unmuddled thoughts capable of computing information thousands of times more quickly than anyone else. She is, essentially, a living bio-computer."

Continuing, Phoebe adds, "Further, my husband once used Solomon's Crown to calculate the jump-vectors from Tarus II's warp-gate back to the Core. Kar watched him do it. If Jason can perform such a feat, I imagine the creator of warp-gate technology can do so as well."

The Commander's words end that line of questioning by the other generals. They fall silent and listen as Phoebe continues with her original train of thought.

Phoebe clears her throat. "Ahem. The battle for the Core was over far faster than anyone, especially Neil, first thought possible. Our enemies caught us off-guard with their new, armored soldiers. It seems likely they won't have any more of those terrifying Baron-level bastards available to hit us with, but we should naturally prepare for them. In the meantime, shifting to open terrain instead of the enclosed corridors of the Core will benefit humanity's forces greatly. Our weapons work best when engaging our enemies from a distance. The further they have to travel, the more time we have to kill them before they close the gap."

After pausing for a moment to rifle through her bag, Phoebe pulls out a tiny dime-sized device and presses it against the side of her head, just above her right ear. A small red LED on its side blinks twice once attached, then turns off. Afterward, she pulls out a baseball-shaped mechanical object, then lightly tosses it into the air. Elder Skarde and Brunhilda both reflexively flinch when the device doesn't fall to the ground, but instead stops in midair and hovers next to Phoebe.

"This is my Hovering Personal Assistant. I call him 'Happy.' Happy helps me with all sorts of things, but today, he'll be helping all of you to understand my thoughts."

Phoebe concentrates for a moment. She transmits images from her brain through the device stuck to her head and into Happy. In turn, the hovering metal baseball bobs in the air for a moment before beaming out a projected image of Tarus II's landscape, primarily the 20-mile range around and between Hero City and the warp-gate encampment.

The other leaders watch in fascinated silence as Phoebe points toward a small mountain range just over a mile north of the warpgate encampment. "This location is known as the Sphinx Mountain Range, and is going to be a critically important asset we must protect once the demons invade. How many of you have visited it before?"

Elder Skarde and Samuel both shake their heads. General Chadwick, Corporal Hurent, and Blinker all offer hesitant nods, while Brunhilda's are the most emphatic of all. Upon noticing the recognition in the Felorian Princess's eyes, Phoebe smiles. "Brunhilda, what makes you so familiar with that region?"

"I enjoy climbing mountains to gaze at the world from their vistas," Brunhilda replies. "Since that region offers a breathtaking view of the distant ocean, I have scaled it numerous times."

Phoebe's smile stretches further. "Did you ever happen to notice the artillery battlement I built there?"

A look of surprise appears on Brunhilda's face. The Felorian Princess scratches her head sheepishly. "Ah, no? What do you mean, Commander Hiro?"

"Three years ago, Jason and I worked together to build several fortifications for Tarus II. One of those happened to be a network of long range auto-cannon installations in the Sphinx Mountain Range.

Observe."

Phoebe's robo-assistant, Happy, releases a cute high-pitched chirp. "Beep-boop!"

Immediately, a second hologram appears, one of a gigantic gun more than a hundred feet tall, with three cannon barrels aimed diagonally into the sky. The whole thing rests upon a square turret base, with rotatable joints and motors allowing it to adjust its firing angle and distance. The menacing weapon makes all of the leaders gathered raise their eyebrows in surprise.

"Wow!" Blinker gasps. "Phoebe, you built that thing? It's huge!"

Chadwick stands up and walks closer to more carefully scrutinize the artillery cannon. "Very impressive. Why have I heard nothing about this?"

"Because it's one of my many secret weapons," Phoebe says, a tricky smile playing upon her lips. "I call it a King Cannon. We've always worried about demonic spies in our ranks. Bad actors among our fellow humans and monsters might also be an issue, too. I built these cannons in absolute secrecy, telling only Jason and Solomon. Not even Samantha knows of their existence."

Elder Skarde snorts. "Just as well."

"Samantha will never betray humanity," Phoebe snaps, glaring viciously at the elder. "Don't think I've forgotten some of the hurtful things you said. I'd advise you to keep your mouth shut about her if you don't want my foot shoved where the sun doesn't shine."

Chadwick remains silent. As one of Neil's closest confidantes, he too has no trust for the succubus. Still, he knows better than to disparage her in front of Phoebe, especially given the circumstances.

"Ahem," Lieutenant Samuel clears his throat. "If I may. You mentioned cannons, plural. How many of these have you built?"

Phoebe turns away from Skarde to look at Samuel behind him. "Ten. They function by firing shells over long distances which explode shortly before striking the ground. These explosions release hundreds of iron rods, each one capable of stabbing through even the heaviest armor. No demon will be able to withstand a shelling from the King Cannons. I have several other types of ammunition present as well, including explosive munitions, poison gas, and acid for melting flesh. Needless to say, we must ensure our troops don't get caught in the crossfire."

"And," Phoebe adds, "that is one of the biggest problems we face. The King Cannons are explosively powerful and more than capable of turning tens of thousands of demons into puddles of blood. However, they lack precision. They're a double-edged sword capable of harming our soldiers. I plan to use them only if our troops fail to prevent the demons' advance from the warp-gate. That's why I will now move on to the next strategic point."

Commander Hiro disables the hologram for the King Cannon while Chadwick takes his seat. She returns to the original hologram, the one showing Tarus II's topography.

"On the north side of Hero City we have ten Covenant ships to protect. On the south side are the Pyramids. On the east, we have a mixture of forested woodlands and some hilly terrain. Between Hero

City and the Warp-gate Encampment, we have the Horned Forest, with all manner of vicious predators hiding amongst its trees, and the vast open plains where we will most likely engage with demonkind if they take over the encampment. Looking at the encampment itself, we have the King Cannons to the north, Tarus II's great ocean to the west, and finally the southern side."

Phoebe clears her throat. "Here, we run into another problem. Some of you may not be familiar with the southern region, as we rarely go there. It's filled with canyons and ravines deep enough to kill anyone if they should stumble inside. The deepest one reaches half a mile into the planet's crust, so, needless to say, not many people go there. However, it is also home to another of my secret facilities."

"Another?" Corporal Hurent asks, her jaw turning slack. "Just how many facilities have you built?"

Phoebe's smile dims. "Too many to handle on my own, but not enough to guarantee our safety."

That reply makes the Corporal close her mouth and nod along silently. Phoebe continues by activating another hologram, this time showing a massive network of buildings carved into the side of a ravine. The facility stretches far enough into the distance that it goes past the edge of the hologram where nobody can see its end.

"By the Creator..." Lieutenant Samuel mutters. "You've been holding out on us."

"Indeed. This facility is one I haven't even told Jason about. I built it by myself."

Phoebe's casual attitude stuns everyone present. Blinker jumps off Corporal Hurent's shoulder and flies over to Phoebe. "What?! How could you build all that by yourself? That's impossible!"

While the fairy buzzes around the hologram with wide-open eyes, Phoebe chuckles. "Believe me, I did. Don't you remember six years ago, when Jason used to build houses and apartments for people with his Wordsmithing? I created a tool that could synthesize simple square structures out of energy, one which could project and build walls, ceilings, and floors. I built this facility with an upgraded version of that device."

A huge, giddy smile spreads across Chadwick's face. "Absolutely amazing. I never imagined we had a facility like this at our disposal, nor that you would be its sole builder. What is its function, Commander Hiro? Why did you build it in such an out-of-the-way location?"

"It's not out-of-the-way at all," Phoebe clarifies. "This facility's purpose is to create war-machines capable of leveling battlefields, and so I needed it somewhere close where I could send them barreling toward the front lines within minutes. That Planet-Walker I demonstrated earlier came from here, as well as many similar machines. I wanted to ensure we had extremely powerful trump cards prepared, should the demons ever invade. Secrecy was even more important, as I couldn't chance the demons learning of their existence."

Corporal Hurent raises her hand. "Hold on a moment. Regarding not only this robot-creation-facility, but also the King Cannons, how can we train enough people to pilot and control your machines? Those cannons look like they will require countless soldiers to aim and fire them, while the robots you've constructed will doubtless require intense training to use them to their fullest capacity. Have you trained anyone in secret as pilots? Or, perhaps... might these machines be fully autonomous?"

"Neither," Phoebe replies. "The Planet-walkers and other mecha are, indeed, autonomous, but I will require pilots inside them for target designation purposes. Each robot is capable of basic decision-making, but a human in the cockpit is our surest bet for strategically taking out demons wherever they appear. As for the King Cannons, the situation is similar. I will require a few personnel to man them for the sake of designating targets, but their roles will be minor. A bigger issue comes from fuel and munition supplies, which is the next thing I'd like to mention."

Phoebe waves away the southern facility's hologram, returning to the topographical Tarus II map.

"Look here. The King Cannons are immensely powerful, but they are also fragile. Once the demons figure out the cannons' location, if they choose to attack them, they can easily destroy them. I've protected the King Cannons, as well as my southern facility, with holographic obfuscation technology. Even up close, it's nearly impossible to locate the cannons, but every time they fire, the stealth net will go down for a moment, revealing their position. This will make it easy for the demons to find and destroy them."

Blinker nods. "Like Ose's mansion."

"Additionally," Phoebe continues, "the King Cannons have limited ammunition available. I always envisioned them as being supplementary to Jason and Hope's power, giving us a powerful area-attack, but with the Wordsmiths missing, they will end up being our primary suppression device against the demons. If so, then we'll need to establish munition supply lines to keep them continuously firing at all times. The supply line will come from the east side of Hero City up along the northern border until it reaches the Horned Forest. From there, it will continue until it reaches the Sphinx Mountain Range, where the personnel we place can take the shells and reload the King Cannons. At any point, demons might disrupt this supply line, thus rendering the cannons useless. Without ammunition, they will be little more than giant, decorative statues atop the mountains."

Brunhilda pipes up. "So, you wish for me to take control of protecting the King Cannons?"

"That's right. While the number of personnel required to operate the King Cannons is minimal, we will need a substantial number of troops available to guard the mountains themselves from demonic attacks. Think you're up to the task?"

"Naturally," Brunhilda replies.

Phoebe nods. "Good. I have some positive news to report as well, which you all will doubtless find comforting."

She touches the hologram and draws a circle around the warp-gate encampment. "I came up with a temporary fix for the burrower problem. I didn't want them to easily breach our lines by burrowing under us, so I cobbled together a few experimental devices. I call them 'seismic mines.' They detonate when they detect seismic activity nearby. If the Burrowers try to dig a tunnel near a seismic mine, they will perish a quick, explosive death."

Blinker lands on Phoebe's shoulder. "When the heck did you make those?"

"Today," Phoebe says. "Took me about eight hours. I only synthesized a couple hundred of them, and I attached them to mechanical moles to ensure they end up deep beneath our feet. However, given my limited amount of time, I only managed to surround the warp-gate encampment with them, as well as place a few beneath Hero City. Once a few Burrowers explode, they'll doubtless be able to continue forward, unabated. Luckily, the sensors will still give me an idea of where they're headed."

"You think of everything." Brunhilda says, admiration in her eyes.

"I wish that were the case. I'm only human, so I can't anticipate a demon's thought processes. Doubtless, Ose is sure to find a gap in our defenses. Don't get starry-eyed on me, not unless we actually survive this awful war."

Once again, Phoebe points at the holographic map. "Look over here, to the west of the encampment. There are thirty-seven miles of unprotected land between here and the ocean. If the demons escape in that direction, they'll be able to spread out and go around our borders, as I haven't built any defenses in that area. The King Cannons can certainly fire that far, but their accuracy and coverage will decrease substantially. Lieutenant Samuel, I'll rely on you to keep an eye on the western and southern sides of the encampment, while Princess Brunhilda will be in charge of guarding the Sphinx Mountains to the north. We cannot let the demons stake out a safe haven to the west. If they do, they'll likely summon countless portals to the Labyrinth, removing our chokepoint advantage. We have to keep them pinned down at the Tarus II warp-gate, or else they will rapidly overwhelm us with numbers."

Samuel nods. "As long as I get to kill bloodskins, you can count me in."

Phoebe frowns. "Demons, Lieutenant. Demons. Enough with the god-damned slurs."

"I don't care if you like my language or not," Samuel says, his face emotionless. "Bloodskins killed my brother. They butchered him like livestock. Don't preach to me that compassion nonsense. In my eyes, they're all filthy animals in need of extermination."

"Demons tortured my people for countless generations," Elder Skarde chimes in. "We have known nothing but fear and subservience to the bloodskins my whole life. Commander Phoebe, you may feel some twinge of compassion for the murderous wretches, but we do not. We only fight the bastards because of the horrors they've exacted upon us. If you want our help, then you will find a way to deal with our feelings."

After seeing the other two leaders stand up for their beliefs, Chadwick adds his two cents. "With all due respect, Commander, how many demons do you know who are righteous and pure? One? Ten? A hundred? You may have the utmost faith in Belial and others like her, but we do not. I have fought alongside Neil and Hope countless times when rescuing human slaves from the core. Some of the things I saw..."

The General starts to fall silent, only to notice a look of curiosity in the faces of Elder Skarde and Princess Brunhilda, both of whom have never stepped foot in the Labyrinth except for its Core.

"I saw a young man who was half-dead," Chadwick mutters, his voice low. "the poor kid had all the skin on his back melted and fused together. His bloodskin tormentor pressed him against a wall after burning him, then left him there, with his skin stuck to the stone. When Hope found him, the boy was half-dead and delirious with pain. It took Hope fifteen minutes of Wordsmithing to heal the boy's injuries. The lad later killed himself because of the lasting mental pain we couldn't erase."

General Chadwick glances at Phoebe, noticing with interest that for once, she doesn't appear angry at his words. "That boy was not the exception, but the rule. The bloodskins treat us worse than cattle, worse than bugs. They enjoy our suffering. I see no way we can ever truly cohabit with them. Perhaps you might be capable of picking out one or two decent ones, but the rest are all irredeemable, violent psychopaths. We must eradicate them for the good of the galaxy."

Despite a three-pronged verbal assault from Samuel, Elder Skarde, and Chadwick, Phoebe appears unmoved.

"Do you think I don't know all that?"

Commander Hiro tilts her chin up slightly, allowing her to look down upon the still-seated Chadwick.

"I'm well aware of the atrocities demons have committed. I am not Jason, and as such, I don't believe in trying to save all, or even most of them. My husband is a good man. He tries to look at demons as sinners, those who were led astray early in their history. They were born from bloodshed, and so that is all they know. Or so Jason claims."

Phoebe raises her hand and waggles a finger. "I do not think the same thoughts as Jason, General Chadwick. I do not believe demons are necessarily redeemable, but I do believe that they are not irredeemable. That is why I find myself disgusted when you refer to them with such gross, offensive slurs. Not because I think your hatred is misguided, but because as long as we treat them as inherently evil villains, we will never have even a chance to mend the rift between our species. Hate the demons and wish for their deaths all you want, for I will not stop you from thinking such thoughts. However, please understand that we humans must be better than our enemies. We must show them with our conduct that, so long as they own up to their actions and accept the appropriate punishment, we will always be willing to forgive, if not forget their pasts."

The Commander falls silent, allowing her words to germinate in the ears of those present. Blinker sits on her shoulder silently, saying nothing, while Brunhilda and Corporal Hurent stew in their own private thoughts.

General Chadwick rubs his knee contemplatively. "Hrm. I do not fully understand why you so often choose to defend the demons. Perhaps I never will. I merely wish you would not try to dissuade people from referring to the demons as 'bloodskins,' like they deserve."

"'Deserve' is a strong word, General," Phoebe retorts. "From what I've gathered, humanity stomped on the faces of the demons countless generations ago, and they retaliated in kind. Do we not deserve hatred from them as well?"

"That is a different situation entirely."

"So you claim," Phoebe snaps back. "But, if you so desperately wish to lump all the members of a sentient species under one definition, I suppose I cannot stop you. We haven't time to sit here and wax philosophical about our beliefs, so let's just hold off on the comebacks for today. If we survive this invasion, we'll return to this discussion at a later time."

Chadwick nods. "Very well."

Elder Skarde and Samuel both share a glance with one another, revealing neither of them plans to change their minds, but at the least, they fall silent to allow Phoebe's continued debriefing.

"Right. Let's finish this, then," Phoebe says. The Commander disables the Tarus II topographical map, and instead summons a series of images of various soldiers standing at attention, all of them wearing basic military uniforms with T-REX's strapped across their chests.

"I've finished doling out the new exosuit models I prepared in advance. Allow me to debrief you on their functionality."

The first trooper's image shimmers and shifts, adorning him in a shiny silver armor, one which all of the generals are familiar with.

"This is the basic T-REX, a mass-produced model with no obvious flaws that merely enhances the average human warrior's speed and durability to beyond that of a Demon Lord. It also helps with aim assist on projectile-based weapons, and features a low-level pilot-assistance mode capable of augmenting its wearer's dodging capabilities mid-battle. An excellent suit for any beginner, but one the demons have long grown used to seeing."

The next trooper also shifts his appearance, appearing in a silver-and-red exosuit with a few utility modules attached to its arms and waist. The red coloration extends in a cross-like shape across the trooper's chest.

"This is Mark I of the Clinician battlesuit. It has lower strength and speed than the basic T-REX, but in exchange, it features greater durability and advanced pilot assistance support. I designed it with our battlefield medics in mind. We can't rely on rescue devices to save all of our downed troops, so having field medics on hand will be essential to saving as many lives as possible. The Clinician also features several medical devices capable of prolonging a dying soldier's life, including nano-injectors to seal and repair wounds."

Corporal Hurent, one of the more technically-minded of the leaders present, nods appreciatively. "I'd have liked to have a few of those on hand when we fought in the Core."

"As would we all," Phoebe replies.

The Commander moves on to the third exosuit, one with an identical silver coloring scheme to the first exosuit, but with four 'struts' sticking out of its back.

"Previously, we've had to rely on Harpies for their excellent battlefield mobility and flight capabilities. Now, we have another option. The Mark I Hummer is our first flight-capable battlesuit, but I've only managed to manufacture fifty of them, so far. The wing struts on the back allow for limited durations of swift flight, but extended amounts of hovering capabilities. Think of them as mobile sniper platforms, rather than flying assault weapons."

"I can already imagine several uses for the Hummer," Chadwick says, his voice low.

Phoebe doesn't reply. She activates the next hologram, revealing a truly menacing-looking exosuit, one with gold and black coloration, a metal horn on its helmet, and two others on its shoulders. With much bulkier armor than the previous exosuits, as well as a long impaling rod sticking out above each wrist, it looks like a nasty melee-capable battlesuit.

Audible gasps go up among the leaders present, making Phoebe smile.

"This is the Mark I Rhino. Truly exclusive, I've only made twenty of them. Each is a precious asset, featuring fifty percent thicker armor than other exosuits and razor-sharp nanite rods for 'sticking it' to the demons. Advanced cooling capabilities also make it effectively immune to flame-based attacks from all but the most extreme sources. I designed them for frontline usage, improving the power of each of our best commandos. Naturally, I hope you'll be the first to try one out, Samuel."

Lieutenant Samuel grins evilly. "Oh, yes. I'll be able to do a lot of damage with one of those."

"I'm sure you will. Let's finish with the last two suits, both of which you should all be familiar."

This time, the holographic trooper shifts his appearance into a stealthy jet-black exosuit, one with the same sleek design as the basic exosuit model, but fewer 'cracks' it its surface. Most notably, four long, metallic 'tendrils' stick out of its back and writhe around like an ant's antennae.

Chadwick blinks in surprise. "A Spectre? We have hundreds of those already, don't we?"

"Correct. This Spectre is different, though, as it's a second generation exosuit. I'm sure all of you have noticed the odd-looking tendrils on its back. I call them 'Needlers,' and they will be key for maximizing the Mark II's improvements over the first generation. In addition to greatly improved passive stealth capabilities in shadow, the Mark II Spectre can initiate Level III cloaking at will, granting it five minutes of near-perfect stealth capabilities. Most importantly, it now features nearly infinite Level II stealth capabilities, meaning it can remain invisible indefinitely so long as the user keeps their movement to a minimum. It will be excellent for setting up ambushes."

"What function do the 'Needlers' perform?" Brunhilda asks. "They look like headless black snakes."

"More than you can imagine," Phoebe replies. "The Needlers allow the user to scale walls and cliffs, assassinate multiple enemies at once, manipulate tools, and countless other such feats. Think of them as four additional limbs, each one stronger and much more flexible than your arm. They can wrap around an enemy's neck to choke him out, or they can pick locks by deforming their shape... the possibilities are endless."

"Amazing as always, Miss Hiro," Chadwick says, bowing his head respectfully. "If we had these suits during the Core invasion, perhaps we could have defeated the demons instead of suffering such a terrible loss."

Phoebe purses her lips. "Not necessarily. The Spectre suits sacrifice durability and defensive capacity in exchange for speed and stealth. Their offensive-power is also sub-par, making them only good for assassination and espionage. In a giant arena like the Core, Spectre pilots would have perished the fastest."

"Ah. I'll defer to your expert opinion, then," Chadwick mutters, slightly embarrassed.

Phoebe clears her throat. This time, when the last trooper shifts his appearance, looks of surprise appear on Chadwick, Corporal Hurent, and Samuel's faces.

"Hm?" Samuel says. "Isn't that...?"

"Yes," Phoebe replies. "It's the suit Neil wore during the Core invasion: The Thundercat Mark II."

The final trooper hologram changes to reveal a bright blue, red, and golden exosuit, one with a bulky golden gauntlet on its left wrist. Three Wolverine-like blades stick out of the gauntlet, suitable for ripping and tearing, while the trooper also sports a vicious-looking nanosword in his right hand.

"Another Mark II," Chadwick marvels. "It's much flashier than the Mark I, particularly with its coloration. You must have given Neil one before the battle."

"His bodyguards too," Phoebe affirms. "Neil didn't get much time to learn its many functions, and sadly, neither will our troops. However, I'll tell you right now what to expect. The Transforming Exogauntlet on its left arm is a powerful utility item comparable to the Spectre's Needlers. It can become a hammer, a blade, a shield, or anything you need for the situation at hand. Merely describe a shape, and Centurion will attempt to replicate it."

Phoebe gestures toward the holographic trooper's right hand. "This nanosword is equally dangerous. When combined with the Thundercat's reinforced defensive capabilities, it will allow its pilot to fight on the front lines alongside our Rhino-wearing troopers. Since the Thundercat Mark II is a modification of the Mark I, we already have several thousand of them available, along with the new Spectres. I advise you to quickly debrief your troops about the additional functions of these new exosuits, as we won't have much time to train them in their various intricacies once the demons invade."

After taking a long, deep breath, Phoebe exhales.

"Alright. Let's wrap this up. Any questions?"

Chadwick runs his fingers through his beard. "Do you have anywhere you'd like to station us?"

"Ah! I almost forgot. Thank you for reminding me."

Phoebe re-engages the topographical map and points toward the southern side of Hero City.

"Over here, this area is part of the southern prison complex, where I've created a specialized Demon Containment Facility. We must ensure the demons don't locate Beelzebub and Artorias. Keep them locked up at all costs. Corporal Hurent, I'm putting you in charge of defending the prison."

The Corporal nods. "Yes, Commander. I'm already familiar with their layout, as I took our prisoners there earlier."

"Good. I'll need you to pull double-duty keeping an eye on Hero City's eastern flank, too. The south and east sides are among our most vulnerable, so if the demons break containment from the warp-gate, I want to know at once if they reach our flanks."

Phoebe turns her attention toward the others. "Princess Brunhilda. As stated before, you're in charge of protecting the King Cannons and their supply line. Samuel, you're in charge of guarding the southern and western side of the warp-gate encampment. Chadwick, I want you on command duty for the vast majority of our main forces, particularly between Hero City and the encampment. However, Elder Skarde, you may have the most complex job of all."

Elder Skarde frowns. "In what way?"

"You'll be our final defensive line. You will protect Hero City, especially the north side's Covenant ships. You must ensure Burrowers don't make it past our defensive lines, and that any Warpers get taken out before they can circle around to our flanks."

"I will do my best," Skarde replies.

Blinker hops off Phoebe's shoulder and flies around excitedly. "Ooh, ooh, what about me? What do I get to do?"

Phoebe smiles. "Are you fully healed?"

"Yeppers! Samantha got me all fixed up! Kar's still healing, though. I dunno when he'll be ready to return."

Phoebe's smile deepens. The memory of what Blinker told her before the debriefing, regarding Daisy, leaves butterflies in her stomach. However, for some reason, she keeps her mouth shut and doesn't mention it in front the other leaders.

"That's good. I'm glad we have Samantha at times like this. Well, even if Kar isn't back, I hope we can rely on you for support against the demons wherever they appear."

"Duh!" Blinker giggles. "I'll smush 'em flat! Those big red dummies won't know what hit 'em!"

Phoebe pokes Blinker's stomach playfully. "Just watch yourself out there. If anything happened to you, it would devastate Kar."

Blinker rolls her eyes. "Psh. Don't you know who I am? I'm the Monster Queen. I'm strong as heck!"

Despite the fairy's tough words, Phoebe's eyes grow distant. "Yeah. But... be careful. Kar already lost one wife. I don't want to imagine what losing a second would do to him. I'd never forgive myself if something happened to you."

With one last, heavy sigh, Phoebe turns to the assembled leaders. "Alright, dismissed. Get out there and make Neil proud. If he's still alive, we'll mount a rescue operation once we survive this war."

Chadwick rises off his rock and raises an eyebrow. "You suddenly sound more confident than before."

Phoebe nods. "Neil always says a leader must look strong for his troops. I can only hope to live up to that ideal."

"As can we all. Words to live by," Chadwick mutters. With a nod of the head, he turns to leave. "I'll see you on the battlefield, Commander Hiro."

"Likewise," Phoebe replies.

The waning sun begins to fade behind clouds to the west, setting on the world of Tarus II and bringing the cover of darkness. As the humans disperse, with Blinker riding on Phoebe's shoulder, they all gaze at the setting sun with wistful eyes.

Artwork time!

Basic T-REX.

Clinician T-REX.

Hummer T-REX.

Rhino T-REX.

Spectre T-REX.

Thundercat T-REX

This is Brunhilda!

THE CRYOPOD
TO HELL
MWTX
STUDIOS

Part 241: Invasion!

The chill of the night-time wind sweeps across Tarus II's surface. Strange, monstrous beasts hover in the sky, their pill-shaped bodies floating through the air without wings. These creatures, beasts which evolved on Tarus II, travel in packs, allowing vast numbers of sky-bound bugs to float into their open mouths. Known as cloud-beasts, they offer a hint of homeliness to the humans and monsters who've lived most of their lives on the beautiful blue world.

Not far away, in the Warpgate Encampment, hundreds of lights illuminate the area. Spotlights, flying drones with glowing bulbs, ground-mounted halogens, and all manner of other devices brighten up the pitch-black of the night, turning the walled camp into a fortress as bright as the day.

Two soldiers, decked out in fullbody T-REX's, stand next to the warpgate. Between them rests the gate's control pad, a soft white screen waiting for someone to login and input coordinates and calculations to another warpgate.

Both men hold a rifle in their grasp, resting against their chests. They shift back and forth on their feet to try and make the blood flow, and to eliminate the feeling of 'pins and needles' tingling in their toes.

"Hey, John," The soldier on the left says.

"What?" John replies, not even turning his head to look at the other soldier. "Need to shit again, Luke?"

"No! No, I'm good..." Luke mumbles. "I'm just, uh... bored."

"Sounds like a 'you' problem," John mutters. "It's a nice night out. Take in the air. Look at the stars."

Luke rolls his shoulders around to try and work out a kink in his neck. "Easy for you to say. We've been standing here for hours! You do that for fun every weekend."

"It's called 'meditation,'" John growls. "I like to get close to nature. Nothing weird about that."

"That's what you call it. The rest of us just want to know why you always disappear into the jungle and come back covered in mud. Got a lover inside a bog? Maybe a cute Medusa chick? What's the deal?"

John lightly waves the tip of his gun toward the Horned Forest, to the east of the encampment. "The only woman I see over there is Mother Nature. Don't you think she's out of my league?"

Luke glances at John. He slugs the other soldier in his arm. "Hah! And here I thought you didn't have a sense of humor!"

"Of course I do," John mutters. "I just don't feel like fooling around, what with the warpgate behind us."

Luke turns his head slightly to glance at the two long, curved arms sticking out of the steel platform beneath his feet. They rise twenty feet into the air and curve their tips toward each other before stopping some two feet apart.

"Yeah... pretty ominous. You, uh... are you scared?"

John shrugs. "A little."

"Yeah..." Luke mutters, his voice a whisper. "Me too. Commander Hiro says the demons are going to open the portal, eventually. Do you think they can? We destroyed the Core, right?"

"Commander Hiro knows better than either of us clowns," John says. "She's our tech-goddess. She made these blasters, these suits, and all of our equipment. If she says the demons will come, then..."

Luke returns his attention forward, toward the bottom of the platform. Dozens of soldiers casually mill around, chatting with one another. Slings attach their guns to their chests, keeping them within arm's reach while also allowing them to free up their hands.

Not far away, a dozen newly-created sentry towers stand fifty-feet tall, their spotlights aimed at the warpgate. Three snipers sit within each nest, all of them chatting up a storm while they wait for instructions.

"Has... has Commander Hiro ever been wrong?" Luke asks, his voice trembling. "About anything. Has she ever made a wrong call?"

John turns his head slightly to look at Luke. His friend's legs tremble almost imperceptibly, a sign of the fear he's trying to contain.

"Not that I know of," John mutters. "There's always a first time for something, but I doubt today will be that case."

Luke's head lowers as he gazes at the ground. "Trillions of demons. Can we win?"

"Unlikely," John says, his voice containing an odd edge. "But then, you know me. I've always been a pessimist."

"Yeah, you sure have," Luke says, chuckling uneasily.

As John and Luke guard the gate, John tilts his head to the side to look at the clock on his HUD.

11:47 AM.

A look of sadness appears on his face, shrouded by his faceless helmet. He glances at Luke.

"Say, why don't you go and grab the next shift early? I think I can handle it here for a minute, by myself."

Luke blinks in surprise as he turns to his friend. "Huh? Early? But Commander Hiro said-"

"Come on, Luke! I'm sure you've gotta use the little Skippy, and so do I. Let the next guys take over a few minutes early. What will it hurt?"

"Well..." Luke says, his voice hesitant. "I don't think we should. I'd never want to make Commander Hiro angry. She's one of my favorite people."

John doesn't reply. He stares at his friend's helmet for several long moments before sighing. "Haa... alright. Suit yourself."

...At that moment, right when the clock strikes 11:50.

A sudden sizzling sound begins crackling from the air behind Luke. The younger man turns to look at the warpgate behind him in horror as sparks of electricity bolt toward its center, connecting from five different points.

"Holy-!"

Luke's jaw drops. He immediately looks at the control panel, as a giant red warning appears on it.

"Initiating warpgate connection. 0:20 Seconds remaining. Decouple? [Y/N]"

A big red button for disabling the connection appears. Without hesitation, Luke jerks his arm forward to press it, just like Commander Hiro ordered.

In that split second, his gaze flicks to John, as the older man takes aim with his heavy blaster.

"No!"

Too late, all Luke can do is cry out one word of alarm before John pulls the trigger.

BLAM!

A heavy bolter shot blasts from the gun's barrel and punches straight through Luke's T-REX armor, rips out his stomach, and flings him backward. An instant later, Luke hits the ground with a wet thwop.

John doesn't even blink.

"I gave you your chance."

His single gunshot, along with the warpgate's activation, grabs the attention of every soldier in camp. They quickly beeline for the portal, looking at it, Luke's body, and John's smoking gun. "John! What happened?!"

"Luke was a traitor," John replies. "He tried to stop me from disabling the warpgate."

The other soldier guffaws. "Luke?! He did? No, never mind that! Hurry up and disable the gate!"

John smiles. "Sure thing, pal."

BLAM! BLAM!

John's weapon fires two more rounds, ending that soldier's life and alerting the entire base. Seconds later, a hail of gunfire smashes into John, battering him to the side. The last thing he sees is the countdown on the warpgate's initiation cycle.

"Initiating warpgate connection. 0:03 Seconds remaining. Decouple? [Y/N]"

Haha... you're all... too... late...

John dies before he hits the ground.

By the time the soldiers start to leap up the steps to the warpgate, they arrive just in time to see the decoupling notice disappear.

"Warpgate coupling successful. Initiating rift sequence."

The nearest soldier grabs at the keypad and furiously presses all over it. His expression warps into horrified rage. "I... I can't turn it off! Where's the decoupling button? Why did it disappear?!"

A female voice speaks from the console, her tone mocking in nature.

"Stupid humans. I removed that option. This warpgate will never close again."

FWOOM!

The warpgate violently connects with the Labyrinth Core, making all the soldiers shout in unison.

"We've made contact! Move, move, MOVE!!"

At that moment, a massive horde of undead begins pouring through the warpgate like water through a sieve. The fleeing soldiers turn around and fire their guns in tandem, transforming the battlefield into a deafening cacophony of slaughter.

Armored skeletons, unarmored skeletons, zombies, mummies, undead gargoyles, liches, specters, and all manner of other hellish creatures rush down the soldiers nearest the warpgate. Their sturdy T-REX's provide them only momentary protection before the undead tear through the nanites like steak knives through styrofoam. The men and women nearest the gate scream in agony as their innards leave them, flying in wide arcs across the ground.

One female soldier cries out helplessly as a skeleton rams its fingers into her eyes, gouging her brains out before she can even raise her gun. She falls backward, lifeless, as the undead keeps charging forward recklessly, without regard for its life.

Four dozen soldiers die in the blink of an eye. However, the other soldiers manage to hide behind erected concrete blockades, firing full-tilt into the neverending mob of rotted flesh and sinew.

"Reload!" One soldier at the frontlines barks. He jumps backward as another soldier takes his spot, spitting hot lead into the nearest half-dozen zombies. Despite the humans possessing energy weapons, plasma cannons, and other such advanced devices, they opt to use plain old bullets of varying sizes, instead. Thanks to the advanced designs of their weapons, the barrels never overheat, nor do the differing bullets ever jam in the firing cylinders.

However, with only finite ammunition, some of the soldiers sweat crazily as they watch thousands upon thousands of undead creatures pour from the warpgate.

* * *

Not far from the frontlines, Lieutenant Samuel activates his T-REX. A brilliant golden hue materializes over his body as the powerful Rhino armor takes shape, giving him two massive spikes on his shoulders, and one on his helmet. He flexes his arms and howls like a bear as he feels the strength inside the heavily reinforced suit.

"Get me some covering fire!" Samuel barks. "You over there, find Commander Hiro and notify her of the gate breach on the double! And you, get the Generals!"

Without waiting for a reply, Samuel begins dashing forward.

Slowly, at first.

The colossal, one-ton armor supports itself via the billions of nanites forming its surface. Samuel, still getting used to its immense bulk, takes one step forward.

Then another.

And another.

Slowly, he begins to build up speed.

Despite a quarter-mile separating the warpgate from the eastern edge of the encampment, Samuel's Rhino suit eventually begins moving with unstoppable force. He stomps forward at five miles an hour, then seven, and then ten...

Soon, the sounds of massive stomping noises startle many troopers as they see their designated Lieutenant storming toward them like an enraged bull.

Relief appears in their eyes.

"It's Lieutenant Samuel!"

"Make way!"

Miraculously, a path opens up before Samuel as he storms forward unwaveringly. His body becomes a bowling ball as he barrels past his fellow soldiers and careens into the mass of undead right before they break through the forward line.

BOOM!

Samuel swings both of his arms outward, away from his chest. The violent motion instantly crushes the heads of five skeletons and six zombies, flinging them into their nearby comrades and toppling the entire front line. The sheer might behind Samuel's Rhino exosuit turns him into an undead-steamroller.

Samuel raises his fists over his head just as two heavily armored skeletons rush him. He pauses for a half-second to let the skeletons swing their swords toward his chest.

Tink.

The swords bounce off the Rhino's carapace without causing any damage.

Samuel's face contorts into a hideous grin.

"You should have RUN!"

His fists swing down like sledgehammers, flattening the armored skeletons as if their bones were made of wet paper. Over and over, Samuel stomps around the frontlines, taking no damage while beating the undead to death with their own extremities.

As the gunfire roars overhead, annihilating hundreds of undead every minute, Samuel's battle instincts kick in. He glances up the hill as, for a brief moment, the flow of undead slows to a crawl.

A gigantic hand, nearly a foot wide, reaches through the portal.

Samuel's heart trembles.

"By... by the Creator!"

A long-dead gate troll stoops down and steps through the warpgate. The monster's skeletal remains, more than twenty-five feet tall, barely fit through the Labyrinth's portal.

Samuel gnashes his teeth. "You want to play hardball, huh? Come, then! I'll turn you into bonemeal!"

Several minutes earlier, inside the Core.

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, stands beside the lone excavated warpgate. Mountains of debris sit shoved off to the side, all of it from the collapsed ceiling nearly a day before. With nearly twenty hours having passed, Ose's hands appear only partially restored; severe fractures running across all of her fingers and much of her arms.

The lightning-demoness grimaces as she glances to her right, at Mephisto, the Duke of Mist. He hovers just off the ground, his ethereal body untouchable by physical objects.

"Alright. My hands are nowhere near fully-healed. However, we can't wait on me. I'll be leaving you in charge while I return to the Blood Pits."

Mephisto cackles quietly. "Kekeke... you mussstn't overexert yourssself, Ossse. Do not forget that it wasss I who nearly sssinglehandedly defeated the flessshbagsss. Thisss invasssion will be in quite good handsss..."

"Bael did some heavy lifting too," Ose retorts with a frown. "You've always been more eager for power than Bael and the others. I'll bet it irks you that I'm the Emperor and you're not, hmm?"

Mephisto scowls. "Kss. What of it to you, sssnake? Have you sssomething to sssay? I wasss Sssatan'sss protege. It wasss he and I who created the Labyrinth. Without me, you would never have had a chanccce to become an Emperor."

Ose's frown deepens. "Watch your tongue, necromancer. You're not as important as you think. I could have entered Heaven and stolen what we needed from the Lazarus Tower just as easily as you. For that matter, so could Belial."

"Pah!" Mephisto sneers, floating close to Ose's face. "What pretty wordsss, but in the end, it wasss I who completed the misssion. It wasss I who ssstole the power of sssoulsss from the angelsss. I reversssed our fortunesss and helped bring an end to the angel'sss wretched waysss. You, in turn, ssstole the Emperor posssition from under my nossse!"

The two demons eyeball each other with vicious glares, their faces mere inches from each other.

After a few moments, Ose relents. "Tch. You're the weakest Duke, Mephisto, and the stupidest. Making you an Emperor would be a waste of souls. Blame yourself for being a pathetic schemer. I wrapped the others around my finger and thus obtained the helm of demonic power."

Ose smiles. "You're just jealous you lacked the strength to take it for yourself."

Mephisto's eyes turn bloodthirsty. However, he doesn't immediately speak, nor does he lash out.

After several seconds...

"Ksss. You are a wretched woman. May maggotsss infessst your insssidesss, and may roachesss crawl out of your eyesss. You will regret usssurping me, one day."

Ose rolls her eyes. She turns to the warpgate's control system and sneers. "Keep dreaming, necromancer. I'm smarter than you, and all of the other demons. Now that I have my power, I'll never lose it."

Mephisto falls silent as the white-haired demoness motions with her hands, conjuring the elemental power of lightning to transfer a portion of her consciousness into the warpgate's controller.

As she does, Mephisto watches, his hate-filled gaze deepening.

Foolish woman. You've sealed your fate.

He stays quiet, but if looks could kill, his evil eyes would murder Ose a thousand times over.

Ose begins rapidly computing a hundred thousand spatial vectors, while her eyes rapidly jerk back and forth behind her closed eyelids. Her forehead knots up with concentration.

"Summon your Death Gates, Mephisto. I'm about to activate the portal."

